CHARLES E. WHITE—As president and treasurer of the Savings Bank of New London, Charles E. White has given the institution an administration characterized by fairness, integrity and balanced judgment.

Mr. White was born September 5, 1864, in Groton, Connecticut, son of Edwin W. White and is a descendant of William Brewster, who came to America in the "Mayflower," and of other distinguished Colonial and Revolutionary ancestors. The father, Edwin W. White, was captain of whaling vessels sailing out of New Bedford in earlier days.

The public schools provided Charles E. White's early education. After completing his studies in the schools of Groton, he became associated with the Brainerd and Armstrong Company, predecessors of the Corticelli Silk Company. Assigned to the New York office of the firm, he later left that city because of his father's state of health and returned to Groton to assist in the management of the elder Mr. White's general store. At the father's death, in 1890, Charles E. White forsook the family business and became private secretary to Thomas F. Morgan, who as superintendent of the Alaska Commercial Company was associated with C. A. Williams and Henry R. Bond in the Harris Building, New London. Mr. Morgan was executor and trustee of the estate of his father, Ebenezer Morgan, and at Mr. Morgan's death, in 1896, Mr. White succeeded him as trustee of that estate. In that capacity he had control of large financial interests, managing all of them under the same strict laws that govern savings banks. The knowledge and ability that Mr. White thus gained proved to be of great value to him in his connection with the Savings Bank, of New London.

It was in 1900 that he became associated with this bank. Working with it in a humble capacity until 1915, he was made assistant treasurer in that year. Both Mr. Learned, the treasurer, and George Whittlesey, the secretary and assistant treasurer, were taken ill at that time and Mr. White's duties were heavy and extensive. In 1916, he was elected a trustee of the bank, and in 1918, was made a director. Later in the same year he was elected treasurer to succeed William Belcher, who was then advanced to the presidency. Mr. White continued, moreover, his service as treasurer until February 17, 1930, when he became the chief executive officer of this strong and stable financial institution. His previous training was as excellent a one as he could have wished for, and he was well equipped to handle his new responsibilities. His progressive policies have led to establishment of several new departments—those dealing with school savings and personal service, as well as Christmas and Thrift Clubs. During his administration the bookkeeping and accounting systems of the bank have been thoroughly modernized.

In addition to his work with the Savings Bank of New London, Mr. White, as president of the Connecticut Savings Bank Association, is active in the Savings Bank Branch of the American Bankers' Association and the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks. He was a member of the Committee on Economic Welfare of the last-named of these groups. He is also vice-president and director of the Union Bank and Trust Company. Politically he is a staunch, though independent Democrat, and has consistently declined candidacy for public office. He was for many years, president of the Groton Monument Association. And for some years he has been secretary of the Fort Griswold Tract Association, receiving this appointment at the hands of the Governor of Connecticut. He has served also as a director of Home Memorial Hospital and as a trustee of the Billings P. Learned Mission and other local and State groups. For more than forty years he has been a member of the board of the Bill Memorial Association, of Groton, of which he is now treasurer. As treasurer of Pequot Council, Boy Scouts of America, since it was organized more than twenty years ago, and as director and president of the New London Young Men's Christian Association he has performed further useful work. He is a past member of the Thames Club, of New London, and the Bankers Club, of New York, and because of his father's accomplishment as an explorer holds membership in the Explorers' Club, of New York. Yachting, fishing and the cultivation of flowers are his major hobbies. He worships in the faith of the Congregational Church, in Groton, occupying different church offices and doing much to help with the work. His contribution to New London and Connecticut life has been a truly significant one, rich in its value to the people and institutions of his times.

Mr. White has one of the finest collections of scrimshaw and bone of the early whaling days.

In October, 1889, Mr. White married Mary B. Wheeler, daughter of Samuel A. and Emma (Green) Wheeler, and they have two children: 1. W. Arnold. 2. Rachael Avery.

REV. GEORGE SAVAGE BROOKES, Ph.D.—The ministerial career of the Rev. Dr. George Savage Brookes, pastor for the Union Congregational Church of Rockville, is the realization of a boyhood dream; a boyhood that knew the pangs of poverty, that was burdened with long hours of labor for a small and mean pittance. To anyone less resolute than Dr. Brookes the future would have held no possibilities. He, however, saw beyond his immediate circumstances and cherished a hope that was bolstered by a supreme faith in his ideals and in himself. He would rise above all that confronted him, he would make a place for himself in the world. In attaining his end he never lost sight of this guiding principle, but forged ahead with a diligence and intelligence that brooked no interference. Today his achievements and success stand as a constant source of inspiration to those who seek his leadership as a friend, confidant and spiritual adviser.

The Rev. Dr. Brookes was born in England, on October 4, 1880, the son of very poor parents. Family circumstances prevented him from enjoying a full and free childhood. At the age of thirteen he was already working, beginning his daily labors at six in the morning and continuing until six at night, for a salary of three shillings a week, a sum representing about seventy-five cents. It was during this period of his life that he began to harbor the ambition of entering the ministry, and it was also at this time that he heard of the opportunities that existed in America for young men. He had already begun to write, and first prepared a booklet entitled "Silent Memories" which he sold. With the proceeds he purchased transportation, in steerage, on the steamship "Carmania," in 1912, and embarked on one of the greatest adventures of his life. He met a kindly counselor in the person of a social service worker whose name is now unknown. He was advised to shun New York and go to Pennsylvania for employment. He accepted these directions and went to Pittsburgh, where he secured a position with the "Homestead Messenger," an evening newspaper. In a year he had become foreman, and was given a financial interest in the business. Success followed and he had more time to devote to his church work. He was invited to become, and accepted the post of pastor for a small church in Homestead. His wife and three children joined him here and later the family removed to Bangor, Maine, where Dr. Brookes attended the Theological Seminary. The authorities of this institution became interested in him for the post of pastor in a church at Seal Harbor, Maine. Despite his limited education he was accepted, and in 1915 assumed this post, which he was to fill for seven years. During this period a number of influential men attended his church, including Dr. William Adams Brown, Dr. Henry Van Dyke, Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and others whose friendship was to prove helpful. Throughout this pastorate Dr. Brookes also attended the Seminary and was graduated in 1918. During the two years that followed he taught school at West Eden, Maine, and then entered the University of Maine, from which he secured a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1925. The same year he was awarded a degree of Bachelor of Divinity at the Bangor Theological Seminary, and in 1926 came to Rockville, Connecticut, as pastor of the Union Congregational Church, with which he is still identified. After assuming this post he continued to study and received his degree of Master of Sacred Theology from the Hartford Theological Seminary in 1929, and his Doctor of Philosophy degree from this institution during the year of 1934.

By happy circumstance, Dr. Brookes possesses all those talents and attributes so essential to a man in his profession. He is described as an eloquent speaker and, through his oratorical prowess, has won a State-wide reputation. His leadership transcends purely theological bounds. He has aided, supported and promoted, movements and organizations designed for the welfare and progress of his surroundings and has lent his whole-hearted enthusiasm to other forms of social and civic life. In this connection he was responsible for presenting a dramatic pageant entitled, "The Road to Understanding," which drew wide praise and, in a measure, reflected the tolerant view he has championed throughout his life. He has maintained his interest in writing and is the author of a definitive biography on "Friend Anthony Benezet," the French-American philanthropist, who emigrated to this country during the early part of the eighteenth century, and won note for his denunciation of war and slavery. This work of 516 pages was published by the University of Pennsylvania Press in Philadelphia. In this phase of his activities, Dr. Brookes has also been the author and composer of a number of hymns.

Dr. Brookes' leadership is further evidenced in the position he has come to assume in the social life of this community during the twelve years (1926-38), he has been a resident here. He has been president of the Rockville Lions Club, belongs to the Sons of St. George, and fraternizes with the Knights of Pythias, of which organization he is now Grand Vice-Chancellor of the State of Connecticut,

George S. Brookes

and Past Chancellor Commander. He also is Associate State Chaplain of the Order of Free and Accepted Masons, in which he belongs to the Blanquefort Commandery, No. 13, and is a Knight Templar. Dr. Brookes can rightfully look with satisfaction and pride to his accomplishments during the years he has served as pastor of the Union Congregational Church in Rockville. His parishioners found an opportunity to congratulate and commend him on the celebration of his tenth anniversary at this institution, which took place on March 1, 1936. He is publishing his second book this year: "Thank You, America: the Tribute of an Englishman."

Dr. Brookes is married and the father of five children: 1. Vera. 2. Constance. 3. Kenneth, who graduated in 1937, from Bangor Theological Seminary in Maine. 4. Leslie. 5. George. Dr. Brookes accepted the invitation of the Bangor Theological Seminary to preach the Baccalaureate Sermon on the occasion of his son Kenneth's graduation. Kenneth is now pastor of the Church of Christ (Congregational) at Stony Creek, Connecticut.

P.

HERBERT C. ELTON—Centering his professional activities in Bridgeport, Herbert C. Elton has carried on an extensive work in architecture, engineering, and building construction. Aside from handling several million dollars' worth of buildings in the business district of Bridgeport, he has done a variety of work in the surrounding district of Connecticut and in other parts of eastern United States.

Mr. Elton's parents were Phineas and Annie Elizabeth (Johnson) Elton. His father was a native Englishman who came with his wife to America. His birthplace was Preston, England. In Boston he was a sugar maker employed by the American Sugar Refining Company. He and his wife were the parents of the following children: 1. William J. 2. Edmund J. 3. Eleanor F., died in 1909. 4. Robert W. 5. Frederick W. 6. Herbert C., of further mention.

Born June 4, 1885, in Boston, Massachusetts, Herbert C. Elton had his early schooling in his native city graduating from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1909. During his school days he worked in the summer months as a building and construction inspector for the Boston Consolidated Light Company, the Boston Elevated Company, and the American Sugar Refining Company. In 1909, he went to Chicago, where he was employed by the American Bridge Company and the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad. In 1910, he returned to the East, and at New Haven, associated himself with the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company as an investigator of construction efforts in connection with the electrifying of the shore line from New York City. He then spent several years in the bridge and building department of the same railroad. During the World War period, Mr. Elton was engaged on a project for wartime housing at Bridgeport. In 1918, he went to work in association with a Mr. Terry, who was one of the leading engineers of Bridgeport and the operator of a large firm of consulting engineers.

It was in 1922 that Mr. Elton, after these varied experiences and activities, opened his own office. Since that time he has engineered many outstanding construction jobs, and, as architect and engineer, he now has charge of several million dollars' worth of buildings in the Bridgeport business district. He has handled an extensive consultation service in the Hudson River Valley of New York State. He was likewise engineer on the Stamford High School and Federal Housing Fairfield Court, Stamford, the Bassick Junior High School, and the Young Men's Christian Association buildings in Bridgeport, Danbury High School and the Nurses' Home at Danbury. He was the engineer and architect on all the Raybestos Manufacturing Company buildings for the expansion at Stratford, a work that he began in 1927 and completed in 1929. As an architect, he is chiefly known for his designs of commercial buildings, among which are the Sears-Roebuck and King Cole Market organizations in Bridgeport, the Security Building, the Mangray Realty Company, Leavitts Kays and many other retail stores.

He has taken a lively interest also in public affairs. Mr. Elton's party affiliation has been with the Republican organization. He was consulting engineer to the City of Bridgeport in 1931, and consulting engineer to the City of Beacon, New York, in 1933, and is now building commissioner of the Town of Fairfield, Connecticut. He has been an instructor at the Bridgeport Engineering Institute; is a director of the Bridgeport Boys' Club and the Boys' Clubs of America, and the Association of Bridgeport Architects; and a member of the World Service Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers, and the Connecticut Society of Civil Engineers, and a member of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Alumni Association. He is a registered architect and engineer in the States of Connecticut and New York. He belongs to the Bridgeport Rotary Club and the Fairfield Republican Club, and is affiliated with the Protestant Episcopal Church. In 1917, he was connected with the United States Army Reserve, and attended the Engineering Officers' Training School at the American University, Washington, D. C.

Herbert C. Elton married, in June, 1912, Marjorie Stevenson Perry, daughter of Edward G. and Mary S. Perry, of Boston.

WILLIAM HENRY BLODGETT—On the basis of his long tenure of office as tax commissioner of the State, which he held for three successive terms, William Henry Blodgett is recognized as an outstanding authority on State and national fiscal matters. Since his retirement as tax commissioner of the state, in 1933, he has conducted a law practice in the City of Hartford devoted to this phase of the profession and has further enhanced his prestige as an economist. His record of public service is by no means limited to the aforementioned office for he was active in the affairs of the Commonwealth and his surroundings as early as 1903. In each of his official undertakings he has won the esteem of his colleagues and the public at large for his loyalty, his efficiency, his courage and his ability.

Mr. Blodgett was born in Salisbury, October 2, 1874, the son of William Henry and Alice Elizabeth (Berry) Blodgett. He received a general education in the public schools of his native State, later attended the Illinois Normal School and then matriculated at the Northern Indiana University, at Valparaiso, in which he received his professional training and from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, in 1902. He taught school at Deer Park, Green Valley and East Peoria, Illinois, until 1898, then after finishing his college work, he returned to Connecticut, and established himself in a general practice of law at Winsted, on April 1, 1903. From the outset he took an active part in municipal and civic affairs. The year he came here he was elected a member of the General Assembly from Canaan, and on May 1, 1904, was appointed prosecuting attorney, as well as corporation counsel for Winsted. He held the former office until 1917. In the meantime he had become clerk of the House of Representatives, occupying this office from 1907 to 1909, and in 1911 was elected clerk of the State Senate. Two years later he was clerk of bills, became clerk of engrossed bills in 1915, and from 1917 to 1919, resumed the former position. On March 1, 1920, he was appointed State Tax Commissioner and continued in this office with outstanding distinction and success for three successive terms, retiring in 1933. Since that time he has specialized in a tax law practice at Hartford and won many notable cases for large and important clients in the business and industrial life of the city. Throughout his distinguished career he has championed honest State and local government and been scrupulously faithful to his ideals. To fully appreciate the high regard Mr. Blodgett was held in as tax commissioner one has but to glance at the editorial that appeared in the "Hartford Courant" when he stepped out of public life:

> As long as the government continues to rest on the theory that "To the victor belongs the spoils," [it says], we shall see officials of experience and competency go whenever one political party gains ascendency over another . . . The public service invariably suffers from such changes . . . Mr. William H. Blodgett, who has served with notable efficiency since his appointment in 1920, is now lost to the public service . . . Mr. Blodgett is recognized the country over as an authority in his field of endeavor. He knows his subject of taxation as few men know it. He has been independent and fearless. He has not permitted politics to enter into his acts or his decisions. He has been a disinterested and devoted public servant and he will retire with all the esteem and approbation he so well merits.

Relieved of his duties as State Tax Commissioner on July 1, 1933, he was immediately appointed by Governor Cross to serve as a member of the Special Tax Survey Commission, which rendered its report to the General Assembly of 1935. On July 1, 1934, he was appointed State's attorney for Litchfield County, which office he now holds.

Among his notable contributions to the welfare of this city and State was the leadership he demonstrated during the World War. He organized twenty-two cities and towns for the sale of Liberty Bonds in Litchfield County, formed a publicity department, arranged for "four minute" speakers and founded the civilian secret service at Winsted under the direction of the Federal Government.

On October 20, 1909, Mr. Blodgett married Beatrice L. Moore, and they are the parents of one daughter, Serena Harriett.

MABELLE SMITH HILL—Genealogical material of interest both to those who bear the name Smith and Hill, is contained in the following lineage of Mabelle Smith Hill, of East Hampton, as traced by her in family and public records. It is noteworthy that both her paternal and maternal lines go back to Smiths of Colonial times. Miss Hill was born October 23, 1887, at Wethersfield, Connecticut, daughter of Charles Fremont and Elizabeth Jane (Smith) Hill.

The American progenitor of Charles Fremont Hill is believed to have been Ensign Henry Smith, of English birth, who on November 29, 1657, married Elizabeth Cooper, and they were the parents of Ensign Joshua Smith, born October 2, 1658, in Rehoboth, Massachusetts. He married a Mary Peck, on February 9, 1687-88, and they had a son known as Deacon Joshua Smith, born October 10, 1695, at Rehoboth, who married Mary Whittaker, born March 3, 1700. Ensign Henry Smith died in 1676; Ensign Joshua Smith, on September 20, 1719, and Deacon Joshua Smith, in 1781. A son of Deacon Joshua and Mary (Whittaker) Smith, was Thomas, born at Rehoboth, September 9, 1722. He was a sergeant in the American Revolution, and died in 1809; he married, June 11, 1744, Rebecca Moulton, born June 18, 1723. Their son, Thomas, a private in the American Revolutionary War, born May 14, 1750, at Rehoboth, died on April 17, 1837. He married, December 6, 1772, Lydia Wheeler, born February 14, 1754. Their son, Philip, who was born in 1773, and died September 19, 1829, married, on June 25, 1795, Anna Spaulding, born in 1777, who died in 1847. Their daughter, Olive Smith, born June 20, 1807, and died March 29, 1830, married, November 29, 1828, William Pease, born March 25, 1806, died August 5, 1888. Their daughter, Olive Smith Pease, born November 17, 1829, and died January 4, 1924, married, on January 30, 1853, Claudius Lysius Hill, born February 21, 1820, and died October 13, 1903. Their son, Charles Fremont Hill, born August 1, 1857, married, May 30, 1884, Elizabeth Jane Smith, born June 12, 1860, and they are the parents of Mabelle Smith Hill, of this record.

The first American ancestor of the mother of Mabelle Smith Hill, was one Richard, the father of Jedediah, who married Bathsheba Wells, great-aunt of Gideon Welles, former Secretary of the Navy. Their son, Jeduthan Smith, born 1708, and died November 29, 1781, married Mary Kimberly, daughter of Thomas Kimberly, and the granddaughter of Eleasa Kimberly, first male child to be born in New Haven County; its first town clerk, and, to his death, February 3, 1709, secretary of the Connecticut Colony. The first Kimberly in America, Thomas, settled at Dorchester, Massachusetts, in 1635, removing to New Haven, Connecticut, 1638-39. Jedediah Smith, a son of Jeduthan and Mary (Kimberly) Smith, fought in Captain Watson's Company, Colonel Hinman's Regiment, in the Revolution, and married Mary Treat; their son Shubael, born August 12, 1793, and died June 2, 1873, married Mary Risley, born 1799, and died September 27, 1846. Their son Jedediah Smith, born in 1823 and died in 1885, married Susan Elizabeth Arnold, born in 1823, who died in 1867. Their daughter, Elizabeth Jane Smith, of previous mention, is the mother of Mabelle Smith Hill. The elder woman was born in Glastonbury, Connecticut, June 12, 1860. Charles Fremont Hill was born August 1, 1857, in East Hampton, of which place he has been a lifelong resident.

Mabelle Smith Hill attended local schools and was graduated from the Middletown (Connecticut) High School in 1907. In the fall of that same year, she was engaged as a teacher in one of East Hampton's rural schools, the Chestnut Hill District. Later she taught one year in the Town of Lebanon. For a period of about five years she served as a substitute librarian at the East Hampton Public Library. In January, 1914, she found occasional employment in the East Hampton office of the Southern New England Telephone Company, and in September, 1915, became a regular employe, and made the notable record of promotion to chief operator within a year and nine months, the post she continues to fill. Miss Hill is a member of Rebekah Lodge, No. 58, affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and of the Methodist Episcopal Church. A desirable souvenir of East Hampton, the poetry published under the title "Lake Pocotopaug," was written by Miss Hill's aunt, Olive Adella Hill Clark.

FORREST GEORGE THATCHER—In his loyalty and devotion to the local Democratic Organization, normally the minority party in this section of the State, Forrest George Thatcher not only has contributed a distinct public service but has also been rewarded for his efforts, being elected in the face of great odds for important public office, notably the General Assembly, and the office of postmaster to which he was appointed in 1934 and which he has occupied since with outstanding success.

Mr. Thatcher was born in Meriden, December 6, 1894, the son of the Rev. Samuel and Amelia (Fear) Thatcher. His father, a native of England, where he was a local preacher in the Methodist Church, came to this country at the age of twenty-two and was ordained. In addition to his clerical duties the elder Thatcher was active in civic affairs and at one time served four years as superintendent of the State Reform School.

Mr. Thatcher received the early part of his general education in the public schools of his native community and completed this part of his studies at the East Greenwich Academy in Rhode Island. He began his career in the Case Paper Mill at Oneco, worked there for four years and then went to Jewett City where he served as an apprentice mechanic at the Aspinook Bleachery. At the age of twenty-one he removed to Norwich, where he worked for about one year, and then came to Hartford as foreman of the jig and fixture department of the Colt Patent Arms Manufacturing Company. After serving here for nearly a year he resigned and in March, 1918, enlisted in the United States Air Corps. He was dispatched to Kelly Field in San Antonio, Texas, and later transferred to the Aviation Mechanics School at St. Paul, Minnesota, where he remained from April to September. During the latter month Mr. Thatcher was sent to Souther Field in Georgia as sergeant in charge of the machine shop at that point. He supervised motor repair work here until he was honorably discharged from the service in February, 1919.

Directly after resuming civilian life he returned to East Hampton and became associated with the Gong Bell Manufacturing Company, which he was to be associated with until June, 1934, when he was appointed postmaster for a four year term. Prior to this he had assumed recognition as leader of the local Democratic Organization and in the face of substantial opposition was elected to the General Assembly for a two year term in November, 1926. Two years before he had run for tax collector and was defeated by the narrow margin of thirty-four votes, a gratifying showing in view of the Republican strength at the time. For ten years he was chairman of the Democratic Town Committee and in his present capacity belongs to the executive committee of the Connecticut Postmasters Association.

Throughout his career he has been keenly interested in community affairs. In this connection he was for ten years a member of the Board of Education, being chairman for two years. He has been particularly active in the work of the American Legion and holds the distinction of being a former State Vice-Commander of this organization. His local affiliations are with the Treadway-Cavanagh Post, No. 64. In addition he is president of the Citizens Welfare Club, is a member of the Boy Scout Committee and fraternizes with Anchor Lodge, No. 112, of the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he is also identified with Pythagoras Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and Wolcott Council, Royal and Select Masters.

On December 25, 1918, at East Hampton, Mr. Thatcher married Phyllis White, daughter of George Kilbourne and Margaret Augusta (Worthington) White. Her father was postmaster of East Hampton during the administrations of Presidents Theodore Roosevelt and Taft. Mrs. Thatcher is active socially, belonging to the Order of the Eastern Star and the American Legion Auxiliary. Mr. and Mrs. Thatcher are the parents of one child: Margaret Worthington, born at East Hampton, September 12, 1920.

GUS LOUIS GOETTLER—A variety of business and public service has filled the career of Gus Louis Goettler, of Broad Brook, who is town clerk for the Town of East Windsor. His participation in the affairs of this State has been a useful one, earning for him the high esteem and satisfaction of his contemporaries in all walks and departments of life.

Mr. Goettler was born December 27, 1886, in Broad Brook, Connecticut, son of Louis and Anna (Geromiller) Goettler. His father was also a native of this place. He was a wool sorter by trade, continuing in this occupation until his death on July 10, 1926. George Goettler, father of Louis and grandfather of Gus L. Goettler, came to the New World from Germany as a young man, settling in Broad Brook, Connecticut, and serving with distinction as a representative in the Connecticut General Assembly of 1888. He was connected all his life with the woolen mill at Broad Brook. Anna (Geromiller) Goettler, the mother of Gus L. Goettler, also came from Germany, settling in this country when she was only sixteen years of age.

The public schools furnished Gus Louis Goettler his early education, though he received what he regarded always as his major training in the hard school of experience. He started his active career in the woolen mill where his father was employed, beginning work as an office boy at the age of fourteen years. Gaining a knowledge of all departments of the business, he eventually became assistant designer. Until 1918 he continued his work with the woolen mill, then was engaged for ten years in the grocery business. At the conclusion of that time he sold the grocery and turned his attention mainly to his public duties.

In 1919, he was elected town clerk and treasurer of the Town of East Windsor, and by re-election he has remained in this office down to the present.

Oscar Benson

In 1928, he was elected representative of the Town of East Windsor in the Connecticut State Legislature, beginning his term in 1929. Afterward he was three times re-elected to the Legislature, starting his new terms in 1931, 1933 and 1935. Until 1935, he was clerk of the committee on appropriations, and in his first two terms he was a member of the committee on motor vehicles. He has also had a variety of other committee work in the Legislature. Along with his other activities, he has served as chief of the Fire Department.

Mr. Goettler is also a director of the Broad Brook Bank and Trust Company, as well as its assistant secretary. He belongs to Oriental Lodge, No. 111, of the Free and Accepted Masons and is a past master of his lodge, and also holds membership in the Foresters of America. He and his family alike are affiliated with the Broad Brook Congregational Church. Mrs. Goettler is a member of the Order of Eastern Star.

Gus Louis Goettler married, on September 16, 1913, at Maynard, Massachusetts, Jean G. Stitt, daughter of Peter and Elizabeth (Grosart) Stitt, both of whom are now deceased. Her father was the dyer in the woolen mill in Broad Brook over a period of many years. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Goettler: 1. Arline, a graduate of Connecticut College for Women, at New London, now teaching at Ellsworth High School, South Windsor. 2. Judith, who is a student at the Connecticut State College, in Storrs, class of 1940, Arts and Sciences.

OSCAR BENSON—As president of the W. W. Mildrum Jewel Company, Incorporated, of Berlin, Connecticut, since 1915, and leader in the social, civic and political affairs of the aforementioned community, Oscar Benson is ranked as one of the most able and influential figures in Hartford County. The firm which he heads is the largest concern in the manufacture of rod mountings in the country and has acquired an enviable reputation for the quality and craftsmanship of its products which find a large and ready market throughout the country.

Mr. Benson was born in Sweden, August 17, 1885, the son of Sven G. and Mathilda (Olsen) Benson, both of his birthplace. His father came to this country in 1888 and for many years worked as a blacksmith for the American Bridge Company. Later he was associated with the Berlin Construction Company.

Oscar Benson, who came to America with his mother, received the early part of his general education in the schools of his native country and later completed his studies in the public schools of Berlin. From the outset of his career he was to be associated with the W. W. Mildrum Jewel Company, working in various capacities and rising steadily in its management until 1915, when the organization was incorporated and he was elected to his present position as president. The increasing success the firm has enjoyed since clearly indicates his executive capabilities. He has modernized the plant and enlisted the services of master craftsmen who are thoroughly versed in every phase of the business. Mr. Benson has been progressive in his leadership. He has experimented in design and introduced innovations that have been of distinct benefit to the anglers of the nation. His concern was the first to cut agate rings for rod mountings out of Montana or American agate. High quality of materials has been stressed. No expense has been spared in this direction. Jewel bearings are imported in accordance with this policy. It is his boast that his modern factory is equipped to produce any style of rod mounting called for, which in fact can be done. It is largely due to his able management that this company, which was founded in 1845, is one of the outstanding leaders in its field today.

There is hardly a phase of community life that has escaped Mr. Benson's beneficent interest. He has been deeply interested in municipal affairs and for the past twenty-five years has been one of the prominent members of the Berlin Republican Town Committee. Socially he is a widely known and popular figure and identified with several leading organizations in this section, including the Highland Country Club, which he heads as president. He is a charter member of the Wenneberg Chorus of New Britain, a famous organization which contributes part of its proceeds to welfare work, fraternizes with Washington Lodge, No. 81, of the Free and Accepted Masons, and a member of the Order of the Eastern Star. Outside of this immediate vicinity he has also displayed a brand of leadership in a campaign for the purification of United States streams that has enlisted the cooperation of the national and State governments. His fellows have characterized him as a forward-looking citizen, an appraisal he amply fulfills.

On June 26, 1912, at Berlin, Mr. Benson married Ebba Ahrenberg, of Kensington, and they are the parents of one son, Clifton A. Benson, born July 15, 1916.

OLOF BENSON—Vice President of the Mildrum Jewel Company of East Berlin, an organization considered to be the world's largest manufacturer of fishing rod mountings, Olof Benson has been one of the proprietors of the company since 1915, and one of the officers under whose direction the manufacture of the fishing rod specialty was begun and developed.

Olof Benson was born August 30, 1887, in Kristianstead, Province of Skona, Sweden, son of Sven G. and Mathilda Benson, natives of Sweden who settled in Berlin about 1895, where Sven G. Benson was a blacksmith for many years at the plant of the American Bridge Company.

After passing through the public schools of East Berlin and Berlin, Olof Benson worked on a local farm for two years and then served the New York Central Railroad as a telegrapher for three years. Then, in 1907, returning to East Berlin, he went to work for the Mildrum Jewel Company, manufacturers of jewel bearings. Finally, in 1915, in association with his brothers, Victor Benson and Frank Gustave Benson (who died in Texas during the World War as a member of the 16th Cavalry), he purchased the Mildrum Jewel Company. During the World War, the company, operating under the supervision of the Federal Government, manufactured trench levels and other small instruments for military and naval use. About 1919, the company turned to specializing in the fishing rod mountings, a field in which they have operated ever since with remarkable success. Indeed, the company has continued to progress steadily, knowing no depression in their growth. A member of the Berlin Congregational Church and of the local organization of the Grange, Olof Benson is interested in civic concerns as a member of the Republican Party, and finds his recreation in fishing.

Olof Benson married, in Berlin, November 1, 1919, Emma Holmquist, daughter of August and Emanda (Beeman) Holmquist. Mr. and Mrs. Benson are the parents of two children: 1. Norman Gustave, born May 7, 1923. 2. Robert Olof, born April 20, 1927.

VICTOR BENSON—Secretary and treasurer of the Mildrum Jewel Company of East Berlin, Victor Benson, in association with his brothers, has directed the development of the company into the world's largest manufacturer of fishing rod mountings.

Victor Benson was born in Kristianstead, Province of Skona, Sweden, August 26, 1890, son of Sven G. and Mathilda (Olsen) Benson, who came from Sweden to Berlin about 1896, where Sven G. Benson, a blacksmith, was employed by the American Bridge Company.

After passing through the Berlin public schools, studying music at the Hartford School of Music, Victor Benson went to work for W. W. Mildrum, then the proprietor of the Mildrum Jewel Company, manufacturers of jewel bearings. After ten years of this employment, Victor Benson, in association with his brothers, bought out the Mildrum Company and, following the World War period, in which the plant was operated under governmental supervision, began the present successful specialization in fishing rod mountings. Unable to enlist in the World War because of rejection by the Examining Board, Mr. Benson was active in the manufacture of war instruments during the two years. A member of the Berlin Congregational Church, Mr. Benson belongs to the local branch of the Grange, the Knights of Pythias, the Edgewood Country Club and the Wethersfield Country Club.

Victor Benson married, at Berlin, November 22, 1918, Ruth Robins, daughter of Ernest G. and Sarah (Nesbit) Robins.

ARTHUR RAGNAR BENSON—Arthur Ragnar Benson is the active head of the W. W. Mildrum Jewel Company of Berlin, which, ever since its founding in 1845 has been one of the leaders in the manufacture of trimmings for fishing rods and in the importing of jewel bearings.

Arthur Ragnar Benson was born in Berlin, October 16, 1896, son of Sven G. and Mathilda (Olsen) Benson, natives of Sweden. Sven G. Benson, who came to Berlin in 1888, was employed for many years as a blacksmith by the American Bridge Company and, later, was employed by the Berlin Construction Company.

Arthur Ragnar Benson attended the public schools in Berlin and graduated from the Middletown High School in time to serve on the Mexican border in 1916 with his militia regiment. As soon as the World War broke out, Mr. Benson enlisted in the infantry and was sent to France in 1917 to serve throughout the War, being commissioned a second lieutenant and sustained wounds in the Argonne. Discharged on March 1, 1919, Arthur Ragnar Benson became associated with the W. W. Mildrum Jewel Company, and in 1915 aided in its purchase by its present incorporators. The business, founded in 1845, is not only one of the oldest but the leading firm in its field and since the Benson interests took it over and modernized its plant, it has advanced to a commanding position. The firm's standing is exemplified by Arthur Benson's office as president of the Associated Fishing Tackle Manufacturers, 1937-38, an organization having its headquarters in Chicago. He is a member of the board of trustees of the American Wild Life Institute, Washington, D. C. A staunch and active member of the Republican Party, Mr. Benson has held several local offices in Berlin and has also served a term in the Connecticut State Legislature (1923). A member of the Masonic Fraternity, Arthur Ragnar Benson also belongs to the local post of the American Legion, the Edgewood Country Club and the Berlin Congregational Church.

Arthur Ragnar Benson married, June 30, 1928, in Berlin, Doris Honiss, daughter of Everett and Cora (Clark) Honiss, of Berlin. Mr. and Mrs. Benson are the parents of a son: Edward Sven.

EDWIN EMANUEL BENSON—Member of a family well known in the business life of East Berlin for many years, Edwin Emanuel Benson shares with his brothers in the management and operation of the W. W. Mildrum Jewelry Company, manufacturing jewelers. A record of the family in earlier generations appears on previous pages.

Mr. Benson was born in East Berlin on February 6, 1895, and received his education in the Berlin public school. He began his career with the W. W. Mildrum Jewelry Company at a relatively early age, and in 1915 joined with his brothers in purchasing control of the organization. During the intervening years he has taken an active part in the management of the company, sharing all responsibilities and participating in the work which has made possible the expansion of its interests in the jewelry field, as well as the development of one of the representative business institutions of his own community.

Mr. Benson has always devoted his principal attention to business, but has found time to meet the responsibilities of good citizenship and has lent his support to valuable community movements in the public interests. He is a Republican in politics, is affiliated fraternally with the Knights of Pythias, and finds his principal recreation in fox hunting, which is his hobby.

He married, on September 9, 1933, at Berlin, Edith Linquist, daughter of Charles G. and Anna (Larson) Linquist, residents of Berlin.

HENRY JAMES BRIDGE—The term leader adequately characterizes Henry James Bridge, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of the community of Hazardville, who for the past eight years has conducted a large and successful insurance business in Thompsonville. Prior to entering this business he engaged in farming at the former community, which was the home of his forebears, who for several generations were prominent figures in the life of this section. Aside from the aforementioned activities, Mr. Bridge has contributed substantially to the social and civic welfare and through his public spirited interest has been chosen for a number of important positions, which he has administered with characteristic distinction and success. He is universally respected in this section of the county and enjoys the deep esteem and affection of a host of friends and associates.

Mr. Bridge was born in Hazardville, October 24, 1864, the son of George and Janet (Law) Bridge, the former a native of England and the latter of Thompsonville. His father, who was brought to this country by his parents in 1830, and died here in 1913 at the age of eighty-three years, worked for the powder mills in this community from the time he was eleven years old until his passing. He was active in church and civic matters and during the Civil War served with Company F, of the 22nd Regiment of the Union Army, as did his brother, Ephraim Bridge.

Family records in England date back to about 1700. The first ancestor who is authentically listed is one Stephen Bridge, of Milton, Kent County, England, who engaged in fishing and was known as a freeman, a title which gave him certain rights in his trade. He married Elizabeth Sweetlove and they were the parents of John, a business man, ship chandler, freeman and fisherman, who was born in 1734, died in 1802, and married Annie Gallahawks. Lineage is traced through their son Robert, a freeman and fisherman, who was born about 1780, died in 1849, and married Elizabeth Downs. Their son John was the first member of the family to come to America. He was born in Kent County, England, in 1806, where he was a freeman and fisherman and married Mary Prickett in 1829. They came to this country with their family in 1842 and in April of that year settled in Hazardville, then known as Scitico. The progenitor of the family in this country became a merchant and highly successful business man here, where he passed away in 1873. To John and Mary (Prickett) Bridge were born the following children: 1. George, father of Henry James Bridge of this review. 2. John. 3. Amos D. 4. Ephraim. 5. Ebenezer. 6. Ruth, who married Henry Adams and died a few years ago.

Mr. Bridge's mother, Janet (Law) Bridge, daughter of James Law, one of the first weavers to come to this country from Scotland and an early resident of Thompsonville, was also the mother of the following children: 1. Mary, who was born in 1856, and married Arthur Gowdy of Somers. The couple celebrated their fifty-eighth wedding anniversary on May 9, 1936. 2. John Law, of whom further. 3. Elizabeth, who was born in 1869, and married Herbert Abbe, member of an old Enfield family. 4. George A., who was born in 1873, who was graduated from Yale University in the class of 1898, received his medical degree from the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, in 1902, for a number of years was surgeon for the Phelps-Dodge Copper Mining Company of Arizona, was a former president of the Arizona Medical Association. He resided and practiced his profession in Bisbee, Arizona, where he was prominent in Masonic affairs and was Past Grand Master of the local lodge. He married Jean Holford, a graduate of Mount Holyoke College, and died in October, 1936.

Henry James Bridge, son of George and Janet (Law) Bridge, received the early part of his general education in the schools of his local community and later attended Wilbraham Academy, where he completed his studies in 1883. During the fall of that year he went to the State of Nebraska but later returned to Hazardville, where he purchased a farm on June 7, 1885, which he was to operate until 1917, when he retired from this work and leased the property, which has since been devoted to the raising of shade tobacco. He still resides here. At one time during his farming career he owned three hundred and eight acres, thirty-five head of cattle and four horses. The establishment has a large barn seventy-five by forty-five feet, with a shed measuring eighty-four by twenty-four feet and a low stable attached measuring seventy-five by thirty-two feet. There are also four large tobacco sheds. In his agricultural activities he has been an influential leader in a number of Grange organizations. In this connection he belongs to the Union Agricultural Society, for which he served as president for three terms; has been a member of the Enfield Grange, No. 151, for thirty-seven years, during which time he has occupied the office of Master for three terms, been secretary for nine years and lecturer for one year. He also has been Chaplain of the East Central Pomona Grange, No. 3, for twelve years. A year after retiring from farming, in 1918, Mr. Bridge visited Arizona.

Mr. Bridge's career in the insurance business dates back to January 1, 1928, when he founded the firm of Henry J. Bridge and Company, with offices at No. 59 Pearl Street, Thompsonville. This establishment, which he has conducted since with outstanding distinction and success, deals in fire and casualty insurance and in these fields represents some of the leading insurance organizations of the country, including Travelers, National of Hartford, Continental, Scottish Union and National, Alliance, Middlesex Mutual, Fitchburg Mutual, Abington Mutual, Globe and Rutger, Utica Mutual, Merchants' Mutual, Public Indemnity, Citizens' Casualty, Fidelity and Casualty, American Surety and the Ocean Accident and Guarantee Company. The success of this organization can be attributed entirely to the ability and careful management of its founder, Mr. Bridge. For the past fifteen years he has also been a notary public official.

The same quality of interest and leadership which has marked his business and agricultural life is to be found in his social and civic activities. He has been assessor of the Town of Enfield for the past fourteen years, six of which he has served as chairman of the board and was re-elected, October, 1936, for a three-year term. Mr. Bridge has been a member of the Republican Town Committee for twenty-five years and in his social affiliations is a member of the H. A. Grant Camp, Sons of the Union Veterans of the Civil War, to which he has belonged for over a quarter of a century and is its chaplain. He has been a Seventh Degree member of the National Grange for the past thirty-six years, fraternizes with Doric Lodge, No. 94, of the Free and Accepted Masons and is a member of the Past Masters Association of Connecticut. In his religious convictions Mr. Bridge has been one of the staunchest supporters of the Methodist Episcopal Church in this community, where he has worshipped for over fifty-five years and is a member of the board of stewards, chairman of the committee on church records and belongs to the finance committee. Through his interest in prison welfare and penal institutions in general he has taught a Sunday School class at the Osborne Prison Farm for the past five years and is a member of the Wethersfield Prison Association as well as the Enfield Society for the Detection of Thieves and Robbers, in which he has occupied the post of secretary for the past seventeen years.

On August 27, 1885, Henry James Bridge married Mary Neelans, and fifty years later to the day the couple celebrated their Golden Wedding anniversary, being feted at this time by over two hundred friends and relatives. Mr. and Mrs. Bridge were the parents of four children: 1. George S., who was born July 7, 1887, and is now a mechanic in the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, Incorporated, mill. He married Sarah Parker and they have the following children: Margaret, George H., Jean, Dorothy and Kenneth. 2. Martha J., who was born August 11, 1889, and died August 13, 1890. 3. Mary C., born July 27, 1891, married to Norman W. Henry, carpenter for E. J. Penney, and the mother of the following children: Florence, Eleanor and Edward. 4. Alexander L., born July 28, 1893, a carpenter, now associated with his father as a member of Henry J. Bridge and Company. He is married to Ada M. Hemy and they have two children: Marjorie and William H.

DR. JOHN LAW BRIDGE, brother of Henry James Bridge, was born in Hazardville, November 11, 1859. He received the early part of his general education in the public schools of this community and later studied at Wilbraham Academy, after which he matriculated at Wesleyan University in Middletown, from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree in the class of 1888. He then taught chemistry for several years and eventually entered the Harvard Medical School, in which he secured his professional training and from which he was graduated with a Doctor of Medicine degree in 1903. The same year he established himself in a general practice at Thompsonville which he conducted with distinction and success until 1918, when he removed to Bisbee, Arizona, to become medical examiner for the Phelps-Dodge Corporation. He continued in this capacity for five years and in 1923 returned to Hazardville, where he has resided and practiced since. He is a member and former president of the Hartford County Medical Society and also belongs to the Connecticut State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. In his civic activities he served as secretary of the Enfield Board of Education for eleven years.

On April 28, 1917, Dr. Bridge married Elizabeth Brainard, daughter of Charles and Sarah (Duncan) Brainard.

TIMOTHY J. SULLIVAN—The distinction of being the first member of the Democratic Party to be elected town clerk and treasurer of Enfield is held by Timothy J. Sullivan, who is now serving his fourth term in the aforementioned offices, an endorsement of his abilities as an administrator and public official which fully indicates his popularity and the position of esteem he holds among his fellow citizens.

Mr. Sullivan was born in Thompsonville, February 1, 1896, the son of Timothy D. and Mary (Moriarty) Sullivan, who were married in this community after coming to this country from their native Ireland. The former passed away in 1896, the latter in 1916. Mr. Sullivan received a general education in St. Joseph's Parochial School of this city, and after completing this part of his studies, secured a position in a local grocery store where he was to work for three years. At the expiration of this period he entered Griffin's Business College in the City of Springfield, Massachusetts, and upon finishing his training at this institution, became associated with the Standard Oil Company, for which he was to work for three years. He then served for a like period as bookkeeper for M. H. Barnett, cigar manufacturer in Springfield, later joined the Allied Tobacco Company in Thompsonville in the same capacity, and a year and a half afterward was appointed a traveling sales representative for the International Casket Hardware Company, continuing with this firm for two years. At this time he became manager for Meaney and Company, a clothing store in Thompsonville, which he was identified with for one year, and then removed to Springfield, where he was to work for four years as clothing salesman for Haynes and Company, and six years for A. Steiger and Company.

Mr. Sullivan's career as a public official dates back to October, 1929, when he was elected for his first term as town clerk and treasurer of Enfield, a post to which he has been re-elected in each successive campaign and in which he is now serving his fourth term. As mentioned in the introduction of this review, this accomplishment is all the more noteworthy in view of the fact that he is the first Democrat ever chosen for either of these offices. Mr. Sullivan is a member of the Board of Trade of Thompsonville and fraternizes with the Washington Irving Council of the Knights of Columbus in which he is a Past Grand Knight. He is also a member of the Springfield Lodge, No. 61, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and belongs to Grey's Athletic Association. He finds his principal recreation in the game of golf.

On November 28, 1923, Mr. Sullivan married Doris E. Furey, daughter of Fred R. and Ellen D. (Clarkin) Furey, both residents of Thompsonville. Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan are the parents of one son, Fredric W., born August 20, 1924.

JAMES TERRY KNIGHT—For over fifteen years, James Terry Knight, sole owner of the Chrysler and Plymouth motor agency in Thompsonville, has been one of the most widely known and successful automobile dealers in Hartford County.

Mr. Knight was born at Enfield, November 23, 1891, the son of Charles Terry and Ida (Pease) Knight, both members of old and distinguished Connecticut families. After completing his high school education, Mr. Knight attended the night sessions of the Baypath Institute, from which he was graduated, and later took a correspondence school course in law. He was associated with the Colt Company, of Hartford, for six years and during the next four years worked for several other organizations of a similar type, including the General Electric Company.

His career in the automobile business dates back to 1917, when he established a small repair shop in Thompsonville. Under his able and careful management the venture grew and developed to such an extent that by 1921 he was able to take over the Chevrolet agency here, which he conducted for two years. He then became the local representative for the Hudson and Essex cars and recently became the agent for the Chrysler and Plymouth automobiles, which he represents today. His establishment is housed in a large building at No. 1377 Enfield Street. Mr. Knight finds his main diversion in sports of all types and is particularly fond of hunting, golf, baseball and tennis. In his religious convictions he worships at the Congregational Church.

FRANCIS HUGH CROMBIE—Ranked among the most prominent and promising young business men of Hartford County is Francis Hugh Crombie, who for the past seven years has conducted a Ford motor agency in Thompsonville with outstanding distinction and success. He is also a popular figure in the social and civic affairs of his surroundings and on occasion has been sought to run for public office, an honor which he declined.

Mr. Crombie was born in Thompsonville, October 25, 1903, the son of Peter A. and Nora (Toolan) Crombie, who were also the parents of the following children: 1. Peter A., Jr. 2. George D., who is now a State motor vehicle inspector. 3. Elizabeth C., who teaches biology and chemistry in the Enfield High School. Mr. Crombie's father, who was an ice dealer in this community, was one of the most influential men of his generation in this section of the county, where he was chairman of the finance board of Thompsonville at one time, was a leader in the local council of the Knights of Columbus, in which he was a grand knight and held a fourth degree, and worshipped at the Roman Catholic Church.

Mr. Crombie received the early part of his general education in St. Joseph's Parochial School and completed this part of his studies at the Enfield High School. He then matriculated at Boston University, in which he attended the college of business administration and from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree in the class of 1927. Throughout his college career he devoted his spare hours to work that would help him defray educational expenses.

After finishing his college training Mr. Crombie joined the firm of Houghton and Dutton in Boston, where he continued for one year. At the expiration of this period he returned to Thompsonville to assist his father and, in 1930, became associated with the Shell Oil Company as manager of twenty-four of their service stations in this district. He worked in this capacity until the latter part of 1931, when he secured the Ford agency in Thompsonville, which he has conducted since with outstanding distinction and success. As mentioned in the introduction of this review, Mr. Crombie has taken a keen interest in the affairs of this community and is looked upon as one of the most able young leaders. Recently he was sought to run for membership on the local school board and the finance board, but declined on the ground that he did not wish to occupy public office.

In November, 1935, at Thompsonville, Mr. Crombie married Florence Houlihan, daughter of John and Mary Houlihan, who are both deceased.

ELLIOTT I. PETERSEN—As superintendent of the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, Incorporated, of Thompsonville, Elliott I. Petersen has taken a helpful part in the affairs of his community and of the industrial world.

He was born January 15, 1898, in Brooklyn, New York, son of Andrew N. and Olga E. (Holch) Petersen, who now reside at East Rockaway, Long Island, New York. His father is a retired foundryman. A native of Denmark, he came to the United States with his mother while still very young. Olga E. (Holch) Petersen was born in the United States.

In the public schools Elliott I. Petersen received his early education. After completing his studies at Manual Training High School, Brooklyn, New York, he entered the designing department of the Bigelow Hartford Carpet Company. Settling in

Elliott H. Petersen

New York City, he remained there for one and one-half years, then came to Connecticut, taking up his residence in Thompsonville. For about a year he continued to live here, next proceeding to the plant of the same company at Clinton, Massachusetts. For eight years he stayed in Clinton, working in all branches of the manufacturing department and learning every detail of carpet making. Then he came to Thompsonville in 1925, commencing his more recent phase of carpet manufacturing work in that year becoming assistant superintendent. In 1929, he was made superintendent, and he continues in this capacity today.

Interesting himself in a variety of community affairs, Mr. Petersen was chairman, in 1933, of the special committee on public works appointed by the Board of Selectmen of Thompsonville, and he has for years been an active Rotarian. In the Free and Accepted Masons he belongs to Trinity Lodge, the Royal Arch Chapter at Clinton, Trinity Commandery of Knights Templar, and Aleppo Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He was president of the Men's Club of Faith Congregational Church, of Springfield, Massachusetts, and while living in Massachusetts was a leader in affairs there. He is chairman of the boys' work committee of the Hartford County Young Men's Christian Association. This deep interest of Mr. Petersen in public affairs is but natural, considering his father's kindred interest. From 1920 to 1922, the elder Mr. Petersen was a member from Brooklyn in the Federal Congress, at Washington, D. C.

On June 1, 1922, in Brooklyn, New York, Elliott I. Petersen married Charlotte Haag, daughter of George M. and Mary (Gilchrist) Haag, both residents of Brooklyn. Mrs. Petersen shares many of her husband's public interests, being vice-president of the Enfield Woman's Club. From 1932 to 1935, she was a member of the Enfield School Board. Both Mr. and Mrs. Petersen are members of Faith Congregational Church, of Springfield, Massachusetts. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Petersen have been: 1. Clinton Wadleigh, born April 22, 1923. 2. Keith Stuart, born June 11, 1924.

EARL LEWIS RIDLEY—While it is one of the noteworthy features of the great Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, of Thompsonville, that it has many employes of long connection and experience, it is also characteristic of its administration to infuse new and young men into the personnel. In illustration, one may point to Earl Lewis Ridley, plant engineer for the past twelve years. Although the grandson of Joseph T. Ridley, deceased, executive official of cotton mills in Fall River, Massachusetts, he had to make his own way in the industry, and in life, without the aid of money or influential friends. Yet he brought to his association with the Bigelow-Sanford Company, not only a varied and long experience but the training of technical schools acquired while he was making his own livelihood.

Mr. Ridley comes from fine old New England stock, and was born at Fall River, Massachusetts, June 21, 1898, son of Lewis and Mabel (Farnum) Ridley. His father is the chief of police of Taunton, Massachusetts. There were nine children in the family, of which Earl Lewis Ridley was the oldest. He went to work in a mill at the age of thirteen, but managed to secure a sound education in the Taunton grade and high schools and the Bradford-Durfee Textile Institute, Fall River, being graduated from the latter institution with high honors in the steam and electrical engineering courses. It should be emphasized that he earned his own living and paid his own way while preparing for his vocation. When mill work failed, or the longer days of summer gave him more hours in which to work, he did almost anything honest to live and learn, even operating a hand press at one time. The fifteen dollars he had to pay monthly to get to the Bradford-Durfee institution was almost the last straw which broke the camel's back.

In 1916, Mr. Ridley entered the Mason Machine Works, at Taunton, specializing in the cotton machinery branch of the concern. After a year he went with the Mt. Hope Finishing Company, North Dighton, Massachusetts, as an industrial engineer. Here he continued until the entrance of the United States into the World War, when he tried to enlist in the Army but was not accepted because of his youth and immediate value to industrial activities. He did manage, in 1918, to get into the Air Craft Armament Section of the Engineering Bureau, located at Washington, D. C., serving until 1919.

In 1919, Mr. Ridley was with the Mason Machine Works, at Taunton, for three months engaged in machine valuation appraisals, but then became associated with the Bethlehem Ship Building Company, at Quincy, Massachusetts. Here he was first employed as a testing engineer, later being transferred to the main offices, at Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, where he engaged in designing and estimating ship equipment, more particularly marine boilers and power plants. In 1920, Mr. Ridley joined the Groton Iron Works, as test engineer on the trial trips of their vessels, remaining until the concern went out of business in July, 1921. He then was with the Petroleum Heat and Power Company, Boston, as outside superintendent of installations until 1924, when he became power plant layout designer for the Stone and Webster Corporation, at Boston. He came with the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, on March 16, 1925, a connection which has not been broken, and specialized in power plant operation from 1925 to 1927, when he was promoted to assistant plant engineer. Since 1929 he has filled efficiently his present post with the corporation—plant engineer. He is a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, and Licensed Professional Engineers and Surveyors of Connecticut. The constant demands of his busy career have not left Mr. Ridley much time to play or take the place he would enjoy in civic and social activities. He is a director of the Thompsonville Building and Loan Association. Fraternally he is affiliated with Doric Lodge, No. 94, Thompsonville, Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is a Past Master; the Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, and the Council of Royal and Select Masters, of Suffield; and he is a Past Patron of Ionic Chapter, No. 100, Thompsonville, Order of the Eastern Star.

At Taunton, Massachusetts, on April 3, 1920, Earl Lewis Ridley married Alice E. Dary, daughter of John P. and Mabel (Crocker) Dary, of Taunton, her father deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Ridley are the parents of two children: 1. Alden D., born November 1, 1923. 2. Bryce F., born April 9, 1928. Mrs. Ridley is a member of the Order of the Eastern Star, the Enfield Women's Club, and the Daughters of the American Revolution, and her sons are members of the Children of the American Revolution. The religious affiliations of Mr. and Mrs. Ridley are with the Methodist Church.

WILLIAM JOSEPH HINES—It is no small achievement to have been connected continuously with one company for a half century, and it is especially noteworthy to have risen from the ranks during this period to become an internationally known expert in one's craft. On April 4, 1935, there was celebrated in one of New York's greatest hostelries, fifty years of service by William Joseph Hines with the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company and his achievements as the dean of American wool buyers. Held under the auspices of the Carpet Wool Dealers and Importers, officials of the Company, business associates, including Herbert Gutterson, head of the Carpet Institute, and Joseph F. Lockett, attorney for the Carpet Institute, and his many friends in the wool-importing business attended and paid hearty tributes to Mr. Hines and his notable career.

Of English and Irish parentage, William Joseph Hines was born on May 26, 1870, in Thompsonville, Connecticut, with which place his whole citizenship has been identified. The parents of Mr. Hines were John and Mary (Fahey) Hines. His mother was born in Tuam, County of Galway, Ireland, March 18, 1846. His father was born in Athenry, County of Galway, Ireland, April 23, 1844. He was a sheep raiser, as was his father, William Hines, who was owner of "Sun Hill," a large sheep farm. His father left Ireland, July 1, 1869, landing in New York, July 12. They came immediately to Thompsonville where his mother was living, having come here the year before and purchased a home to which they came. His parents were married April 8, 1868. He began working in the carpet mills when he was twelve years old. While still a boy he learned both the machinist's and carpenter's trades. On April 5, 1885, he secured employment with the old Hartford Carpet Company and began the slow but steady climb which brought him to high place in the carpet industry and the Bigelow-Sanford corporation. The first position held by Mr. Hines was as tally man in checking the bales of raw wool as they arrived at the plant, his overseer being the late Judge Jabez P. Davis, in charge of the "yard gang." Eventually he succeeded Mr. Davis as yard overseer, and at the same time assumed supervision of the scouring and picking of the wool. Mr. Hines gradually took over the wool purchasing end of the business, and when the old Hartford Carpet Company and the Higgins Company of New York consolidated, he was placed in complete charge of the department. Within a few years the duties of the purchasing department became such that he was relieved of his other responsibilities and for several years he had devoted himself entirely as head wool buyer and was one of the most widely known men in the carpet trade of the country.

The Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company is the largest purchaser of carpet wools in the world, and there are some one hundred and forty types of wools used in their products. The two plants of the concern, at Thompsonville, Connecticut, and Amsterdam, New York, buy annually more than forty million pounds of wool. Mr. Hines was the chief wool buyer making purchases, at times, which involved one million pounds of the commodity. He traveled all over the globe in his work, for the principal foreign sources of the material wanted are in China, Turkey,

William J Haines

Persia, India, Australia, the Argentine, Russia, Scotland, Ireland, and the great wool auctions in London and Liverpool, England. He was the recognized dean of the wool buyers of America, and an expert who had frequently been consulted by branches of the government, more particularly the tariff commissions, where his opinions on technical questions relating to wool importations were accepted as sound and authoritative.

Because of the varied characteristics of Mr. Hines' vocation and its demand for activities away from home, he was unable to accept political and civic posts to which election was assured. He was, however, a loyal, interested, useful citizen of his native town, and remained a resident even at great personal inconvenience. From 1901, until his death, he was chief of the Thompsonville Fire Department, of which he was a member for forty-five years. For a quarter of a century he was a member and chairman of the district committee of the Thompsonville Fire and Sewer District, and served for more than thirty years on the Sewer Board, much of the time as superintendent of sewers. A few years ago he voluntarily retired from his post as enforcement officer of the Zoning Commission. He was the choice of the city to lead the Tercentenary celebration of Thompsonville in June, 1935, as chief marshal.

William Joseph Hines married Anna Cecelia Greenhalge, daughter of John and Catherine (O'Leary) Greenhalge, her father being a native of Bolton, England, and her mother of Cork, Ireland. Mr. and Mrs. Hines were the parents of four children: 1. Eleanor C., a teacher in the South School. 2. William Joseph, Jr., married to Helen Conley, and they have a daughter, Ann Marilyn. 3. Marion R., married to Willard H. Furey, and the parents of four children: Willard H. Jr., William Hines, Francis J., and Maryann Ellen. 4. Harold Joseph, a graduate of Catholic University, class of '36, Washington, D. C.

When, on April 4, 1935, the fifty years' connection of Mr. Hines with the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company was celebrated, it was marked by the presentation by the Carpet Craft Club, of a watch and chain with an emblem attached bearing the weavers' insignia. President J. A. Sweetser, speaking for his associates, expressed the esteem and appreciation of the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company for his long and expert service, and gave emphasis to his tribute with a gift of $1,000 from the Bigelow-Sanford corporation. The editor of the local paper in adding the congratulations of the townspeople to those of the company and friends in the wool importing business, wrote:

> This joyous occasion is significant from another angle. His remarkable career, from the day he entered the local carpet plant as a mere lad until this hour when he stands pre-eminent in perhaps the most important branch of this great industry, should be an inspiration and encouragement to every boy who is forced to seek employment at an early age in this or any other industrial community. Without social prestige, and unaided by influence of any character, he attained this exalted position purely by the use of an acquisitive mind, unbounded energy and a steady and persistent determination to know all that should be known about anything with which he came in contact. He has through it all been a loyal, devoted and useful citizen of his native town.

William Joseph Hines died October 12, 1937.

BIGELOW-SANFORD CARPET COMPANY, INCORPORATED—In connection with the biographies published in this volume of Elliott I. Petersen, William J. Hines, Earl L. Ridley, James M. Donnelly, and others, reference has of necessity been made to the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, Incorporated, with which they are identified, so that an outline history of this corporation is appropriate. This company is the world's largest manufacturers of rugs and carpets. Its fabrics are used in the most famous buildings in the world, on the mammoth liners which sail the seas, in railroad trains and even giant airplanes. Fabulous amounts of wool (40,000,000 pounds), and other materials are used annually in its productions; more color shades are used than are found in a hundred rainbows; two massive plants cover acres of ground, provide floor space ranging into the millions of square feet, and as many as fifteen thousand men and women are employed. In slightly more than a century the little old "White Mill" of Orrin Thompson, the first carpet factory in Thompsonville, Connecticut, grew to a plant of thirty-one buildings with a total floor-space of 1,768,000 square feet.

The history of the development of the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company is difficult to indicate clearly, for the corporation is a combination of not only two great concerns, but of various other companies which have been absorbed by these two organizations. A chart could illustrate such a history by showing six twigs attached to four branches, meeting the two main stems of the present trunk, or the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, Incorporated. The first of the early mills, chronologically, was the plant of Alexander Wright, at Medway, Massachusetts, started in 1825, which was largely experimental in character. Its looms were sold to the Lowell Manufacturing Company, Lowell, Massachusetts, in 1828, which company developed largely and, in 1899, was consolidated with the Bigelow Carpet Company. This latter corporation grew from the Clinton Company, Lancaster, Massachusetts, founded in 1838, purchased in 1849, by H. N. and E. B. Bigelow, of Clinton, and continued by them in the making of carpets with power looms. This, in 1854, became the Bigelow Carpet Company, which, as indicated, absorbed, in 1899, the Lowell Manufacturing Company. In 1914, the name was changed to the Bigelow Carpet Corporation of Massachusetts, and combined with the Hartford Corporation, of Connecticut, that same year to form the Bigelow-Hartford Carpet Company of Massachusetts, which in 1929 was one of the two parts of the present Bigelow-Sanford Company. The component parts of the old Hartford Carpet Company of Connecticut, already mentioned, are too numerous to trace in detail. Sufficient to say that a Hartford Manufacturing Company was organized at Thompsonville, Connecticut, in 1828, and with various accretions, such as the old Tariff Manufacturing Company of Tariffville, Connecticut, founded in 1840, gave the name and importance to the Hartford Carpet Corporation of 1901. The other branch of this combination of 1901, was the E. S. Higgins Carpet Company, of New York City, started by A. and E. S. Higgins, in 1837. Consolidation of the E. S. Higgins Company with the Hartford Carpet Company and the consolidation of the Bigelow Carpet Company of Lowell and Clinton, Massachusetts, was mainly through the efforts of Mr. Robert P. Perkins, president of the Hartford Carpet Company. The parent Sanford Company, and name, descends from the Sanford Carpet Mills of Amsterdam, New York, founded in 1838, which became S. Sanford and Sons, in 1885; Stephen Sanford and Sons, Incorporated, in 1913, and helped to create the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, Incorporated, in 1929.

If one person must be singled out as the founder of this present day great corporation, in point of time, it must be Orrin Thompson, after whom Thompsonville, Connecticut, is named. The man who made modern, improved carpet weaving possible, was Erastus B. Bigelow, whose invention of the power loom revolutionized the carpet and rug industry. Thompson had been a carpet dealer in New York, handling products from abroad prior to 1828, when he conceived the idea of making carpets in this country, which was then practically unknown. The idea, as may be suspected from a name (the Tariffville Manufacturing Company), used by a concern that started as late as 1840, was to avoid the high tariff on carpets by manufacturing them in this country where wool was plentiful and its conversion into yarn was common. A charter for a company was obtained in May, 1828, and the "White Mill," was the first erected. An old flour mill was turned into a dye house, and weaving shops were located on Main Street of a brand new village, Thompsonville. The Hartford Company commenced operations with fifty hand looms, and made Ingrains. Brussels were not manufactured until 1841, with forty-one looms, and Axminsters followed. By 1845 the concern had the immense total of two hundred and fifty looms in operation.

In the meantime, the brothers Erastus B. and Horatio Bigelow, were making history in Massachusetts. Their Clinton Manufacturing Company, dating from 1838, began using within a few years, power looms invented and perfected by Erastus B. Bigelow, founder of the concern. Thousands of pages have been published on the life and inventions of Erastus B. Bigelow, and the tale of this boy who devised a loom to weave "coach lace" to enable him to go to college, cannot be recounted here. "When we consider," writes a historian, "that this invention contained many of the essential principles of his other great inventions, and led naturally to the carpet loom which today is giving employment to tens of thousands of workmen, and adding to the comfort of millions throughout the world, we may begin to appreciate the fact that this was an important period, not only in the life of Bigelow, but also in the history of civilization." His later power looms not only increased the speed of production eight-fold, but made possible the manufacture of the whole higher range of the textile art. Only the Gobelins, woven for royalty, exceed the modern carpet and rug in complexity and beauty. Bigelow rented his patents on a royalty basis, and they were introduced by Orrin Thompson in Thompsonville and Tariffville, Connecticut.

Stephen Sanford, in 1854, when rebuilding the mills that his father, John Sanford, had erected in 1838, at Amsterdam, New York, obtained rights to make pile carpets under the Bigelow patents, although it was the tapestry and velvet weaves for which the Sanford Carpet Mills became noted originally. At the time the Bigelow and Sanford interests were merged, to form the Bigelow-Sanford Company, in 1929, government reports show that Bigelow-Hartford were making ten per cent. of the country's yardage in wool and worsted floor coverings, compared to eight per cent. produced by the Sanford Company. The value of the Bigelow products was twelve per cent. of the United States total, and the Sanford, about seven per cent. John A. Sweetser continued as president of the consolidation, while John Sanford, grandson of the original founder of the Amsterdam Company, was elected chairman of the board of directors. He has been called the "dean of the carpet industry." Bigelow-Sanford has been noteworthy, among many other things, for the number of employes that have been with the company for periods ranging from a quarter of a century to seventy years continuous service in the Thompsonville plant. The mutual loyalty between employer and employe might well serve as an example to other great corporations in America. Working in the plant today in Thompsonville are many descendants of the pioneer weavers, spinners, and designers, all of whom are proud of their craftsmanship. Significant care for detail is to be found in every branch and process of the carpet industry at this plant. It is the combination of labor-saving devices and superior materials and workmanship that increases the beauty and durability of Bigelow-Sanford fabrics, thus enabling this century-old organization to offer to the world, not as a rarity but as an everyday necessity, rugs and carpets of the greatest beauty and durability.

JAMES McKNIGHT DONNELLY—Industry, finance, fraternal and social life, church and humanitarian activities, all have been given due prominence in the well-rounded career of James McKnight Donnelly, of Thompsonville. He was born on April 18, 1887, in Rathfriland, in the northern part of Ireland, son of Henry and Sarah J. (McCullough) Donnelly, both parents coming to the United States in early youth and being married here. They first settled in Clinton, Massachusetts, but returned to Ireland for four years, during which time their son James was born, coming again to the United States when he was two years old. Henry Donnelly was employed in the Lancaster Cotton Mills, at Clinton.

The education of James McKnight Donnelly was gained in the public schools of Clinton and the Bryant and Stratton Business College, Boston, where he specialized in business administration. In 1907, he entered the offices of the Bigelow Carpet Company, now the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, Incorporated, and won promotion regularly through the various manufacturing departments. In 1930, he was appointed superintendent of the Clinton Mills, remaining in this post until the mills were liquidated two years later. In this same year he was made president of the Clinton Buildings Corporation, a subsidiary of the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, Incorporated, which had been organized for the purpose of liquidating and disposing of all buildings and equipment of the Clinton plant, having personal charge of all the duties connected with these transactions. Then he was transferred to the Thompsonville plant of the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company as assistant superintendent, in which post he has since remained.

Aside from the numerous activities connected with the carpet mills, while in Clinton, Mr. Donnelly took a keen interest in civic and banking affairs. For several years he was a director of the Clinton Trust Company, serving on the board of investments, and also was a director for twelve years of the Wachusett Cooperative Bank; director of the Clinton Chamber of Commerce for nine years. He is president and director of various social clubs, and was a charter member and first president of the Clinton Rotary Club. Since removing to Thompsonville, he has become a member of the Thompsonville Rotary Club and of the Chamber of Commerce. Especially prominent in fraternal affairs, Mr. Donnelly is a member of the Masonic Order, a thirty-second degree Mason of both the York and Scottish rites. He is a Past Master of Trinity Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, Clinton; Past High Priest of Royal Arch Masons, Clinton; Past District Deputy High Priest of Eleventh Capitular District of Massachusetts; Past Illustrious Master, Marlboro Council, Royal and Select Masters; Past Commander, Trinity Commandery, No. 32, Knights Templar, of Massachusetts, and is a member of the Knights of Birmingham, of Connecticut. Mr. Donnelly was an organizer and is a Past Patron of Trinity Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, Clinton. In his religious faith, he is an Episcopalian, both he and Mrs. Donnelly being members of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, of Thompsonville, and both have been active for the past twenty years in contributing to all worthy causes and humanitarian agencies. Mr. Donnelly is a vestryman of St. Andrew's.

Vice-chairman of the Enfield Boys' Work Committee, a member and director of the Hartford

County Young Men's Christian Association, Mr. Donnelly is never sparing of time nor effort in his endeavors to promote the careers of youth and men. He is a popular after dinner speaker, and toast master, frequently appearing before various organizations of his community with interesting talks on England, Scotland and Ireland, the history of these places being of keen import to him. Possessing a tenor voice, he is actively interested in dramatics and musical entertainments. A lover of floriculture, his garden is noted for its gladioluses and roses, He plays golf, is fond of motoring, sailing and swimming, and with his family spends the summer months at Mattapoisett, Buzzards Bay, Massachusetts.

At Clinton, Massachusetts, October 20, 1915, James McKnight Donnelly married Mildred Manning, daughter of Martin and Lucy (Mayberry) Manning, both deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Donnelly are the parents of seven children, six of whom are living: 1. Alan J. 2. Eliot M. 3. James McKnight, Jr. 4. Elinor, deceased. 5. John. 6. Millicent. 7. Joan. Mrs. Donnelly was a member of the Women's Club of Clinton, and since removing to Thompsonville is a member of the Thompsonville Women's Club, and of the Order of the Eastern Star.

GEORGE WEBB—Long a prominent figure in the civil engineering field, George Webb has been associated with the Colt's Patent Fire Arms Manufacturing Company since the post-war days, and he is now serving as assistant works manager, in charge of all engineering activities. He was born in London, England, November 4, 1887, the son of John and Alice Elizabeth (Roscoe) Webb. John Webb, a native of England was a prominent business man in London.

George Webb completed his preparatory education in the Westbourne College School, in London, and later enrolled at the Saltram Crescent Polytechnic School. He served his apprenticeship as a mechanical engineer with Evershed and Vignoles, well known London engineers, and he continued in the employ of this concern until 1909, when he migrated to the United States, and became associated with the Western Electric Company as engineer in charge of manufacturing methods. He remained with this company until 1917, resigning his position in August of that year to enlist for service in the United States Army. He attended the Officers' Training Camp, at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, and after receiving his commission as first lieutenant in the artillery corps, he was assigned to Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia. However, this order was quickly cancelled, and he was assigned to the Engineering Division of the Aircraft Armament Section, where he remained until the end of the war. After receiving his honorable discharge, Mr. Webb entered the employ of the Colt Fire Arms Company as mechanical superintendent, and after twenty years of faithful service in this capacity, he was appointed in 1938 to his present post as assistant works manager.

He is a member of the Central Baptist Church, an active Republican and a member of the Exchange Club of Hartford, and the Farmington Country Club. He is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, and Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He also holds membership in the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, and the American Society of Tool Engineers.

He was married, March 12, 1937, in New York City, to Huldah Charlotte Swanson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wilfred Swanson, of New Britain.

WILLIAM H. ROBERTSON—The executive head of the Robertson Bleachery and Dye Works, William H. Robertson has been a business man of New Milford for over a quarter of a century. Called into existence through the foresight and initiative of his father, the late Charles N. Robertson, and his brother, the late Charles N. Robertson, Jr., the company, now under his guidance, has become one of the large establishments of its kind in the State. Originally, the Robertson Bleachery and Dye Works employed about fifty workers for the bleaching of corset cloth almost exclusively, processing about two hundred thousand yards a week. Today, this company is engaged in the processing of dress goods and shirtings by means of the vat method and its list of employes has grown to about two hundred fifty persons.

William H. Robertson, native son of Rhode Island, was born in Pawtucket, Rhode Island, December 26, 1888, the son of Charles N. and Maria (Brewer) Robertson. After completing his preliminary academic instruction, he matriculated at Brown University where he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1912. Following his graduation, he came to New Milford and from 1912 to 1917 he devoted his time and energy to the organization of the company he now serves as president. The company was incorporated with Charles N. Robertson, as president, W. H. Robertson, as treasurer, and Charles N. Robertson, Jr., as vice-president. The directors include: W. H. Robertson, L. Ashley Grace, Philip W. Kopper, L. U. Gridley and Irving Meredith. The present officers are: W. H. Robertson, president, L. U. Gridley, treasurer, W. T. Scholze, Jr., secretary. Mr. Robertson is an active Mason, a member of the Theta Delta Chi fraternity and a supporter of the Republican Party. His religious affiliations are with the Protestant faith.

In New York, on July 11, 1919, William H. Robertson and Beatrice Mary Smith, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. T. J. Smith, were united in marriage and became the parents of three children: 1. Charles N. 2. Beatrice Mary. 3. Virginia.

WARREN W. RICHARDS—During the past eighteen years the Clinton Nurseries have attained more than a local reputation. From the first they have been owned and directed by Warren W. Richards, a thoroughly trained and widely experienced expert in horticulture and floriculture, who is also the organizer and owner of the New Era Seed Company.

Mr. Richards is a native of Pine Plains, New York, born January 28, 1900, son of Henry E. and Mary Alice (Warren) Richards. His father, who died when the son was only eleven months old, was the proprietor of a paint store in Brooklyn, New York, and maintained a real estate office. His mother was a direct descendant from famous General Joseph Warren, of American Revolutionary War fame. After attending the public schools of Brooklyn, New York, and East Haven, Connecticut, Warren W. Richards completed his formal education at Booth Preparatory School. Then, matriculating at the Connecticut State Agricultural College, he specialized in horticulture for three years. Although only eighteen at the time the United States entered the World War, he joined the Students' Training Corps and served with the infantry branch of the Army, receiving his honorable discharge from the service in 1919.

Upon returning to civilian life after the war, Mr. Richards secured employment in a nursery at Babylon, Long Island. A year later, 1920, he went with Otto Keser, a nurseryman of Portland, Connecticut, and later was employed by George Rye, on his estate at West Springfield, Connecticut. In the meanwhile, his ambition had centered upon a nursery of his own. This he started at Clinton, Connecticut. At first his small business was situated in the Glenwood district. In 1924, he moved closer to the center of town where he continued until the spring of 1930, when he secured a large tract of land located on the Boston Post Road, a mile and a half from the heart of Clinton. Here he erected, in April, 1930, a modern office building, and in this enterprise he has found scope for his ideas, experience and trade knowledge. Mr. Richards grows all sorts of ornamentals; is an expert at landscaping and the complete laying out and planting of country and city places. He specializes in the moving of large trees, to bring immediate results, and he does a large business in the wholesale and retail disposal of evergreens. As already mentioned, Mr. Richards is the organizer and owner of the New Era Seed Company here. It is the only present-day concern to retail ornamental evergreen tree seed. Although Mr. Richards' products and work are not limited to the Clinton section of Connecticut, he caters particularly to a clientele within a radius of fifty miles of the town.

Mr. Richards enters actively into local civic and social affairs. He is a popular figure in the Rotary Club, whose members come from Clinton, Madison and Guilford. He is a director and chairman of the greens committee of the Clinton Country Club, and a past commander of the American Legion.

Warren W. Richards married Ethel G. Going, of Vermont, and they are the parents of a son, Warren W., Jr., born December 26, 1925. Mrs. Richards lost her parents in infancy, and was reared by an uncle in Clinton, Connecticut, where she lived from the age of thirteen years.

THE LOW-HEYWOOD SCHOOL—The private school for secondary education has been a feature of Connecticut almost since its colonization. It has continued through changes wrought in the introduction and expansion of a public school system because it appeals to many parents as furnishing training such as no single type of secondary school provides. Herbert Spencer once said, "To prepare us for complete living is the function that education has to discharge." The private school remains one of the best means of performing this function.

Almost three-quarters of a century ago, the Low-Heywood School was founded at Stamford, Connecticut. Under able leadership it has adjusted itself to changing conditions so consistently that it is recognized as among the best of its kind in the State. Its history, as regards leadership, is relatively brief. A Mrs. Richardson, an Englishwoman, opened a school for girls in her home, in 1865, to teach the "ornamentals" and the "solid" subjects to young ladies. The ornamentals were music, art and even needlework. The solid subjects ranged from reading, writing and arithmetic to languages, the rudiments of science and "polite learning." In 1885, the school was taken over by Miss Louisa Low, assisted by her niece, Miss Edith Heywood. In 1916, Mary Rogers Roper became Associate Head Mistress, and, since 1927, she has been the head of the Low-Heywood School. One interesting and important fact is not brought to the fore by this brief mention of four persons—that the last three are representatives of a single family which have controlled the management of the school for more than a half century. Miss Roper is the grandniece of Miss Low and the niece of Miss Heywood. Such continuity of service approaches the unique.

To write history of the Low-Heywood School in terms of ideals, curricula, methods of instruction and the numerous factors entering into the training and development of young girls, is practically impossible. They cannot be dated, for most of them were introduced gradually and only after trial and the proving of worth, were definitely adopted. The chronology of these features is relatively unimportant. That the school has stood the test of time, and that the years have brought ever increasing endorsement and patronage is the best evidence that history has been made, and improvement, constant. In this connection we quote:

> The Principals desire not a very large, but a very thorough school, in which each girl may be well known to the Heads and to the staff, where her individual needs are recognized, her problems studied, and where her best development is a matter of constant interest and concern to those in whose care she has been placed. The school accommodates sixty-five boarding pupils. This number provides competition in work and agreeable companionship in play; at the same time, the teaching staff is able to know and guide the girls in a friendly, personal way. This mutual understanding between teachers and pupil makes the household congenial and united.

What may be termed the "material" history of the Low-Heywood School can be related with some attention to chronology. In its earliest years, the school differed little from many of its kind—the home of a gentlewoman in which one, or a few teachers endeavored to instruct a small number of girls. Under Louisa Low and Edith Heywood the house became an "establishment" and the home of the students, rather than of the Head Mistress and her assistants, with an ever increasing reputation as a "preparatory school." After the turn of the century the limit of expansion as regards buildings, equipment, and the meeting of a growing demand for more facilities for extra-curricular activities, was reached. There could be little more growth in Stamford. In 1911, Low-Heywood removed to new buildings at Shippan Point, on Long Island Sound, two miles from the centre of the city. Here on a twelve-acre campus, the girls could enjoy the freedom and healthfulness of the country, with accessibility to the metropolis of the nation. In immediate recent years, the school acquired a beautiful twenty-four-acre tract of land on one of the ridges of New Canaan, a few miles north of Stamford. Commanding an extensive view of the surrounding countryside is the newly erected building of Low-Heywood-in-New Canaan, an extension of the Stamford School, which provides country day facilities for boys and girls from nursery age through the eighth grade. The building is modern and fireproof, incorporating the latest developments in ventilation and heating. It is conducted by the Heads of the Stamford School and carries forward the same educational policies. Mr. George Mitchell, Jr., was appointed Headmaster in September, 1938. Here are provided facilities for all sorts of winter sports, and enjoyable picnics during the spring and autumn. Riding can be indulged in throughout the scholastic year, in connection with the Ox Ridge Hunt Club with its indoor ring, and a hundred miles of bridle-paths available. On the Shippan Point campus, there are hockey fields, basketball court, running track, tennis courts, and arrangements for nearly every outdoor sport and game. There is, of course, an excellent gymnasium, equipped for basketball, badminton and physical exercises.

The main building, of cement, tile and steel construction, contains the largest dormitory, dining hall, school rooms, library, with one wing serving as the infirmary. Everything is modern, scientifically planned and suited to its purpose. In 1934, the Senior House was added, a separate residence for the senior class. Brown Cottage is the home of a group of younger girls. The "Club House," familiarly known to the students as "Mu Sigma," belongs to the girls and is cared for by them. It is the popular place for informal gatherings of any kind. Low Cottage is the residence of the Principals. The lovely stone chapel, completed in 1929, was erected by Miss Roper as a memorial to Miss Low and Miss Heywood. It already contains many treasured gifts, among which are the altar and altar rail donated in memory of Miss Heywood by the Alumnae.

No school is better than its staff. About twenty-five make up the corps of women who reside in the school. They form a group, "distinguished for academic attainments, successful teaching, and above all, for their sincere interest in the right development of the girls." Head Mistress Mary Rogers Roper is a native of New York City, the daughter of Charles Frederick and Mary (Heywood) Roper. She was prepared at what was then "Miss Low's School," Stamford, for entrance to Barnard College, Columbia University, from which she received the degree of Bachelor of Arts, having majored in the Classics. She went to Oxford University, in England, for a year of post-graduate study in the Classics. For three years she taught Latin and Greek at the School of St. John the Baptist, in New York, and then became associated with Miss Heywood as a teacher in the same subjects. Mary Rogers Roper is a member of the Women's University Club, the Washington Club, the Women's National Republican Club, the Stamford Yacht Club, Shippan Beach Club, Woodway Country Club, and the Ox Ridge Hunt Club. Her religious affiliations are with St. John's Episcopal Church, Stamford, Connecticut. In 1929, Miss Marjorie L. Tilley, who also had been long associated with Low-Heywood, was made Associate Principal, and, in 1935, Miss Elizabeth Roper Fox became a member of the executive staff.

SAMUEL C. SHAW—Until his retirement under provisions of the Connecticut Constitution obliging all State jurists to leave the bench at the age of seventy, Samuel C. Shaw had been a judge of the Common Pleas Court of Fairfield County for a decade. He long had been prominent in public life as a State Senator and member of the House of Representatives, a lawyer of wide experience, and a civic leader.

Judge Shaw was born in Redding, Connecticut, in 1866, son of Edward P. and Fannie (Sanford) Shaw. Prepared for college in the schools of his birthplace and Easton Academy, he entered Yale University, from which he was graduated with the class of 1891, a Bachelor of Arts. Because of his high scholastic standing, he had the honor of being made a Phi Beta Kappa. He was also a member of the Zeta Psi Greek letter fraternity and active in many phases of college life.

Like many of our successful legal leaders, Judge Shaw came to the practice of law by way of teaching. It is probable that he never intended to make a career of education. At any rate, while he taught he studied legal tomes, was ultimately admitted to the bar, and for a time was in the law office of Banks and Hincks, associated with John W. Banks, now associate justice of the Supreme Court of Errors, and with the late William T. Hincks, one of his beloved classmates at Yale. After the firm was dissolved he shared offices with Attorney Edward K. Nicholson. Judge Shaw came to the Fairfield County Common Pleas Court, on May 9, 1927, and in November, 1936, retired in accordance with constitutional age limits. He then was appointed a State Referee and it is interesting in this connection to note that he was the first judge of the Court of Common Pleas to hold this office in Connecticut. Until the law passed by the 1937 Legislature only retired judges of the Supreme and Superior courts were eligible to this office. As a lawyer, Judge Shaw was regarded by his colleagues and clients as well grounded on the principles and practices of his profession, a hard and faithful worker, a safe adviser and pleader. All who knew him well, attested to his ability as a jurist, possessed of an intelligence of high order regulated by a very sound judgment, and the innate desire to get at the bottom and the rightness of any case brought before him. Seldom was successful appeal made from his decisions, and he was fortunate in a personality which usually won ready acceptance of them by the persons involved.

Judge Shaw had a wide knowledge of practical politics, not from the standpoint of gaining personal advantage, but as a means of getting things done that would serve and benefit the community. He was a member of the Connecticut House of Representatives in 1915, 1917 and 1919, and served in the Senate in 1927, from the Twenty-fourth District, being floor leader there of the Republican majority. Although not given to joining social and formal organizations he was active in community affairs, more particularly of Redding which was his lifelong place of residence. His favorite club was the University, of Bridgeport, of which he was president at the time of his death.

In 1905, Judge Samuel C. Shaw married Margaret Seefeld, widow of Ernest Kempton Adams. Mrs. Shaw, who was widely known throughout Connecticut for her interest in civic and cultural matters, died in November, 1936.

Death came to Judge Shaw at his Redding home, on August 3, 1937, this mournful news being made known by the tolling of the bell of Christ Church, with which he had been familiar since childhood. Sincere tributes were paid to his achievements and character at the bar, on the bench, and as a man and citizen, his distinguished services to society, of which he was so outstanding a figure.

Two children, Frederick Sanford, who married Mildred McKay, June 8, 1929, and Margaret Elizabeth; and two stepsons, Pierpont and Kempton Adams, survive.

An editor in appraisal and summary of his accomplishments, wrote:

> The death of Judge Samuel C. Shaw so soon after the death of his wife brings sorrow to the many who knew him. He was a citizen of two Fairfield County towns. His life work was done mostly in Bridgeport. His home in the later years was in Redding. He was a civic minded man, with a high ideal of public duty. He contributed to the activities of Bridgeport and Redding in time and money. He became widely known over a term of years through his association with the United Church Forum, a Bridgeport institution which brought fearless analysis to every public question. He was frequently the presiding officer at these meetings, and helped to make the Forum a useful service. He was especially suited to the work of a judge. He was studious, patient, sympathetic and free from partisanship on the bench.

MICHAEL CHARLES MANTERNACH—For many years one of Hartford's prominent citizens, Michael Charles Manternach began life under the most severe and trying handicaps, but so determined were his struggles against all obstacles that, while still in his early twenties, he had achieved the position of one of Hartford's successful business men, and later came to be widely recognized as one of its leaders—not only in business and financial circles, but also through his constant participation in those manifold spheres of civic activities which proclaims true citizenship and the desire to contribute in every way possible to the welfare of the community.

Mr. Manternach was born July 11, 1883, at La Rochette, Luxembourg, son of Charles and Catherine (Beck) Manternach. The father died two weeks after the family came to America, and upon the mother devolved the difficult task of providing for the children. The children were: 1. John C. Manternach (now retired), who became president of the American Welding and Manufacturing Company, of Warren, Ohio. 2. Harry H. Manternach, of Hartford. 3. George J. Manternach, also of Hartford. 4. Louis Manternach, now deceased. 5. Michael Charles Manternach, of further mention.

Michael Charles Manternach was only five years old when his father died. As soon as he was old enough, he began contributing to the maintenance of the family by selling papers in the mornings and evenings, and taking such odd jobs as he could secure outside of school hours. He completed the grammar school course in Hartford when he was thirteen years of age, but, after entering high school, was forced by circumstances to relinquish his ambitions for continued education. Accordingly he put aside his textbooks and turned to the business world to begin shaping his career. His first employment was with the Plimpton Manufacturing Company. He then entered the employ of the Colt's Patent Firearms Manufacturing Company, where he soon began drawing a substantial weekly return. Finding, however, that his talents lay along more creative lines, he had the foresight and courage to give up this secure and, for him, very remunerative position, to become an apprentice in the engraving trade with the A. Mugford Company, completing his apprenticeship with them and so preparing himself for work in the trade. Going to work with the A. Pindar Corporation, he soon became superintendent of the firm's engraving plant, but he realized that the opportunities offered for gaining a thorough knowledge of fine engraving processes in Hartford were comparatively few. He therefore went to New York, where he associated himself with different plants of outstanding reputation engaged in highly specialized engraving work, and gathered such comprehensive information concerning every phase of illustrating and engraving that he acquired a reputation which was exceptional for a man so young, and he was looked upon as an authority in his field. Then, feeling himself thoroughly qualified in all phases of photo-engraving and illustrating, he returned to Hartford in 1906 and organized the Charter Oak Engraving Company, Incorporated, becoming its president and general manager. Five months later, with Clarence T. Sprague, he purchased the business, which was then carried on as a partnership under the firm name of Sprague and Manternach. At the outset the two partners did almost all the work themselves, but as their business increased it became necessary to employ others. After a few years Mr. Manternach acquired his partner's interest and he then proceeded to carry on the business for a time independently. Later, however, he was joined by Harold B. Douglas, a widely known illustrator, the two men starting the firm of Manternach and Douglas.

This business grew rapidly, until three years later Mr. Manternach bought Mr. Douglas' interest in the company, became president and general manager of the reorganized firm, and started to operate what was known as The Manternach Company, along lines that he had visioned from young manhood, so that within a surprisingly short time the business grew to large proportions. A large staff of artists, designers and technical men were employed and manufacturers looked to the company for practically all their requirements in this special field. The Manternach Company marked the beginning of a new period of his career—the extension of his activities into the field of advertising. The demand for a more complete advertising service came from the trade itself, as The Manternach Company became one of the most important illustrating and engraving business organizations in all New England. It was in 1914 that Mr. Manternach yielded to this pressure from the trade and gathered about him a group of experienced advertising workers to form a complete advertising agency. He separated this agency entirely, however, from the original illustrating and engraving business, which he now incorporated as The Graphic Arts Company. He gave his own name to the new advertising agency, which he named The Manternach Company. He continued as president of The Graphic Arts Company, which prospered in illustrating and photo-engraving. Meanwhile, The Manternach Company came to be recognized as one of the leading advertising agencies of New England.

Throughout his career, Mr. Manternach has been called upon to take part in many other business affairs in his community, and Hartford has been the gainer from these efforts. He is president of The Shawmut Manufacturing Corporation, vice-president and director of the Taber Cadillac Corporation, director of The Fuller Brush Company, the Underwriter's Service Corporation, the Connecticut Investment Management Corporation, and is otherwise active in the business and financial life of Hartford.

But it is not only in the field of business that Mr. Manternach has been active and prominent. His interests have always been widespread and it is natural that a man of his temperament and tremendous energy should participate actively in other fields. During the Great World War he took an active part in the different Liberty Loan drives and served on many local committees. He has been an advisor in many of the charitable campaigns initiated in Hartford and this part of Connecticut. He has devoted many years of his life to the social welfare work of the Salvation Army and has been for years president of the Hartford Advisory Board. The Boy Scouts of America have long engaged his active attention and he is honorary president of the Charter Oak Council, Boy Scouts of America. He is a Republican and a member of the Common Council of the Town of West Hartford. He belongs to the First Church of Christ, Congregational, the financial affairs of which he has long directed as chairman of the church finance committee. In the field of education he can look back on a long record of diligent service on behalf of Kingswood Academy and justly feel that he has done his part in establishing this institution in the firm and recognized position which it now occupies. He is now an honorary life trustee of Kingswood Academy.

He puts a great deal of energy and enthusiasm into fraternalism, belonging to Wyllys Lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons and also being affiliated, in the Masonic order, with Washington Commandery of Knights Templar, Connecticut Consistory of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite and Sphinx Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. Belonging to the Rotary Club, he is now an honorary member. He is a member also of the Wampanoag Country Club and of the Hartford Club.

Through these and other numerous activities, Mr. Manternach has contributed notably to the life and welfare of Hartford. His home is situated in West Hartford, the community in which he has resided most of his life and in the civic development of which he has long participated.

On June 20, 1906, at Hartford, Michael Charles Manternach married Grace Woods, daughter of Stephen J. Woods, of West Hartford, and they became the parents of two sons: 1. Roger Woods, born March 19, 1911. 2. Bruce Wallace, born September 26, 1914. Roger Woods was graduated from Kingswood Academy, summa cum laude, and received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Dartmouth College. He is now associated with his father in The Graphic Arts Company. Bruce Wallace was also graduated from Kingswood and received a Bachelor of Arts degree, magna cum laude, from Dartmouth College, where he won membership in Phi Beta Kappa. He is now attending the Yale School of Law.

DOUGLAS WILLIAM ORR—Widely known in Connecticut as an architect, Douglas Orr is one of New Haven's leading citizens and residents. His accomplishments have caused him to be honored and trusted throughout the State, and he is admired in an ever widening circle of acquaintance.

Mr. Orr was born March 25, 1892, in Meriden, Connecticut, son of Adam and Mary Blair Orr.

Educated in the public schools of Meriden, on graduation from high school Mr. Orr obtained employment in the engineering department of the H. Wales Lines Company, where he remained for several years, gaining an intimate knowledge of building construction. He returned to study architecture at Yale University where he was graduated in 1919 with a degree of Bachelor of Fine Arts. At the time of the World War, Mr. Orr enlisted in the aviation corps of the Army, and was assigned to duty in connection with laying out of flying fields. Later he had charge of the installation of miniature ranges for Signal Corps observation training. He held the second lieutenant's rank and was mustered out in the spring of 1919. In 1920, he went to Europe to continue the study of architecture on the William Wirt Winchester Fellowship. After returning from abroad he continued his studies in the Graduate School, and received from Yale, in 1927, the degree of Master of Fine Arts.

Mr. Orr formed a partnership with George H. del Grella for the practice of architecture, a relationship that lasted until Mr. del Grella retired from the firm in January, 1926. Since that time Mr. Orr has practiced his profession independently, gaining an enviable position in architectural quarters.

Evidences of his work are the New Haven Lawn Club; the Quinnipiack Club, New Haven; the Masonic Temple, Ansonia; the Young Men's Christian Associations in New Haven, Middletown and Ansonia; the Young Women's Christian Association, New Haven (Associate Architect); the Bradley Home, Meriden (Associate Architect); the Veterans' Home, State of Connecticut, Rocky Hill; the Town Halls of Seymour and East Haven; the Memorial Flag Staff, New Haven; the Exchange Buildings for the Southern New England Telephone Company in Manchester, Hamden, Waterbury, Westport, Bristol, Naugatuck, Darien, Old Greenwich, Fairfield, and the Administration Building in New Haven, for which Mr. Orr was one of two architects; the Telephone Garages at New Haven and Bridgeport; the Manufacturing Plant for Berger Brothers, New Haven; the schools in Bethany, Lebanon, Seymour and the Field House for the Hopkins Grammar School, New Haven; work for Yale University; the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station, New Haven; many residences throughout the State; and 1939 will mark the completion of a new Residence Hall at Mount Holyoke College.

He is conversant with the best examples of architecture throughout Europe, as well as in this country, and has shown a remarkable ability to combine beauty and utility as underlying motives of his designs. He keeps fully abreast of the times in any advancement that is made and in the application of new ideas, and occupies a deservedly high place in his profession.

He is a member of the American Institute of Architects; member of the Executive Committee for a number of years and three times president of the Connecticut Chapter, as well as having served on a number of Committees of the National Institute. For two years he acted as president of the Architectural Club of New Haven. He is a member of the Connecticut Technical Council and a former president of the Connecticut Construction League.

In addition to his architectural interests Mr. Orr has often found time to act in an advisory capacity on various committees for civic betterment. He is a director of the First National Bank of New Haven and formerly served on the Branford Board of Education.

Mr. Orr is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Quinnipiack Club of New Haven, the New Haven Lawn Club Association, of which he has been president, the Graduate Club, and the Yale Club of New York City.

In 1917, Douglas W. Orr married Helen Merriam Converse. They live in New Haven and are the parents of a daughter, Ann Douglas, who was born August 2, 1919.

CLYDE AUSTIN JENNINGS—As proprietor and manager of the Elton Hotel, Clyde Austin Jennings has distinguished himself among Waterbury's citizens. He has long been connected with the hotel business, and since 1936 has been the owner of this long established hostelry.

Mr. Jennings was born July 19, 1901, in Montgomery, New York, son of Isaac and Lillie (Van Kleeck) Jennings and member of an old and honorable family. His paternal great-grandfather, Isaac Jennings, came, presumably from Massachusetts Bay Colony, settling with his family in Montgomery, New York, in 1824. The house where he first settled was the one where three generations later Clyde Austin Jennings was born, and it is still in possession of the Jennings family. On the maternal side of his house, Clyde A. Jennings' ancestry is traceable back through several generations of the Lay family. His great-great-grandfather, Captain Lee Lay, of Old Lyme, Connecticut, was a captain in the American Army in the War of the Revolution.

Clyde Austin Jennings attended the public schools, and in 1918 was graduated from the high school at Montgomery, his New York State birthplace. In that year the United States was entering ever more vigorously into prosecution of its part in the World War, and Mr. Jennings became a member of the First Company, Tenth Regiment, United States Marine Corps. When he was honorably discharged from the service at the close of hostilities, he was for a time employed as an engineer at the New York Stock Exchange. Then he became an engine dispatcher for the old New England Railroad at Maybrook, New York, where, during the year of his employment in that capacity, he earned enough money almost to meet the expenses of a course at Cornell University, Ithaca, New York. In 1921, he entered Cornell, where in 1925 he was graduated with the Bachelor of Science degree. While at the university, he enrolled in the first class formed for the College of Hotel Administration, instituted as a part of the college courses of the period.

The actual hotel experience of Mr. Jennings began with employment at summer hostelries during school vacation periods, and afterward he had a continuous connection with the hotel trade. Soon after graduation from college, he associated himself with the Harrington Hotel, at Port Huron, Michigan. Then he was with the Commodore, New York City; the Essex and Sussex, at Spring Lake, New Jersey; the Homestead, at Hot Springs, Virginia; the Flamingo, at Miami Beach, Florida; the Everglades, at Miami, Florida; and the Greylock, at Williamstown, Massachusetts. His first engagement as manager came with his work at the Eutaw Hotel, in Orangeburg, South Carolina, in October, 1927. A year later he became connected with the American Hotels Corporation, which conducts hotels throughout the United States, remaining with this same organization for many years thereafter. His first association with this great corporation was as manager of the Shenandoah Hotel, at Martinsburg, West Virginia. Then he was at the Anthony Wayne Hotel, Hamilton, Ohio, until March, 1933, when he became manager of the Hotel Elton, at Waterbury, Connecticut.

When he assumed management of the Elton for the American Hotels Corporation, a different policy of direction from that previously maintained was adopted to meet changed conditions. Despite the fact that Mr. Jennings assumed the managership in a period of economic depression, the hotel patronage increased until there seemed to be possibilities for substantial success. Soon after the change in management it was deemed advisable, however, to place the enterprise in the hands of a receiver in order to clear up the estate of its late owners. William W. Gager was appointed receiver, and Mr. Jennings continued as manager under the receivership until October 1, 1936. The receiver was then authorized through a Superior Court order to sell the property, and Mr. Jennings became the purchaser. Since that time he has conducted the Elton Hotel as owner-manager. He has made many renovations and innovations and has added many modern features, giving Waterbury and western Connecticut a hotel comparing favorably with the foremost hostelries of New England. The Elton combines comfort and charm to an unusual degree and is widely noted for its competent service. This hotel, indeed, sheds glory upon Mr. Jennings, who, by long experience and native ability, has been enabled to serve well the hotel requirements of Waterbury.

In addition to his other activities, Mr. Jennings is a member of the American Hotel Association and vice-president of the Connecticut Hotel Association, Incorporated. He belongs to the Waterbury Chamber of Commerce and is on the advisory board of the Salvation Army. He is a member of the Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity, which he joined in his student days, and of Corporal Coyle Post of the American Legion at Waterbury. He also holds memberships in the Waterbury Club, the Waterbury Country Club and the Cornell Club of Waterbury, and is president of the local Cornell Club. He is a Presbyterian.

On March 23, 1926, at Miami, Florida, Clyde Austin Jennings married Kathryn Carnegie, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, daughter of Brisbane J. H. and Josephine (Hammer) Carnegie. One son, Joel Jennings, was born of this marriage on October 3, 1929.

WARREN BENJAMIN HITCHCOCK—Since 1903, Warren Benjamin Hitchcock has been president of Pine Grove Cemetery Association, Incorporated, in Waterbury, and here has taken a lively part in the affairs of his times.

Mr. Hitchcock was born December 1, 1872, in Waterbury, Connecticut, son of George Benjamin and Helen (Alexander) Hitchcock. The father, who was born in Waterbury, was for years engaged in farming in the eastern part of Waterbury. The mother was born in Paterson, New Jersey. The grandfather, Truman Benjamin Hitchcock, was also a native of Waterbury and a farmer. The grandmother's name was Frisbie.

Public schools provided the early education of Warren Benjamin Hitchcock, who in 1893 accepted employment with the Holmes, Booth & Hayden Company (later absorbed by the American Brass Company) as a caster. The caster in those days was obliged to have a knowledge of alloys and ability to combine the different mixtures to fill the order, supplying, in a minor degree, the service supplied today by the metallurgist. Following his election as president of the cemetery association, he was, in 1927, given the superintendency of this association, and he continues today as president and superintendent. Winning wide approval for his work in this connection, Mr. Hitchcock is honored and trusted in an ever widening circle of acquaintance. This association was established originally in 1854 and in 1887 it was incorporated. The original plot contained thirteen acres, and it is kept separate today and called the Old Pine Grove Cemetery. An addition of one hundred acres of ground is known as the New Pine Grove Cemetery.

In addition to his other activities, Mr. Hitchcock is the owner of a four hundred acre farm in the Waterbury district, and he is also president of the Mill Plain Development Company, of Waterbury. In his political views he is a staunch Republican, and he has rendered valuable service to his party. For four years he was alderman of the Fifth District of the City of Waterbury, and for six years he was a member of the City Board of Charities. Fraternally he is connected with the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; and Mad River Grange, No. 71, of the Patrons of Husbandry, in which he served for five terms of a year each as master.

Warren Benjamin Hitchcock married (first), in Waterbury, Connecticut, October 16, 1893, Helen Frost, daughter of Charles and Mary (Sperry) Frost, of this city. Mrs. Hitchcock died July 10, 1928. The following children were born to them: 1. George Frost, who served in the United States Navy during the World War; he lives in Meriden. 2. Irving Warren, died February 4, 1937; his wife was Helen Roden, of Waterbury. 3. Bernice, a graduate nurse of Waterbury. 4. Bertha, a graduate nurse, also working in Waterbury. 5. Clifford Benjamin, died November 27, 1918. 6. Ruth Eleanor, a graduate nurse, engaged in practice at Greenwich. Warren Benjamin Hitchcock married (second), in Hartford, Connecticut, January 9, 1931, Lulu Williams, daughter of Thomas P. and Eliza Harding Williams, of Lockport, Nova Scotia, Canada.

THEODORE LOUIS BRISTOL—Since he began his active career in the closing years of the last century, Theodore Louis Bristol has occupied an important place in the business and industrial life of Ansonia. His leadership has been a conspicuous factor in the development of a number of leading corporations, among them the Ansonia Water Company, the Bristol Drug Company and the Ansonia Forest Products Company, and the wide extension of his interests not only in business but in civic affairs has enhanced his influence in the city and county.

Mr. Bristol was born in Ansonia, on April 25, 1870, a son of Charles Edward and Frances Ellen (Bartholomew) Bristol. He is a grandson of Charles and Harriet (Bradley) Bristol and a direct descendant in the paternal line of Henry Bristol, who settled at New Haven in 1650. His mother, Frances Ellen Bartholomew, was a daughter of J. H. and Polly (Root) Bartholomew.

Theodore Louis Bristol was educated in the public schools of Ansonia, Phillips Exeter Academy and Yale College, from which he was graduated in 1893 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He began his active career in 1892 as manager of the Bristol Drug Company and subsequently succeeded to the offices of president and treasurer, which he now holds. Meanwhile his other interests steadily broadened as his executive capacities and sound business judgment led to many demands upon his services. He became secretary of the McArthur Hypophosphite Company and its treasurer; president and treasurer of the Ansonia Water Company, whose affairs he has directed for many years; president and treasurer of the Ansonia Forest Products Company, an association which he also still retains; president and treasurer of the Ansonia Novelty Company; president of the Ansonia Telephone Company and the Bristol Securities Company and president of the Atlas Manufacturing Company. He has served, in addition, on the directorates of numerous corporations and at the present time is a director of the Ansonia Water Company, the Ansonia Forest Products Company, the Bristol Drug Company, the McArthur Hypophosphite Company, the Ansonia National Bank, the Birmingham Water Company and The Atlas-Ansonia Company.

Mr. Bristol has also been active in a number of general business associations. He is a director of the Ansonia Chamber of Commerce; a director and past president of the Connecticut Water Works Association; a member and past president of the New England Water Works Association; secretary and treasurer of the Lumber Manufacturers Association of Southern New England; and vice-president of the Industrial Association of the Lower Naugatuck Valley. He is a former president of the Connecticut Forest and Park Association and a member of the American Water Works Association and the Connecticut Society of Civil Engineers. At Ansonia, he has made his influence effective in supporting many civic enterprises and institutions, as well as other projects with whose aims he is in sympathy. In 1903, he served as representative from this district in the Connecticut State Legislature and in 1913-14, was president of the Ansonia Board of Public Works. The advancement of the city's interests and the public welfare have always commanded his loyal efforts.

Stanley D. Morgan

In addition to his other connections, Mr. Bristol is chairman of the Ansonia Chapter of the American Red Cross and a member of the executive committee of Housatonic Council, Boy Scouts of America. He is a trustee of the First Congregational Church of Ansonia. During the World War he served as a member of the State Council of National Defense; chairman of the War Bureau, the War Savings Committee and as Fuel and Food Administrator at Ansonia; and as manager of the local drives of the American Red Cross, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Salvation Army War Fund, the Red Cross Roll Call and the Christmas Seal Drives. He was also a member of the National Home Guard and in earlier years served an enlistment with the New Haven Grays. Mr. Bristol is a member of the Masonic Order, serving as vice-president of the Ansonia Masonic Temple Association; a member of the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity and Wolf's Head Society at Yale; and a member of the Graduates Club of New Haven and the Seymour Fish and Game Club, of Seymour, Connecticut. In politics he is a Republican.

On October 5, 1893, Mr. Bristol married Florence M. Espe of Ansonia, daughter of Charles and Melvina (Farrel) Espe. They became the parents of five children: 1. Theodore L., Jr. 2. Frances Bartholomew, who married Stanley Gordon Seccombe. 3. Florence, who married Lardner Hancock Shull. 4. Elleda, who married Dr. William Rives Wilson. 5. John Thorvald, deceased.

HON. STANLEY D. MORGAN—One of the outstanding citizens of all New London County, Senator Stanley D. Morgan of Waterford, is not only a member of the Connecticut Legislature, but also serves his state, county and community in many offices, as well as being a typical Connecticut Yankee, one who returns from his public duties to the soil of his ancestral homestead, soil which he cultivates as the representative of a family which has struck its roots deeply into the State for more than three hundred years.

Stanley D. Morgan was born at Waterford, September 16, 1889, son of Stanley G. and Julia A. (Douglas) Morgan. Stanley G. Morgan, who was a native of Waterford, spent his life as a farmer on the Douglas Homestead in Waterford. Stanley Morgan's original ancestor in Connecticut was William Douglas, a native of Scotland, who was born in 1610 and settled in New London in 1660, having been in the American Colonies since 1640. Through subsequent generations, the family has clung tenaciously to the ancestral homestead in Waterford which is held by deeds and grants dating back to the beginning of the Eighteenth century, deeds still in the Senator's possession which are dated in 1731, 1743 and 1748, this last being a grant of land signed by King George.

In addition, the family, each generation, has been active in civic and patriotic duties, helping establish the Colonies, aiding in the winning of independence, and since that time, working for the prosperity of Connecticut and New London County. An example of the more recent generations in public service is Senator Morgan's grandfather, Albert G. Douglas, who served in the General Assembly of Connecticut in 1852 and 1863 while serving his community of Waterford for years as a member of the Board of Selectmen.

After passing through the public schools of Waterford and New London, Stanley D. Morgan, who had been raised on the family homestead, began the serious practice of agriculture, cultivating the same soil which has been in production for nearly three hundred years. And from the very first he began taking an active part in the community life, beginning before he was twenty-one to promote the good roads movement. It was his activity in this field, which resulted in the building of the through roads now known as the Governor's Highway, which resulted in his being elected to the Connecticut General Assembly as a representative at the age of twenty-five in 1915. After this term, Mr. Morgan confined himself to duties within his community, serving in many capacities, including work as a member of the Board of Selectmen from which office he became deputy judge of the Waterford Town Court, a position in which he served for eight years, when he was appointed judge of the Town Court by Governor Cross. He served since 1929, as a member of the School Board and at the time of writing, is serving his third term as chairman of the Waterford School Committee. He returned to the Connecticut Legislature in 1931, being elected in 1930 without a candidate appearing in opposition. In 1932, he was re-elected by better than two to one and continued in the Legislature as a member of the Finance Committee. Senator Morgan, in speaking of his continued interest in good roads says that, when he first went to Hartford as a representative in 1915, he drove by horse and buggy to New London where he took a train for Saybrook and there transferred to another train for Hartford while, today, he runs from Waterford to Hartford by automobile in about an hour. Then, in 1935, he took his seat as a State Senator, being elected by six hundred and two votes over his Democratic opponent, P. L. Sullivan, to represent the Twentieth Senatorial District, the largest in the State, comprising the sixteen New London County towns of Bozrah, Colchester, East Lyme, Franklin, Griswold, Lyme, Lebanon, Lisbon, Montville, North Stonington, Old Lyme, Salem, Sprague, Stonington, Voluntown and Waterford. In the Senate, Mr. Morgan serves as chairman of the Federal Relations Committee and as a member of the Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on Insurance, Roads, Rivers and Bridges Committee, the Committee on Shell Fisheries and as the chairman of the Committee on New Towns and Probate Districts. A member of the First Baptist Church of New London and the New London County Farm Bureau, the Senator is also a member of Konmoc Grange, No. 41, Patrons of Husbandry, of Waterford.

Hon. Stanley D. Morgan married, at Riverpoint, Rhode Island, in 1911, Reba V. Kenyon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stanton Kenyon. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan are the parents of two children: 1. Stanley Douglas, Jr., born November 29, 1912, a graduate of Chapman Technology of New London and now associated with his father in the operation of the ancestral farm. He married Jennie Brown of New London, on September 3, 1934, and they have a son, Stanley Douglas, 3rd, born November 19, 1938. 2. Dorothy Winnifred, born April 25, 1916, a graduate of the Willimantic State Normal School and now a teacher in the Waterford Schools.

ALFRED FREDERICK MEYERHANS—As a public accountant, Alfred Frederick Meyerhans has rendered useful and constructive service in Waterbury and vicinity, where he is widely known and has a host of friends.

Mr. Meyerhans was born February 29, 1888, in Basle, Switzerland, son of Paul and Katharine (Meyer) Meyerhans, both of whom died in New York City. The father was for years a cabinet maker until his death.

Alfred Frederick Meyerhans was an infant when his family arrived in New York City. He studied in the public schools of New York, and was graduated from high school there. In 1905, he took up his work of accounting, continuing it in New York until 1916, the year of his advent to Waterbury. Since that time he has carried on public accounting work and has also participated effectively and helpfully in the affairs of his community.

Here he is a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Waterbury Public Speaking Club. He has many business affiliations, being secretary of the Hartley Wire Die Company, the Drawn Metal Specialty Company, the Contractors' Supply Company, the firm of Carl and Walt, Incorporated (of Woodbury), and the William Schollhorn Company (of New Haven). He is a trustee of the Pine Grove Cemetery Association, Incorporated, of Waterbury. He has for years been active in Young Men's Christian Association work and is a member of several committees of that organization. He is a leading Kiwanian in Waterbury and a member of the Chase Country Club. He is connected with Liberty Lodge, No. 123, of the Free and Accepted Masons, in Waterbury.

At West New York, New Jersey, on April 26, 1913, Alfred Frederick Meyerhans married Ethel Opdycke, daughter of Henry C. and Rachael (Hall) Opdycke, of that place. Mr. Opdycke, his wife's father, resides with the Meyerhans family in Waterbury. He was born in 1846 and is ninety-two years of age at the time of writing. Mrs. Opdycke is now deceased. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Meyerhans: 1. Robert Hall, a graduate of the University of Alabama, degree of Mechanical Engineer, now associated with the engineering department of the General Electric Company, at Bloomfield, New Jersey; he married Frances Camps, of Tuscaloosa, Alabama. 2. Stuart, a student at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy, New York. 3. Katharine Fox, living at home with her family.

HERBERT EDWIN MORRIS—Entering the insurance field in 1902, Herbert Edwin Morris has been closely associated with this work to the present day, and since 1930 he has conducted his own general insurance business in New Haven. He was born here October 17, 1879, the son of William Greenwood and Margaret Watson (Moore) Morris, both deceased. William Greenwood Morris, a native New Yorker, was identified with the picture framing business during his lifetime. Margaret Watson (Moore) Morris was a native of New Jersey.

Herbert Edwin Morris received his grammar and high school education in the local schools, and then enrolled at Yale University, graduating as a member of the class of 1902 with a Bachelor of Arts degree. For the next six years he was employed by the Security Insurance Company, of New Haven, and then in 1908 he went to Boston, Massachusetts, to enter the employ of the Boston Insurance Company, where he remained until 1917. He then became associated with the J. W. Hemingway Insurance Agency in New Haven, and in 1930 he purchased this business, and has ever since conducted it himself, dealing in all the different branches of insurance.

Mr. Morris is a supporter of the Republican Party and a member of the Rotary Club, Mory's Association and the Quinnipiack Club. He is also affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons, Knights Templar, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite and the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

He was married at Springfield, Massachusetts, May 15, 1922, to Grace E. Ezekial, daughter of Ezekial M. and Caroline (Dimock) Ezekial.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris reside at 324 Townshend Avenue, New Haven. The home was built in 1702 and was burned by the British on July 5, 1779, and was immediately rebuilt on the same site.

NORMAN STANLEY BUCKINGHAM—Norman Stanley Buckingham was born April 30, 1881, in Milford, Connecticut, son of John William and Alice M. (Baldwin) Buckingham, both natives of Milford. His father was a merchant there and was for years prominent in local political affairs. The family was long prominent in Milford, where it was first established in 1639 by Thomas Buckingham, who came from England and was one of Milford's earliest settlers. Some of Norman S. Buckingham's early ancestors on the paternal side of his house were soldiers of the Colonies in the struggle for American independence, and afterward the members of the family remained staunch patriots. John W. Buckingham, Norman S. Buckingham's father, not only was active in Milford affairs as a selectman and in other town offices, but he maintained the military tradition of the family by serving in the Union Army during the Civil War. Enlisting for service, he became a lieutenant in Company I of the Twenty-third Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers.

His son, Norman Stanley Buckingham, attended the public schools of Milford, his birthplace, and in 1897 was graduated from high school. In 1898, he entered the employ of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company in its legal department and has remained with the organization continuously. He read law and was admitted to the bar in 1911. He studied for this profession while serving as a clerk with the company, carrying on his preparations for the law in the railroad's legal department. He held various offices in the legal department, and in 1935 was appointed general solicitor.

Mr. Buckingham is a director of the Milford Savings Bank and the Milford Cemetery Association. He is a member of the New Haven County Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association and the American Bar Association. He belongs to the Quinnipiack Club of New Haven and the Wampanoag Country Club. In his political allegiance he is a Republican. He worships in the faith of the Church of Christ, of the Congregational denomination, in Milford.

Norman Stanley Buckingham married, on October 11, 1913, in Milford, Connecticut, Anna E. Munson, of this place, daughter of George W. and Kate (Shepherd) Munson, of Milford. The three children of this marriage are: 1. Norman Shepherd. 2. Philip Munson. 3. Athala.

CHARLES HAMILTON HEMPSTEAD—Contributing notably to the railway industry and its affairs, Charles Hamilton Hempstead is assistant secretary of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad. In New Haven, where he has his headquarters, he is widely and favorably known, and his position is one of true leadership and distinction in his special field of activity.

Mr. Hempstead was born March 19, 1870, in Hartford, Connecticut, son of Charles Thatcher and Augusta Martha (Hamilton) Hempstead. His father was born in New London and his mother in the vicinity of Hotchkissville, Connecticut. For forty-three years the father was general passenger agent for the New York, New Haven and Hartford, and his participation in the road's affairs was truly noteworthy. The Hempstead family is an old and honorable one, dating back in the United States to 1636.

In 1877, when Charles Hamilton Hempstead was seven years of age, he came with his parents to Stamford, there attending the public schools. Completing his high school work there, he first joined forces with the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, on February 18, 1887, in New York City. For a few months he remained in New York, then came to New Haven to continue his work. Starting his association with the company's financial department, he stayed in the treasurer's office until 1907. Then he went to the secretary's office, and in 1910 was himself made assistant secretary of the road. Still serving in this capacity, he has been with the company considerably more than a half-century.

He is also assistant secretary of the New York Connecting Railroad and of the Connecticut Company, as well as of the New England Steamship Company. Interesting himself in a variety of public affairs in his community, Mr. Hempstead has been a staunch Republican and a member of a number of Connecticut organizations. He belongs to Union Lodge, No. 5, of the Free and Accepted Masons, in which order he is also affiliated with Rittenhouse Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, Stamford Commandery, No. 12, of Knights Templar, and Pyramid Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is connected likewise with the Royal Arcanum. He also is a leader in church work, being associated with Union Memorial Church, of Glenbrook, in which he has been a deacon since 1894 and treasurer since 1903.

In Stamford, Connecticut, on May 21, 1891, Charles Hamilton Hempstead married Agnes Maria Stillson, of Franklin, Delaware County, New York, daughter of Irwin and Esther Stillson, of that place. The family residence is at Glenbrook. The one son of this marriage, Charles Stillson Hempstead, was graduated in 1920, from the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University with the degree of Mechanical Engineer, and he is now general manager of the Peabody Engineering Company, of Glenbrook. He married Margaret Wilson, of Brooklyn, New York, and they became the parents of two children: i. Elizabeth H. ii. Charles Wilson.

ALBERT McCLELLAN MATHEWSON—For many years Albert McClellan Mathewson carried forward a practice of law in New Haven, continuing this work until his retirement in 1935. He has come to be far more widely known, however, by virtue of his pioneer work in probation in this State—a work that had its immediate inception in circumstances connected with his judgeship of the New Haven City Court. Mr. Mathewson is a descendant of John and Priscilla Alden, Governor William Bradford, Governor William Bradford, Jr., Governor Jonathan Trumbull, and General Samuel McClellan.

Judge Mathewson was born October 19, 1860, in Woodstock, Connecticut, son of William Williams and Harriet Augusta (Warner) Mathewson and a descendant of William Williams, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, who was Judge Mathewson's great-great-grandfather and whose wife was Mary (Trumbull) Williams. William Williams Mathewson, Judge Mathewson's father, was born in the old Israel Putnam house at the edge of Brooklyn and Pomfret, Connecticut. The mother, Harriet Augusta (Warner) Mathewson, came from central New York State.

The district schools at Woodstock provided Albert McClellan Mathewson's early education, and in 1880 he was graduated from Woodstock Academy. In 1884, he took the Bachelor of Laws degree at Yale University. Though he began his practice immediately thereafter, he returned to the university for a second course some years later, receiving the Master of Laws degree in 1891. Shortly after he started his professional practice, in 1884, Mr. Mathewson began his efforts to obtain the Republican nomination for the assistant clerkship at the State House. In 1885, while he was still a candidate, he threw his votes to M. J. McConville, who was elected. Between 1884 and 1889 he practiced in Putnam, then came to New Haven and began his independent practice in this city, so continuing until his retirement in 1935.

His participation in public affairs has been noteworthy. A staunch Republican, he has acted in a number of different capacities. From 1895 to 1905, he was clerk of the Connecticut State Shellfish Commission. In 1905, he was elected judge of the New Haven City Court, so serving until 1911. He is justifiably proud of the probation work that he has done, and which had its start in the duties connected with his judgeship. This work, in which he was advised and helped by the famous Judge Ben Lindsey, of Denver, Colorado, extended from its local limitations until it included the whole of Connecticut in its scope. Frequently Judge Mathewson was called upon to speak to different groups about it, and his words of wisdom and advice have been most helpful. He has interested himself in all kinds of work among boys and girls, and his labors have won for him a wide appreciation. For three years he was a member of the Connecticut National Guard and he also belonged to the New Haven Grays. From 1900 to 1910, Mr. Mathewson was a member of the State central Republican committee, and he was secretary-treasurer of the Young Men's Republican Club during the time of its existence. For some years he has been secretary of the New Haven Colony Historical Society. He is a member and was the first president of the national group known as the Descendants of Signers of the Declaration of Independence. For ten years he was chairman of the Advisory Board of the Salvation Army to raise the budget for the maintenance of the work in New Haven. At Yale Law School he became a member of Corbey Court, one of the university's important groups. He belongs also to the New Haven County Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association and the American Bar Association. He is a member also of the New Haven Country Club and the Graduate Club of New Haven.

Albert McClellan Mathewson married, June 13, 1888, in New Haven, Mary E. (Board) Foster, widow of William L. Foster. Mrs. Mathewson has one son, Major Pierrepont B. Foster, who is assistant clerk of the Superior Court of New Haven County and judge of the Town Court of Hamden, Connecticut. The Mathewsons have their residence at No. 657 Orange Street, New Haven.

THEODORE LILLEY—Esteemed as one of New Haven County's leading business men, Theodore Lilley is treasurer of the George L. Lilley Company, a director of several banking institutions, and manager of the Citizens' Coal Company, of Waterbury. Many years of service have caused him to be regarded with respect and admiration by his associates and fellow citizens, and he is highly esteemed and honored in every circle in which he is known.

Mr. Lilley was born December 1, 1888, in Waterbury, Connecticut, son of George Leavens and Anna E. H. (Steele) Lilley. His paternal grandparents were John Leavens and Caroline Ward (Adams) Lilley, and he was descended from George Lilley, who settled in Reading, Massachusetts, in 1636. His maternal grandfather was Norman Steele, of Waterbury. Further details about his father and ancestry are to be found under the separate heading, "George L. Lilley," on the following page. Suffice it to say here that he was one of three children of his parents: 1. John Leavens, a graduate of Yale University. 2. Frederick Pliny, a graduate of the United States Naval Academy. 3. Theodore, of further mention.

Private schools furnished his early education, and Theodore Lilley completed his preparatory work at the Hotchkiss School and the Taft School. He then matriculated at Yale University, in New Haven, attending the Sheffield Scientific School there and being graduated in 1910 with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. While at Yale, he played tackle on the 1908 and 1909 football teams. Immediately after graduation, he joined the Chase Rolling Mills, of Waterbury, subsequently becoming associated with the Waterbury Morris Plan Bank in the capacity of secretary and treasurer. From August, 1915, to August, 1917, he so served.

Then came a period in which Mr. Lilley's career was interrupted by the World War. It was in August, 1917, that he enlisted in the Second Plattsburg Training Corps, receiving the rank of captain in the Field Artillery forces. He was then assigned to the 350th Regiment of Field Artillery, serving with that unit from December, 1917, to April, 1919. From June, 1918, to March, 1919, he was with the American Expeditionary Forces, serving with this same regiment.

Returning to civilian life, Mr. Lilley purchased the Citizens' Coal Company in 1922, continuing to conduct its affairs thereafter until 1928. In that year he sold the property to the Household Fuel Company, of Hartford, and thereafter he carried on his work as manager of the Waterbury branch of the organization. Today he is still manager of this branch, and he also occupies the post of treasurer of the George L. Lilley Corporation. He continues his association with the Morris Plan Bank as a member of its board of directors, and at the same time he is a director of the North Side Bank and Trust Company, of Bristol, and president and treasurer of the Citizens' Realty Company, of Waterbury, and a director of Traders, Incorporated.

Quite aside from his connections with the commercial world, Mr. Lilley is active in civic and social affairs. He is a member of the Waterbury Club and the Waterbury Country Club, in Waterbury. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons, holding the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry and being an initiate in the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Hartford. He is likewise a member of Waterbury Lodge, No. 265, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the Tunxis Club, in Tolland, Massachusetts, and the East Haddam Fishing and Hunting Club, and in New York City belongs to the Yale Club and the St. Anthony Club. He is a member of Connecticut Chapter of the Society of Colonial Wars. In spare time he is fond of brush shooting, and enjoys hunting game birds. He is a member and trustee of Christ Church, Watertown.

Theodore Lilley married (first), in Havana, Cuba, Evelyn Dutton. They became the parents of three daughters: 1. Elaine, born February 7, 1914. 2. Evelyn Theodora, born November 5, 1915. 3. Joan, born October 1, 1920. Mr. Lilley married (second) Sylvia Page Brusati. They became the parents of three sons: 1. Rutherford Page, born September 12, 1924. 2. Theodore, Jr., born May 5, 1926. 3. John Leavens, born June 30, 1930.

HON. GEORGE LEAVENS LILLEY—For many years prominently engaged in business and civic activity, George Leavens Lilley long made his home in Waterbury. His interests extended far beyond the borders of this community, however, and even into the neighboring State of Massachusetts, where he was associated with Swift and Company. His accomplishments were numerous and varied, all of them contributive in a high degree to the general welfare, and he earned the respect and admiration with which he was regarded by others. In personal relationships he was kind, generous and ever fair-minded and sincere of purpose, and, as a result, he was honored and loved by a host of friends.

Mr. Lilley was born August 3, 1859, at Oxford, Worcester County, Massachusetts, son of John Leavens and Caroline Ward (Adams) Lilley and a descendant of George Lilley, who settled in Reading, Massachusetts, in 1636. John Leavens Lilley was a farmer and marketman, and was described by those who knew him best as a "bundle of nervous energy and activity." The mother, Caroline Ward (Adams) Lilley, was a woman whose strong moral force was felt in the family.

George Leavens Lilley attended the public schools of Oxford, his Massachusetts birthplace, later becoming a student at Worcester Polytechnic Institute, where he remained for one year. At the conclusion of that period he found it necessary, because of the condition of his father's health, to take it upon himself to look after the home farm. Turning his attention to still other pursuits after the father's death, he became associated then with Swift and Company, meat packers, opening a branch house for them in Worcester.

Subsequently Mr. Lilley took up his abode in Waterbury, Connecticut, acquiring extensive real estate interests here. He also was interested in real estate in Torrington and Winsted. A Republican in his political views, he became deeply concerned with the affairs of his times. After 1900 he was active in politics, becoming a candidate for the General Assembly in 1901 and being duly elected. In that legislative body he was independent and straightforward in his expressions of opinion, and he became a member of the joint committee on railroads, securing a law consolidating the town and city of Waterbury and introducing a bill to redistrict the State. In the Fifty-eighth Congress he served on the committee on territories, and in the Fifty-ninth and Sixtieth Congresses, on the committee on naval affairs. For two sessions he was on the committee on expenditures in the Post Office Department. For a time he was also a member of the board of visitors to the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, Maryland. In 1904 he was elected to the Republican State Central Committee, and in 1906 was chairman of the Republican State Convention.

In 1908 came the crowning achievement of his political career, his election as Governor, but he had been seated only three months in that high office when illness came, causing his death on April 21, 1909, in the executive mansion at Hartford. His influence was felt far and wide in political and business circles, and he will be long and affectionately remembered.

In June, 1884, George Leavens Lilley married Anna E. H. Steele, daughter of Norman Steele and Sarah (Hitchcock) Steele, of Waterbury, Connecticut. They were the parents of three children: 1. John Leavens, a graduate of Yale University, New Haven. 2. Frederick Pliny, a graduate of the United States Naval Academy. 3. Theodore, a record of whom appears on the preceding page.

The death of Governor Lilley was an occasion of profound regret in every circle in which he was known, and the record that he left behind him was one of true distinction. His influence will be felt on the world around him for years to come, as it was felt during his lifetime, a continuing power for good among those who knew him.

CLARENCE LEONARD JOHNSON—The senior partner of T. M. Byxbee Company, certified public accountants, of New Haven, Clarence Leonard Johnson brought to his present profession a colorful and varied experience. He was born at Ipswich, England, October 10, 1893, son of Frederick J. and Florence (Blackwell) Johnson, both natives of Great Britain who migrated to Regina, Saskatchewan, Canada, where the father is a prominent merchant.

Mr. Johnson, of this record, was educated in English schools until 1908, when he came to Ogdensburg, New York, and to 1913 was in the employ of

The Oswegatchie Manufacturing Company. Resigning this post, he entered Wesleyan University and studied in this institution and Berkeley Divinity School from 1914 to 1916. In the latter named year Mr. Johnson went to Malone, New York, as secretary of the Lawrence Webster Company, continuing as such until 1920. In the following year he became associated with T. M. Byxbee Company of which he has been the senior partner since May 1, 1928. Since January 26, 1925, he has been a Certified Public Accountant, State of Connecticut, and also was certified by the State of New York on January 3, 1930.

Mr. Johnson not only has figured prominently in his profession in New Haven, and Connecticut, but is well-known in such organizations as the National Association of Cost Accountants, the American Institute of Accountants, the New York State Society of Certified Public Accountants, and the Connecticut Society of Certified Public Accountants, of which he is treasurer. Fraternally, he is affiliated with Northern Constellation Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons of Malone, New York, and is a member of the Kiwanis Club of New Haven, Connecticut, and is treasurer of the Union League of New Haven. He is a Republican in his political views, and worships in the faith of Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church, New Haven. Hunting and fishing are his favorite sports and he is a member of the Bourbonnais-Kiamika Hunting and Fishing Club, of the Province of Quebec.

In Winthrop, New York, on April 2, 1913, Clarence Leonard Johnson married Avis Marion Russell, daughter of George Henry and Emma Louise (Crapser) Russell, of Winthrop. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson are the parents of two children: 1. Emma Louise, a graduate of Syracuse University, with the degree of Master of Science, and now engaged as a teacher at the School of Domestic Arts and Sciences, in Chicago, Illinois. 2. Leonard Blackwell, attending Syracuse University.

ROBERT FREDERICK SCHOLL, M.D.—One of New Haven's leading professional men, Dr. Robert Frederick Scholl has contributed in a notable way to the maintenance of high standards in the medical profession in his community, here earning the respect and admiration of his fellow citizens.

Dr. Scholl was born May 17, 1890, in New Haven, Connecticut, son of William and Anna (Goebel) Scholl. His father is a retired cigar manufacturer, and his grandfather fought in the Confederate Army during the War Between the States.

The public schools of New Haven provided the early education of Robert Frederick Scholl, who, after completing his high school studies here, matriculated at Yale University. He was graduated from the School of Medicine in 1912, receiving the Doctor of Medicine degree. There followed a period of interneship at New Haven Hospital, New Haven, and at Bellevue and Allied Hospitals, New York City. Then, during the Mexican Border difficulties in 1916, he served at that border with the National Guard. Enlisting in the Army Medical Corps for World War service, he was a first lieutenant in that unit in 1918 and 1919. After the conclusion of hostilities, he took post-graduate work at the Mayo Brothers Clinic, in Rochester, Minnesota, and for two years, from 1924 to 1926, specialized in the study of gastro-intestinal diseases. Then, opening his own offices in New Haven, he proceeded to specialize in gastroenterology, becoming attending gastroenterologist at Grace Hospital and Grace Hospital Dispensary.

Along with his regular practice, which has grown with the years, Dr. Scholl is active in the general affairs of his profession, notably through his memberships in such groups as the New Haven City Medical Society, the New Haven County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the National Society for Gastroenterology. He is at the same time a recognized leader in social and civic activities, being a member of the New Haven Country Club and a foremost figure in the Free and Accepted Masons. In the Masonic Order he is connected with a number of branches, holding the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite and being an initiate in the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. His favorite recreational activities are those of an outdoor character, notably golf. He is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

On July 10, 1918, Dr. Robert Frederick Scholl married Ethel Lindsey, daughter of Moses and Elizabeth (Winterton) Lindsey.

LOUIS ERWIN JACOBS—Since he became of age Louis Erwin Jacobs has graced the corridors of the law in New Haven. Over a period of almost half a century he has compiled notable records, not only in his profession, but in public service, that seldom have been equalled by a citizen of the city. He is a world traveler.

Mr. Jacobs was born in New Haven, May 5, 1869, son of Mark and Leah (Marx) Jacobs, both natives of London, England, who came to New Haven in 1833, where the father was a much-loved rabbi for many years. Louis Erwin Jacobs was graduated from the New Haven High School, in 1886. Four years later he received the degree of Bachelor of Laws, with the class of 1890, Yale University Law School. From 1890 to 1893, he was also a student in the Yale Medical School.

Mr. Jacobs was admitted to the Connecticut bar and began the practice of law in New Haven in 1890. This practice has been of a general character and has won the approval of colleagues and clients. Before the bar he is noteworthy for his thorough preparation of a case, accuracy and simplicity of statement, and an enthusiasm for his cause. He is in every sense "a friend of the court," reasonable in conference, and his tact and tactics, while effective, engender no animosity and leave no sting. A great deal of his professional activities have been in the direction of keeping out of court such litigation as can be settled in his office.

However multifarious his work and responsibilities, Mr. Jacobs has not failed to recognize that he has varied and important duties to perform for the public good. He has been Justice of the Peace since 1902, reputed to have given the longest continued service in this office of any man in the city, and probably in the State. As Justice of the Peace, there have been returned before him upwards of seventeen thousand cases. During the World War period he spent three months overseas with the American Expeditionary Forces as chairman of the United States Entertainment Committee. A popular "Four Minute" speaker, he made more than a thousand addresses. In the drives for Federal Loans, he sold $15,000,000 of Liberty Bonds, and $250,000 worth of Savings Stamps. The humanitarian agencies such as the Red Cross and others, profited from his endeavors on their behalf. An exemplar of civic loyalty, Mr. Jacobs has been active in the New Haven Chamber of Commerce and several city organizations. He was a member of the city board of aldermen from 1909 to 1912. Prominent in the Royal Arcanum, he was Grand Regent of the fraternity, in 1921, and was elected Grand Secretary, in 1931. A Republican in his political allegiance, Mr. Jacobs served as chairman of the New Haven conventions of the party, and was chairman of the State convention.

Mr. Jacobs has visited every country in the world four times, approximating a total of 500,000 miles. In 1919, he delivered the Peace Address in Dawson City, Yukon Territory; has delivered more than 55,000 lectures in churches, societies, Rotary and other clubs and fraternal organizations. During many of his sojourns in foreign lands, he was chairman of the entertainment committees on board the vessels and on many trips conducted the Sabbath Devotional Exercises. He crossed the Panama Canal before it was completed and has sailed through the Canal on several occasions; has crossed the Andes Mountains in South America nine times and visited Cuzco. One of his walking trips was from Puno on Lake Titicaca in the Andes Mountains to La Paz in Bolivia. He made three trips around Cape Horn and two through the Straits of Magellan; visited the Island of Punto Arinas and Terra Del Fuego. In one of his trips he entered Tibet. He has written a book in manuscript form "Eyes that Seeth, Yet Seeth Not." In this book he attempts to develop the psychology of observation.

In New Haven, Connecticut, November 20, 1893, Louis Erwin Jacobs married May Rawling, daughter of Richard and Melissa (Mahon) Rawling, of West Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs are the parents of two children: 1. Louis Erwin, Jr., deceased. 2. Thelma Rawling, a teacher of the harp and of ballroom dancing.

RAPHAEL SENEY—Extensively engaged in business affairs in Plainfield, Raphael Seney has done much for the betterment of his community. For years he has been engaged in the confectionery trade, and his enterprise has expanded and grown so much that the construction of a new building has been necessary.

Mr. Seney was born March 1, 1897, at Hope, Rhode Island, son of Charles and Ellen (Lemeaux) Seney, both of French descent. His paternal grandparents were Raphael and Phebe (Chaput) Seney, who were born in Shefford, Province of Quebec, Canada. The grandfather was a farmer and lumberman who spent his last days at Hope, Rhode Island. He and his wife had sixteen children. One of these was Charles Seney, father of Raphael Seney. Charles Seney was born at Shefford, Province of Quebec, Canada, but was only three months of age when his parents crossed the border with their family and took up their abode at Baltic, Connecticut. He was reared in Baltic, and early in youth was employed in a cotton mill. Until 1918, he continued his work in that same line of business, but in that year he gave up mill work in order to assist his son in the confectionery store. He is now retired from his active endeavors. Ellen (Lemeaux) Seney, the mother of Raphael Seney, died July 11, 1935. Their children were: Raphael, Dora, Ella, Rose, Irene and Arthur.

Of these, Raphael Seney attended the public schools of Moosup, Connecticut. Like his father before him, he worked in a cotton mill while still very young. He was only fifteen years of age when he established his own small confectionery store on Prospect Hill, in Moosup, there remaining for six years and developing a large and profitable trade. Eventually he sold his holdings there, however, and in 1918, he purchased the business of Frederic Racine in Plainfield, where he was conducting a well-appointed store and carrying an attractive line of confectionery, periodicals and newspapers up to the time of building his present quarters. It was in 1937, that he erected on Railroad Avenue a new concrete and wood building, fifty by twenty-two feet in size, equipped with the latest modern fixtures and equipment, to carry on his growing business.

The enterprise has prospered under his guidance, and Mr. Seney has extended his activities into other spheres. Not only is he a director of the Plainfield National Bank, of Moosup, but he has done everything in his power for the promotion of valued civic interests. In 1924, he entered politics in a constructive way, and for four terms, from 1924 to 1933, inclusive, he served in the House of Representatives. It was also in 1924 that he was elected a member of the Board of Education of the Town of Plainfield, a position that he has held consistently down to the present, now serving as chairman of the board. He is also a member of the Finance Board of the Town of Plainfield since 1931. In June, 1936, he helped to form the Plainfield Fire district, of which he is now chairman. He is a Democrat.

Fraternal interests of Mr. Seney have been chiefly represented in his memberships in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Columbus. In both of these orders he has affiliations in Norwich. He is a member of St. John's Church. Another affiliation is with the Foresters of America.

On September 18, 1933, at Plainfield, Connecticut, Raphael Seney married Lilly Beaulac, daughter of Severe Beaulac. One son, Raphael Charles Seney, was born to this marriage, his birth taking place at Plainfield, on August 5, 1934.

MARTIN LEO O'NEILL, M.D.—Though a comparative newcomer to Jewett City, Dr. Martin Leo O'Neill has already established an enviable reputation in this vicinity as a physician and surgeon. He not only serves in an official professional capacity for several communities here but is also identified with a number of the leading medical institutions of this section.

Dr. O'Neill was born at New Britain, Connecticut, July 4, 1898, the son of Martin J. and Delia (Collins) O'Neill, both residents of his birthplace. He received the early part of his general education in the parochial schools of that city and later completed this part of his studies at the New Britain High School, where he was a member of the class of 1916. Further education at this point was to be interrupted with the United States entrance into the World War. Dr. O'Neill enlisted in the 5th United States Marine Corps and served overseas with this unit. During the famous engagement at Belleau Wood he was severely wounded twice and sent back to this country, where he spent eleven months in the hospital. In September, 1918, he went back to France and served with the Military Police there until January, 1920, when he received his honorable discharge.

During this period he resumed his studies and matriculated at the Connecticut State College, from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree in 1925. He won fame as an athlete here, captaining the college football team in 1923 and 1924, and being selected all-New England fullback for those two years. Later he became an outstanding professional player as fullback for the Providence Steamrollers, and later for the Philadelphia Yellow Jackets. After finishing his studies at Connecticut State, Dr. O'Neill entered the Yale Medical School, from which he was awarded a Doctor of Medicine degree in 1929. The following year he was an interne at the New Britain Hospital, and from 1930 to 1931, served as house surgeon for the Peek Memorial Hospital, in Brooklyn, New York. During the latter year he came to Jewett City and established himself in a general practice of medicine and surgery which he has since conducted with outstanding success. In conjunction with his practice he serves as medical examiner for the communities of Griswold and Voluntown, is a member of the courtesy staff of the Bachus Memorial Hospital, at Norwich, and belongs to the American Medical Association, the New London County Medical Society and the Tri-City Medical Society. In his religious convictions he worships at St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church.

Dr. O'Neill married in New York City, Hilda Scholander, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Scholander. Dr. and Mrs. O'Neill are the parents of one son, James Brian, born in Jewett City.

JUDGE ARTHUR F. LIBBY—Although Judge Arthur F. Libby has made a career of law for a quarter of a century, it is probable that the dozen years of this period he spent upon the bench as judge of the Municipal Court of Norwich were the most important in his life, as well as that of the city. He, no doubt, learned more of human aspirations and failures, had his own ideas and ideals more broadly developed; and accomplished more good than was possible in many times this length of experience in general practice. It has been said of him that "His great success as a judge of that court was due to the fact that he not only possessed intelligence of a high order regulated by a very sound judgment, but had a personality that secured ready acceptance of his decisions and advice."

Judge Arthur F. Libby was born in North Vassalboro, Maine, June 22, 1883, son of Dr. Freeman Ansel and Bertha (White) Libby, the latter of whom died in 1924. Dr. Libby was a native of Maine who came to Putnam, Connecticut, in 1889, and was actively identified with Putnam for many years thereafter. He was graduated from Dartmouth (Hanover, New Hampshire) College Medical School, in 1881, salutatorian of his class. He practiced his profession in North Vassalboro until 1889, when he removed to Putnam. Here he was the proprietor of the Libby Drug Company for a decade; was president of the Putnam Electric Light and Power Company, over a long period; served in the Connecticut House of Representatives, and was active during the World War, as chairman of the Red Cross in Putnam and Pomfret, as well as in other movements of that strenuous era in our history. He died in 1920.

The academic education of Judge Libby was begun in local public schools, carried on through the Putnam High School, from which he was graduated in 1901, the president of his class; and was completed at Dartmouth College, from which he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts, in 1906. In the Hanover, New Hampshire, institution, he was editor-in-chief of "The Dartmouth," the college newspaper. Entering the Harvard University Law School, he was graduated in 1913, a Bachelor of Laws, and in the following year began a general practice in Norwich which has been continued with a large and merited success.

Judge Libby became judge of the Municipal Court of Norwich, in 1921, an office he filled with great skill until he retired in 1933. His work in a difficult position won him general approval. During the World War he served as a "four minute" speaker, a member of the Legal Advisory Board of Norwich, and chairman of the Norwich War Bureau. He was chairman of the Republican Town Committee of Norwich from 1922 to 1928, and he is a trustee of the Norwich Savings Society; a member of the New London County Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association, the Chi Phi fraternity, and the Arcanum Club of Norwich. He is of the Baptist faith.

On August 13, 1934, Judge Arthur F. Libby married Margaret Sherwood, of New York, and they have two children: 1. Arthur F., Jr., born November 4, 1935, at Norwich. 2. Elizabeth Ann, born at Norwich, November 22, 1938.

Mrs. Libby graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Smith College, in the class of 1919, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The year following graduation she studied at the Lycée de Versailles, on a French Government Exchange Scholarship. She received the degree of Master of Arts from Columbia University in 1923, and Doctor of Philosophy in 1935. Her dissertation was entitled "The Attitude of Voltaire to Magic and the Sciences," and was published in Columbia Studies in History, Economics and Public Law. Mrs. Libby was a teacher of History at Spence School, New York City, from 1919 to 1934.

EDSON BEECHER LOCKWOOD—For many years a prominent figure in the life of Watertown, Edson Beecher Lockwood devoted himself to farming here throughout his entire career. At the same time, however, he participated effectively and constructively in public affairs, holding important offices and representing his district in the General Assembly at Hartford. His citizenship was of the highest order, and his qualities were those that usually mark the true leader—kindness, consideration of the feelings and points of view of other people and devotion to the general welfare.

Mr. Lockwood was born September 24, 1855, at Watertown, Connecticut, son of Ezra and Julia E. (Beecher) Lockwood and a descendant of an old Colonial family whose members have for years played a prominent role in Connecticut's development. The ancestry of Edson Beecher Lockwood may be traced directly to Charlemagne, King of the Franks and Holy Roman Emperor, and through him to the House of Capet, known as one of the most powerful ruling houses of medieval Europe. In order we find the Counts of Vermandois, a collateral branch of the House of Capet and their rivals for many years; the Warren family, Earls of Surrey; the de Bohuns of Magna Charta fame; the Kings of Scotland, and the Saxon Kings of England from the time of Alfred the Great. Related to these noble families are, among others, the Counts of Toulouse, the Dukes of Aquitaine, the Houses of Bavaria and Savoy and, through the marriage of Henry I of France and Princess Anne of Russia the lineage may be followed to Yaroslav, Grand Duke of Kiev and of all Russia.

Ezra Lockwood, father of Edson Beecher Lockwood, was born September 17, 1809, and died May 9, 1859, and was a farmer at Watertown. His wife, Julia E. (Beecher) Lockwood, was born September 23, 1824, and died February 28, 1896. She, like her husband, was a member of old Connecticut families, and was keenly interested in public affairs and widely known among townspeople for her constructive activities.

Their son, Edson Beecher Lockwood, studied in public and private schools in Watertown. He was four years old when his father died, and as soon as he was old enough he took over management of the home farm, which his mother had kept. This farm consisted of over one hundred acres, and for years it was operated by Mr. Lockwood and his brother, Charles Ezra Lockwood. He was an excellent business man, industrious and persevering, and his farming enterprises were profitable. He was a respected member of his community, much admired for his attainments and character, and he was called upon for public service in addition to his business activities.

For some time he was a member of the board of selectmen of Watertown, serving as either first or second selectman for nearly thirty years. He was for more than twenty years a member of the board of assessors, as well as a justice of the peace. He was a Republican in his partisan views, and as an active member of different town boards he helped in much useful work, particularly road construction. He also represented Watertown in the Connecticut General Assembly, performing his duties with diligence and fidelity and bringing benefits to his constituents and credit to himself.

In every possible way Mr. Lockwood sought to contribute to civic betterment in his community and State. Traffic through Litchfield County was greatly facilitated by his efforts to bring better roads into existence, and especially were the main highways to and from the county seat improved. Mr. Lockwood was a member of the vestry of Christ Protestant Episcopal Church, in Watertown, and regularly attended services there when health and strength permitted. In spare time he enjoyed studying history, delving into Revolutionary times and becoming widely read in this special realm.

Edson Beecher Lockwood, who was unmarried, made his home with his sister, Ella M. Lockwood, still living in the family homestead. A brother, Charles E. Lockwood, and two nephews and a niece, also survived him. His death occurred November 4, 1934, at the age of seventy-nine years, and was an occasion of deepest sorrow in every circle in which he was known. He was buried in Evergreen Cemetery, Watertown. His career had been distinctive, and he was honored and trusted in every quarter. His works and the memory of him live on as lasting monuments to his life.

CHARLES EZRA LOCKWOOD—One of the leading citizens of his Connecticut district, Charles Ezra Lockwood was born July 9, 1857, at the family homestead in Watertown. His parents were Ezra and Julia E. (Beecher) Lockwood, and he was a descendant of an old Colonial family whose members for years were active in the development of Connecticut. The family line has been traced back directly to Charlemagne, King of the Franks and Holy Roman Emperor, and through him to the House of Capet, known as one of the most powerful ruling houses of medieval Europe. In order we find the counts of Vermandois, a collateral branch of the House of Capet and their rivals for many years; the Warren family, Earls of Surrey; the de Bohuns of Magna Charta fame; the Kings of Scotland, and the Saxon Kings of England from the time of Alfred the Great. Related to these noble families are, among others, the Counts of Toulouse, the Dukes of Aquitaine, the Houses of Bavaria and Savoy, and, through the marriage of Henry I, of France, and Princess Anne, of Russia, the lineage may be followed to Yaroslav, Grand Duke of Kiev and of all Russia.

Ezra Lockwood, father of Charles Ezra Lockwood, was born September 17, 1809, and died May 9, 1859, and was a farmer at Watertown. His wife, Julia E. (Beecher) Lockwood, was born September 23, 1824, and died February 28, 1896. She, like her husband, was a member of old Connecticut families, and was keenly interested in public affairs and widely known among townspeople for her constructive activities.

Their son, Charles Ezra Lockwood, like his brother, E. B. Lockwood, was educated in the public and private schools of Watertown, his native community. The two brothers together managed and operated the home farm left them by their father. They were also active together in running the firm of Lockwood Brothers, dealers in agricultural implements, and in dairy farming. The home farm consisted of one hundred acres.

Charles Ezra Lockwood, in addition to being an excellent business man, has served his community in many helpful ways. He is a member of a number of Watertown civic groups, and, like his brother, served in the Connecticut General Assembly early in the present century. He came to be widely known in Hartford, the State capital, as well as in his home community of Watertown, where the Lockwoods have long been outstanding farmers. The property on which the family farm now stands was originally owned by Mr. Lockwood's great-great-grandfather, Ezra Lockwood. The homestead was built in 1805 by the grandfather, also named Ezra.

Charles Ezra Lockwood married, on January 31, 1888, Ruth M. Atwood, of Watertown, Connecticut. They were the parents of three children: 1. Julia M. 2. Bronson Ezra. 3. Harry Beecher. Mrs. Lockwood died soon after the World War. Mr. Lockwood still operates the Watertown farm, however, and takes the liveliest interest in civic matters in his community.

CURTIS DEAN—The name of Curtis Dean, of Willimantic, is synonymous with the position he has come to occupy as a member of the Windham County Bar. His professional career spans nearly half a century, during which time he has maintained a general practice, as well as occupying positions in the official life of the city and county.

Mr. Dean was born in South Coventry, October 7, 1856, the son of Dr. Henry S. and Charlotte (Curtis) Dean, both deceased and buried in the Nathan Hale Cemetery, at South Coventry. His father, a native of Massachusetts, was a physician and surgeon for South Coventry and vicinity for forty-five years. He received his medical training at the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia from which he graduated with a Doctor of Medicine degree in 1852.

Curtis Dean received the early part of his general education in the public schools of Coventry and completed this part of his studies at Worcester Academy in 1881, graduating there in 1880 and taking a post graduate course of one year. He then entered Amherst College from which he received a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1886, and in the fall of 1887 matriculated at the Columbia University Law School, where he received his professional training and was awarded his Bachelor of Laws degree in 1889. He was admitted to the Connecticut State Bar December 31, 1889, and began practicing in South Coventry, where he remained until the summer of 1891, when he came to Willimantic and opened an office there with George A. Conant, who later was appointed to the position of Clerk of the Superior Court for Hartford County.

He has conducted a general practice and done considerable probate work in the line of settling estates and handling trust funds. He was the first Deputy Judge in the Willimantic Police Court, a position which he held altogether for eight years. He also served on the Windham High School Committee five years and on the Town School Committee eight years. He was Justice of the Peace for about thirty-five years and was formerly, at the commencement of his career in Windham, Clerk of the Board of Selectmen several years.

On July 1, 1928, he became Clerk of the Superior Court of Windham County, at Putnam, and has continued in that office ever since.

Professionally Mr. Dean is a member of the Windham County Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association and the American Bar Association. He is also a member of the Mu Deuteron Chapter of the Thelta Delta Chi fraternity, at Amherst College, having been admitted to that membership in 1885.

AUSTIN LOCKWOOD ADAMS—For many years prominent in banking circles, Austin Lockwood Adams is president of the Colonial Trust Company, of Waterbury.

Mr. Adams was born August 27, 1897, in Skaneateles, New York, son of Warren Austin and Grace (Smith) Adams and member of an old and honorable family. After completing his preliminary schooling, he became a student at Yale University, where in 1918 he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. His first employment was in the factory of the United States Rubber Company, in Naugatuck, Connecticut, in 1919; and later in that year he entered the employ of the Eastern Malleable Iron Company and advanced through various occupations to the office of assistant treasurer of that company, in 1924, a position that he held until 1926. From 1926 to 1929 he was secretary of the J. H. Whittemore Company, and then, in 1929, he became president of the Naugatuck National Bank. He carried forward his labors in that capacity, contributing notably to the community's welfare in the realm of finance and business, until he became chairman of the board of directors in 1938. Since 1932, he has been connected with the Colonial Trust Company, of Waterbury, and, as president of this organization, he has performed a work of outstanding importance and value.

In addition to his other activities, Mr. Adams is chairman of the executive committee of the Eastern Malleable Iron Company. He is treasurer of Peter Paul, Incorporated, and the Bristol Company, and a director of the American Hardware Company, the Scovill Manufacturing Company, and the National Malleable and Steel Castings Company, of Cleveland, Ohio. From these different affiliations and activities Mr. Adams derived great benefit, and he has made a notable contribution to his fellow citizens in all walks and departments of life.

He is treasurer of the Taft School, in Watertown, and a director of the Westover School, of Middlebury, as well as a director and executive committeeman at the Gaylord Farm Sanatorium, Wallingford, Connecticut. He belongs to the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity, the Waterbury City Club, the Waterbury Country Club and the New York Lunch Club. He has also effectively served his country as a member of its armed forces, having been in the Ambulance Corps of the French Army from May to December, 1917, and in the United States Artillery, in 1918 and 1919. He lives in Middlebury and has his offices at the headquarters of the Colonial Trust Company, in Waterbury.

On October 15, 1921, Austin Lockwood Adams married (first) Helen Whittemore, of Naugatuck, Connecticut, who died in 1932. She was the daughter of Harris and Justine (Brockway) Whittemore. The following children were born to them: 1. Helen, born August 4, 1922. 2. Austin Lockwood, Jr., born October 4, 1923. 3. Harris, born July 9, 1925.

Mr. Adams married (second), September 24, 1938, Helen Ferguson, of Middlebury, Connecticut, daughter of William Patrick and Ursula (Van Wagenen) Ferguson.

HON. LAWRENCE PAUL BURKE—As a lawyer and judge, the Hon. Lawrence P. (L. Paul) Burke has performed a service of outstanding value to the community of Greenwich, his birthplace, here earning the very high esteem and respect of his fellow citizens in all walks of life.

Judge Burke was born September 14, 1898, in Greenwich, Connecticut, son of William P. Burke, M.D., a practicing physician in Greenwich, and his wife, Anna (Mongon) Burke.

The public and high schools of Greenwich provided the early education of Lawrence Paul Burke, who later attended Syracuse University, in Syracuse, New York, for three years. He was graduated from New York University Law School in 1929, a Bachelor of Laws, and two years later was admitted to the bar of the State of Connecticut. Meanwhile, from 1929 to 1931, he was associated with a New York law firm, that of Kelley and Beecher. In March, 1931, he became associated with Judge H. Allen Barton, in Greenwich, but in the following year, 1932, he began practicing his profession independently. Since that time he has continued his own practice at No. 321 Greenwich Avenue, Greenwich, here centering his extensive professional activities.

He has served in a number of public capacities, and has constantly taken a lively interest in politics and public affairs. He is a staunch Republican in his partisan alignment. He is an associate judge of the Town Court of Greenwich, as well as a Town Meeting representative and chairman of the First District of Greenwich. He has served as a representative of this district in the General Assembly of Connecticut, in which he is a member of the judiciary committee and the constitutional amendment committee. He is active in the Greenwich Bar Association and a director of the Greenwich Republican Club.

Judge Burke has maintained a steady interest in sports and athletics, in which he became interested at first while at school and college. Football has been his consistent hobby, and he keeps in close touch with developments in this game. While in college himself, he played on a number of different teams.

JAMES J. LAWTON, 1849-1937—The following lines describe the career of one of Connecticut's successful citizens. The late James J. Lawton, to whom this narrative refers, was not only known and respected among a wide circle of friends in New Haven but throughout the State he was held in high esteem by hosts of business and personal acquaintances.

James J. Lawton was the second of ten children born to Dennis and Rose (McQuaid) Lawton of Middle Haddam. He was born April 15, 1849. Not long after this, the family moved to the Durham-Middletown main road, where they built a home and did farming on a fairly large scale. The apples trees planted by the elder Lawton, over eighty-five years ago, still bear fruit. James J., spent much of his childhood with a childless aunt and uncle who lived in Cromwell. His schooling was obtained in public and private schools in Cromwell and Middletown. He also attended an old-time "Singing School" in Cromwell, and later augmented his early schooling by the study of German and Italian from private tutors.

His first position was that of errand boy and bill collector for a carriage maker of Hartford. Through this position he became acquainted with many prominent citizens. Mark Twain was one of the notables who became friendly with "Little Jim." He was very persistent, and expected results from his efforts. Pertinent to this, might be mentioned an instance: As bill-collector, he was sent to a very troublesome debtor. The man looked up when young Lawton entered, and when he heard the purpose of the errand, looked amused and said: "Come back again some day, I haven't the money just now." The next day found young Lawton again addressing the debtor, with the same result. This went on for four consecutive days. On the fifth day, the debtor looked up, scowled, and said, "Well, by——, I'll pay you, if I never pay another cent to anyone." Forthwith they went to the bank, and there the debtor paid his bill of four hundred dollars, in gold coin. When Lawton returned with the cash, his employer was so surprised and pleased, that he gave $20 in gold to the successful young collector.

In the fall of 1874 he met Mr. J. C. Driscoll, who then lived in Randolph, Massachusetts. Shortly after this, he and Mr. Driscoll entered the employ of Fleischmann and Company, original manufacturers, introducers and distributors in the United States and Canada of compressed yeast. They introduced the business in Hartford, and during the years 1875 to 1877, Mr. Lawton also introduced the product to the towns and cities along the Rhinebeck section of New York State (the upper Hudson River section). He also went to Savannah, Georgia, to establish trade there. In 1877, he spent his time getting trade established in Bridgeport, Norwalk, Stamford and Greenwich.

Previous to the introduction of compressed yeast, the grocery stores sold liquid yeast by the penny's worth, two cent's worth, etc., all of which was a great bother to the grocers and especially so to the clerks, who had to deliver it to their customers in bottles, pails, etc. "Swill yeast" was the common name for the liquid yeast, after compressed, foil yeast cakes were introduced. Mr. Lawton passed through all the difficulties of a pioneer in industry. He started out with a hand satchel and walked long distances daily. He wondered if the day would come when the company could afford a horse and wagon. When he came to New Haven to manage the business of southern Connecticut, he had the pleasure of being the first man to receive a horse and wagon outfit, in the compressed yeast trade. Before he retired in 1920, he had the pleasure of seeing every wagon replaced by automobile. His agency covered southern Connecticut, and, The Fleischmann Company had grown to giant proportions, distributing not only all over the United States but also in Canada, Mexico, and Cuba.

When James J. Lawton came to New Haven in 1877, he was looked upon as a young man of rare common sense. He won the hearts of people through his ability to see "the other person's point of view." He had a keen sense of the value of advertising. One of the inexpensive, yet effective methods was to establish himself as "First" in every instance where his company might benefit. He used the first telephone in the world, the first day it was installed. He was the first passenger on the Whitney Avenue and on the Edgewood Avenue trolley lines. Being a director of the Connecticut Company, he took advantage, by having an advertisement of Fleischmann yeast printed on the back of every transfer issued in New Haven. He kept up his interest in being first, as the years went on. The New Haven "Register" of August 30, 1915, gives a first page heading to "Lawton, First Depositor in The New Bank." This refers to New Haven Bank, National Banking Association.

The New Haven "Register" of August 10, 1919, in speaking of the new post office, states: "The first letter to go through the mailing room of the new office was mailed by James J. Lawton of this city, and was addressed to The Fleischmann Yeast Company, of New York. The first package sent out from the post office when parcel post service came into use, was a pound of yeast, mailed by James J. Lawton, manager in New Haven Branch of The Fleischmann Company." In these ways his company received much free advertising. Little did he think that the company, now known as "Standard Brands," would be able to spend millions in advertising on radio alone, aside from magazines, newspapers, etc.

His company retired him in 1920, after forty-five years of active service. They pensioned him on full salary, thus enabling him to live in much comfort in his latter years. He was a great traveler, enjoying both ocean and land trips, by rail, auto and, even on occasion, by airplane. Never robust, he lived to the advanced age of eighty-eight, by being very moderate in all ways. He required eight hours of sleep; never smoked or used tobacco in any form, and ate and drank in moderation. He had a pleasing appearance, and always realized the value of careful grooming. He had great regard for neatness, and even to his last days, was looked upon as a model of correct dress and appearance. Slight in build, he was five feet, seven inches in height; wore gloves and shoes, number seven, weighed about one hundred and forty pounds. He had keen brown eyes, intelligent and kindly. He had a high standard of integrity and morals, and a sense of fairness which wor esteem. The pastor of his church (St. Brendan Roman Catholic), described him by saying: "He was so polite, so clean, so punctilious."

Of his first marriage, which ended in the death of his wife, one child survives—James McQuaid Lawton, who succeeded his father in business, but is now retired and living at Notwal Acres, Durham, Connecticut. His first wife was Elizabeth Duffy of Hartford. There were three children: 1. Alice, who died in infancy. 2. Mary Kirby, who died in maidenhood. 3. James McQuaid, mentioned above.

On May 9, 1923, his second marriage took place in St. John's Church, New Haven. Carolyn Jane Fox, well known teacher and principal of New Haven schools, though forty years his junior, found in James J. Lawton, a husband of such youthful spirit, that the memory of fourteen years of happiness with him, fills her thoughts with pleasure, at having lived so long with a delightful gentleman, full of reminiscence and courtesy.

In his civic life, James J. Lawton served as a member of the Court of Common Council. He was a member of the Board of Finance for several years. He was Police Commissioner under Mayor Studley. He was a Notary Public, and, he was Chairman of the Committee for the Probate District of New Haven. He ran for Senator on the same "Official Ballot" with Judge Edwin S. Thomas, A. Heaton Robertson, Rollin U. Taylor and Samuel L. Bronson. He was a member of the Rockland Club, the Morris Cove Country Club, the Elks' Club, the Civic Protective Association and the Chamber of Commerce. He was appreciative of music, art and literature, and, was a delightful narrator of scenes of early days, well remembering the harrowing difficulties during blizzards of long ago.

He enlisted in Company A, 6th Regiment, Connecticut National Guard, in 1866. Colonel Merwin, Colonel Basserman and Colonel Bradley were successively in command in the years, 1867, 1868 and 1869.

He had a true sense of spiritual values, in the broadest sense of the word, and when he felt a general weakness from the intense heat of early July, 1937, he requested that he might receive the Last Rites of his Church. A few days before his death, he remarked that he felt the presence of his beloved departed daughter (Mary Kirby Lawton), that she was ready to lead him to his last rest. He departed from this earth, July 22, 1937. He died as he had lived—bravely, and well prepared to face eternity. His last words were: "Dear God, have mercy on me."

REV. JOSEPH D. CASEY—In the service of the Catholic Church, the Rev. Joseph D. Casey, of New Haven, has compiled an unusual record of achievement, especially as an organizer. He was born in Waterbury, August 6, 1896, son of William and Margaret (Massey) Casey, both also natives of Waterbury and both deceased. The father lived to 1928; the mother died in 1916. The older man was long active in business and was secretary and treasurer of the Rose Hill Fire Department of Waterbury.

The education and preparation for the priesthood of Joseph D. Casey included studies at the Washington Grammar School and the Crosby High School, of Waterbury; St. Thomas' Seminary, at Hartford, and St. Bernard's Seminary, at Rochester, New York; and he was ordained in Hartford in 1923. He also was a student in the American College at Louvain, Belgium, in 1918. From 1923 to 1927 he was assistant at St. Joseph's Church, Danbury, Connecticut, and during these four years he was in charge of all the parish societies, and chaplain at the Danbury Hospital. He was active in the local Knights of Columbus and did much to stimulate activity in the monthly meetings, founding and editing the Council's "Bulletin."

In 1927, Father Casey went to Putnam, Connecticut, as assistant pastor of St. Mary's Church. He started the Boy Scouts of Putnam, organizing five troops, which was the largest Boy Scout group under Catholic sponsorship in the State. He purchased a farm in North Woodstock on the shores of Laurel Lake, early known as Muddy Pond, and here built a camp for boys and girls which was the first Catholic Parish Camp in the State. He organized the first Catholic Boys' Band in Connecticut. All boys in this band were in grammar school, the youngest band at the time in the State. He engaged one of the best band masters in the East, a member of the Band Masters' Association, to instruct the boys, the late Theron D. Perkins, of Cambridge, Massachusetts. Later he formed a drum and bugle corps among boys ranging from eight to eleven years old, engaging the late Daniel English, of New Haven, to instruct the drummers. Over a period of six years, he raised $25,000 to carry on the purposes of the work he had initiated.

From 1933 to 1938, Father Casey was identified with St. Patrick's Church, New Haven, where he was assistant to the late Rev. Dr. John Russell. His service was largely along organizational lines, and he formed all of the societies of the parish. Of these, probably the most outstanding are: the St. John Berchmans Sanctuary Society for boys, and its auxiliary, for their parents; the Holy Name Society and the League of the Sacred Heart, the latter being the largest of its kind in New Haven. The first Solemn Novena in honor of St. Patrick, in the United States, was instituted. The prayers and hymns of this Novena, with the Bishop's Imprimatur, were published by Father Casey.

Father Casey has just recently been appointed as Pastor of St. Augustine's and St. Paul's Churches, in Glastonbury.

REV. JOHN RUSSELL, P.R., LL.D.—With a glorious record of sixty-seven years of service to God in the Roman Catholic priesthood, Rev. Dr. John Russell, pastor of St. Patrick's Church, New Haven, ranked as the oldest Catholic priest in point of service in the archdiocese of Boston, which comprises all the New England States.

Rev. Dr. Russell was born in County Cork, Ireland, June 14, 1845, the youngest of five children of Edmond and Eliza (Walsh) Russell. He received his early education in the native schools, and after graduating from Middleton Seminary in County Cork, came to the United States, settling in Meriden, where he made his home with a cousin, Rev. Thomas Walsh, who later became vicar general of the Connecticut diocese. Rev. Dr. Russell later entered Mount St. Mary's College, at Emmitsburg, Maryland, where he studied for two years. He then went to the Grand Seminary, in Montreal, where he was ordained to the priesthood, December 18, 1870. The next thirteen years were spent as assistant and as pastor in parishes in Collinsville, Meriden, Jewett City and Norwalk, and then, in 1883, Rev. Dr. Russell was named permanent rector of St. Patrick's Church, at New Haven, where he served faithfully to the date of his death.

St. Patrick's Parish, the second oldest in New Haven, was established eighty-four years ago, and in that long period has had only four pastors: Rev. Matthew Hart, Rev. J. L. Lynch, Rev. Jeremiah Fitzpatrick and Rev. Dr. Russell. In 1867, the church was declared free of all debt and was consecrated, but eight years later was almost totally destroyed by fire. However, it was quickly restored, and continued for years to serve the large Irish population which resided in this section. In recent years, with the varying trend in population, a large number of the old parishioners of "Old St. Patrick's" have moved to other sections, with the result that new parishes have been created in Hamden, Westville and West Haven, while at St. Patrick's, is now enrolled a mixed population.

Part of St. Patrick's Church property consists of four large school buildings, two built by Rev. Hart, in 1853 and 1858, and the others by Rev. Dr. Russell, more than thirty years ago, and from inside these halls of learning have gone many who have later distinguished themselves in religious, political, professional and business life both here and throughout the State of Connecticut.

Rev. Dr. Russell was largely instrumental in having the Sisters of the Holy Ghost establish their headquarters in New Haven. These nuns, sometimes called the "White Sisters," whose Mother House is located at St. Brieuc, France, fell under the anti-congregation legislation in France in 1902, and the late Bishop Tierney invited a group of them to make their home in the Connecticut diocese, and in co-operation with the Bishop, Rev. Dr. Russell purchased property on Greene Street for a convent for these nuns who are engaged in teaching, nursing and the conducting of a home for women.

Rev. Dr. Russell was honored in 1912 by St. Mary's College when the degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon him, and when he celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his pastorate at St. Patrick's in 1933 with a Solemn Mass of Thanksgiving, the Church was crowded with more than fifteen hundred people, among them many old parishioners, and numerous non-Catholic friends who wished to join in paying tribute to a great priest and citizen. Right Rev. John J. Nilan, then Bishop of the diocese, bestowed the blessing, and the occasion was marked by the presence of high Church dignitaries from all over the State of Connecticut.

Rev. Dr. Russell was noted as a great horseman in his earlier days at St. Patrick's, but upon the advent of the automobile, horses went out of his life entirely, and he purchased an automobile, although he never drove one himself. In his long career in New Haven he co-operated in all movements pertaining to the welfare of his city, and not only was his advice sought in Church activities, but he was also regarded as a strong personality in local civic life. He was one of the founders and long a director of St. Raphael's Hospital, and he served for many years as vice-president of the Board of Managers of Highland Heights. He was also a charter member of the Knights of Columbus, and Russell Council was named in his honor. Father Russell died, after passing his ninety-third birthday.

IRVING JOSEPH LaMAY—Since he first settled in Old Saybrook during the years following the World War, Irving Joseph LaMay has steadily extended his interests. He is today a successful contractor, with a large business in various construction fields, and a well known figure in the general life of the town.

Mr. LaMay was born in Haddam, Connecticut, on April 12, 1893, son of Napoleon and Madeline (Sevigny) LaMay and brother of Napoleon, Ernest, Fredrick, Albert, Wilfred and Delia LaMay. His father, who died in 1924, was born in Canada but was a resident of Connecticut for more than seventy years. Coming to Thompsonville in his youth, he was employed as a weaver for the Bigelow-Hartford Carpet Company for a considerable period, and in later life was engaged in lumbering operations. Madeline (Sevigny) LaMay, the mother, died in 1930.

Irving J. LaMay was educated in the public schools of Tylerville, that would accommodate but fourteen pupils. At the age of sixteen, he entered his father's sawmill, where he was assigned to the inspection of railroad ties. In 1911, during the period of the chestnut tree blight, he went to Westbury, Long Island, and supervised the cutting of the chestnut trees on various estates in that section, including the Tiffany estate, Marshall Field's, W. J. Matthewson's and others and had the good fortune to meet the late Theodore Roosevelt on several occasions. Several summers were spent in this task, while during the winter months he devoted himself to carpentry work, since he could turn his hand to almost anything of this character.

In 1916, Mr. LaMay was engaged in making ammunition boxes for the Colt Arms Company, but in January, 1917, he returned to Long Island, purchased a Mack truck with his savings and entered the trucking business there. In 1918, he settled in New Britain and established an express bus route to New York. Because of failing health, however, he was obliged to relinquish this enterprise. After regaining his contitutional vigor, he remained in New Britain as a carpenter for three years, but in 1921, while paying a visit to Old Saybrook, where his two brothers, F. J. and A. W. LaMay, had the Ford Agency and owned the Saybrook Garage, he accepted a position as a carpenter with Sam Burke, a local builder. He continued as a carpenter during the next few years, but gradually expanded his independent operations until he became a full-fledged contractor in 1927, accepting contracts for concrete work, steam shovel and excavation work and road building. Mr. LaMay has since continued in this business very successfully. His prompt fulfillment of all contractual obligations and the high standards which he maintained have led to repeated demands upon his services.

Mr. LaMay, as an established figure in the town, is influential in other aspects of its life and now serves as a member of the Saybrook Board of Finance. He is a member of the Saybrook Rotary Club; also of St. John's Roman Catholic Church, where he has been very active in all parish affairs and has charge of collections and ushers. His favorite recreation is bowling, and he formed and is president of a Bowling Club.

In February, 1917, at Hartford, Irving J. LaMay married Eunice Warner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Warner and niece of M. E. Kibbie, of Springfield, Massachusetts, the well known candy manufacturer. Mr. and Mrs. LaMay became the parents of the following children: 1. Robert, born in Huntington, Long Island, in 1918. 2. Lois, born in New Britain in 1920, died in 1924. 3. Richard, born in Old Saybrook in 1927. 4. Irving J., also born at Old Saybrook in 1931.

REV. DANIEL BLISS—Since 1936, the Rev. Daniel Bliss has served as minister of the Second Congregational Church in Greenwich. With the exception of a few years spent as a member of the faculty of the American University of Beirut, Syria, he has devoted his entire career to the active ministry in the New England States.

Mr. Bliss was born in Upper Montclair, New Jersey, on March 15, 1898, son of the Rev. Howard Sweetser Bliss and Amy (Blatchford) Bliss. His father, who was successively minister of Plymouth Church in Brooklyn, New York, and Union Christian Church in Upper Montclair, subsequently assumed the presidency of the American University in Beirut. Daniel Bliss spent part of his boyhood in that place during his father's incumbency as head of the university. He attended the American Community School, and in 1914, returned to the United States to enter The Hill School, at Pottstown, Pennsylvania. In 1916, he went on to Amherst College, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts four years later. From 1923 to 1926 he studied for the ministry at Union Theological Seminary in New York City and from this institution received the degree of Bachelor of Divinity.

Meanwhile, from 1920 to 1923, Mr. Bliss served on the teaching staff of American University at Beirut. Following his ordination to the ministry he became pastor of the Congregational Church at Monson, Massachusetts, and remained in this charge until 1929, when he went to the Old South Church in Boston as associate minister. Here he served for some six years before coming to the Second Congregational Church in Greenwich in 1936.

During the World War, in 1918, Mr. Bliss attended the Civilian Officers' Training Camp, at Camp Lee, Virginia. He is affiliated with the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity at Amherst College and was president of the Amherst Chapter in 1920. Mr. Bliss is also a member of the Rotary International. Although his dedication to the ministry is complete, he has taken an enlightened interest in civic affairs in those communities to which his duties have called him and is well known in Greenwich, both within and without the province of his church.

On June 22, 1926, at Worcester, Massachusetts, Daniel Bliss married Winifred Rouse, daughter of Frederick Thomas and Constance E. (Waite) Rouse. They are the parents of three children: 1. Mary Hallock, born June 11, 1928. 2. Howard Blatchford, born January 10, 1931. 3. John Williams, born January 22, 1934.

THORVALD FREDERICK HAMMER—Few executives were better prepared by experience for leadership in industry than Thorvald Frederick Hammer, who in 1935 became president of the Malleable Iron Fittings Company, of Branford. This is a very old and large manufacturing concern, for which Mr. Hammer worked in summer vacations as a small boy. However, while acquiring his education and during the World War activities he was away from his native Branford, but after his return to civilian life he became identified with the company of which he is now head.

Mr. Hammer was born in Branford, December 5, 1896, son of Alfred E. and Cornelia (Foster) Hammer. His father over a long period, was president and general manager of the Malleable Iron Fittings Company, of Branford, and a prominent citizen in the community and State, who had served in both the Connecticut House of Representatives and Senate. He also was a director of the Second National Bank, and a trustee of the Connecticut Savings Bank, of New Haven.

Thorvald Frederick Hammer began his elementary education in a local private school, and was prepared in the public schools for higher studies. From the Branford High School, he went to the Berkshire School, located at Sheffield, Massachusetts, from which he was graduated. He then matriculated at the Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University, as a member of the class of 1918. On May 27, 1918, he enlisted in the Air Service of the United States Navy, and was made a chief quartermaster. Assigned to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Massachusetts, he won promotion, on November 22, 1918, to the rank of ensign. As a boy he had become interested in wireless telegraphy and learned the fundamentals, factors which made him particularly useful to naval authorities, who placed him in the Radio Division as an instructor. Later Ensign Hammer was transferred to the Bureau of Steam Engineering, at Washington, D. C. He received his honorable discharge from the Service in 1919.

After the War, he entered the Malleable Iron Fittings Company, in which he had acquired much summer-work experience in the electrical department. He now began to broaden his knowledge of the business by spending a year in the machine shop, and then another year in the foundry department; then followed three years in the cost department; and his next work was inventory stock control, where he introduced an improved system that grew to be the production control bureau of the company. He was appointed manager and assistant superintendent; later reorganized the sales department; following which he became successively assistant to the general manager, vice-president and in 1935, was elected president, general manager and assistant treasurer of the corporation. J. J. Walworth is the present vice-president; L. J. Nichols, who has been with the company since 1886, is secretary and assistant treasurer; and H. E. Thatcher, is treasurer and assistant secretary.

The history of the company, briefly outlined is as follows: In 1854, the Totoket Company was organized by Branford people to do a general foundry business in malleable iron. The J. J. Walworth Company, of Boston, became one of its best customers, and in 1864, James J. Walworth and Joseph Nason, pioneers in the steam heating business, formed a partnership with Emil C. Hammer, Thorvald F. Hammer (first of the name in the firm), and other Boston men to establish the Malleable Iron Fittings Company, and purchase the Totoket Company plant. Additional machinery was installed and in July, 1865, the organization reported the total production for the year as one hundred and fifty-two tons. In 1906, the manufacture of steel castings by the "Converter" process was started; in 1918, an open hearth furnace was installed to take care of the heavy castings required by the Government war requirements; and in 1929 an electric furnace was installed—all the advances marking the development of this industry down the years. At the present time the company has some ten acres of floor space available, and all the more recent buildings are of steel and concrete construction. About fourteen hundred people are employed in good average times. The annual production capacity is approximately six thousand tons of pipe fittings, seven thousand five hundred tons of malleable castings; and ten thousand tons of steel castings. The company has furnished materials to the Government during the three major wars of the past seventy-five years.

Mr. Hammer was appointed a director of the New Haven Gas Light Company, in November, 1938. While always the hard-working industrial executive, he does not let this interfere with a variety of non-business activities. He is civic-minded and generous in his support of humanitarian projects. Numbered among his clubs are the Yale, the Quinnipiack, Pine Orchard, and the Watertown Hunt Club. He is a popular figure in fox-hunting circles, both as a breeder of horses for this sport and his own active participation, as is evidenced by a recent fox-hunting month in England. His religious affiliations are with the Protestant Church.

At Washington, D. C., on February 19, 1927, Thorvald Frederick Hammer married Lucy Bradbury Taylor, daughter of Major Boyd Bradbury and Mrs. Marion (Lilley) Taylor. Major Boyd Bradbury Taylor, who died in 1926, was well known in the Nation's Capital, where he was an official of the Washington Loan and Trust Company. Mrs. Hammer, a graduate cum laude, class of 1925, of Smith College, is notably active in cultural, social and welfare groups. She is a Phi Beta Kappa, but still continues her pursuit of higher education, at the present working for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, from Yale University. She is a member of the Junior League and devotes a great deal of her time to the work of the Mental Hygiene Society.

Mr. and Mrs. Hammer are the parents of a daughter, Alexandra, born June 24, 1934.

EDGAR V. H. GUARDENIER—During his long service with the General Ice Cream Corporation and its predecessors, Edgar V. H. Guardenier, of New Haven, has risen to important executive positions within the organization. He has devoted his entire career to the dairy products industries and is now manager of the New Haven plant of his company and managing director of a territory embracing other principal Connecticut cities.

Mr. Guardenier was born in East Springfield, New York, on November 22, 1885, son of William S. and Lucy Medora (Walker) Guardenier, both descended from early settlers of New York. His father, who was born in Albany, was a funeral director at East Springfield during his active life. The mother, born in East Springfield, is also deceased.

Edgar V. H. Guardenier was educated in the public schools of his birthplace and at Cornell University, where he took an agricultural course in dairy farming in 1903-04. He began his active career in 1901 in the employ of a cheese maker at East Springfield and remained in this connection until 1906, attending Cornell during the off season. In 1906, he came to Connecticut and obtained a position at a milk receiving station in Turnerville, where cottage cheese was also manufactured. In April, 1907, he was appointed manager of the ice cream plant of the New Haven Dairy Company, in Hartford. Mr. Guardenier's activities centered in that city until September, 1921, when he came to New Haven as assistant general manager of the New Haven Dairy Company. In 1925, this organization was consolidated with other dairies to form The Eastern Dairies, Incorporated, with Mr. Guardenier as manager of all the ice cream plants of the new company in Connecticut. A subsequent reorganization in 1929 brought into existence the present General Ice Cream Corporation. Mr. Guardenier became managing director of the company and manager of the New Haven plant. When the territory was divided in 1935, he continued as manager of the New Haven plant and managing director of the territory including Waterbury, Meriden, Bridgeport and Norwalk, in all of which cities the General Ice Cream Corporation operates plants.

Mr. Guardenier's long experience as an ice cream manufacturer has given him an unexcelled knowledge of its operations, and his executive record makes him one of the principal figures in the Connecticut industry. He is well known in the business life of the State and has taken an active part in community affairs at New Haven during his residence in this city. Mr. Guardenier was a member of the Festival Committee of the New Haven Colony Tercentenary. He has been conspicuous in the Kiwanis Club, of which he was elected president for the 1939 term, and has had a leading part in the Community Chest drives and various civic projects. He is a director of the New Haven Boys Club, a member of the Quinnipiack Club, the Race Brook Country Club and the Woodbridge Hills Country Club, and is active in the Masonic order, in which he is affiliated with all higher bodies of the Scottish Rite, including the thirty-second degree of the Consistory, and with the Shrine. Mr. Guardenier is a Republican in politics and a member of the Episcopal Church.

He married, in Hartford, on February 22, 1906, Adeline M. Scoville, of Tylerville, Connecticut. Mr. and Mrs. Guardenier are the parents of one son: William S., now associated with the Second National Bank of New Haven.

TREAT BALDWIN JOHNSON, Ph.D.—Making a notable contribution to his times as Sterling Professor of Chemistry at Yale University, Treat Baldwin Johnson, Ph.D., has earned the respect and admiration of his contemporaries. He is known internationally for his research contributions in organic chemistry and biochemistry. He lives in Bethany.

Dr. Johnson was born March 29, 1875, in Bethany, Connecticut, son of Dwight Lauren and Harriet (Baldwin) Johnson. The public schools of Bethany provided Treat Baldwin Johnson's early education, and he was graduated in 1894 from the Ansonia High School. In 1898, he took his degree of Bachelor of Philosophy at the Sheffield Scientific School, of Yale University, and three years later, in 1901, he was made the recipient of the degree of Doctor of Philosophy, majoring in the field of organic chemistry. In that same year he became an instructor in organic chemistry in the Sheffield Chemical Laboratory of the Scientific School of Yale University, where he was promoted to the rank of assistant professor in 1910, and to professor in 1913. In 1925, he was created Sterling Professor of Chemistry at the Sterling Chemistry Laboratory, which was constructed in 1922-23.

As a teacher of youth Dr. Johnson has performed an important and valuable work. At the same time he has connected himself with a number of prominent organizations in the scientific world and has received many honors for his achievements in organic research. Formerly he was president of the American Institute of Chemists, and in 1918, he was awarded the Nichols medal of the American Chemical Society for his contributions in Pyrimidine Chemistry. He belongs to the Society of Biological Chemists, the American Biological Society, the American Chemical Society, the National Academy of Sciences, the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences, the American Institute of Chemists, the National Geographic Society, the National Research Council, and the Deutsche Chemische Gesellschaft. He also is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science and American member of the Kaiserlich Deutsche Akademie der Naturforscher zu Halle, founded in 1652. In addition to his other activities, he holds membership on the board of trustees of the Sheffield Scientific School at Yale University, and is secretary of the board. He is a member of the board of trustees of Yale-in-China; chairman of the Board of Education of the Bethany public schools; president of the Bethany Library Association, and director of the Bethwood Research Laboratory. During the World War he effectively served his country with the Chemical Warfare Service as director of the Research Division, Yale University Field Laboratory, 2124-Y staff, in 1918. He is a member of the Graduates Club of New Haven, the Chemists' Club of New York, the Sigma Xi and Alpha Chi Sigma fraternities, and is active in the Congregational Church of his native town.

Dr. Treat Baldwin Johnson married, on June 29, 1904, E. Estelle Amerman, of New Haven, Connecticut. The Johnson family home is situated in Amity Road, Bethany, and is called "Bethwood."

HAROLD SMYTH—Although Harold Smyth has been identified with Hartford since he was brought from his native England as a small child, like many western Connecticut citizens he gained his academic education and has been in business elsewhere, in this instance, New York City.

Mr. Smyth was born in Liverpool, England, in May, 1906, son of Alexander and Matilda (Innis) Smyth, both natives of Great Britain. His mother died in November, 1934, and his father lived to September, 1935. Alexander Smyth was connected with mechanical and marine engineering during almost all of his mature life and was the chief engineer of the Cunard-White Star Line for many years. He brought his family to Hartford when his son, Harold, was two years old, and when he retired it was to spend his remaining days in this city.

Harold Smyth attended the elementary and high schools of Hartford, and completed his formal and technical education at School of Law, Fordham University, 1924, New York University, 1925, and Columbia University, 1927, having majored in business administration. After leaving Columbia he entered the insurance business in New York City, and so continued from 1927 to 1936. Appointed general agent of the National Life Insurance Company of Vermont, on April 15, 1936, he has since been associated with this company, with headquarters in Hartford.

Mr. Smyth is a member of the Hartford Life Insurance Underwriters Association, and also of the General Agents and Managers Association. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Masonic Order, and is a member of the Avon Country Club. He is a Republican in his political views. His church is the Protestant Episcopal. Mr. Smyth is active in the Community Chest movement and other welfare organizations, and is a devotee of all outdoor sports, especially golf.

On February 6, 1937, Harold Smyth married Jean Doyle, and they make their home at No. 84 Forest Street, Hartford.

PAUL ANDREAS DAHLGARD—A native and lifelong resident of New Haven, Paul Andreas Dahlgard has been the head of his own company for the past quarter of a century, and active in city business, fraternal and civic organizations. He was born in the city August 28, 1884, son of James M. and Julia (Madson) Dahlgard. His father came from Denmark to New Haven, in 1883, and remained to practice his trade as carpenter and to engage in building operations. He died May 14, 1938.

Educated in New Haven schools, Paul Andreas Dahlgard began his business career in 1901 with the United Illuminating Company, starting in the storekeeper's department. In 1914, he resigned to establish the West Haven Trucking Company, with headquarters at No. 435 Congress Avenue. The years have brought constantly expanding operations and necessary enlargements of plant and equipment. A great warehouse furnishes thousands of square feet of floor space. From the horse and wagon of the early days, there has come a fleet of motor trucks. Capacity, safety and speed, these are slogans of the company of which he has been the owner for twenty-five years.

Mr. Dahlgard is a member of the Connecticut Warehousemen's Association, and of the Mayflower Warehousemen's Association, an organization covering the whole United States and Canada, which also ships to foreign countries. He is a member of the New Haven Rotary Club. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, and the Danish Brotherhood Society of New Haven. He is a Republican in politics. For six years Mr. Dahlgard was a member of Company B, New Haven City Guards, Connecticut National Guard.

At New Haven, Connecticut, on September 14, 1910, Paul Andreas Dahlgard married Hannah Naylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Naylor, both natives of Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Dahlgard are the parents of seven children: 1. Ruth H. 2. Paul M. 3. Muriel G. 4. Phyllis J. 5. Winifred E. 6. Lois A. 7. June N.

ROSCOE CORNELIUS DOANE—Devoting his attention to farming, teaming and cattle raising over a period of many years in the vicinity of Essex, Roscoe Cornelius Doane came to be one of the respected and honored citizens of his community.

Mr. Doane was born September 19, 1857, in the Meadow Woods district of Essex, son of Cornelius D. and Charlotte M. (Northam) Doane and member of an old and honorable family, being of the sixth generation in direct line of descent from the founder of the family in America. The line is as follows:

(I) Prince Doane, first of the name to come to the New World, settled at Eastham, Cape Cod, Massachusetts, where he lived and died. He and his wife came from England.

(II) Prince Doane, their son, was born in Cape Cod and soon after 1734 settled in the Town of Saybrook, Connecticut. He had a large family—Price, Ruth, Phebe, Abigail, Mary (all born in Eastham); Elkanah, Israel and James (born in Saybrook).

(III) Israel Doane, one of this family, was born January 21, 1739, and died August 30, 1829, after a useful career as a farmer and ship's carpenter. He lived in Saybrook (now Essex) his employment being in the shipyards near his house. He belonged to the Protestant Episcopal Church. His wife was Priscilla (Shipman) Doane, a native of Saybrook, who died December 11, 1833. Their children were: 1. Deborah, born April 16, 1764, married Ebenezer Williams, and died March 29, 1835; he was a sea captain, and lived in Essex. 2. Priscilla, born January 21, 1766, died April 10, 1836; married George Williams, a seafaring man, and lived in Essex. 3. Israel, Jr., born October 20, 1767, married Irene Williams, and died December 17, 1842; he was a sea captain in his early years, lived for a time in Essex and later moved to Genesee County, New York, where he passed the remainder of his life as a farmer and mill owner. 4. Ruth, born March 1, 1771, married John Ward, a sea captain, lived for a time in Essex; he died November 8, 1842, in Bristol, Connecticut, at his daughter's home. 5. Anne, born October 3, 1773, died February 1, 1836; she became the wife of Abner Williams, a boss ship carpenter, and they resided in Essex. 6. Justus, born June 17, 1776, a farmer in Essex, where he died March 5, 1855; he married (first) Philippa Read, and they were the parents of Captain Cornelius R. Doane, and (second) Laurana Champlain. 7. Mary L., born April 12, 1779, died December 30, 1843, unmarried. 8. Dan, born October 8, 1782.

(IV) This Dan Doane, grandfather of Roscoe Cornelius Doane, was born in the homestead mentioned above, and spent his life there. He was early in life a cooper, in company with his brother Justus, establishing a large shop near their home, and he also turned out hoops and other fittings for vessels made in nearby shipyards. They also made fish barrels for the shad fishermen. Later he became a farmer, so continuing until his death on June 6, 1849. He was a Democrat and an Episcopalian, as well as a member of the local militia. On September 25, 1813, he married Ruth Clark, born December 15, 1789, in Essex, daughter of George and Ruth (Doane) Clark. She died November 22, 1840. Their children were: 1. Cynthia, born June 1, 1815, unmarried. 2. David C., born January 25, 1817, a stonemason; he married (first) Sarah Cogswell and (second) Louisa Dibble. 3. Justus, born May 13, 1819, married Viletta Tiffany, died August 7, 1891; he was a farmer and mason and lived in Essex. 4. Cornelius D., mentioned below. 5. Damaris A., born March 9, 1823, unmarried. 6. Jared, born April 9, 1825, a farmer in Essex; married Mary Williams. 7. Ruth P., born March 1, 1827, unmarried. 8. Abigail S., born March 31, 1829, died August 27, 1897; wife of Henry J. Meigs, a farmer of Madison, Connecticut. 9. William, born February 7, 1835, never married, engaged in farming on the old homestead for many years.

(V) Cornelius D. Doane was born March 26, 1821, in the Meadow Woods district of Essex, and attended the district schools until he was about eighteen years of age, after which he helped on the farm until his marriage. He then left the homestead and rented a tract of land for about a year, after which he purchased the estate on which he lived the rest of his life. On it he built a house in 1856. He gave his time mainly to farming and stock raising, in which he was successful. The place was originally purchased from Justus Williams by David and Justus Doane, brothers of Cornelius. Justus Doane then bought David's interest, he and Justus dividing the farm at a later date. Mr. Doane died March 14, 1895, after a brief illness, though he had long suffered from poor health. He was a Democrat, a member of the School Board, a vestryman of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church and a man who lived a full and worthy life. On August 13, 1854, Cornelius D. Doane married Charlotte M. Northam, born August 5, 1832, in Colchester, Connecticut, daughter of Robert C. and Nancy (Emmons) Northam, the former a prominent lumber dealer in that town and a brother of the late C. H. Northam, of Hartford, after whom the steamer "C. H. Northam" was named. Mrs. Doane in early life was a teacher, teaching in the Iron Works district of Westchester, Connecticut, for three years, and also at South Manchester, Tolland, East Hampton and for a year in the Meadow Woods district. The children of Cornelius D. and Charlotte M. (Northam) Doane were: 1. Roscoe Cornelius, of further mention. 2. Robert C., born November 2, 1859, a teamster in Centerbrook; he married, April 22, 1884, Madeline Miner, and they were the parents of three children. 3. Ann E., born December 16, 1871, married, April 26, 1887, to George H. Meigs; they live in New Haven.

(VI) Roscoe Cornelius Doane, the eldest of this family, attended the district school in the Meadow Woods district of Essex, lived at home until his marriage, and was employed on the home farm. He also did teaming with a team that he owned. In association with his father he purchased from William Bates the farm that he operated continuously thereafter. It was previously known as the George Chapman farm and was a tract of fifty-six acres. Mr. Doane paid a part of the price for it out of his savings, afterward purchasing the remainder of the property. To the original tract he added from time to time, until he came to own about one hundred and forty acres in the Town of Saybrook, near the Essex line, where he carried on a general farming and teaming activity. He also devoted considerable attention to cattle raising, owning some fine Devon stock and becoming one of the most important owners of stock in the town. A fine growth of timber also enabled Mr. Doane to become a seller of firewood throughout Deep River and Essex.

Politically Mr. Doane was a staunch Democrat, and he never sought nor held public office. His main attention was devoted always to farming, and he was esteemed an excellent citizen and loyal friend. His wife became active in the Congregational Church in Essex.

On April 3, 1884, Roscoe Cornelius Doane married Mary E. Brockway, the ceremony taking place in Essex. She was a daughter of Alexis and Mary Jane (Saunders) Brockway, a descendant of Walston Brockway, who was the progenitor of the Brockway line in New England, and is descended from the Colonial Ely line. She is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Doane: 1. Louise Northam, born July 31, 1885, wife of Walter J. Hyland, now a resident of Teaneck, New Jersey; they have two children: i. Walter Doane Hyland. ii. Northam E. Hyland. 2. Charles Northam, born March 9, 1888, married Edith Palou; they had three children: i. Charles Northam, Jr. ii. Dorothy Elizabeth Doane. iii. Robert Louis Doane. 3. Mary Charlotte, born June 22, 1899, died in May, 1934.

The death of Roscoe Cornelius Doane occurred on August 21, 1929.

CLARENCE WHITTLESEY MENDELL, Ph.D., Dean, Yale College—Widely respected in the world of education, Dr. Clarence Whittlesey Mendell has earned the high esteem and admiration of his contemporaries in all walks of life. He was dean of Yale College from 1926 to 1937 and is now master of Branford College at Yale.

Dr. Mendell was born June 3, 1883, at Norwood, Massachusetts, son of Ellis and Clara Eliza (Whittlesey) Mendell. The Mendells and the Whittleseys are both old families of New England. Ellis Mendell was graduated from Yale in the class of 1874, and the family has long been associated with this university and with the life of New Haven. Ellis Mendell's death occurred in 1903 at the age of fifty-two years.

After completing his preliminary education, Clarence Whittlesey Mendell became a student at Yale University, taking his degree of Bachelor of Arts here in 1904, his Master of Arts degree in 1905, and his degree of Doctor of Philosophy in 1910. He began his teaching career in 1907, serving until 1911 as an instructor in Latin and, from 1911 to 1919, as professor of Greek and Latin at Yale. In 1919, he was appointed Dunham professor of Latin language and literature. Until 1925, he was chairman of the Board of Athletic Control at Yale. In 1926, he was made dean of Yale College, serving in that capacity until 1937. Since 1932, he has been master of Branford College.

In addition to all his other activities, Dr. Mendell is chairman of the board of trustees of the Salisbury School and is a member of the board of the Taft School. In 1932 and 1933, he was annual professor of the American Academy in Rome, Italy. In 1918, while the United States was involved in the World War, he was connected with the American Military Intelligence in Paris, France, and, in 1918 and 1919, he was assistant to territorial experts of the American Commission to Negotiate Peace in that European capital.

Dr. Mendell is a member of the American Philological Association, the Classical Association of Great Britain, the Beta Theta Pi fraternity and the honorary society of Phi Beta Kappa. Adding authorship to his other attainments, he produced the following volumes: "Sentence Connection in Tacitus," in 1911; "Latin Sentence Connection," in 1917; "Prometheus," in 1926; and "Jeanne d'Arc," in 1931. He has also contributed extensively to magazines and periodicals on a variety of classical topics. He belongs to the Graduates Club, the Elizabethan Club and the Lawn Club of New Haven, as well as to the Yale Club and the Century Club of New York. He is also a member of the Archaeological Institute. He is particularly interested, however, in the American Academy in Rome, serving since 1928 as a trustee of the academy and now being on its executive committee. Education has substantially gained from the work of such men as Dr. Mendell, and his position in American university life is one of distinction and standing.

Dr. Clarence Whittlesey Mendell married (first), April 14, 1914, Katharine De Ford Webb, of Baltimore, Maryland, who died January 21, 1919. He married (second), July 10, 1930, Elizabeth Baily Lawrence. The family residence is situated at No. 80 High Street, New Haven.

GEORGE AUGUSTUS CARNEY—In 1910, after a varied business career, George Augustus Carney participated in the organization of the Simmonsville Manufacturing Company, of Waterbury, manufacturers of metal novelties, paper fasteners and similar products. As an executive of the company since it was founded he has had an important part in its development and growth, and since 1927 has been president and treasurer of the corporation.

Mr. Carney was born on January 20, 1875, son of Patrick and Margaret (Dwyer) Carney, who came from Ireland about 1868 and settled at Seymour, Connecticut. His father was a landscape gardener, employed for many years by the Farrel Foundry and Machine Company, of Ansonia, Connecticut.

George Augustus Carney was educated in the public schools of Ansonia and Seymour and after leaving high school began his career with the Tingue Plush Mill, of Seymour. He was employed by this company from 1892 to 1896, and afterward worked as a mechanic for three years with the Seymour Manufacturing Company. From 1899 to 1902, he was in the employ of the Brixey Cable Works, of Seymour. During the following eight years, Mr. Carney was associated with several concerns in Waterbury, working for about three years with the American Brass Company, for another three years with the Waterbury Clock Company and for two years with the Waterbury Brass Goods Company. At the end of that time, in 1910, he joined with several associates to organize the Simmonsville Manufacturing Company, which was incorporated in 1916. Mr. Carney was elected secretary of the company upon its incorporation and, in 1927, assumed the executive leadership of the company, holding the offices of president and treasurer since that time. From the beginning, the Simmonsville Manufacturing Company have been manufacturers of metal novelties, automatic screw products and metal paper fasteners for filing purposes. An extensive and successful business has grown up gradually and its markets today are country-wide. In addition to other products, the plant is equipped to manufacture 150,000,000 paper fasteners yearly and enjoys the leadership in this field among American manufacturers. The success of the business reflects the strength of its management, and as president, Mr. Carney has continued the sound principles on which the company has always operated and the energetic direction which has marked its history.

Mr. Carney is well known also in the civic life of Waterbury. He has been active in the Chamber of Commerce and other local organizations and is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. While his business has always occupied his principal attention, he has loyally recognized his civic obligations and given his support to public movements with whose aims he is in sympathy. In religious faith he is a member of the Roman Catholic Church.

In 1895, Mr. Carney married Mary E. Perry, daughter of Theodore and Georgianna (Worden) Perry, of Shelton. They are the parents of one daughter, Florence A., who married Alfred Meier, of Waterbury. There are three grandchildren: Alfred, George and John.

JAMES C. HENDERSON—As president of the Dime Savings Bank, of Norwich, James C. Henderson has come to be widely known in the financial world, while at the same time he has participated effectively and helpfully in the work of several industrial and civic groups.

Mr. Henderson was born August 5, 1872, in Norwich, Connecticut, son of James and Isabella (Gilmour) Henderson. His parents were natives of Scotland.

Public schools provided the earliest formal education of James C. Henderson, who also attended the Norwich Free Academy. He started his active business career as a clerk in the Chelsea Paper Mills, and in 1895, when he was twenty-three years of age, he entered the employ of the Crescent Fire Arms Company. He won rapid promotions, and at the end of four years was elected secretary. In 1904, he became treasurer, and continued in this capacity until 1932, when the company liquidated. After serving for many years as a director of the Dime Savings Bank, at Norwich, Mr. Henderson was elected president and treasurer in 1935. He also served for many years as a director of the Uncas-Merchants National Bank, and was elected vice-president in 1928.

He is a member of Somerset Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, and the Columbian Commandery.

On July 11, 1900, James C. Henderson married Lucy Dennison, who died in July, 1927. They became the parents of one son, Russell S., born in January, 1902.

ERNEST EVANS HOWARD—As an executive of The Howard Company, of New Haven, Ernest Evans Howard has won recognition as an outstanding business man of the city. His connection with this long established concern has covered a period of a quarter of a century, for he entered its employ as a boy and has risen through proven abilities to its management. Down the years he has participated constructively in civic affairs, and is active in many other phases of community life.

Mr. Howard is a native of New Haven, born December 22, 1890, son of Harold M. and Gertrude F. (Conklin) Howard. His mother was the daughter of William P. and Helen (Dinsmore) Conklin, of the Long Island Conklins who traced their line of ancestry to Ananias Conklin, of Nottinghamshire, England, first of the name in America (1641). Grandfather Howard was the son of Farnham L. Howard of English lineage, and his wife Emily (Bay) Howard, born in Charleston, South Carolina, who was adopted as a child by an English family. Farnham L. Howard was a Long Island Sound captain in youth, who later became interested in a brickyard at West Neck. His son, Harold M. Howard, Sr., one of two surviving sons, was born January 27, 1857, at West Neck, Long Island, and early in life began making a livelihood in local brickyards during the summers. He worked his way to a sound education, and in 1877, became an assistant to his brother, Dr. Arthur F. Howard, a dentist of New London, Connecticut. In the early 1880's he joined his father and Jacob R. Crossman, in a small fire-brick business in New Haven, which became the New Haven Fire Brick Company. Mr. Crossman soon sold his interest to Harold M. and Dr. Arthur F. Howard, and the concern struggled on until 1893, when it was consolidated with the E. A. Chatfield Company, of New Haven. Mr. Chatfield died within a few years, and his holdings were purchased by the Howards and G. A. Pickett. In January, 1902, Mr. Pickett retired, and the Howards secured full control of what has been, since 1903, The Howard Company.

Harold M. Howard, Jr., had been identified with the business since he completed his education. In 1924, he succeeded his uncle, Dr. Arthur F. Howard, as president of the company, and that same year Ernest Evans Howard, with whom this record is primarily concerned, was elected treasurer, a post he has since filled. Harold M. Howard, Sr., was president from 1903 until his death. Harold M. Howard, Sr., lived to March 6, 1932.

The active management of The Howard Company is under the direction of Ernest Evans Howard. The scope of its business is unusually wide and varied. Not only is the manufacture of fire brick and other fire-resistant clay products among its specialties, but the company deals in mason's supplies, fuels, motor cars and trucks. It ranks as one of the largest concerns of its kind in New England, its field of operation including parts of Rhode Island and Massachusetts, in addition to Connecticut.

After the example and traditions of his forebears, Ernest Evans Howard is public-spirited and exemplary in useful citizenship. He is a member of the New Haven Kiwanis Club, of the city's Chamber of Commerce; is prominent in the activities of the Community Chest and of other welfare and humanitarian organizations. Interested in helping youth, he is a member of the Young Men's Christian Association. He is a Republican in politics. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Masonic Order, being a thirty-second degree Mason, member of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, and of Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He worships in the Plymouth Congregational Church.

In New Haven, Connecticut, on October 12, 1912, Ernest Evans Howard married Martha C. Christie, daughter of William B. and Jean Christie, of New Haven, and they are the parents of a daughter, Jean Frances, born July 19, 1924.

FRANK J. SMITH—One of New Haven's leading business men, Frank J. Smith has been for many years a funeral director in this city.

Mr. Smith was born March 12, 1891, in New Haven, Connecticut, son of Michael Francis and Marcella (Brennan) Smith, both natives of New Haven. His father was engaged for many years in the insurance business. His grandparents were from Ireland.

Public schools provided his early education in New Haven. Afterward Frank J. Smith entered the tax office at city hall and, in 1916, entered the funeral directing firm of Cox and Henze, as manager, becoming so affiliated on October 9, 1916. This firm was established on October 1, 1891, only a few months after his own birth. It was as manager of the establishment that Mr. Smith began his duties with it. Two years later, in 1918, he became proprietor of the firm of Cox and Smith. Mr. Smith carried on operations independently. In 1936, the enterprise was incorporated as Cox, Smith and Crimmins, the officers being: Mr. Smith, president and treasurer; John D. Crimmins, vice-president and assistant treasurer; and Frank G. Cox, a nephew of John T. Cox, secretary.

Since 1917, Mr. Smith has been a licensed embalmer. He is a member and past secretary and past president of the Connecticut Funeral Directors' Association and a member of the National Funeral Directors' Association. Wholly aside from his professional associations, Mr. Smith is a member of the Connecticut Purple Cross, termed an emergency organization. He belongs to the Knights of Columbus, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Ancient Order of Hibernians. He also is a member of the Shepherds of Bethlehem and a social organization known as "The Regulars," of

New Haven. He has served in many public capacities, notably as a member of the New Haven Board of Selectmen and as a member of the Civil Service Board. He has been a staunch Democrat in his political views. Since 1921, he has been a member of the Governor's Foot Guard, Second Company. He worships in the faith of the St. Lawrence Roman Catholic Church.

Frank J. Smith married, in New Haven, Connecticut, on June 7, 1916, Florence Cox, daughter of John T. and Bridget (Hyland) Cox, of this city. Her father was born in Naugatuck, Connecticut, and her mother in Ireland. It was her father that Mr. Smith succeeded in business. Mr. and Mrs. Smith have one daughter: Betty Anne. The family residence is situated at No. 212 Center Street, West Haven.

EDWARD IRVING PETZE—Mr. Petze was born September 17, 1880, in Baltimore, Maryland, son of Henry Herman and Jessie (Sinclair) Petze. His father was born in 1848 in Germany and, in 1849, came to Brooklyn, New York. The mother was born in Scotland in 1850 and, in 1851, came to America with her parents, settling in Brooklyn. The marriage of Henry Herman and Jessie (Sinclair) Petze took place in Brooklyn, New York, on November 2, 1870, and afterward they removed to Baltimore, Maryland. Mr. Petze, senior, was an official of several maritime lines.

Their son, Edward Irving Petze, attended the public schools of Baltimore and, in 1899, completed his studies at Brooklyn High School, in Brooklyn, New York. He was first employed by Gunn, Richards and Company, public accountants, and later by the Audit Company of New York. In 1916, he became manager of the Associated Companies, Incorporated, underwriters of workmen's compensation insurance, so continuing until 1918. Licensed as a certified public accountant in 1908, Mr. Petze is the oldest living active member of the Connecticut Society of Certified Public Accountants. From 1918 to 1922, he was engaged in this work in Hartford with the firm of Vanais, Landon, Troub and Petze. In 1922, he came to New Haven as controller of the New Haven Clock Company and, in 1929, he established his own business, that of Petze and Schuyler.

He is a past president of the Connecticut Society of Certified Public Accountants and of the New Haven Chapter of the National Association of Cost Accountants. He is a member of the American Institute of Accountants and treasurer of the Rotary Club of New Haven. In the Masonic Order he is a Knight Templar, holds the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, and is a member of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He follows an independent course politically, and worships in the faith of the Presbyterian Church.

Edward Irving Petze was married, in New Haven, Connecticut, on June 13, 1923, to Helen Eleanor Altmann, daughter of Frank C. and Anna (Kaimer) Altmann, of that city. The Petze family home is situated at No. 63 Parmelee Avenue, New Haven.

SEARLS DEARINGTON—In the comparatively brief period of six years, Searls Dearington, of Danielson, has become one of the most prominent and successful young attorneys in Windham County. He holds numerous important public offices, and is a leading figure in the County Young Republican Club, and has been an active figure in social and civic affairs.

Mr. Dearington was born in Malden, Massachusetts, April 4, 1903, the son of Frank H. and Gertrude F. (Fell) Dearington, both residents of Melrose, Massachusetts. His father, a native of the City of Boston, has been in the Light House Division of the United States Government, for a number of years. His uncle, the late Charles E. Searls, of Thompson, Connecticut, enjoyed a notable legal career in this State, serving as Secretary of State at one time, later holding the office of State's Attorney for Windham County for many years, and in 1919, was elected president of the Connecticut State Bar Association. His brother, Bradley Dearington, and his brother-in-law, Paul A. Porter, whose biographies appear in this volume, are president and vice-president, respectively, of The Porter-Dearington Textiles, Incorporated, of Putnam, Connecticut.

Mr. Dearington received the early part of his general education in the public schools of Everett, Massachusetts, and was graduated from the Huntington Preparatory School of Boston in 1924. He then matriculated at the University of New Hampshire, from which he was graduated in 1928 with a Bachelor of Science degree, and the following fall he entered the law school of Boston University, where he completed his legal training and received a Bachelor of Laws degree in 1931. In January, 1932, he was admitted to the Connecticut State bar, and established himself in the general practice of law at Danielson, where he has been associated with Sabin S. Russell.

The extent of his prominence, ability and popularity is readily appreciated in the offices he has been called upon to fill in this and neighboring communities. He has served as Justice of the Peace for the Town of Thompson and also for the Town of Killingly. He has been Prosecuting Attorney for the Town of Killingly since 1933, Deputy Coroner for Windham County since 1936, Health Officer for the Borough of Danielson from 1934-1937, Health Officer for the Town of Killingly from 1933-1938. As a lawyer he is identified with and has served as a member of the executive committee of the Windham County Bar Association. He also belongs to the American Bar Association. In 1935, he was admitted to practice before the United States District Court.

His professional prominence is matched by his political accomplishments. In 1935 and 1936, he was president of the Windham County Young Republican Club, and holds the distinction of having been the first Convention Chairman of the Connecticut Young Republican Organization. He has been a member of the New England Executive Committee of Young Republicans, and at present is a member of the New England Council. He also holds the office of treasurer of the Killingly Republican Town Committee.

He has also directed his energies in advancing the welfare of this community. In 1935-36, he was vice-president of the Eastern Connecticut Council of the Boy Scouts of America, and since 1936 has been chairman of the Danielson Chapter of the American Red Cross. In 1938, he was chairman of the Tribune Fresh Air Fund for children. Socially he is a member and president of the Danielson Rotary Club, Men's Club (Congregational Church), Putnam Country Club, West Side Tennis Club, United States Eastern Amateur Ski Association, Appalachian Mountain Club, and Boston University Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons. Mr. Dearington is also a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon Social Fraternity, Delta Theta Phi Legal Fraternity, and Sphinx Honorary Society. His biography appears in the 1938 edition of "Who's Who in New England." His favorite sports are tennis, skiing and hiking.

On November 2, 1935, at Wakefield, Massachusetts, Mr. Dearington married Margaret Cushman Woodman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Woodman. Mr. Woodman is a retired lawyer of Boston, Massachusetts.

HERBERT M. BALDWIN—At the age of seventy-eight, Herbert M. Baldwin still retains a very active interest in the contracting business which he started here in Westbrook almost a half-century ago.

Born at Chesterfield, Massachusetts, on December 3, 1860, he is the son of William B. and Emily G. (Barnes) Baldwin. The father was a brass turner by trade and for many years was employed in that capacity by the J. L. Howard Car Trimming Company, and upon his retirement lived in Westbrook, and died at Westbrook on March 4, 1908. The mother died in Hartford, 1865.

Herbert M. Baldwin obtained a common school education at Winsted, Connecticut, where his family located when he was only six years old and where they remained until 1882, when they returned to their native City of Hartford. Mr. Baldwin's first employment was in the Mechanical department of the New York and New England Railroad Company, where he remained two years. He then went to Hope Valley, Rhode Island, where he worked as a mechanic for two years with the New York Safety Steampower Company, followed by a similar period of employment with P. & F. Corbin, the famous New Britain toolmakers. He removed to Westbrook in 1891 and two years later started what is still known as the H. M. Baldwin concern, and which operates over a considerable area as plumbing, steamfitting and heating contractor.

Throughout his long residence in Westbrook Mr. Baldwin, outside of the activities of his own business, has participated with his fellow citizens in every effort to promote the welfare of this community. He has been treasurer of the Town of Westbrook since 1906; is a director of the Clinton National Bank and a trustee of the Essex Savings Bank; is a member of the First Congregational Church here; was raised as a Mason in 1890 in Harmony Lodge No. 21, Ancient Order of Free and Accepted Masons, New Britain, and demitted in 1915 to Siloam Lodge, No. 32, at Saybrook. His favorite recreation is fishing.

Herbert M. Baldwin married October 6, 1892, at Winsted, Helen E. Andrews, daughter of George L. Andrews, former Water Commissioner of Winsted, and his wife, Jennie E. (Fenton) Andrews. Mrs. Baldwin died in 1936, and is buried in Hartford. Mr. and Mrs. Baldwin had no children. For the past five years Mr. Baldwin has been a member of the Board of Trustees of the First Congregational Church, of Westbrook.

ROYAL CORNELIUS VAN ETTEN, M.D.—As a teacher of gynecology and obstetrics in the medical school of Columbia University, Royal Cornelius Van Etten, M.D., is a distinguished figure among his confreres in the field of medical education. In 1929, he came to Ridgefield, Connecticut, seeking a summer place, and purchased the farm known as "Hillscroft Farm."

Dr. Van Etten was born in Rhinebeck, New York, August 2, 1886, son of Dr. Cornelius S. and Sarah Clarissa (Hill) Van Etten, and the grandson, on the paternal side, of Solomon and Hannah (Mettler) Van Etten, of Milford, Pennsylvania. The father, Dr. Cornelius S. Van Etten, was a long established physician of Rhinebeck. After being prepared for college in the Riverview Military Academy, located in Poughkeepsie, New York, Dr. Royal Cornelius Van Etten matriculated at Amherst College, from which he was graduated in 1906, a Bachelor of Arts. His medical degree was acquired at the Columbia University Medical School. After an interneship in the Roosevelt Hospital, he spent two years as resident surgeon in the Sloane Hospital for Women, both institutions of New York City. As a medical student and interne, Dr. Van Etten specialized in obstetrics and gynecology, and since 1913 has been a member of the faculty of his alma mater, The College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City. He is a diplomate of the American Board of Obstetrics and Gynecology; a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons; member of the American Medical Association and other medical organizations. He is an Alpha Delta Phi, of Amherst, and a Phi Beta Kappa. Nu Sigmu Nu is his medical fraternity, and he is a member of the honorary medical fraternity, Alpha Omega Alpha. His religious affiliations are with the Episcopal Church.

On September 20, 1916, Royal Cornelius Van Etten, M.D., married Louise Greenfield, of Rome, New York, and they are the parents of a son, Royal Cornelius, Jr., born February 1, 1920, now a student at Amherst College, Amherst, Massachusetts.

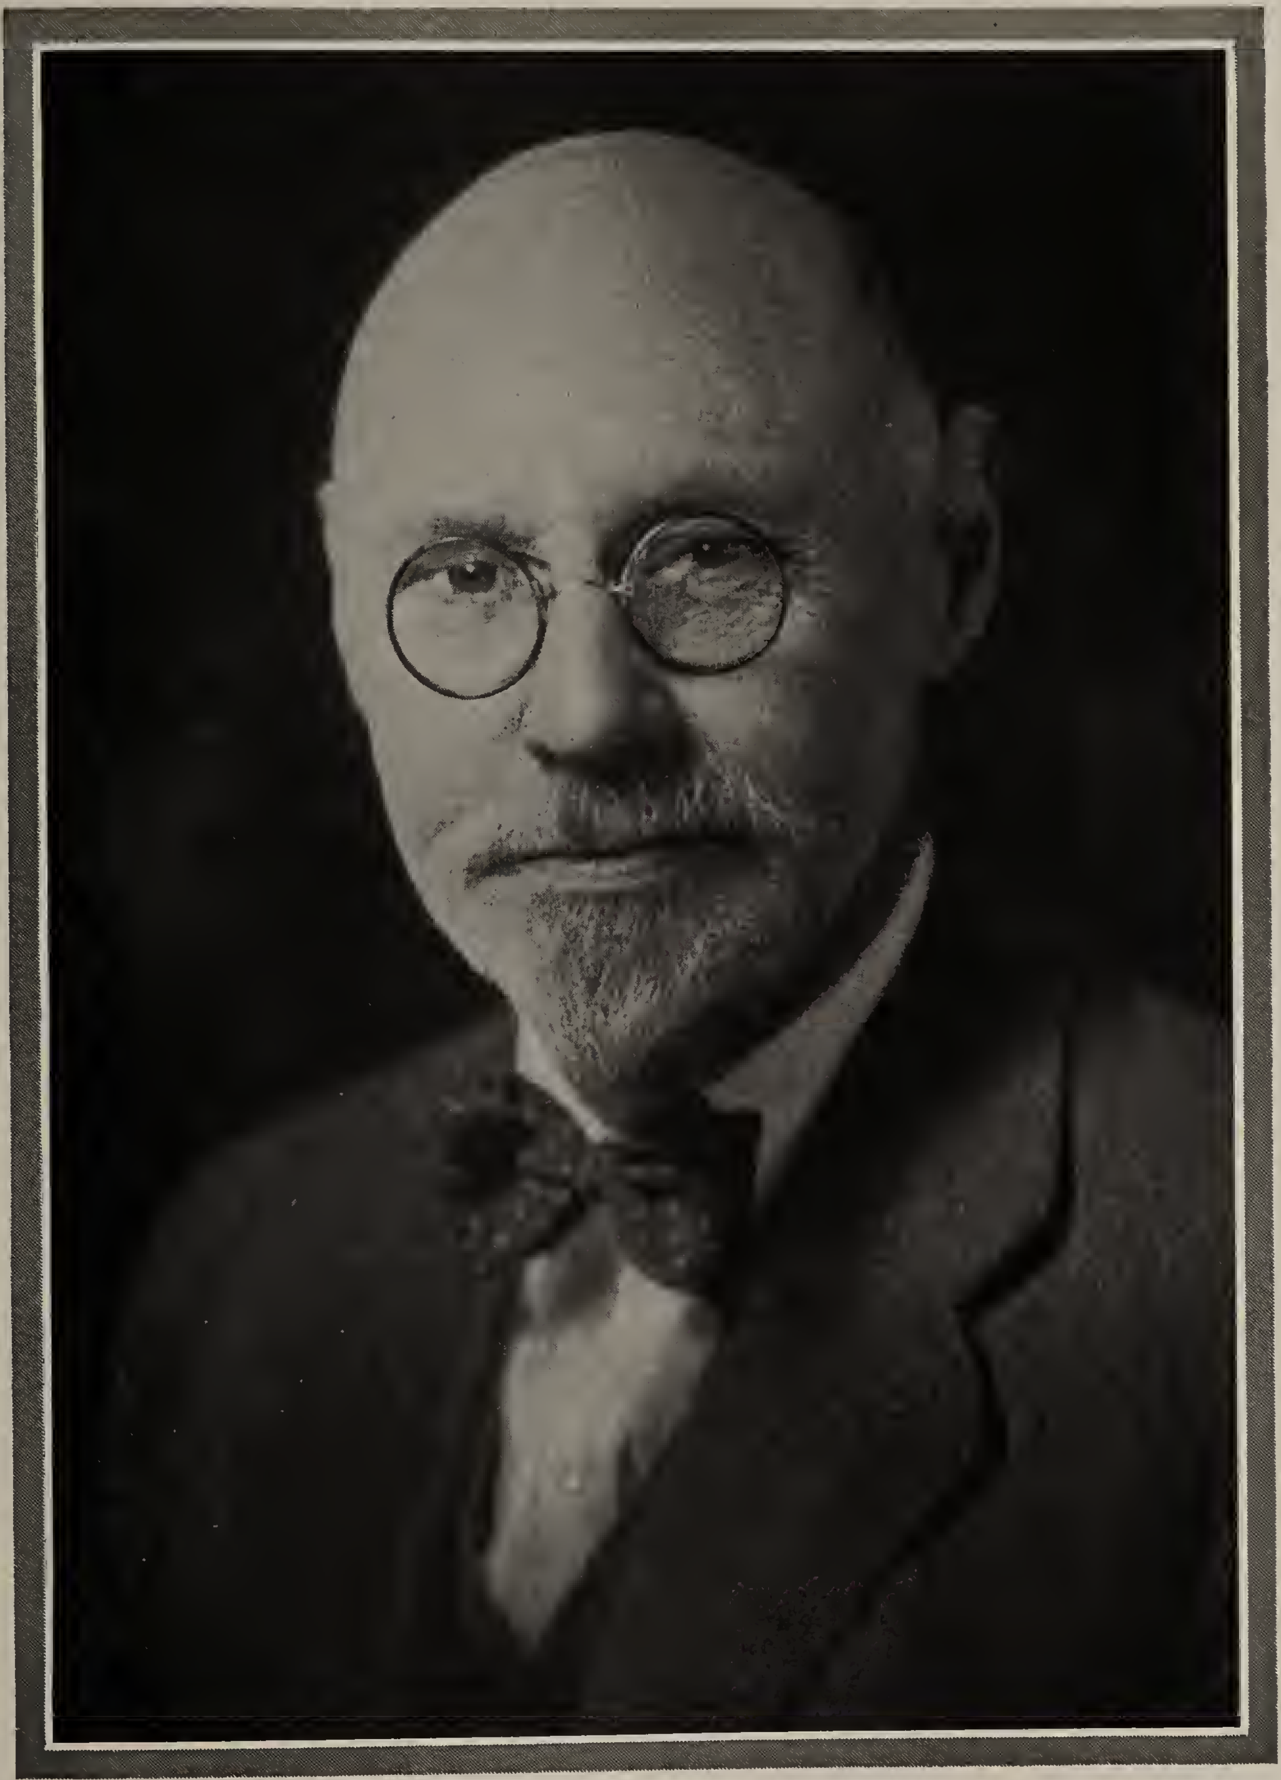
WILLIAM BLACK McNAUGHTON—The Grant Manufacturing and Machine Company, of Bridgeport, is one of the many such concerns that have contributed to cheapening the costs of such products as the motor car and others by the improvement of automatic machinery. William Black McNaughton became identified with this company four years after its founding. Starting in a minor office capacity he has risen through the years to the management of the firm, a post he has filled efficiently for the past fifteen years.

Mr. McNaughton was born at Paisley, Scotland, and was educated in his native land. He is the son of John and Mary McNaughton, both deceased. His father died in 1918 and his mother in 1926. In 1906, William Black McNaughton came to the United States and located in Bridgeport, where he found employment as a mail clerk with the Bryant Electric Company. He soon, however, went to the Siemon Hard Rubber Company, where he remained for three months as a bookkeeper. In 1907, he joined the Grant Manufacturing and Machine Company. This concern was organized by J. Grant Kingsbury, in 1902, starting in a small way. It grew rapidly and a corporation was formed, headed by Mr. Kingsbury. The corporation has developed a number of machines used extensively by automobile and typewriter manufacturers and those making accessories, of various types. Its products are shipped all over the United States and nearly every foreign country, where they are used mainly by automobile, hardware and typewriter manufacturers. In 1922, Mr. Kingsbury, while remaining as president of the Grant Manufacturing and Machine Company, practically retired from the active management to make his home in California. Since that year, William Black McNaughton has directed the activities of the concern, and is officially vice-president and treasurer, in addition to other responsibilities of management. He also is a director of the Black Rock Bank and Trust Company.

Mr. McNaughton has won recognition as a sound, enterprising, conservative, but practical industrialist. He has added numerous improvements to the devices which his company turns out, and greatly improved production, but only after thorough investigation and exacting tests in actual use. That the company has progressed even during a long period of national financial and industrial depression, is the best evidence of his abilities and executive leadership. So busy a man has few opportunities to enter social and civic activities, yet Mr. McNaughton has supported many public service movements and organizations, and is interested in different organizations. He is a member of the Brooklawn Country Club, and the Algonquin Country Club, also of the Masonic bodies up to and including the thirty-second degree of Scottish Rite, and Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is a communicant of the Presbyterian Church.

William Black McNaughton married, in Bridgeport, Connecticut, Violet E. Linley, daughter of Albert and Annie Linley, both of whom are deceased. Mr. and Mrs. McNaughton are the parents of a son, Wallace Bruce McNaughton, born in 1926.

GEORGE CONRAD HAM—As president of the Naugatuck Water Company, George Conrad Ham has performed a work of real value to the citizens of Naugatuck, and in this region of the State he has come to be an accredited leader in business and civic life.



George C Ham

Mr. Ham was born April 11, 1867, in Millbrook, Dutchess County, New York, son of Milton and Phoebe (Ferriss) Ham. His father was a farmer all through his active life, and his parents for years were prominent residents of Dutchess County, New York.

George Conrad Ham attended Seymour Smith's Academy, at Pine Plains, New York, and in 1887 was graduated from the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy, after having prepared for college at Phillips-Andover Academy. His earliest employment was in making engineering surveys, and in 1888 he came to Naugatuck as assistant engineer in the construction of the Naugatuck Water Company plant. In 1889, he was engaged in the construction of the Litchfield Water Company system, and afterward, in association with T. H. McKenzie, of Stonington, he was active in carrying out many similar projects throughout Connecticut. He also spent a year in this work in the West.

Returning to Naugatuck in 1893, he opened an office in association with Howard Tuttle, and the firm of Ham and Tuttle continued until it was dissolved in 1901. After that time Mr. Ham was engaged in independent practice of his profession. He was for twenty years engineer of the borough of Naugatuck, and from 1902 to 1906 he was associated with the Connecticut State Board of Health as sanitary engineer.

It was in 1920 that he was made general manager of the Naugatuck Water Company, of which he was elected president in 1932. He was a director of the company from 1895, and today he continues as president and as a director. He is also president of the Connecticut Water Works Association. He is a member of the New England Water Works Association and the American Water Works Association, as well as of the Connecticut Society of Civil Engineers. He worships in the faith of the Congregational Church. He is a Republican and a member of the National Council of Boy Scouts of America, having been interested in Boy Scouts for a number of years. The study of antiquities is a hobby with Mr. Ham.

In Naugatuck, Connecticut, on June 9, 1892, George Conrad Ham married Grace Seymour, daughter of Samuel Zera and Minerva (Manchester) Seymour, of Naugatuck. The following children were born of this marriage: 1. Conrad Seymour, on December 24, 1894. 2. Margaret Seymour, on August 16, 1899; died at Naugatuck on September 9, 1899.

THE TORRINGTON LIBRARY—With nearly thirty thousand volumes on its shelves, the Torrington Library is one of the outstanding institutions of its kind in northwestern Connecticut.

Like many other philanthropic projects, the Torrington Library Association had a very small beginning. The idea for a public library and public reading room was first formally considered at a meeting of the citizens of Wolcottville (as Torrington was formerly called) in the Methodist Church, October 10, 1864, when the association was formed, a constitution adopted and officers elected. The first books owned by the association were given by a group of ladies of the town who were accustomed to meet together for the purpose of reading and discussing the current literature of their day. With these volumes, and other gifts, the association opened a reading room and its stacks to the public early in 1865, using two rooms in the Granite Block, over the Brooks National Bank. The library grew swiftly in size and in popularity so that more commodious quarters were necessary. These were found in the Wetmore Building, at the corner of Church and Prospect Streets, a structure which soon became known as the "Library Building." Here, from 1880 until the present large building on Litchfield Street was completed, the library continued to prosper, becoming the center of the town's cultural activities. In 1881, when the name of Wolcottville was changed to Torrington, the association also became the Torrington Library Association, a name which it retained until May 22, 1889, when a corporation was organized under a special charter granted by the Connecticut Legislature and the name altered to its present title of "The Torrington Library." The present officers of the Torrington Library include: John N. Brooks, president; Frederick Braman, vice-president; John H. Brooks, treasurer; John M. Wadhams, secretary; John M. Wadhams, 3d, trustee.

The library has been fortunate in attracting the generosity and philanthropy of most of the public-spirited citizens of Torrington since the beginning. Judge Gideon Higgins Welch, speaking at the dedication of the present library building in 1900, said, on this point, ". . . I wish that I could allude to them all by name, but I am restricted because of time to speak of only a few. . . . Especially I am gratified to speak of the royal generosity of the late Lyman W. Coe. . . . For their prominence in support of the institution I allude to Lauren Wetmore and Elisha Turner. . . . The first was the pioneer in the work of this association; the other supplemented the efforts of the first named. Mr. Wetmore, known as 'Deacon Wetmore,' was from the inception of this association interested in its welfare and he filled many of its offices, serving as president for many years. . . . Mr. Turner came to Torrington from New Britain. He became president of the association in December, 1884, and so served until his death. By his will Mr. Turner gave to this corporation the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, from which was to be deducted the expenditures for this lot and building . . ."

Katherine Wilcox Sanford, librarian of The Torrington Library until her death on August 21, 1938, was born in Litchfield, June 17, 1873, daughter of Frederick Marsh and Sarah Betsey (Lewis) Sanford.

In 1903, Miss Sanford was appointed assistant librarian of The Torrington Library and, in 1925, she succeeded the late Louise T. Mason as librarian. Until her death she filled this office, giving the library a degree of devoted service that was reflected in its high standard of community usefulness.

In September, 1938, the trustees appointed Dorothea Cramer librarian. Miss Cramer was born in Torrington on June 7, 1903, and graduated from the Torrington High School in 1920, and from Connecticut College for Women in 1924. She became a member of the library staff in 1927.

BURDON PELTON HYDE—Throughout his career, which spans nearly thirty years, Burdon Pelton Hyde has been associated with the Scovill Manufacturing Company, of Waterbury, in which he is now assistant secretary, an office he assumed after working his way from a clerical post, which he held when he joined the firm. Throughout this period he has been active in the affairs of this community and identified with several of the leading clubs and institutions here.

Mr. Hyde was born in Waterbury, May 16, 1886, the son of Theophilus Rogers and Jane (Burdon) Hyde. His father, who died December 17, 1907, was a native of Rhode Island, but spent his entire career in Waterbury, where he served as an official of the company which his son is now associated with. After receiving the early part of his general education in the public schools of his native city, Mr. Hyde completed this part of his studies at the Taft School in Watertown. He then matriculated at the Sheffield School of Yale University and was graduated from this institution with a Bachelor of Philosophy degree in the class of 1908. Directly after leaving college he became associated with the Scovill Manufacturing Company, in Waterbury, as a clerk.

Though business has been his primary interest he has found time to devote to the social and civic life of his surroundings and has been particularly active as an officer of educational institutions. In this connection he serves as a member of the board of trustees of the St. Margaret's School for Girls and has served his old alma mater, Taft School, in Watertown. He belongs to the Waterbury Club, the Yale Club, of New York City; is a Republican in politics and worships at St. John's Episcopal Church.

On May 14, 1910, at Naugatuck, Mr. Hyde married Lois Allerton, daughter of George M. and Josephine (Webster) Allerton, whose father was a judge and a former mayor of Waterbury. Mr. and Mrs. Hyde are the parents of four children: 1. Burdon Pelton, Jr. 2. David A. 3. Richard W. 4. Josephine W.

RAYMOND N. BROWN—As superintendent of schools and principal of the high school at Thomaston, Raymond N. Brown has performed a work of true importance and value in his community. At the same time he has interested himself in education on a much larger scale, participating actively in the affairs of different groups organized to promote training of the youth, and has taken a lively part in the life of Thomaston.

Mr. Brown was born July 7, 1887, at Middletown, Massachusetts, son of Liolie Nelson and Mary Jane (Rhodes) Brown, both of whom are now deceased. His father was a shoemaker by trade.

The graded schools of Middletown and Danvers and the high school at Danvers, Massachusetts, provided the early education of Raymond N. Brown, who afterward became a student at Amherst College, being graduated there in 1909, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. He took the Master of Arts degree at Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, in 1935. Meanwhile, he had been for years engaged in the active work of teaching and school administration. In 1909 and 1910 he taught in a private school at Norwalk, Connecticut. In 1911 and 1912 he taught in the high school at Virginia, Minnesota, and from 1912 to 1914, adding business experience to his other achievements, he was a traveling salesman. In 1914 and 1915, he served as principal of the high school at New Boston, New Hampshire; from 1915 to 1917, as principal of the high school at Goffstown, New Hampshire; and in 1917 and 1918, as principal of the high school at Groveton, New Hampshire.

From 1918 to 1921, he acted as supervisor of the Connecticut State Board of Education, and it was in that capacity that he came to Thomaston in 1921, and was placed in charge of the local schools. In 1928, he relinquished his State position, thereafter functioning as superintendent of the Thomaston schools and as principal of the high school.

It is in this position that Mr. Brown today fills a place of prominence in the Thomaston community, though he has shown the deepest interest in all matters pertaining to the community's well-being. He is a member of Thomaston Congregational Church. In the Free and Accepted Masons he belongs to the lodge, the Royal Arch Chapter and the council of Royal and Select Masters. Politically he holds to an independent course, voting for those candidates and measures of his choice rather than on a blindly partisan basis. He is a member and director of the Connecticut State Teachers' Association, and twice has served as its president. He also belongs to the National Education Association.

On June 21, 1911, at South Manchester, Connecticut, Raymond N. Brown married Mabel Mercer. They became the parents of two children: 1. Ruth, born April 30, 1913. 2. Donald E., born September 4, 1919.

JAMES FRANCIS HOGAN—Judge of the Torrington City Court and Judge of the Torrington Probate Court as well, James Francis Hogan has won for himself dual distinction as an attorney and as a civic leader.

James Francis Hogan was born in Torrington, February 5, 1905, son of Thomas H. and Anna (Burnell) Hogan, both natives of Ireland. Thomas H. Hogan, prior to his decease, was a shoe merchant in Torrington.

James Francis Hogan, after passing through St. Francis' Parochial School, the Torrington High School, and the Hotchkiss School, attended Yale University, graduating with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1930 and then, selecting the law for his profession, graduated from the Yale School of Law in 1933, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Admitted to the Connecticut Bar the same year, Mr. Hogan established himself in an independent general practice in Torrington. Although his practice has developed rapidly with a steadily increasing clientele, Mr. Hogan has, from the beginning, been very active and devoted to public life as a Democrat. Chairman of the Torrington Town Democratic Committee, Mr. Hogan served as a member of the lower house of the Connecticut State Legislature in 1935, and in 1937, being a member of the Claims Committee in his first term, and a member of the Judiciary Committee during his second term. In 1937, Mr. Hogan was appointed Judge of the Torrington City Court and, since January, 1938, he served also as Judge of Probate for District of Torrington, having been elected to the latter office to a term expiring in 1939, succeeding Judge Cooke, who retired because of his advanced years. A member of St. Francis' Church, Mr. Hogan also belongs to the Torrington branches of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Fraternal Order of Eagles.

James Francis Hogan married, at New Haven, May 19, 1932, Ann Rita Reynolds, daughter of Frank J. and Margaret (Shanley) Reynolds of New Haven.

HARRY BEACH MORSE—Operating his own electrical contracting and supply business in Litchfield, Harry Beach Morse is its sole owner and proprietor, and his contribution to his community through this medium has been a highly important one.

Mr. Morse was born June 22, 1886, at Litchfield, Connecticut, son of the late Wilbur Beach and Mary (Taylor) Morse. His father was a blacksmith. The Beach family is an old and honorable one, the line dating back to Colonial days in this State. For several generations they have lived in Hartford County. Wilbur Beach Morse was a man of strong public spirit, who served for a quarter of a century as Litchfield's fire chief, being succeeded in that position by his son, Harry Beach Morse.

The graded and high schools of Litchfield, his birthplace, provided the early education of Harry Beach Morse, who left the classroom when he was eighteen years of age, apprenticing himself then to the plumber's trade. For four years he was a successful plumber. At the conclusion of that period he became associated with the Litchfield Electric Light and Power Company, starting his connection with this firm in the capacity of lineman and afterward becoming superintendent of construction. On July 1, 1918, he founded an electrical contracting and supply business in Litchfield, which he has since conducted under his own name and of which he is the sole owner.

Quite aside from his activities in the business world, Mr. Morse has taken a lively interest in public affairs. For more than ten years he has served as chairman of the Litchfield town committee of the Republican Party organization, and for two years he was a member of the town Board of Relief. In 1933, he was elected to the lower house of the Connecticut State Legislature, being re-elected to that body in 1935 and 1937. While serving in the Legislature, he was chairman of the fish and game committee and a member of the insurance committee, the committee on railways, and the public health committee. In addition to his other undertakings, he is county commissioner and chief of the Litchfield Fire Department.

Fraternally Mr. Morse is connected with the Free and Accepted Masons, being a Past Master of St. Paul's Lodge, and a member of the Royal Arch Chapter, and with Litchfield Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He holds membership in the Litchfield Fish and Game Club, and he has been consistently fond of healthful outdoor sports, which afford him his major recreation. He worships in the faith of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Harry B. Morse married, on July 16, 1916, at Litchfield, Connecticut, Marcella Scanlan, daughter of John Scanlan, of this place. The children of this marriage have been: 1. Wilbur J., born in 1918. 2. Marjorie, born in 1920. 3. Marcella, born in 1921. 4. Mary, born in 1925. The Morse family residence is situated in Meadow Street, Litchfield, and Mr. Morse has his place of business in South Street.

EUGENE TIMOTHY O'SULLIVAN—An attorney in independent general practice in Torrington for nearly forty years, Eugene Timothy O'Sullivan is one of the leading men of the city, having a long record of public service and support of all community enterprises which have brought about the development of Torrington since the beginning of the twentieth century.

Eugene Timothy O'Sullivan was born at Colchester, January 15, 1877, son of Timothy and Annie (Stratton) O'Sullivan, both natives of Ireland. Timothy O'Sullivan was a rubber worker during his lifetime.

After passing through the grade schools of Colchester, and attending Bacon Academy, Colchester, Eugene Timothy O'Sullivan spent two years at Holy Cross College, in Worcester, Massachusetts, and then completed his education at the School of Law of Yale University, New Haven, from which institution he graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1902. Admitted to the Connecticut bar the same year, Mr. O'Sullivan engaged in the practice of his profession for a time in Naugatuck but, on December 1, 1902, he removed his office to Torrington and has, since that time, enjoyed a large general practice. He supports his profession by being a member of the Litchfield County Bar Association and of the American Bar Association. Always interested in civic affairs, he has for years been a public official, serving first as assistant city prosecutor of Torrington and later, city prosecutor in addition to serving for a time as a referee in bankruptcy for the local United States District. In 1915, Mr. O'Sullivan was appointed clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, an office which he has held through to the present time. His practice is conducted through offices both in Torrington and in Litchfield. A member of St. Francis' Roman Catholic Church, Mr. O'Sullivan is a fourth degree member of the Knights of Columbus, and a past grand knight of the organization, as well as being a past district deputy of the order and a member and past exalted ruler of Torrington Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Eugene Timothy O'Sullivan married, in Torrington, February 22, 1911, Catherine Joy Bohan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Joy, of Torrington.

JUDGE EDWARD EARLE GARLICK—Taking up the study of law slightly later in life than most men, Judge Edward E. (E. Earle) Garlick rose rapidly in skill and reputation, and eventually was honored with appointment to the bench of the Common Pleas Court. He is a native of Fairfield, Connecticut, born September 18, 1884, son of Samuel Middletown and Harriet Trubee (Knapp) Garlick. His father was a well-known physician and surgeon and enlisted in the War Between the States.

Edward Earle Garlick was educated in the public schools of Bridgeport, Starkey Seminary and Palmer Institute. He then secured employment in the executive department of the Locomobile plant, and for a time was a salesman for the Connecticut Flexible Plaster Company. He won promotion to head of the sales department and assistant manager, but after a few years, retired to take up the legal profession. Judge Garlick was graduated from the Yale University Law School, with the Class of 1910, a Bachelor of Laws. Admitted to the bar of Connecticut that same year, he started practice with the well-known firm, Chamberlain and Hull, attorneys. Ultimately he became associated with Richard Swain, and both later joined Samuel C. Shaw, to form Garlick and Swain. Samuel C. Shaw, retired and now deceased, was a judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Fairfield County, to the bench of which court, Judge Garlick was appointed in May, 1927. His judicial service during the past decade has been marked by noteworthy juridical abilities, a growth of repute with colleagues, and public approval. Judge Garlick was a first lieutenant in the United States Army during the World War, serving overseas for a year.

Judge Garlick married Ruth Jordan, and they are the parents of two children: 1. Harriet Trubee. 2. Edward Earle, Jr.

HON. NEHEMIAH CANDEE—One of the oldest residents of South Norwalk and a member of one of Connecticut's oldest families, the Hon. Nehemiah Candee is widely known and honored in this region. He has long been an active member of the bar in this State, and his contribution to professional and public life has been a significant one.

Mr. Candee was born August 9, 1870, in Easton, Connecticut, son of Jason and Caroline A. (Canfield) Candee, and of the seventh generation in direct line of descent from Zaccheus Candee. The family is one whose members have, in the intervening generations, been prominent in activities designed to promote the general welfare of both State and town. The line of descent is as follows:

(I) Zaccheus Candee settled in New Haven and died in 1720, aged eighty years. He married Rebecca Bristow, daughter of Henry Bristow, or Bristol, of New Haven. She died in September, 1739.

(II) Samuel Candee, their son, was born July 24, 1678, in West Haven, and died February 28, 1748/49. In October, 1731, he was a lieutenant in the company in West Haven, and later captain. He served in the Battle of Bunker Hill. He married, April 28, 1703, Abigail Pineon, of New Haven, daughter of Thomas Pineon, of New Haven, and she died January 9, 1743.

(III) Caleb Candee was born about 1722 in West Haven, settled about 1730 in Oxford, and died in 1764. He married Lois Mallory, and they became the parents of Samuel.

(IV) Samuel Candee was baptized March 17, 1754, and died about 1840, aged eighty-seven. He married, March 20, 1777, Mabel Bradley, of Derby, Connecticut, and they joined the church in Oxford April 5, 1778. He was a lieutenant in 1786, a captain in 1789, during the War of the American Revolution, and was a pensioner in the years afterward. He took part in the Battle of Bunker Hill. He was, in private life, a farmer and a maker of scythes.

(V) Amos Candee, son of Samuel and Mabel (Bradley) Candee, was baptized April 5, 1778, and died in 1855. He removed, in 1836, to Easton, Connecticut, and was a farmer. He was a selectman of the Town of Easton for several years. He married (first) Lydia Taylor Dike, and (second), July 26, 1828, Lydia Platt, daughter of Amos Platt, a school teacher before her marriage.

(VI) Jason Candee, their son, was born June 13, 1829, in Southbury, Connecticut, and died in May, 1915. He was a small lad when his parents removed to Easton, and there he went to school. After completing his studies, he took up farming, continuing in this line of work for the rest of his life. He married, February 24, 1850, Caroline Amelia Canfield, daughter of David Canfield, who lived in that part of Redding bordering on the Ridgefield line. David Canfield left there and enlisted for service in the Seminole War. He was killed by the Indians, one of his colleagues in the Army reporting his death to his family. The following children of Jason and Caroline Amelia (Canfield) Candee survived to maturity: 1. William J., now deceased. 2. Lafayette, also deceased. 3. Nehemiah, of further mention. 4. Anna, wife of P. G. McCullom, of Richmond, Virginia. The family were Baptists.

(VII) Nehemiah Candee attended the public schools of Easton, his birthplace, and went for a time to Staples Academy. He was graduated in 1893 from Yale College, at New Haven, taking the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and later from the Law School of Yale University, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Going to Chicago, he was admitted to the Illinois bar, and in that State was engaged in professional practice for one year. In the winter of 1907 he returned to Norwalk, Connecticut, here forming a partnership with John Keogh, the two men starting their partnership in law on January 1 of that season under the firm name of Keogh and Candee. This firm has continued its operations down to the present. Mr. Keogh's appointment to the post of referee in bankruptcy left the work largely in the hands of Mr. Candee. Elevated to the judgeship of the City Court, of Norwalk, in June, 1917, he has served continuously since that time. During this period he served as Juvenile Court judge up to 1935, and assisted materially in establishing the probation system for juveniles in the Town of Norwalk.

For several terms Judge Candee has fulfilled his duties on the bench with complete satisfaction to his constituents. A Republican in his political views, he has long taken a lively interest in partisan and public affairs. In 1917, and again in 1919, he served in the Connecticut State Legislature. In his first term in that law-making body he served as a member of the committee on forfeited rights and the committee on banks and federal relations. In his second term he was a member of the judiciary committee. In the fall of 1920, Judge Candee was a candidate for Senator from the Twenty-sixth Senatorial District, was elected and served the session of 1921. While in the Senate he was chairman of the Committee of Humane Relations, which committee assisted in establishing the Bureau of Child Welfare under the Department of Public Welfare, in Connecticut.

In several fraternities Judge Candee has been a leading spirit. Otherwise he has taken part extensively in Norwalk's social life. In the Free and Accepted Masons he is affiliated with Old Well Lodge, No. 108, Butler Chapter, No. 38, of Royal Arch Masons, Clinton Commandery, No. 3, of Knights Templar, and Monker Grotto. He belongs also to the Improved Order of Red Men, the Loyal Order of Moose, Olive Branch Lodge of the Knights of Pythias (in which he is past grand chancellor of the Grand Lodge of Connecticut), and the Dramatic Order of the Knights of Khorassan, of New Britain. He is a director of the People's Trust Company, of South Norwalk.

On June 29, 1901, Judge Candee married Annie M. Chunn, daughter of Mark B. Chunn, of St. Marys County, Maryland. They became the parents of the following children: 1. Mark Chunn and 2. Marjorie Dent, twins, born October 22, 1903, in New Haven. Mark Chunn Candee graduated from Yale University in 1925, and Yale Law School in 1927, and is now practicing law in Greenwich, Connecticut, and New York City; was a candidate for Judge of Probate of the Town of Greenwich, fall of 1936. Marjorie D. married Rev. John Walter Houck, pastor of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, Bronx, New York. She is the editor of the "Lookout," a magazine published in the interest of Seaman Church Institute. She is a graduate of Barnard and Columbia colleges. 3. Randolph Frederick, born June 29, 1905, died July 10, 1909. 4. Dorothy Caroline, born April 19, 1911, is a graduate of Smith College, and is now teaching English in the senior high school in Norwalk.

Mrs. Candee has written a number of children's stories and verses for the "Youth's Companion" and other children's magazines. She is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, Garden Club, of Norwalk, and the United Daughters of the Confederacy, of Greenwich.

CHARLES BALFE JACKSON—As president of the Thomas F. Jackson Company, Incorporated, of Waterbury, Charles Balfe Jackson continues the business in cut stone, marble and tiles which was established originally by his grandfather and has since remained under control of his family. He is a well known figure in Waterbury life.

Mr. Jackson was born in this city on October 31, 1886, a son of Thomas F. Jackson and Mary (Balfe) Jackson. He is a grandson of Charles Jackson, who entered the cut stone and monument business at Waterbury in 1859, and continued its operation until his retirement in 1892, when he was succeeded by his son. Thomas F. Jackson was president, until his death in 1928, of the company which bears his name.

Charles Balfe Jackson was educated in Waterbury schools and at Yale University, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1907. In the same year he entered his father's business, serving a thorough apprenticeship in various phases of its operation and gradually assuming larger responsibilities in the firm. He succeeded his father as president and has since directed the extensive business built up during a period of almost eighty years.

Mr. Jackson is also a director of the Lux Clock Manufacturing Company and the Citizens and Manufacturers National Bank of Waterbury. His position as a business leader of the city was reflected in his election as a director of the Waterbury Chamber of Commerce, in which capacity he now serves. Mr. Jackson has also taken over a number of civic responsibilities in the interests of his community and has given effective support to many of its institutions. He has been a member of the Board of Finance of Waterbury since 1930 and in 1937 was clerk of the Connecticut State Senate. During the World War he enlisted in the National Army at Camp Devens, Massachusetts, in 1917, and served there and at Camp Lee, Virginia, until 1919, when he was discharged with the rank of first lieutenant. Since the war, he has been a member of the American Legion. Mr. Jackson is a member, in addition, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Waterbury Club and the Waterbury Country Club.

He married, on January 21, 1936, in Waterbury, Lina M. Dowling, daughter of John and Caroline Dowling, of this city.

WILLIAM SAMUEL JONES—During his long career as a merchant in Waterbury, William Samuel Jones has become a principal figure in the city's business life. He is president of the Jones-Morgan Company, Incorporated, men's and young men's clothing, which he established more than half a century ago, and a civic leader of prominence in the community.

Mr. Jones was born in Meriden, Connecticut, on June 28, 1859, a son of Samuel and Margaret (McGrath) Jones. His father died at Meriden in 1867 and the family moved in the same year to Waterbury, where William Samuel Jones has since made his home. He was educated in local public schools and early assumed the responsibilities of maturity, beginning his career as a newsboy. He was the first to establish a newspaper route out of Waterbury on the railroads and conducted it until 1877. In the latter year he secured a position as clerk in the clothing store of J. H. Dudley, where he obtained his first experience in the business to which he has devoted so many years of his life. In 1885 he entered business for himself, organizing the Jones-Morgan Company at 96 Bank Street, Waterbury, where the store has been conducted during the intervening years with great success. On February 2, 1902, it was destroyed in the disastrous fire which swept the city, but Mr. Jones rebuilt on the same location in 1903 and has since expanded continuously to meet the growing demands of his business. The company was incorporated in 1906 with Mr. Jones as president.

In addition to his business connections, Mr. Jones has been active in civic affairs, supporting a wide variety of community enterprises and institutions. A Democrat in politics, he served as a member of the city Board of Health under Mayor Elton and on the Board of Charity under Mayor Hotchkiss, performing the duties of these offices with characteristic fidelity and efficiency. He is admired by his fellow townsmen for his public spirit no less than for the accomplishments of his career.

Mr. Jones is a member of the Waterbury Club and the Waterbury Country Club.

He married, in 1889, Elizabeth R. McGowan, of Hartford, who died May 5, 1935, and they had five children: 1. Marguerite. 2. William H. 3. Samuel J. 4. Oswald R. 5. Edwin.

CHASE KIMBALL—Lawyer and banker in the City of Waterbury, commentator and student of international affairs, Chase Kimball has attained distinction and success in each of the aforementioned fields.

Mr. Kimball was born in Waterbury on January 20, 1902, the son of Arthur Reed and Mary (Chase) Kimball. After preparatory education at the Adirondack Florida School and the Taft School, he matriculated at Yale University, from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1925, and then attended the Yale Law School, where he was awarded his Bachelor of Laws degree in 1928. During his academic career he majored in Military Science and also specialized in economics and modern history, and later as a law student studied international law. Mr. Kimball was an editor of the "Yale Law Journal."

On being admitted to the Connecticut bar in July, 1928, Mr. Kimball became law clerk under Judge Edwin B. Parker, War Claims Arbiter under the War Claims Settlement Act of 1928. He continued in this capacity until December, 1929, doing work in the international law of war and working on the valuation of the more than ninety German merchant vessels taken over by the United States Government during the World War. On the death of Judge Parker he left Washington to become associated with the New Haven law firm of Bristol and White, with whom he served from January, 1930, until August, 1931, when he removed to his native City of Waterbury to become Assistant Trust Officer of the Waterbury National Bank, of which he has been Trust Officer since 1933.

Throughout this period he has maintained a keen interest in international affairs, taking an active part in numerous peace organizations and working and speaking extensively upon the subject. In 1926 he was a member of the Institute of Politics in Williamstown. He has made nine trips to Europe, visiting Geneva four or five times. He was in the latter city during the entire month of September, 1931, and three years later, in 1934, was a member of the Sherwood Eddy party which traveled to twelve European countries. At present he makes a weekly broadcast over radio station WATR, his period being entitled "World Affairs in Brief."

Aside from his post as Trust Officer of the Waterbury National Bank, Mr. Kimball is also a member of the board of directors of the Morris Plan Bank of Waterbury and the Gaylord Farm Association of Wallingford. His social and civic activities embrace a broad field. He is a director of the Waterbury Young Men's Christian Association and since 1934, has been a member of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Associations in the United States and Canada. Since 1935, he has been a trustee of Berea College, a private institution in Kentucky, with about two thousand students. In 1936, he was elected a member of the Prudential Committee of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and of the International Relations Committee of the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Churches. The same year he became a director of the National League of Nations Association and for many years has been an officer or director of its Connecticut branch. In addition he is chairman of the Fifth Congressional District of Connecticut for the League of Nations Association and holds or has held the same position in the National Council for Prevention of War, the Emergency Peace Campaign and the W. I. L. He is treasurer and member of the steering committee of the Connecticut Peace Conference and served as treasurer of the Washington Council on International Relations in 1929.

A large part of his efforts has also been devoted to religious affairs. Mr. Kimball is a member of the Second Congregational Church of Waterbury and of its Ecclesiastical Society's Committee. He is secretary of the Waterbury Council of Churches and since 1936 has been delegate-at-large for Connecticut to the General Council of Congregational and Christian Churches. Mr. Kimball resides at No. 175 Grove Street, Waterbury.

PAUL LUX—As president and treasurer of the Lux Clock Company of Waterbury, Paul Lux directs one of the principal industrial organizations of the State and one of the largest of its kind in the nation. It was brought into existence by his initiative and has risen to its present position under his active leadership.

Mr. Lux was born on March 23, 1869, in Thorn, West Prussia, a son of Frederick and Elizabeth Lux. His father was postmaster at Thorn. He himself was educated in German schools and at the age of fourteen was apprenticed in the clock manufacturing industry, spending three years in securing his fundamental training in the field to which he has since devoted his efforts. At the end of that time he went to Glasgow, Scotland, where he worked for eight months, after which he spent a short period at Havre, France, in 1887. In the same year he came to the United States, seeking the larger opportunities of a newer country. He landed in New York and upon his arrival secured employment with the Ansonia Clock Company at Brooklyn, New York. Here he remained until 1892, when he moved to Waterbury, Connecticut. Mr. Lux was then associated with the Waterbury Clock Company, working in the experimental department until 1914. From 1914 to 1917, he operated the Lux Model Works, and in the latter year established the Lux Clock Company, which he has since controlled. Mr. Lux's long experience in the field and his mechanical gifts had brought him an expert knowledge of clock manufacture, which he now employed to the advantage of his own company. Its steady development reflected not only the high standards of quality which he established in the manufacture of his products, but the strength of his leadership and soundness of his judgment as directing head of the company. The Lux Clock Company is one of the principal concerns in its field today, giving employment to some 850 people. Mr. Lux has continued to serve as president and treasurer since its organization. He is well known as an executive and is admired throughout the industry for his practical and inventive turn of mind as well as his business acumen.

In addition to his business connections, Mr. Lux is affiliated fraternally with Waterbury Lodge, No. 265, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and has been associated from time to time during his residence in this city with various civic and community movements. He is a member of the German Lutheran Church.

Mr. Lux married, on September 5, 1889, in New York City, Caroline Feld. They are the parents of two sons: 1. Fred, now vice-president and superintendent of the Lux Clock Company. 2. Herman, who is secretary of the company. "Men and Power," the publication of The Connecticut Light and Power Company, says of the sons in the January, 1938, issue:

> Mr. Fred Lux, vice-president and superintendent, with his technical training, merchandising ingenuity, his vigor and endless enthusiasm, has supplemented his father's unusual clock-making abilities to weld the Lux Clock Company into a sound and successful enterprise. Mr. Herman Lux, secretary, handles the Company's financial statements. He acts as scorekeeper for the firm, and keeps close count of the hits, runs and errors of the members of the team.

WILLIAM BRENDAN FITZGERALD—The service that William Brendan Fitzgerald has rendered in the profession of law has been a notable one, rich in its value to the people of Waterbury and the Connecticut community where he makes his home.

Mr. Fitzgerald was born January 21, 1902, in Waterbury, Connecticut, son of John J. and Margaret M. Fitzgerald. The father, who died in July, 1929, was for thirty years secretary of the Waterbury Board of Education. The mother lives in Waterbury.

The public schools provided the early education of William Brendan Fitzgerald, who completed his high school work, then became a student at Holy Cross

Louis S. Cates

College, where he took the Bachelor of Arts degree in 1923. In 1926, he received the degree of Bachelor of Laws from the Law School of Harvard University, in Cambridge, Massachusetts. Admitted to the bar of the State of Connecticut on July 13, 1926, he at once began a general practice of his profession at Waterbury. Here he has continued his work down to the present, serving since 1931 as assistant State's attorney. He is a member of the New Haven County Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association and the American Bar Association, and his participation in the general affairs of the law has been a notable one, supplementing his own active practice.

Quite aside from his professional activity and interests, Mr. Fitzgerald is a leader in the general affairs of his community. He is a member of a number of organizations, among them the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Waterbury Country Club. Every group or project with which he has connected himself has, moreover, benefited to a remarkable degree from his labors in its behalf, with the result that he is respected, honored and trusted in an ever widening circle.

On July 30, 1932, in Medford, Massachusetts, William Brendan Fitzgerald married Margaret M. Cunning, daughter of James F. and Margaret (Brewer) Cunning. The children of this marriage are: 1. Margaret Mary. 2. Mary Ellen. 3. William Brendan, Jr. The Fitzgerald home is situated at No. 110 Columbia Boulevard, Waterbury.

LOUIS SIDNEY CARTER—During his long association with the great silk house of Cheney Brothers, Louis Sidney Carter rose from positions of minor responsibility to the office of treasurer of the firm. He thus became a widely known figure in the business life of the State, and with the expansion of his interests in other directions and numerous civic connections, he extended the scope of his influence and constructive service throughout a considerable area.

Mr. Carter was born in Moodus, Connecticut, on July 21, 1875, only son of Sydney Smith and Harriet Meloria (Brooks) Carter. His father, who served with the Union troops in the Civil War, was afterward first Selectman of East Haddam, and in 1911, represented that town in the General Assembly. He was for many years engaged in the trucking business at Moodus.

Louis Sidney Carter received his preliminary education in the old Red Lane School at Moodus and subsequently attended Bacon Academy in Colchester. After completing his course, he taught for two years in Moodus at the old Red Lane School, where his mother, sister and two uncles had taught before him, and then turned his attention to a business career, for which he prepared at the well known Eastman Business College in Poughkeepsie, New York. On August 23, 1899, he entered the employ of Cheney Brothers as an accountant in their South Manchester mill and so began his long association with the fortunes of this firm. Gradually, as his capacities were demonstrated, he was entrusted with larger responsibilities and rose within the organization to the position of head bookkeeper. On February 3, 1926, after more than a quarter of a century of devoted service, he was elected treasurer and assistant secretary of the firm. This distinction was particularly notable since he was the first person outside the Cheney family to hold office in the corporation. He continued to participate in the management of Cheney Brothers until his retirement in 1934, sitting in the general executive councils of the company in addition to administering the special responsibilities of his office. Following his retirement from the Cheney firm, he became treasurer of the Clogston, Haskell, Michaelis Corporation, manufacturers of paper boxes in New Haven. He held this office until his death, although failing health somewhat limited the extent of his participation in its active management. His long experience, however, and sound business judgment, were always of value to the organization.

Mr. Carter was a member of the Sons of the American Revolution; a former member of the East Haddam Fishing and Game Club, the Hartford Club, the Manchester Club, the Arts and Trade Club of New York, and the Clinton Country Club. Fraternally, he was affiliated with Columbia Lodge, No. 26, Free and Accepted Masons, at East Haddam. In addition to his other business responsibilities, he was a trustee of the estate of the late Loren L. Brooks, a duty which he met with characteristic fidelity. Mr. Carter was a member of the Congregational Church in Manchester. He resided during the latter period of his life in New Haven and had many friends both in this city and in the other communities which from time to time had been his home or the center of his business interests. He was a loyal man—loyal in his friendships, in his performance of duty, in his attention to the obligations of good citizenship. Consequently, he had the affection of many and the respect of all with whom he came in contact.

On October 18, 1899, Louis Sidney Carter married Margaret Moore, daughter of Martin and Ellen (Garrigan) Moore, both now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Carter became the parents of two children: 1. Faith Moore. 2. M. Cynthia.

Mr. Carter died at New Haven on September 16, 1937. "He was a man of sterling integrity, loyal to his friends and one who had an abiding love and veneration for his native town," to quote the tribute of a local paper which expressed the sentiment of those who had known and honored him for years. "His death is sincerely mourned, not only by his many acquaintances in his native town, but by a host of friends in other places."

HERMAN WILLIAM BAER—Making his own splendid contribution to the business life of Waterbury, Herman William Baer is secretary of the Waterbury Button Company, as well as its assistant treasurer and one of its directors, and his labor in behalf of his community and its people has been a significant one.

Mr. Baer was born February 5, 1898, in Waterbury, Connecticut, and there he attended the public schools and high school, later taking a one-year business course. His connection with the Waterbury Button Company began in September, 1913, and in 1922 he was made assistant treasurer. His election as a director of the company came in January, 1929, and the selection of him for the office of secretary was an event of 1930. The company, which fills an important place in the industrial life of Waterbury, makes buttons and metal novelties, as well as moulded insulation and brass goods of many kinds.

Mr. Baer is president and a director of the Waterbury Association of Credit Men and a director of the Connecticut Association of Credit Men. He belongs to the First Congregational Church, of Watertown, and is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons.

Much of his work has followed along the lines of his father's activity, for the elder Mr. Baer was also engaged in industrial undertakings of magnitude. The parents were John J. and Caroline (Luedtke) Baer, and the father was engaged in the clock manufacturing business. The family home of Herman William Baer and his wife and daughter is situated in Watertown.

Herman William Baer married, in Waterbury, Connecticut, on July 1, 1924, Lois Morgan, of New York City. They have one daughter, Lois.

THOMAS F. MOORE—The multifarious activities of Thomas F. Moore in the social, civic and business life of the City of Waterbury have served to establish him as one of the most prominent and able citizens of the community. In addition to serving as trust officer of the Citizens and Manufacturers National Bank, he also is a member of a number of official bodies, belongs to the leading fraternal and social organizations and is a member of the State, county and city bar associations.

A native of Waterbury, to which his grandfather, James Hampton Moore came in 1836, and where his family has resided continuously for over one hundred years, Mr. Moore was born November 8, 1895, the son of William Charles and Anna (McCarthy) Moore, both deceased and former residents and natives of that community, where his father engaged in a manufacturing business. After a general education in the Waterbury schools, Mr. Moore matriculated at Yale University from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree and high honors in 1918. He also attended the Yale Law School but temporarily gave up his professional studies to enlist in the Naval Aviation service, with which he was identified until December, 1918.

He then returned to Waterbury and from 1919 to 1921, occupied the post of secretary of the local Chamber of Commerce. At the expiration of this period he became trust officer of the Citizens and Manufacturers National Bank and has continued since to serve in that very important capacity with distinction and success. Aside from this business connection he is also secretary and director of Charles B. Schoenmehl, Incorporated, of Waterbury, and serves as director of the New Haven and Shore Line Railroad, the Groton and Stonington Traction Company, the Rocket Transit Company, the Oiljak Manufacturing Company of Montclair, New Jersey, and other local mercantile concerns. With all he is an accredited lawyer, having been admitted to the Connecticut State bar in 1923. In this connection he is a member of the Connecticut State Bar Association, the New Haven County Bar Association and the Waterbury Bar Association and has specialized in probate, corporation, investment and tax law.

Throughout his active career, Mr. Moore has also contributed substantially and usefully to the general welfare of the city. Since 1921 he has been a member and secretary of the Waterbury Board of Park Commissioners, and has guided the rapid growth and development of Waterbury's park system. He is chairman of the City Planning Commission, served in the same capacity for the Public Market Commission in 1921, and has been a member of the Zoning Commission and chairman of the Board of Zoning Appeals of the City of Waterbury. Private and public agencies have enlisted Mr. Moore's support with the result that today he serves several important philanthropic organizations, including the Mutual Aid Unemployment Fund of Waterbury, of which he was secretary, the Settler's Village, Incorporated, of which he was treasurer, and the Lincoln House Association, Incorporated, of which he is a director. He also is a member and treasurer of the Salvation Army Citizens Advisory Committee, director and treasurer of Waterbury Chapter of the American Red Cross, trustee and treasurer of the Board of Trustees American Legion Home Fund, Incorporated, director and secretary of the Amerind Foundation, Incorporated. In his social affiliations he is treasurer and director of the Watertown Riding and Hunt Club, fraternizes with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and belongs to the local post of the American Legion. He is a communicant of St. Margaret's Roman Catholic Church.

On August 30, 1920, at Waterbury, Mr. Moore married Margaret Scully, daughter of Martin and Margaret Scully, both of Waterbury where her father served as mayor, 1914-1918. Mr. and Mrs. Moore are the parents of two children: William Charles and Anne Margaret.

As a keen student of economics, law, government, business and investment, with his management and supervision of large trusts, estates, funds, investments and securities, and by his connections and experience with many diversified business, municipal and civic enterprises, Mr. Moore has an important role and influence in the everyday life and activity of his native City of Waterbury, and of a large percentage of its inhabitants.

WILLIAM KENNETH LAWLOR—During a career which spans twenty-five years, William Kenneth Lawlor, treasurer of the James W. Hodson Company, Incorporated, has achieved distinction as a lawyer and business man in the City of Waterbury, where he also owns and operates a large stock farm.

Mr. Lawlor was born in Waterbury, May 15, 1888, the son of Christopher Henry and Bridget (Fitzsimmons) Lawlor, both natives of Ireland, the former from County Clare and the latter from County Cavan. His father, who died in 1906, came to this country in 1842, and settled in Waterbury where he was a dry goods merchant until his passing. Mr. Lawlor received a general education in the public and parochial schools of this city and after completing this part of his studies at the local high school, matriculated at Georgetown University, in which he secured his legal training and from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Laws degree in the class of 1912. The same year he was admitted to the Connecticut State bar and established himself in a general practice of law which he has conducted continuously since, save for the time he served as field sergeant major in the Field Artillery during the World War. He was honorably discharged from the Army on December 23, 1918, and returned to his native city to resume practice. Mr. Lawlor is a member of the New Haven County Bar Association and the Waterbury Bar Association.

In conjunction with his legal activities he has also occupied the post of treasurer for the James W. Hodson Company, Incorporated, for a number of years, and owns and operates a large stock farm comprising one hundred and sixty acres, situated within the city limits of Waterbury. This is a very valuable property and helps to satisfy Mr. Lawlor's hobby of farming.

On January 29, 1920, in Waterbury, Mr. Lawlor married May Hodson, daughter of James W. and Mary (Barnett) Hodson. Mr. and Mrs. Lawlor are the parents of three daughters: 1. Mary Louise. 2. Ann Marie. 3. Marjorie Joan. The family resides at No. 49 Hewlett Street in this city.

JOHN DUTTON THOMS—On the basis of his professional and official achievements, John Dutton Thoms, member of the Waterbury law firm of Carmody and Thoms, is ranked among the most prominent and successful young attorneys in New Haven County. He is emulating the career of his distinguished father, Judge William E. Thoms, senior member of the aforementioned firm. Mr. Thoms occupied the post of prosecuting attorney for the City Court of Waterbury, has represented this community in the State Legislature for the past seven years and has been a member of the board of finance since 1929. He is prominent socially and a highly esteemed and popular figure among his colleagues and fellow citizens.

Mr. Thoms was born in Waterbury, October 31, 1902, the son of Judge William E. Thoms. Upon completing his general education in the public schools of this city he matriculated at Yale University, in which he received a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1924, and later, in 1925, was awarded a Bachelor of Laws degree from the law school of the institution. He was admitted to the bar and established himself in practice with the firm of Carmody and Thoms, of which he has been a member since 1930. As an attorney he belongs to the American Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association, and the Waterbury Bar Association.

Practically from the outset of his career Mr. Thoms has been among the most active young men in the community. His career as a member of the city finance board, in the office of prosecuting attorney, and as a member of the State Legislature, has been capped by his appointment as Statute Revision Commissioner for the State of Connecticut, which he received on July 1, 1937. A mere recital of the offices he has been entrusted to hold and the manner in which he has administered each, clearly indicate his abilities, and the place he has made for himself in the community and State.

Socially, Mr. Thoms is a member of the Waterbury Club, the Watertown Golf Club, and fraternizes with the Order of Free and Accepted Masons. He also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On June 29, 1926, Mr. Thoms married Grace Conner, daughter of Howard W. and Minnie (Rhodes) Conner. They are the parents of one son, John Dutton, Jr.

JOSEPH PETER ALISHAUSKY—Ranked among the most prominent and promising young attorneys of the city of Waterbury and New Haven County, is the name of Joseph Peter Alishausky, who for the past two years has engaged in practice, specializing in taxation, interstate commerce and Federal trade law.

Mr. Alishausky was born in Waterbury, March 17, 1908, the son of Caspar and Rose Alishausky. His father, who came to the United States from Lithuania, in 1892, and is now living in retirement, conducted a successful restaurant and tavern business here for a number of years. Mr. Alishausky received the early part of his general education at St. Joseph's Parochial School, and completed this part of his studies at the Crosby High School in 1926. He then secured an academic training at Holy Cross College, receiving a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1930, and the following fall matriculated at the Georgetown University Law School, from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Laws degree in 1933, and obtained a degree of Doctor of Jurisprudence in 1934. As a student he established a brilliant record and since establishing himself in active practice, in 1935, has lived up to his scholastic excellence in a practical manner which promises much. He is a member of the Waterbury Bar Association and the American Bar Association: fraternizes with the Knights of Lithuania; and is a member of the Lithuanian Independent Political Club. Mr. Alishausky resides at his parents' home, No. 684 North Riverside Street, in this city.

JOHN FRANCIS McGRATH—For thirty-five years John Francis McGrath has been a prominent member of the bar and bench in the city of Waterbury and New Haven County. He is a former prosecuting attorney and for the past two decades has served with distinction and success as judge of the city court.

Judge McGrath was born in Waterbury, June 24, 1878, the son of Edward and Annie L. (Fruin) McGrath. His father, who came to this country from Ireland in 1856, and died in Waterbury in 1924, engaged in the real estate business here for a number of years. After a general education in the public schools of his native community, Judge McGrath matriculated at St. Francis College from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1899. He then entered the Yale Law School for his professional training and was awarded a Bachelor of Laws degree from this institution in 1902. The same year he was admitted to the Connecticut State bar and established himself in a general practice which he has conducted since. His career in public office dates back to 1907, when he was named assistant prosecuting attorney for the city. He served in this capacity for five years and on the basis of his accomplishments was elected prosecutor in 1912, and occupied this post until 1917, when he was appointed judge of the city court. He is universally esteemed and respected by his colleagues and the public for his ability and impartiality. As an attorney he belongs to the American Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association and the Waterbury Bar Association. Though his efforts and ambitions have been directed along professional lines, he has been sought for and served in other capacities, including his term in the State Senate where he represented the Fifteenth District in 1913. Socially, he fraternizes with the local lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

In 1910, at Waterbury, Judge John Francis McGrath married Irene K. Cullen, daughter of Edward and Kate Cullen. Judge and Mrs. McGrath are the parents of two children: 1. John Francis, Jr. 2. Eleanor.

James M Bennett

JAMES M. BENNETT—For forty-three years James M. Bennett, president, treasurer and general manager of Beecher and Bennett, Incorporated, has directed the affairs of one of the most widely known and highly respected mortuary establishments in the City of New Haven. In addition to his professional activities he has also been active in the civic and social affairs of this community and today is a member of a number of the leading organizations here.

Mr. Bennett was born at New Milford, February 24, 1869, and received a general education in the public schools of his native community, which he attended until he was sixteen years of age. At that time he began working for his uncle, who operated a furniture and undertaking business. For eight years he specialized in funeral work and then retired temporarily to take a course at the Renouard School of Embalming, then spent one year in Providence, Rhode Island, with A. O. Miles Company, Funeral Directors. In 1894, he came to the City of New Haven and formed the firm of Beecher and Bennett, his partner being Henry W. Beecher. For twenty-five years this establishment operated a funeral home at No. 280 Elm Street. In 1919, they removed to larger and more modern quarters at No. 100 Broadway. The firm was incorporated in 1918, with Mr. Beecher as president and treasurer and Mr. Bennett as vice-president and general manager. Upon the death of Mr. Beecher in 1924, Mr. Bennett became president, treasurer and general manager the positions he has since occupied with outstanding distinction and success.

Throughout his career here Mr. Bennett has been active in the social and civic affairs of the community. At present he serves as a member of the board of directors of the City Missionary Association, is an incorporator and director of the Dixwell Community House, and has served on the advisory board of the Family Society. He fraternizes with the Royal Arcanum and is a charter member and former president of the New Haven Lions Club. He also belongs to the Quinnipiack Club, the Union League Club and the Woodbridge Country Club. In politics he supports the Republican Party and in religion worships at the Dwight Place Congregational Church, in which he has been a member for over forty years, served as deacon for thirty-one years and occupied the post of clerk for fifteen years. He is fond of sports and finds his main recreation in golfing and bowling.

On August 29, 1894, at New Milford, Mr. Bennett married Bertha Beecher, daughter of Stephen Grenville and Ellen (Wetmore) Beecher.

JOHN FRANCIS McDONOUGH—For many years successfully engaged in the practice of law, John Francis McDonough is one of the highly esteemed and respected members of the community of Waterbury.

Mr. McDonough was born April 11, 1878, in Lee, Massachusetts, son of Martin and Sarah (Joyce) McDonough. His parents were both born in Ireland, and came together to America in 1857, settling in Lee, Massachusetts, and there remaining until they determined, in 1888, to make their home in Naugatuck, Connecticut. Martin McDonough was a railway worker, associated over a period of many years with the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company.

Coming to Naugatuck when his family took up their residence in that Connecticut community, John Francis McDonough became a student in the public schools there. Completing his high school work, he entered the University of Michigan, taking the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1902. In the following year he was admitted to the bar of Connecticut, and at once he became engaged in an independent general practice of his profession in Waterbury, so continuing down to the present. His accomplishments have been numerous and varied, and he has earned the warm admiration and affection of all whose privilege it has been to be associated with him. He has taken a lively interest in the general affairs of his profession, notably through his work with the different bar associations. In 1935, he was president of the Waterbury Bar Association.

A Democrat in his political views, Mr. McDonough served as a probate judge in the City of Naugatuck from 1906 to 1912. He was elected in 1912 to be State Senator representing the Fourteenth District of Connecticut, and while so serving he was chairman of the judiciary committee and Senate leader. He was also chairman of the committee that passed on the workmen's compensation act for the State of Connecticut and ratified the national amendment to the Constitution calling for a popular vote for United States Senators.

His community and district have likewise gained much from Mr. McDonough's efforts in their behalf. He served, from 1914 to 1918, as clerk of the District Court of Waterbury. In 1920, he was warden of the Borough of Naugatuck. On July 1, 1937, he was appointed judge of the Police Court of the Borough of Naugatuck to serve a two-year term, being so named by Governor Wilbur Cross. Participating to the fullest extent in the fraternal life of his times, Mr. McDonough is charter member and past exalted ruler of the Naugatuck Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, No. 967. He was a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Knights of Columbus early in his career and continues active in both fraternities. He served during the World War as government appeal agent, being connected with State Board No. 6X. Mr. McDonough is a member of St. Francis' Roman Catholic Church, of Naugatuck.

John Francis McDonough married, on June 8, 1908, in Naugatuck, Connecticut, Josephine A. Brennan, daughter of Joseph and Margaret (Lannon) Brennan, of that place. Five children were born to them: 1. Estelle M. 2. John Francis, Jr. 3. Helen L. 4. Edward J. 5. Rosemary A. The McDonough family residence is situated in Naugatuck, Connecticut.

WILLIAM EDWARD THOMS—One of the leading lawyers of Waterbury, William Edward Thoms has made a distinctive contribution to the welfare of this district of Connecticut. He has earned a position of standing in his community and among its people, and is respected and honored in an ever widening circle of acquaintance.

Mr. Thoms was born December 22, 1870, in Plymouth, Connecticut, son of William P. and Fanny (Ould) Thoms. He was of Scottish origin on the paternal side of his house, and his mother came from Cornwall, England. Both parents arrived in Waterbury in the fifties of the last century. The father, a blacksmith by trade, died here in 1898.

Attending the public schools of both Plymouth and Waterbury, William Edward Thoms took his Bachelor of Arts degree at Yale University, New Haven, in 1894, being the salutatorian in his class. He then studied law privately. His first work was as a high school teacher in Waterbury, where he was so engaged in 1894. He was admitted to the Connecticut bar in 1896, and thereafter practiced law in Waterbury. Here he is now a member of the law firm of Carmody and Thoms, one of the most prominent in the State. This firm was organized in 1923, and in the years since that time has gone rapidly to the front in the profession.

Not only has Mr. Thoms given his powers and talents without stint to the work that has been placed in his charge, but he has also served the public in a variety of ways. From 1906 to 1910, he was mayor of Waterbury. A member of the Connecticut General Assembly from 1911 to 1913, he served as Democratic leader of the lower house in 1913. From 1913 to 1915, he was a judge of the City Court of Waterbury. He was a delegate to all the Democratic National Conventions from 1924 to 1932, inclusive, and as early as 1912, had so served. In 1928, he was chairman of the Connecticut delegation, and, in 1932, was a member of the important resolutions committee.

Maintaining close relationships with the profession of which he is so noted a representative, Mr. Thoms belongs to the New Haven County Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association and the American Bar Association. He is a prominent fraternalist, being affiliated with many bodies of the Free and Accepted Masons and holding the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, as well as membership in the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and being past grand master of the State in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, past grand chancellor of the Knights of Pythias in the State, and a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Foresters of America. He belongs to the Waterbury Club and the Yale Club, of New York.

On June 29, 1898, William Edward Thoms married Harriet Joy Dutton, of Waterbury, Connecticut, daughter of John and Henrietta (Tuthill) Dutton, of Waterbury. The children of this marriage have been: 1. Elinor Joy. 2. John Dutton. 3. Frederic. 4. Fanny, who is now Mrs. Fanny (Thoms) Burke. The Thoms residence is situated at No. 60 Fiske Street, Waterbury, and Mr. Thoms has his office at No. 111 West Main Street, this city.

FREDERICK WILLIAM PALOMBA—One of Waterbury's successful young lawyers, Frederick William Palomba has made a distinctive contribution to the community where he lives and carries on his work, serving in his professional capacity and at the same time supporting many projects of value to the civic welfare.

Mr. Palomba was born June 5, 1893, son of Nicola and Bettina (Pepere) Palomba, natives of Italy, who became residents of Waterbury, Connecticut, in 1888. A few years after the birth of the son, the father entered the banking business in Waterbury, becoming one of the noted financiers of the city.

The graded schools of Waterbury gave Frederick William Palomba his early formal education. When he completed his high school studies there, he entered Fordham College, New York City, there being graduated in 1915 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. He was actively interested in athletics while in college, excelling in football and track work and making an enviable record as a shot-put expert. In preparation for a professional career he matriculated at the Law School of Yale University, which in 1918 conferred upon him the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Meanwhile, the country became involved in the World War, whereupon Mr. Palomba joined the Navy and entered the Officers' Training School at Annapolis, Maryland, there being made an ensign in the United States Naval Aviation Service. First sent to the airport at Felixstowe, England, he next was dispatched to the Naval Air Base at San Trojan, France, and then to Porto Corsino, Italy. While in England and France, his squadron patrolled the North Sea. Following the signing of the armistice, he returned to Waterbury, Connecticut, here practicing law independently until 1926, after which he associated himself with the law firm of McDonough, Palomba and Scully, which developed an extensive and enviable clientele.

Mr. Palomba's thorough understanding of the principles of jurisprudence and his unusual powers of discrimination have aided him in the solution of intricate legal problems. Aside from his work as a lawyer, he has participated wholeheartedly in the business, civic and social life of Waterbury. From 1934 to 1936 he was chairman of the Republican Town Committee of the City of Waterbury, and during the 1935 session of the Connecticut State Senate he served as Senate Clerk. His political affiliation has been consistently with the Republican Party, and he has filled many important positions aside from those mentioned above. From 1919 to 1921, as a member of the General Assembly of Connecticut, he gave closest attention to the many vital questions that came up for settlement. In 1923 he was one of the organizers of the Unico Club National, a society of Italians or descendants of Italians organized to stimulate social service and an understanding of true social and civic values and to encourage high ethical standards in business and professional life. This became a national organization in 1930, and Mr. Palomba was its first president. In addition to all his other affiliations he was made, for 1937, the national judge advocate of the Italian-American World War Veterans.

Mr. Palomba is a member of the Sons of Italy, the Mattatuck Country Club, the legal fraternity known as the Book and Gavel, the Phi Alpha Delta Greek letter fraternity, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. His favorite recreation is golf, and he is fond of travel and all varieties of outdoor recreation.

On January 19, 1925, Frederick William Palomba married, in Waterbury, Connecticut, Medlise Charters, of this city, daughter of John F. and Nellie M. (Herbert) Charters, of this place. Two children were born to them: 1. Frederick William, Jr., born December 4, 1927. 2. Medlise, born June 21, 1933.

FRANK MARION ANASTASIO, D.D.S.—One of New Haven's leading professional men, Dr. Frank Marion Anastasio occupies a position of leadership and standing among the people of this city and the State.

Dr. Anastasio was born February 28, 1898, in Cleveland, Ohio, son of Giuliano and Maddalena (Bonito) Anastasio and member of a prominent family of Italian ancestry. His father was a wholesale fruit dealer, and died in November, 1898, in Cleveland. After his death his wife carried on the business for many years in Cleveland, and in 1905, she removed, taking her family with her, to New Haven, Connecticut.

The Cleveland public schools provided the earliest formal education of Frank Marion Anastasio, who later attended Booth Preparatory School, in New Haven, and Georgetown University, Washington, D. C. After studying at Georgetown in 1918 and 1919, he became a student at Tulane University, where he was graduated in 1922 with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. Completing his work at that New Orleans institution of learning, he came to New Haven to begin his active practice of dentistry, and here, since that time, he has been one of the community's prominent citizens and professional leaders. He has performed a particularly valuable service in his connection with the New Haven Board of Health as a dental surgeon in the clinics and the public schools.

Italian-American groups have found in Dr. Anastasio a skilful advisor on all sorts of problems, and he has for years held a place of leadership among this racial group. He has delved deeply into the history of the Italian nationality in America from the time of the earliest coming of Italians to this country, and he has constantly campaigned for the improvement of his people, urging them to help themselves from every standpoint, so preparing themselves to be sought after to fill offices and positions of public trust. Many of those with whom he has worked have not only measured up to the required standard, but have actually exceeded it.

Clubs and organized groups throughout the State of Connecticut are following an educational program inspired by him, knowing his one prominent theme to be more education, fitness for office and honesty in political and other dealings. The clubs whose existence he inspired have grown rapidly, and are representative of the very best in the young Italian-American effort for educational and political betterment. He still serves as the capable general of these organizations. He was president of the Unital Club, which is the Italian-American college and professional club of New Haven and which has a very high ranking. He is also president of the State Federation of Italian-American Democratic Clubs, which has a conservative membership of 10,000 people.

Dr. Anastasio is also active in the Connecticut Dental Association and the American Dental Association. He is a member of the Roman Catholic parish of St. John, in New Haven. In 1917, when the United States entered the World War, he went into the United States Army, preparing himself at the Officers' Reserve School of Training, Georgetown University. He now holds a first lieutenancy in the Officers' Reserve Corps for Connecticut.

On June 15, 1925, in New Haven, Connecticut, Dr. Frank Marion Anastasio married Julia Rose De Felice, daughter of Crescenzo and Concetta (Amato) De Felice. Two daughters were born to this marriage: 1. Frances Marion. 2. Madeline Rosemary.

JACOB G. IRVING—Distinctive accomplishment marked the career of Jacob G. Irving, for years one of the influential, able and successful citizens of the City of Danbury, where he was a prominent merchant, manufacturer, financier and civic leader.

Mr. Irving was born in Brooklyn, New York, August 1, 1856, the son of Joseph and Gertrude (Lermen) Irving, both of his birthplace. During his early childhood, and after the death of his mother, he came to Connecticut and settled at Miry Brook in the home of Levi K. Osborne. He received a general education in the public schools, attending when farm duties would permit. In time he went to Hayestown, where he was to live with Mr. and Mrs. Orlando Wildman until he came to Danbury. He was an ambitious and resourceful lad and started to make his own way in the world at an early age. Shortly after arriving in this community he secured a position in the haberdashery of Augustus Hoyt and began to acquire an experience that was to be invaluable to him later in life. He soon realized the value of thrift and saved a substantial amount out of his weekly remuneration at the Hoyt store. In time he had capital enough to open a small grocery store in partnership with the late William G. Randall. The establishment, which operated under the firm name of Randall and Irving, was located at the corner of Main and West streets in Danbury, the present site of the Pershing Building. Mr. Irving remained actively associated with this venture for two years and at the expiration of this period sold his interest to Mr. Randall. He then joined J. M. Ives and Company as a collector and several years later established himself in a wholesale hatter's supply business, and also manufactured awnings in a store located in the Armory Building on Library Place. Eventually he was compelled to retire from this work, due to ill health, and sold the business to Elbridge Gerry.

In March, 1899, after having completely recuperated, Mr. Irving resumed his business activities, building a silk mill in Danbury at the corner of Rose Hill and Highland Avenue. His was one of the plants that supplied the silk for the hat industry of this section until 1911, when Mr. Irving retired and it was taken over by the Imperial Silk Works. On the basis of his outstanding success as a business leader his sound judgment was sought, welcomed and respected by his colleagues. He was recognized as an expert in appraising real estate values, won distinction as a financier, serving as a member of the board of directors of the Danbury Savings Bank for many years and also achieved fame for the work he accomplished in several receivership cases, notably those involving the Ives-Andrews Company and the Brainard and Wilson Silver Plate Company. In each instance he was appointed receiver and won high praise from the creditors and public alike for the efficient and impartial manner in which he handled the affairs of the aforementioned concerns and the satisfactory manner in which he disposed of the problems confronting each.

Throughout his life Mr. Irving was an intensely public spirited citizen. His generous and useful contributions to the affairs of his surroundings made him one of the greatest benefactors of his generation. He took a live interest in politics, was a leader in the local Republican organization, served three terms as a member of the board of aldermen in Danbury and at one time was his party's nominee for mayor but was not elected to the office. His civic obligations always impressed him, even to the extent of improving the physical aspects of his community. A graphic example of this fact is to be found in the improvement he wrought shortly after he purchased the Rose Hill site from the town school board. This property had been neglected and stood as an ugly spot. It was formerly occupied by the old Rose Hill school, a deserted and dilapidated building. Directly after acquiring this plot, Mr. Irving had the school house removed. In its place, rose three attractive one family dwellings, the entire plot enclosed by a neat hedge. Thus a place that had marred the landscape became a landmark of beauty. On the opposite corner the lot was graded, shrubbery was planted, an iron fence erected completely around the property. The original house has been enlarged and is now about eighty-two years old. It was built by the parents of Mrs. Irving. Other civic interests that enjoyed Mr. Irving's services included the Children's Home, for which he served as president, and the Good Roads Association of Connecticut, of which he was a member.

Mr. Irving fraternized with the Union Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of which he was past master. He also belonged to the Eureka Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; the Crusader Commandery, Knights Templar; and the Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. In addition to these fraternal affiliations, he was also a member of the Ben Miller Council of the Order United American Mechanics. In his religious convictions he was an active member of the Methodist Episcopal Church which he had joined at sixteen years of age and for which he served as a trustee, a member of the supply and pulpit committees, and librarian. Mr. Irving enjoyed sports of all types and during his youth is said to have been one of the first to ride a bicycle in Danbury. He became one of the earliest and most ardent enthusiasts of this sport and was a leader in the local bicycle club.

On September 3, 1879, at Danbury, Mr. Irving married Ella Allstadt, daughter of Abraham and Mary Esther (Stone) Allstadt. Her father came to this country from Neueisenberg, Germany, and settled in Danbury about 1853.

In Mr. Irving's passing the City of Danbury lost one of its finest and most able citizens, a man whose record of achievement amply demonstrates the unselfish and useful philosophy he pursued throughout his long and distinguished life. He was a leader in every meaning of the term, and richly merits the tributes that have been paid to his memory.

ANDREW BERG—Vice-president of Coulter and McKenzie Company of Bridgeport, Andrew Berg is not only the leading figure in the community's organizations of Swedish-born citizens but is also one of Bridgeport's outstanding men, having for more than half a century played an important part in the industrial development of the community.

Andrew Berg was born in Sweden, at Fageras in Varmland, September 24, 1857, son of Jonas Abrahamson, who was a carriage builder and a manufacturer of agricultural implements. He received his education in the schools of his native community. Andrew Berg devoted himself to his father's shop, and by 1882 he was promoted to be a foreman in an organized shop. There Mr. Berg made the acquaintance of A. H. Nilson, who migrated to America in 1880 and established himself in Bridgeport as the proprietor of the Nilson Machine Company.

Mr. Nilson, enthused over the opportunities which Bridgeport offered to an ambitious young mechanic, wrote home to Mr. Berg and induced the young man to come to America. Arriving in Bridgeport in 1882, Mr. Berg found employment as a mechanic with James Patterson at the plant of the Bridgeport Organ Company but, after some two years in this capacity, Andrew Berg went with Thomas Coulter and Hector McKenzie, who had established a foundry and a general machine shop, the nucleus of the present great enterprise which transacts business in every section of the world. Shortly, Mr. Berg was made the master mechanic for the firm of Coulter and McKenzie and finally, he reached his present position as vice-president of the Company, a position which he has occupied for many years, having been responsible during that time for many millions of dollars worth of machines, special orders for the most part, which are distributed in all important manufacturing centers throughout the civilized world. An example of Mr. Berg's early work is to be seen in the hook and eye industry. Back in Sweden, Mr. Berg had amused himself by fashioning these dress-making accessories for his mother by hand out of wire with a pair of pliers. When he came to America he found that a need existed for a machine which would turn out the bits of twisted metal at a rapid rate. F. W. Follansbee had invented a machine which would produce forty hooks and eyes a minute and James Coulter had improved the design until the machine manufactured one hundred and fifty a minute. But, still, manufacturers were not content; production was too slow. So, one of Mr. Berg's first important assignments as master mechanic for Coulter and McKenzie was the perfection of this hook and eye machine. When he completed his task, the machine was capable of turning out from five hundred to seven hundred of the gadgets a minute, the number depending upon the pattern and the weight of the wire used.

Another development with which Mr. Berg was closely associated was the electrification of Bridgeport. This association began in the early days of the city, many years before the present incandescent lights were originated. Early in the eighties, a Mr. Ball contracted to supply a carbon electric arc lamp, as an experiment, for the modernization of the department store of D. M. Read Company. Mr. Ball organized a lighting company to take over the contract and, purchasing dynamos and other equipment, employed the firm of Coulter and McKenzie to operate the machines and service the arc lights—which at that time consumed sticks of carbon and required considerable manual attention. Mr. Berg was assigned to take charge of engine and boiler operation and thus he became a pioneer of the electrification of Bridgeport, playing his part in the revolution which not only gave modern lighting to the City but also largely displaced steam as the means of motive power, particularly for the smaller types of machines and lighter classifications of manufacture. Side by side with this vital interest in the industrial development of Bridgeport, Mr. Berg has played his share in helping it develop from a small municipality of thirty-five thousand, as it was in the early eighties, to its present population of one hundred and fifty thousand. In this Mr. Berg has been particularly interested in fostering the welfare of his fellow countrymen, who, only a handful at the time Mr. Berg arrived, now form one of the most important groups of foreign-born citizens in Bridgeport. Concerned with religious welfare, Mr. Berg many years ago organized the Swedish Baptist Church, a work in which he was aided by his friendships with many of the leading men of Bridgeport, including his very close friend, P. T. Barnum, who gave the church thirteen hundred dollars. Also concerned with the social life of his fellow countrymen, who like himself were making their way in a new world, he organized and helped institute the Monitor Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, an organization which he has served as Past Noble Grand. Other activities of Mr. Berg's include membership on the executive committee of the John Ericson Republican League and leadership in the affairs of the Swedish Welfare Association of Bridgeport.

Andrew Berg has been twice married: the first Mrs. Berg was a native of Karlstad, Sweden; the second, of Stockholm, Sweden. Mr. Berg is the father of eight children and has nine grand-children and two great-grand-children.

MRS. MARJORIE FULLER (MONSON) LEWIS— The constructive contributions Mrs. Marjorie Fuller (Monson) Lewis has made to the civic, cultural, religious, charitable and social life of the City of New Haven, have gone to establish her among the outstanding women leaders of the State of Connecticut. For twenty years she has worked indefatigably for the betterment of her native community and through her interest and enthusiasm has been chosen for numerous important positions, including that as a member of the Board of Aldermen.

Mrs. Lewis (née Monson) was born in New Haven, Connecticut, September 8, 1890, the daughter of William Holcomb and Annie Wright (Page) Monson, both of old and distinguished Connecticut families. She received the early part of her general education in the public and private schools of this city and after being graduated from the Hillhouse High School in 1907, attended the Misses Johnstone's School on Whitney Avenue, where she took a Junior College course for two years, specializing in music, art and social service studies. Later she supplemented this work at Yale in the Department of Education. In the years that followed she did social service work and taught school, being a member of the faculty of the Northfield (Massachusetts) Summer School of Religion. She taught at the Wilson College Summer School in Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, and taught religious education courses in the New Haven public and religious schools.

An ardent champion for civic betterment, Mrs. Lewis has been steadfast to the purpose of bettering social conditions, approaching the problem in an intelligent and realistic manner which has netted results and brought her the deep gratification of the public as a whole. She has made her voice heard and won the respect of social, civic and business leaders. Evidence of her popularity and ability is to be found in the fact that she was the second woman to be elected a member of the New Haven Board of Aldermen, a body with which she was to serve two terms, during which time she became an authority on laws and ordinances affecting social questions. Mrs. Lewis also served two terms as a member of the Recreation Board and Board of Charities on the latter of which she now is serving.

Practically every other interest of a social nature is centered around organizations designed to better the general welfare. She has served as chairman of the Provisional Training Course of the New Haven Junior League and serves on the National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association, also being active in the local organization. She is a member of the Board of the Visiting Nurses' Association, the local Board of Day Nurseries, is president of the New Haven Council of Social Agencies, the State Council of Congregational Churches, for which she also serves as a member of the executive board, and is a member of the board of directors of the Community Chest.

The late depression put the existing social service and relief agencies to a test. Their ability to cope with unprecedented circumstances can largely be attributed to leaders in the work, such as Mrs. Lewis. As Commissioner of the local Board of Charities she has established an enviable record, based on long and practical experience. She is described as a woman of rare ability and charm, who administers her duties with a level head and a big heart.

Mrs. Lewis is a member of the New Haven Historical Society and formerly associated with the local chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She worships at the Cold Spring Street Congregational Church of the Redeemer, in which she is a member of the Educational Committee and a teacher in the Church school.

On October 9, 1912, at New Haven, Marjorie Fuller Monson was united in marriage with Lansing Lewis, son of George W. and Lillian Lewis, and member of an old and distinguished family in New York State. Mr. Lewis, who died in 1923, was a prominent and successful business man here for many years, being a member of the firm of Lewis-Maycock, morticians, and the oldest establishment of its type, from the point of service, in the State.

LEONARD H. GAULT—In a long and active career Leonard H. Gault engaged in business enterprises in Westport, Connecticut, that were among the oldest, in point of establishment, in the city. Few residents can remember when his father started the trucking business which was the foundation of the Gault Company, but all realize the importance of the careers of three generations to the life of the community in business and in civic development.

The parents of Leonard H. Gault were Robert and Katherine (Kirk) Gault. His father, born in Ireland, was brought to the United States when he was about eleven or twelve years old. He was still a youth when he initiated a hauling business with a single horse and wagon. He was also engaged in agriculture. His son, Leonard H., was born in Westport, July 26, 1862. Growing up on his father's farm, he attended local schools and began an education to which he added throughout his years. He remained on the home place until 1891, when, with his brother, he founded Gault Brothers, a name which was associated with the trucking business until 1932, when the concern was incorporated under the trade title of L. H. Gault and Son. The single horse and wagon of his father at one time, became forty horses and all kinds of vehicles. As automotive power came into use the equipment of the company was motorized and the Gault trucks have long been a familiar feature of road traffic and the hauling business. His brother, John K., died in 1935.

Leonard H. Gault expanded his enterprises. The Robert Coley coal business was purchased. For a time he was engaged in the lumber business with Hubbell Hull, later buying complete control. He also secured the Karm terminal in Saugatuck, Connecticut, from Archibald McNeil. These various interests were combined and are now parts of L. H. Gault and Son, which are operated by the family. The older man was president of the corporation and the son was vice-president.

During the seventy-four years that Mr. Gault dwelt in Westport he not only became one of its familiar and beloved personages, but in quiet, yet forceful ways, did a great deal to promote the progress and betterment of the place. He was a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary Club. Long ago he served as secretary and member of the Volunteer Fire Department. Fraternally, Mr. Gault was affiliated with Aspectuck Lodge, Knights of Pythias. He was a vestryman of the Holy Trinity Church. He was a member of the building committee in charge of the construction of the new Westport High School unit at the time of his demise.

On April 28, 1897, Leonard H. Gault married Julia May Wheeler, daughter of Edward and Eleanor W. (Gray) Wheeler, and their son, Howard W., is the present head of L. H. Gault and Son, of previous mention. Born March 22, 1898, he was graduated from the Westport High School, and since that time has been associated in business with his father. He married Georgianna Richards Taylor, and they have two children: a son, William Leonard; and a daughter, Julia.

Leonard H. Gault had entered the seventy-fifth year of his eminently useful life when he died on September 5, 1936, in the Bridgeport Hospital. His activities had well typified the progressive spirit of the city with which they were identified, and his passing was widely regretted. He had been interested in the noblest things in life, and was a wise, thoughtful, considerate person, generous to all, a man who left the world the better for his character and achievements.

WILLIAM MacROBBIE McKENZIE—The marriage, in 1924, of William MacRobbie McKenzie, of Newtown, Connecticut, and Annie Louisa Sanders, marked the union of a noted industrialist and inventor of Scotch parentage to the bearer of one of the oldest names in New England annals, whose ancestry goes back to the settlement of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. The stories of both contain elements of interest and importance to students of Connecticut history and people.

William MacRobbie McKenzie was born in Aberdeen, Scotland, February 19, 1867, son of James and Mary (Duncan) McKenzie, his father being a contractor and builder in the old country. The son was given the advantages of a sound education in Scotland before he came to the United States, in 1885, and settled in Buffalo, New York. Of a mechanical temperament, he took up the study of mechanical drawing and related subjects in the night schools while making a livelihood. During his early years in America, he learned the machinist's and tool-maker's trades, and was connected with large firms in Buffalo for about fourteen years.

In 1899, Mr. McKenzie went to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he took charge of a mechanical department of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company. Five and a half years later he joined the organization of the National Cash Register Company, of Dayton, Ohio, where he was head of the automatic screw department for a year. At the beginning of the present century he went with the Jones Speedometer Company, at New Rochelle, New York, where he was master mechanic for four and a half years. For the following three and a half years, Mr. McKenzie was superintendent of the Hoffecker Speedometer Company, of Boston, Massachusetts. In the meanwhile, he had been making improvements on the mechanisms with which he worked, but had not patented any of these nor profited to any large extent. While in Boston, and immediately after, Mr. McKenzie perfected some of the inventions which had lain fallow in his mind, and secured patents. He withdrew from the Massachusetts company to place these on the market, more particularly a chip separator of novel construction and use. Later he became associated once more with the Jones Speedometer Company, as production manager, and when this concern became a part of the large Johns-Manville corporation, he was promoted to general manager and elected vice-president. After four and a half years, Mr. McKenzie accepted the superintendency of the Hill Independent Stamp Company, of Germantown, Pennsylvania, remaining for about a year, when he came to Stamford, Connecticut, to be with the Liberty Electric Company. Later he resigned and returned to New Rochelle and in 1933, he removed to Newtown, Connecticut, where he has since been busy with the development of his patented devices and machines, and directing their sale throughout the country. Mr. McKenzie has allied himself with Newtown life and activities, serving as treasurer of the Chamber of Commerce; as member of Troop Committee for the Boy Scouts in Newtown; and as one of the governors of the Newtown Country Club. In 1935, he was chairman of the Newtown Tercentennial Committee. His religious affiliations are with the Trinity Episcopal Church, of which he is a vestryman.

William MacRobbie McKenzie married (first), on June 26, 1893, Florence Emily Jones, and they were the parents of a son, Arthur Douglas, born December 18, 1898. After receiving his elementary education in various schools, he was graduated from the Los Angeles, California, High School, and attended the University of Southern California for a year, and New York University for four years, being graduated as a Public Accountant. Arthur Douglas McKenzie married Ida Biddle, in September, 1924, and they have a son, Edward William McKenzie, born July 19, 1925.

At St. Paul's Church, New Rochelle, New York, on November 22, 1924, Mr. McKenzie married (second) Annie Louisa Sanders, born in Sudbury, Massachusetts, June 25, 1882, daughter of Samuel Nelson and Laurilla (Hunt) Sanders, of whom further. Mrs. McKenzie, a graduate from Tufts College, in 1904, taught in several Massachusetts schools before coming to New Rochelle, New York, as teacher of Natural Sciences, later becoming Dean of Girls of the New Rochelle High School, a post she filled with noteworthy abilities for the eight years prior to her marriage. For one of these years she was president of the Westchester County, New York, Teachers' Association.

Mrs. McKenzie majored in English and science in Tufts, and specialized in the latter subject as an educator. During the past decade she has taken an increasingly active part in educational, club and cultural affairs and contributed importantly to many phases of local activities. She was Nature Councillor of the Stamford Council of Girl Scouts; was a member of the Girl Scouts Council, of New Rochelle, and attended the International Girl Scouts Conference when it was held at Briarcliff, New York. She is a member of the Newtown Study Group and was vice-president from Fairfield County to the Connecticut State Nature League. Entomology has been a favorite study and the collection of insects a hobby. There is on exhibition in the C. H. Booth Library, Newtown, one of her collections which includes more than five hundred insects of local origin. Mrs. McKenzie is a popular lecturer on travel subjects, scientific topics and poetry, is prominently affiliated with the Study Club, the Garden Club, Newtown Country Club, and is active in the religious and humanitarian work of Trinity Church. As a descendant of a Mayflower Pilgrim she is acceptable for membership in the Mayflower Society. She is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, with fourteen Revolutionary ancestors on her mother's side. She has done a great deal of genealogical research. From her compilation of records is taken the following condensed outline of paternal and maternal lines extending back to the American progenitors of the Sanders and Hunt families. As already mentioned, Mrs. McKenzie is the daughter of Samuel Nelson Sanders, who was born at Port Maitland, Yarmouth County, Nova Scotia, December 3, 1847, and who died on January 23, 1932; and of Laurilla Hunt, born May 16, 1854, at Weston, Massachusetts, who died February 8, 1922. Her parents were married on January 19, 1876. The father of Samuel Nelson Sanders was:

Nathaniel Sanders, born in Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, February 15, 1800, died June 24, 1892. In 1825, he married Mary Anne Kelly. He was the son of Nathaniel Sanders, born April 18, 1768; married, June 19, 1794, Lydia Rogers, who was born May 4, 1771. Nathaniel Sanders was a son of Joseph Sanders who was born at Haverhill, Massachusetts, June 16, 1724; married, at Salem, New Hampshire, January 6, 1750, Sarah Hill, born in 1728, who died November 20, 1802. He died November 7, 1802. Joseph Sanders, a United Empire Loyalist, went from Haverhill, Massachusetts, to Yarmouth.

Henry Sanders, father of Joseph, born August 6, 1688, married, about 1710, Mary Mitchell, born July 29, 1687. James Sanders, father of Henry, was born July 23, 1667; married, October 20, 1687, Hannah Tewksbury, born September 1, 1662, at Newbury, and died at Haverhill, September 24, 1746. James Sanders lived at Haverhill and Boxford, and died December 9, 1721. His father, Captain John Sanders, was baptized September 1, 1640, and died June 9, 1694. He married, November 5, 1661, Hannah Pickman, born in 1642, and who died March 18, 1706. His father, Lieutenant John Sanders, baptized March 27, 1613, died in October, 1643. He married in 1636, Priscilla Grafton.

John Sanders (of Weeke), father of Lieutenant John Sanders, the progenitor of the family in the United States, came with his father, Captain Henry Sandys (the original spelling of the name), from Wiltshire, England, to Salem, Massachusetts, and later lived at Rowley and Boxford. Captain Henry was a son of Sir Edwin Sandys, of England, and Margaret (Emeleigh) Sandys, daughter of John Emeleigh, of Devonshire. Sir Edwin Sandys died in 1629. His father was Dr. Sandys, and his mother, Cecelia, daughter of Thomas Wilford of Cranbrook, Kent. Dr. Sandys' father was George Sandys, a citizen of London, who married Margaret, daughter of John Dixon. George Sandys was son of William of Hawkeshead, and Margaret, daughter of William Rawson. William of Hawkeshead was son of William Sandys, grandson of John Sandys, of Furnace Falls, Lancashire, and great-grandson of Robert, of St. Briers in Cumberland, 1339.

John Sanders, father of Lieutenant John Sanders, married, as his second wife, February 4, 1610, Hester Rolfe, who died before 1670. John Sanders came to the Weymouth Colony, of which he had charge, but returned to England. On July 6, 1625, he lived in Salisbury, Massachusetts, where his will was probated August 3, 1670. He made several voyages to the Virginia settlements in command of his ship, returning to the New England Colony on July 26, 1635.

(The Hunt Line.)

Horatio Hunt, born March 23, 1828, died April 1, 1901, at Sudbury, Massachusetts. On July 4, 1853, he married Eliza Ann Witherell, born August 22, 1836, and who died November 1, 1923. His father, Aaron Hunt, born February 9, 1797, married, April 4, 1819, Lois Hosmer, born April 7, 1795, died October 7, 1885. The following progenitors of Lois Hosmer fought in the American Army some time during the Revolutionary War: Her great-grandfather, Captain Samuel Davis, born in 1711, died in 1800; her paternal grandfather, Ephraim Hosmer, born November 22, 1722, died March 17, 1811; her maternal grandfather, Stephen Hosmer, born February 1, 1740, died March 28, 1807; her father, Samuel Hosmer, born September 11, 1767, died March 17, 1811. William Hunt, father of Aaron Hunt, born

October 7, 1775, died at Sudbury, Massachusetts, November 16, 1851. On September 20, 1796, he married Thankful Wheeler, daughter of Captain Asahel Wheeler, a Revolutionary War soldier, who was born January 17, 1779, died December 9, 1808. Her grandfather, Captain Aaron Haynes, born December 25, 1729, buried January 25, 1783; he served in the Revolutionary War. William Hunt, father of William Hunt, was born May 7, 1753, and died September 18, 1845. He served in the Revolutionary War. In May, 1771, he married Mary Plympton, daughter of Deacon Thomas Plympton, a Revolutionary soldier. She was born September 26, 1752, and died December 31, 1842. William Hunt, father of William, born April 3, 1726, died April 4, 1802, in Sudbury, Massachusetts. He served in the War of the Revolution. In January, 1750, he married Mary Wheeler, daughter of Lieutenant Elisha Wheeler, a Revolutionary War soldier. This Elisha Wheeler was son of Uriah, son of Obadiah and Elizabeth (White) Wheeler, daughter of Resolved, son of William White, the Mayflower Pilgrim. Mary (Wheeler) Hunt, was born February 1, 1733, and died June 13, 1811. Isaac Hunt, father of William Hunt, born in 1700, died August 22, 1781. He married, December 8, 1721, Martha Goodenow, born May 22, 1701. His father, Isaac Hunt, born November 18, 1675, married, April 26, 1698, Mary Willard, born in 1680, who died in 1722. Isaac Hunt died at Concord, Massachusetts, December 6, 1717. His father, Isaac Hunt, born in 1647, died in Concord, Massachusetts, December 12, 1680. He married, May 14, 1667, Mary Stone, born in 1648, died December 24, 1698.

William Hunt, father of Isaac Hunt, the American progenitor of the Hunt family in America, born in England, January 27, 1605, was son of Robert Hunt, of Halifax, Yorkshire, England. He married, in England, Elizabeth Best, who died December 27, 1661. He was one of the first settlers of Concord, and was made freeman on June 2, 1641. He lived in Concord and Marlborough, Massachusetts, and died in October, 1667.

(Witherell, Haynes and Carr Lines.)

Eliza Ann Witherell was a daughter of Benjamin Clemens Witherell, born April 13, 1814, died June 8, 1886, and Anna (Haynes) Witherell, born May 27, 1814, died April 19, 1901, married, on November 4, 1835. Benjamin Clemens was a son of Josiah Witherell, who was born June 20, 1776, died May 30, 1823, married, March 12, 1800, Sarah or Sally Clemens, who was born about 1779, died November 15, 1841. His father, Josiah Witherell, born March 12, 1754, died April 9, 1840, married Lydia. He served in the Revolutionary War.

Anna Haynes, wife of Benjamin Clemens Witherell, was daughter of Luke Haynes, who was born June 22, 1762, died November 27, 1826, married, March 21, 1798, in Sudbury, Massachusetts, to Lydia Carr. His father, Charles Haynes, born September 7, 1736, died October 22, 1806, married, May 1, 1759, to Elizabeth Winn, born December 24, 1736, died June 4, 1822. Charles Haynes lived in Billerica and Sudbury, Massachusetts. He served in the Revolutionary War.

Lydia Carr, wife of Luke Haynes, born September 1, 1771, died September 17, 1842, was daughter of Thomas Carr, born December 20, 1742, died June 14, 1807, married, March, 1767, Abigail Lovering. Thomas Carr served in the Revolutionary War. His wife, Abigail Lovering, born November 5, 1748, died November 5, 1840, was daughter of Samuel Lovering. He was born December 5, 1715, died February, 1789, married, November 8, 1739, Mary Leland. Samuel Lovering lived in Holliston, and was a Revolutionary War soldier.

WALDO STILES BLAKESLEE—Like his distinguished forebears, who are listed among the earliest settlers of the State of Connecticut, Waldo Stiles Blakeslee has assumed an outstanding place in the social, civic and business life of his surroundings, representing the town in the House and the Senate in the district, and occupying the offices of town clerk and tax collector in North Haven for the past twenty years.

Waldo Stiles Blakeslee was born at North Haven, June 22, 1888, the son of John Henry and Etta Augusta (Stiles) Blakeslee, also the parents of Ruby. His father, who was born in 1864, and died in 1919, was the son of Zerah and Elizabeth (Tuttle) Blakeslee. In accordance with family tradition he served his community with distinction, occupying the office of town clerk in North Haven for thirty years and representing the town in the State Legislature during the sessions of 1911 and 1913. His wife, Etta Augusta (Stiles) Blakeslee, survives. The Blakeslee family trace their American ancestry to Samuel Blakesley (as the name was originally spelled), who emigrated to this country from England during the early part of the seventeenth century and is recorded to have settled in Guilford, Connecticut, about 1650, where he became a planter.

Waldo I. Blakeslee

He married Hannah Potter, daughter of John and Elizabeth Potter. Descent is traced through their son, Ebenezer, who was born July 17, 1664, married Hannah, and died September 24, 1735. Ebenezer lived in North Haven throughout his life where he was prominent in religious affairs, first as a member of the Congregational Church and later of the Episcopal Church. The lineage is traced from this point through his son Abraham, who was born December 15, 1695, married March 15, 1721-22, Elizabeth Cooper of New Haven, and died January 2, 1776. He is thought to have been a shoemaker by trade, as well as a farmer. Abraham and Elizabeth (Cooper) Blakesley were the parents of seven children, among them Abraham, who was born October 22, 1727, and married Abigail. He held the commission of captain of a military company in the second regiment. He was complained of before the General Assembly, in March, 1775, for "being disaffected to this Government," and was relieved of his command. This is the first record found of a reprimand for being loyal to the king. He was the father of Zophar, who was born January 23, 1803, died February 15, 1875, and married Sarah Brockett. They were the parents of Zerah, grandfather of Waldo Blakeslee.

Mr. Blakeslee attended the public schools until he was eighteen years of age, at which time he began his career as a bookkeeper and accountant in New Haven, where he worked for four years. At the expiration of this period he returned to North Haven to assume the offices of town clerk and tax collector which he has since occupied with distinction and success. He served his first term as a member of the House of Representatives in 1929, and two years later was elected to the State Senate on the basis of his public spirit and legislative accomplishments. In 1931 he returned to the lower house and was to serve with this body during the sessions of 1933, 1935 and 1937. The extent of his prominence as a legislator is further evidenced by the fact that during the last three sessions he occupied the post of chairman of the appropriations committee.

Throughout his distinguished career he has been widely known in a social capacity, holding membership in the Union League Club of New Haven, and fraternizing with the Order of Free and Accepted Masons, in which he holds the thirty-second degree, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, and is a member of the Shrine. He also is a member of the board of trustees of the Wallingford Lodge, No. 1365, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, belongs to the Elks Club and holds membership in the Order of Jesters. In his religious convictions he worships at St. John's Episcopal Church of North Haven.

On December 5, 1914, at Meriden, Mr. Blakeslee married Fannie A. Schleiter, daughter of William E. and Elizabeth (Turner) Schleiter. Mr. and Mrs. Blakeslee are the parents of two children: 1. John William, born February 15, 1917, now a student at the University of Virginia. 2. Bryant Waldo, born March 27, 1921, enrolled at the University of Pennsylvania.

HOWARD R. BRISCOE—Prominent in the real estate business of Fairfield County is Howard R. Briscoe, who has operated in his native community of Bethel for over twenty years specializing exclusively in country properties.

As a member of an old and distinguished Connecticut family he traces his ancestry in this State to Nathaniel Briscoe, an early settler of Milford, who was born in 1629 and married Mary Camp in 1672. The lineage is traced through their son James, born in 1673; through his son Nathaniel, a large landowner in Newtown whose homestead was located on the present site of the Newtown Cemetery. He was a selectman from 1743 to 1777, and is credited with having donated the bell to the Congregational Church in Newtown with Captain Amos Botsford. He married Eunice Hurd Johnson of Newtown and his son Nathaniel married (first) Hannah Leach, by whom he became the father of two daughters: 1. Susan. 2. Mary. He married (second) Sally Raymond. Their son Bradley D., married Mary C. Glover and they were the parents of the following children: 1. Ella, who married Walter B. Welton. 2. Esther, who married Ormel Morgan. 3. Alfred, now eighty-five years of age, who during his active life engaged in farming in Bethel and is now residing there with his son, whose name heads this review. He married Carrie Tomlinson and they were the parents of the following children: 1. Florence, who married F. S. Wood of Fairfield County. 2. Howard R., of whom further.

Howard R. Briscoe was born in Newtown, May 21, 1879, and received a general education in the public schools of his native community. After completing his high school studies he worked on the family farm for a time and later entered the butcher business. Eventually he became identified with the State Highway Department and in 1914 began his activities in the real estate business, handling this work in conjunction with his other duties. Approximately eight years later the success of his ventures in the latter activity compelled him to devote his entire time to it. Since that period he has been trading exclusively in country properties and become recognized as one of the most prominent men in this phase of the business.

Mr. Briscoe married Emma E. Sherman, born May 21, 1879, in New York, educated in the New York schools and Miss Black's Boarding School, New Milford, Connecticut, and is now an active figure in the social and civic affairs of Bethel. Mrs. Briscoe is a direct descendant of General Sherman. Mr. and Mrs. Briscoe are the parents of two children: 1. Helen Ruth, married to Allen Hillman, and they have one son, Alfred Gaylord, born February 15, 1935. 2. Harold Russell, who married Helen L. Boddie, of Cleveland, Ohio, and is now the father of two children: i. Howard Sherman, born July 5, 1929. ii. Carrie Louise, born July 3, 1936.

THE TWICHELL FAMILY—The Twichell family was established in America by Joseph Twichell, who settled in Dorchester in 1633, and died September 13, 1657. He passed away without male issue and the Twichells in America are descended from his younger brother, Benjamin Twichell, who with Timothy Wales presented inventory of his estate on December 26, 1657.

(I) Benjamin Twichell, brother of Joseph Twichell, originally settled in Dorchester and later at Medfield, where he was known to have been as early as 1663. He married Mary Riggs and among their eight children the lineage is traced through their son Abiel, of whom further.

(II) Abiel, son of Benjamin Twichell, was born in Medfield, November 1, 1663, and was the father of Benoni, of whom further.

(III) Benoni, born in Medfield, said to have been left an orphan during childhood, was adopted by his uncle, John Rocket, and later settled in Oxford where he and his cousin, Joseph Rocket, settled on adjoining lots. He was a grantee of land, thought to have been deeded to him in recognition of his father and grandfather's services during the Indian War. Evidence that he was living in Oxford in 1745 is to be found in a deed he made granting land to his children should he not return from the Cape Breton expedition. He did return, however, and became one of the outstanding civic leaders of his surroundings. In 1749 he was employed by the town of Oxford to divide the remaining common land. He had served here as a selectman from 1713-14; town clerk, 1714; constable, and was chosen repeatedly as town moderator and selectman until 1725. On April 18, 1705, he married Hannah Allen and they were the parents of Joseph, of whom further.

(IV) Joseph, son of Benoni Twichell, who was born about 1720, and removed to Southington, Connecticut, about 1767, died there February, 1776. He married Elizabeth Thompson of Derby, and they were the parents of Isaac, mentioned below.

(V) Isaac, son of Joseph Twichell, was born in 1741, and died February 10, 1776. In January, 1767-68, he married (first) Deborah Alcox, and the family removed to Farmingbury in the town of Southington, where his wife, who passed away January 18, 1831, at the age of eighty-nine years, married (second) Wait Hitchkiss. The Twichell line is carried from this point through Joseph, of whom further.

(VI) Joseph (2), son of Isaac Twichell, was born in Southington, Connecticut, July 15, 1769, and died March 14, 1824. He lived in Wolcott, where he was partner in a prominent mercantile establishment which he operated in conjunction with Stoddard Whitman until his retirement during the economic depression of 1820. On April 16, 1793, Joseph married (first) Electa Hopkins, who died January 13, 1803. On February 19, 1804, he married (second) Phoebe Hall Atkins. Descent is traced through his son Edward, mentioned below.

(VII) Edward, son of Joseph and Phoebe Hall (Atkins) Twichell, was born in Wolcott, Connecticut, September 5, 1810, and died April 16, 1863. After limited schooling he entered the tanning business which he was to pursue for the remainder of his life, becoming a partner in H. D. Smith & Company, which manufactured carriage hardware. He was deacon and Sunday School Superintendent for the Congregational Church in Southington. On September 3, 1835, Edward married (first) Selina D. Carter of Wolcott, who died April 7, 1849. He married (second) May 16, 1850, Jane Walkley. By his two marriages he became the father of nine children, among them Joseph Hopkins, of whom further.

(VIII) The Rev. Joseph Hopkins Twichell, son of Edward and Selina D. (Carter) Twichell, was born May 27, 1838, at Southington. After a general education at the Lewis Academy in Southington, he entered Yale University, from which he was graduated in 1859, after which he enrolled at the Union Theological Seminary in New York City, where he began his ministerial training. His studies were to be interrupted with the outbreak of the Civil War. He retired from the Seminary to become chaplain of the Seventy-first Regiment, New York State Volunteers, joining this unit on April 25, 1861, and serving until July 30, 1864. Upon resuming civilian life he continued his theological studies at Andover Seminary. In 1865 he was called to the pastorate of the then new Asylum Hill Congregational Church of Hartford, being installed on December thirteen, of that year. He continued to serve in this capacity for over half a century, being in the active pastorate for forty-six years and serving as pastor emeritus until his death in 1918. The Rev. Twichell attained distinction as an author, writing several books, among them John Winthrop, a biography in "Makers of America" series which was published in 1891, by Dodd, Mead & Company. He also was editor of a work entitled, "Some Old Puritan Love Letters," in 1893. He was made a fellow of Yale University in 1874, where as a student he had been a member of the crew, the Psi Upsilon fraternity and the Scroll and Key honorary society. He was active in the social and civic affairs of Hartford. On November 1, 1865, the Rev. Joseph Hopkins Twichell married Julia Harmony Cushman of Orange, New Jersey, who was born August 9, 1843, and died April 24, 1910. She was the daughter of David and Julia M. (Curtis) Cushman. The Rev. Twichell and Mrs. Twichell became the parents of nine children: 1. Edward Carrington, born in 1867, died in 1933. 2. Julia Curtis, born in 1868, married Howard Ogden Wood of Brooklyn, New York, and is the mother of two children: i. Helen Ogden, married to August Julian Cordier and they have one daughter, Helen. ii. Howard Ogden, Jr., who is married to Caryl Hackstaff of New York, and the father of two children: Howard Ogden, 3rd, and Caryl. 3. Susan Lee, born in 1871, died in 1922. 4. David Cushman, born October 9, 1874, died 1924. He married Ella Cooke of Baltimore, Maryland. 5. Harmony, who was born in 1876, married Charles Edward Ives of West Redding, Connecticut, and is the mother of one daughter, Edith. 6. Burton Parker, born in 1878, married Catharine Pratt of Brooklyn, New York, and they have four children: David Cushman, Margaret, Harmony and Charles Pratt. 7. Sarah Dunham, born in 1882. 8. Joseph Hooker, born in 1883, married Esther Schoonmaker of Montclair, New Jersey. 9. Louise Hopkins, born in 1884, married John R. Hall of New York and they have four children: Joseph Twichell, Jesse Angell, Deborah Cushman and Anne Peyton.

CHARLES EDWARD IVES—To the public Charles Edward Ives is an American composer of the twentieth century. The term American should be qualified to mean exactly what it implies, for he has been the first to make successful use of the national idiom. His compositions, which have won world-wide recognition, have captured the Yankee spirit, portraying the independence, the tang, the courage, of his fellows. They have done more; they have revealed Mr. Ives to us with more clarity than words could ever hope to express.

To say that Mr. Ives is not a professional musician would appear paradoxical, but actually this is the case; he has made his livelihood as a business man—an insurance executive—and let it be to his everlasting credit that he has succeeded in both departments.

It would be impossible to characterize the man, the musician, the executive, without touching upon his background. He springs from old New England stock, he has spent his life in this section and has absorbed those forthright and sincere attributes that have come to characterize the people of this region. Delving into the past we find that his name is of Norman origin and was first heard in England when Guilbert Yves crossed the channel from Normandy as a follower of William the Conqueror. Later the appellation was changed to its present form. The founder of the family in America was one Captain William Ives, a native of England.

(I) Captain William Ives sailed from England in 1637 on the good ship "Truelove" bound for Boston. The following year he is listed as one of the sixty-three original "free planters" of the Quinnipiac settlement of the New Haven colony, where he and his wife were members of the meeting house as early as 1646, and where his name is registered as one of the first signers. He had two sons; John and Joseph, who were among the first signers of the Wallingford Plantation, founded about 1670.

(II) John (1), son of Captain William Ives, was born about 1640, and married Hannah Merriam in 1667. Wallingford history also indicates that he had a wife, Mary. The lineage is carried on through his son, John, of whom further.

(III) John (2), son of John (1), was born in Wallingford, November 16, 1669, and died in 1738.

He married December 6, 1693, Mary Gillette, and they were the parents of twelve children, among them John (3), of whom further.

(IV) John (3), son of John (2), was born at Wallingford, September 28, 1694, and died August 4, 1745. He married Hannah Royce, who died November 1, 1770, and they were the parents of John, of whom further.

(V) John (4), only child of John (3), was born in Wallingford, July 4, 1729, and died February, 1816. He was twice married (first), July 4, 1749, to Mary Hall, daughter of Dr. Isaac Hall; (second) to Sarah Atkins, who died November 24, 1814. Of the eleven children born to John (4), lineage is traced through his son Isaac.

(VI) Isaac, son of John (4), was born in Wallingford, January 13, 1764, and died June 10, 1845. He was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree from Yale College in 1788, studied law there and later at Litchfield, lived in New York for several years and then came to Danbury. He married (first), March 14, 1792, Jerusha Benedict, who was born in 1772, and died August 18, 1794. On December 20, 1796, he married (second) Sarah Amelia White, who was born May 17, 1773, and died in 1851. Descent is traced through their son, George White, of whom further.

(VII) George White, son of Isaac and Sarah Amelia (White) Ives, was born February 28, 1799, and died December 11, 1862. He was one of the outstanding men of his generation in Danbury, where he was instrumental in organizing the first savings bank, served as treasurer and director of the first railroad company that came to Danbury, was a founder of the Danbury Gas Company, the Danbury National Bank, and was one of the organizers of the Wooster Cemetery Association, where a monument to his memory was erected by the citizens of Danbury. On December 27, 1831, he married Sarah Hotchkiss Wilcox, daughter of Edward and Sarina (Taylor) Wilcox, and they became the parents of five children. Lineage is traced from this point through their son, George Edward.

(VIII) George Edward, son of George White and Sarah Hotchkiss (Wilcox) Ives, was born August 3, 1845, and died November 5, 1894, at Danbury. A talented musician, Mr. Ives received a musical education in New York, completing his training in June, 1862. Though only seventeen years of age at the time, he organized a volunteer military band among his New York acquaintances, at the instigation of Colonel Nelson White, and entered the Union service under General Tyler, who commanded the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery. Mr. Ives was leader of this unit throughout the conflict. According to a newspaper article written many years later it was his band that prompted General Ulysses S. Grant to make his historic remark that he only knew two tunes, one of them was "Yankee Doodle" and the other wasn't. James R. Young, of Waterbury, was present when the Union general made this observation. "While Mr. Young was an orderly at General Grant's headquarters in the siege of Richmond," the news dispatch goes on to state, "President Abraham Lincoln was visiting with General Grant after a review of the army. They were discussing the relative merits of the various sections of the army.

" 'That's a good band,' President Lincoln remarked, indicating the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery band under Mr. Ives' leadership. Mr. Ives was then but a boy of seventeen years.

" 'It's the best band in the army, they tell me,' General Grant replied. 'But you couldn't prove it by me. I know only two tunes. One is Yankee Doodle and the other isn't.'

"Several cabinet officers and other notables were in the group and General Grant's witticism made an impression that lasted.

"The young band leader, of course, never heard the praise which the president gave his organization." After the war Mr. Ives returned to Danbury, where he was to live for the rest of his life. He organized and led many bands and orchestras, taught both theoretical and practical phases of music and became a strong influence in the musical fraternity of this vicinity. Later he served as teller of the Danbury Savings Bank, founded by his father and in which he was also at one time trustee. On January 1, 1874, George Edward Ives married Mary Elizabeth Parmelee, who was born January 2, 1850. They had two sons, Charles Edward Ives, whose name heads this review, and Judge J. Moss Ives of Danbury, a lawyer, and author of articles and books of history, —among them "The Ark and the Dove" (Longmans, Green and Company, New York).

Charles Edward Ives was born in Danbury, October 20, 1874. After a general education in the schools of his native community he matriculated at Yale University where he came under the tutelage of Horatio Parker. In a sense this training amounted to a disciplinary measure. The young student, who exhibited a strong individuality, had already come under the influence of his father, a sound musician who also was constantly experimenting in acoustics and carrying on extensive investigations of harmonic formulae. The elder Ives' contention that only a fraction of the means of musical expression had been employed, was inspirational and useful to his imaginative and talented son. In commenting on this stage of his development a critic and writer says:

> Mr. Ives' writing at this time had progressed through orthodox routine to what must have struck the conservative Parker as musical Bolshevism. The inhospitality of academic authority to new ideas must have been a trial to so independent an imagination; but the young composer settled down to four years of fugues, rondos, sonatas, concertos and symphonies of the most proper convention. Never-the-less, Charles Ives went on experimenting privately and recounts gleefully the help he had from the Hyperion Theatre Orchestra (New Haven), in trying out all of these early efforts.

Mr. Ives, who had played in his father's orchestras and secured his first position as church organist in Danbury in 1887 at the age of thirteen, was organist for the St. Thomas Church in New Haven from 1893 to 1894, for the Centre Church in that city between 1894 and 1898, held the post of organist and choir master in the First Presbyterian Church of Bloomfield, New Jersey, from 1898 to 1900; and was organist and choir master of the Central Presbyterian Church in New York City, from 1900 to 1902.

After being graduated from Yale in 1898, he entered business in New York City as a clerk with the Mutual Life Insurance Company, which he was associated with until 1906. During the latter year the firm of Ives and Myrick was formed and he continued as senior member of this concern until 1930, when ill health compelled him to retire from active work.

The measure of the man is indicated at this time of his life. He proved to his own satisfaction that a man can be an artist and still live in a very real world. In fact, one imagines that he rather enjoyed and profited by his dual role. He could see things from a detached viewpoint, he could escape any phase of musical formalism or faddism at this distance and he could center his efforts in evolving a style and technique solely his own, which has been described as essentially American. He subjected himself to the most rigorous self criticism. He experimented constantly, he permitted nothing to distract him and was indifferent to the publication or performance of his works. In all he did he broke with tradition, not because he was essentially such a rebel at heart but because he had something fundamentally original to express. A few of his works did reach the publishers at this time and they shunned them for their radical departures. Yet, as has been indicated, he was not discouraged or disturbed.

He is described as a composer who never took "anything for granted in music, even when the law was laid down by the highest authorities. Instead he listened to the music around him in the country churches, at camp meetings, to village bands and country fiddlers, sometimes using their rag music as material for composition. One of his finest works, 'Three Places in New England,' takes advantage of the missed eighth note for a symphonic rag that recently took Paris by the ears. Thus, polyrhythmics is a natural medium of expression for Ives who knew and remembered the mingling of several rhythms of marching village bands. He formed a deep sense for directness, unblushing profundity and broadness of melodic line. When a Paris critic found 'adorable freshness' in Ives's themes, he also noted a peculiar, utterly un-European atmosphere that clothed this music. The 'quality of being American' is unmistakable in Ives's art. American history and geography suggested in the titles of some of his works ('Three Places in New England,' 'Washington's Birthday,' 'Lincoln, the Great Commoner,' and others) do not alone constitute Ives's claim for Americanism. His music itself, the diatonic structure of the main themes built against a background of chromatic, even ultrachromatic (Ives is one of the pioneers of quartertone music) accompaniment, a freedom from metrical fetters, finally, the use of unrhythmed figures and passages, syncretized rather than synchronized with the main body of music,—this constant contrasting of the two elements at war, somehow analogous to Walt Whitman's flow of liberated verse, is nothing if not American."

This is the very essence of his art, which basically has made him "the true pioneer, the father of the ultra-modern group of composers. He not only writes great and majestic music but he gives freely of his fund of knowledge, is most generous to his colleagues and helps in every way, because of his great soul and heart, to make the way easier for those who are fighting for their musical convictions."

Mr. Ives' originality transcends the mere technical phase of musical art. When he composed the selection entitled: "Sonata: Concord, Massachusetts, 1840-1860," he disregarded the conventional allegro and andante movements, replacing them in the following manner; I. Emerson. II. Hawthorne. III. The Alcotts. IV. Thoreau. His compositions have largely drawn their titles from surroundings and historic incidents and figures. Thus we have "Boston Common," "Putnam's Camp—Redding, Connecticut," "Washington's Birthday," and many others of a similar vein.

He had been doubly blessed in being able to express himself with as much facility and directness in writing as he does in music. His literary efforts, which accompany many of his musical compositions, are revealing of his personal and professional philosophy. One has but to turn to his "Essays before a Sonata," to appreciate this.

To his intimates Mr. Ives is a strong individualist, to the world he is a rebel: a rebel because he dared to be original, because he dared to explore a virgin field and came out triumphant. There is unanimous opinion on one point—he is distinctly American. Witness the critical observations made from numerous sources in both this country and abroad.

> To my mind (and in the opinion of many others), says one writer in the February, 1934, issue of "The Music Lovers Guide," he is the most original and most characteristically "American" composer the United States has yet produced. Largely self taught, a business man rather than a professional musician, tied to no schools and refusing to propagandize his own music, his has been an almost unknown name until the last few years when the younger school of radical composers has suddenly awakened to the fact that Ives is its spiritual father. He was—and still is—years ahead of his time, anticipating many of the "discoveries" of Schönberg, Stravinski and their followers. . . . We are just beginning to catch up with Ives, but his will be a powerful voice in the future. . . . The future generation is going to have sardonic contempt of us for ignoring Ives and his music for so long.

In the foreword to "Connecticut Composers, 1935," published by the Federated Music Clubs of Connecticut, the following annotation appears:

> Few realize that Connecticut was the pioneer state to develop music in this country. The little Town of Salem, located in the eastern part of the State, outrivalled Boston and New York, our present musical centers. It was in this little Town of Salem that Music Vale Seminary, the first normal school of music, was established. It was in this school that Oramel Whittlesey, a Salem townsman, taught Dr. Lowell Mason and George F. Root, two gentlemen accredited with having done more to popularize music in America than anyone before them. . . . It was in Connecticut that "Marching Through Georgia," the greatest of the patriotic war songs of Civil War days was composed by Henry Clay Work of Middletown, and where such men as Andrew Law of Cheshire, Connecticut's first composer of note, Dudley Buck, Reginald DeKoven, James Rogers, Charles Beach Hawley, and Charles Ives, greatest of America's present day modernists, and a host of others equally as famous in the music world, were born. Connecticut has not only been the birthplace of many an illustrious American, but the adopted home of many others who have seemed to find in her climate, her people, and her surroundings, the inspiration to do some of their finest work.

The esteem he is held in by some of the outstanding musical critics of the day can be revealed in a few pertinent excerpts taken from newspaper reviews. Alfred Einstein, of the "Berlin Tagblatt," and correspondent for the "Christian Science Monitor," says: "Reviewing American music heard in Berlin, 'Charles Ives' is in my estimation, the most original and national."

Lawrence Gilman, music critic of the "New York Herald-Tribune," commenting on a performance of Ives' "Fourth Symphony," which Eugene Goosens conducted, wrote—"This music is as indubitably American in impulse and spiritual texture as the prose of Jonathan Edwards; and, like the writing of that true artist and true mystic, it has at times an irresistible veracity and strength, and uncorrupted sincerity." The aforementioned is quoted from an article in the "Musical Quarterly," which goes on to state that "Ives is wholly of the bone and flesh of Colonial America; and he has gone straight to those elements of American life that he knows best and that have entered deeply and intimately into the making of his philosophy and aesthetics. But, and this needs to be remembered, it is rather the thought elements of his background that are the foundations and fabric of his music, although he makes pungent use of pure local color."

Olin Downes, reviewing in the "New York Times" the second movement of the "Fourth Symphony," says: "And then Ives looses his rhythm. There is no apology about this, but a 'gumption', as a New Englander would say, not derived from some 'Sacre du Printemps,' or from anything but the conviction of a composer who dares to jump with feet and hands and a reckless somersault or two on his way to his destination. There is something in this music; real vitality, real naivete and a superb self-respect."

In the March, 1932, issue of "Les Dernières Nouvelles," of Paris, France, the writer makes the following observation: "Ives is not imitative; he has something to say. He is a musical artist painter, if such an expression can be used, an impressionist not without mixture of naive realism; his art is at times awkward and raw, but in him there is real power and true invention, thematically and rhythmically speaking, which does not follow either the fashion or authorities. Ives is, perhaps, the only one among the American composers whose art is truly national,—in this he has something in common with Walt Whitman."

Such is the general tenor of the remarks that have been made concerning Mr. Ives' artistry. He not only has won the appreciation of the critics in his own country but those of the world at large as well. He has more than fulfilled a personal ambition, he has become a benefactor to the art of music, a privilege few men in history have enjoyed.

On June 8, 1908, Charles Edward Ives married Harmony Twichell, of Hartford, and the daughter of the Rev. Joseph Hopkins and Julia Harmony (Cushman) Twichell of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Ives reside at West Redding. They are the parents of Edith O. Ives, born May 29, 1914.

ALFRED G. BLIVEN—As president of the Norwich Paper Box Company, Alfred G. Bliven heads one of the oldest manufacturing concerns in Norwich, and one with which his family—father, brother and close relatives—have been closely identified almost since this industry was established in the city. He is the son of Samuel E. Bliven and the brother of the late LaRue Bliven. The American progenitors of the family on the paternal side came to the Massachusetts Bay Colony in the seventeenth century, later going with Roger Williams to Rhode Island where, for a time they remained in Newport, which they helped found, but eventually located permanently in Westerly, Rhode Island. Of a later date was the coming of the branch of the Blivens with which this record has to do, to Windham County, Connecticut.

Samuel E. Bliven removed to Norwich during the Civil War, where from 1867 to 1869, he was an employee of C. N. Farnam, a dealer in leather. In the latter year he became associated with his uncle, George Bingham, a paper box manufacturer, operating under the name of the Bingham Paper Box Company. His plant was located at what is now No. 127 Main Street, Norwich, and was a small affair situated "over John Clark's hat store." Here Samuel E. Bliven learned the business, and after the death of his uncle carried it on successfully. In 1885, he initiated a partnership with Alfred R. Beebe, another uncle, to form the Norwich Paper Box Company, of which he was the head throughout the remaining years of an eminently useful life.

Alfred G. Bliven was born in Norwich, Connecticut, February 21, 1889, son of Samuel E. and Emma A. (Button) Bliven. His father died on August 11, 1917; Mrs. Bliven lived to 1933. After the son had completed his schooling he continued to make a livelihood along more permanent lines. He had begun to work at the age of fourteen. For about two years he was in New York City as a receiving clerk in one of the large electrical supply houses. Returning to his birthplace, Alfred G. Bliven entered the Norwich Paper Box Company where he shortly became secretary and assistant treasurer. Upon the death of the father, a brother, LaRue Bliven, became president, a position he filled until his own death in 1931. Since that year Alfred G. Bliven has been president and treasurer of the company. He is one of the recognized business and industrial leaders of the city, a public-spirited citizen who is ready to lend his support to movements and organizations undertaken to promote the prosperity and improvement of the community. He is president of the Norwich Rotary Club; a trustee of the United Congregational Church, of which he has long been a member; is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of Norwich; and is a thirty-second degree Mason.

In Norwich, on October 7, 1916, Alfred G. Bliven married Vera M. Blair, daughter of the late James and Mary (Hatfield) Blair, and they are the parents of three daughters: 1. Virginia. 2. Ruth. 3. Mary Ann.

WARNCKE FAMILY—A decade after the end of the Civil War, prosperity in the United States attracted many in countries over the seas, as the place in which to seek a livelihood and, perhaps, a fortune. Among those who came from Germany in 1875 was Louis H. Warncke. He had been born in Germany on March 23, 1861, and acquired the fundamentals of his education in his native land. He was but fourteen when he landed in New York City, and there crossed the North River to make his home in Jersey City, New Jersey. For three years he was a grocery clerk. Then for some five years he had his own woodenware business. This was followed by the Jersey City Pickle Works which he operated until 1893, when he sold out and removed to Cannondale, Connecticut. Here he purchased what was known as the Squire Marion house for a home and started a chicken business. It was not long, however, before Louis H. Warncke had opened a pickle works, catering to a trade which extended over a large area. In the meanwhile he had set out an orchard of forty acres. To this he devoted his entire attention after 1911, selling his pickle works in that year. In 1922, he retired, turning his orchard over to his son, who purchased the estate from the older man. Louis H. Warncke, while a resident of Jersey City, married Annie Evans, who died in 1915, leaving an only child, George L., born in Jersey City, January 6, 1889.

George L. Warncke grew up in Jersey City and Cannondale, attending the local schools, but at an early age became associated with his father in business. As indicated, he is a horticulturalist, operating on a large place. Interested in civic life and recognized for his public spirit, he has been tax collector for four years, a member of the Board of Finance since 1918, and has served three terms in the Connecticut House of Representatives.

On June 29, 1911, George L. Warncke married Bessie Scribner, and they have a son, Louis, born November 5, 1917.

FREDERICK LOUIS WILSON—Founder and for many years active head of the F. L. Wilson Company, jewelers and watchmakers, of Danbury, Frederick Louis Wilson developed this enterprise from small beginnings into one of the most substantial business enterprises of the city. He built it with infinite care on sound foundations and it remains today as a monument to his acumen, his artistic taste and high ideals.

Mr. Wilson was born in Norwalk, Connecticut, on November 10, 1854, a son of Charles L. and Cynthia (Bennett) Wilson. Educated in the public schools of his birthplace, he acquired an early interest in the jewelry business and followed it from the beginning of his active career. At the age of eighteen he came to Danbury and entered the employ of the late Thomas B. Fanton, who conducted a local jewelry store. Here he served a thorough apprenticeship in the jeweler's and watchmaker's trade, and after the death of Mr. Fanton, over fifty years ago, he entered business under his own name, taking over much of his former employer's trade. Mr. Wilson's first store was located for many years on the site of the present Post Office Building. The present establishment, which is of comparatively recent date, is one of the largest and most beautiful stores in Danbury. The business which it houses was incorporated in 1905 under the name of the F. L. Wilson Company, with the following officers: Frederick Louis Wilson; his brother, Samuel S., and William A. Deakin. Since the death of the founder in 1932, the company has been under the management of his grandson, Frederick S. Wilson, with W. Sherman, son of F. L. Wilson, Samuel S., brother of F. L. Wilson, also interested in the firm. W. Sherman Wilson lives in Philadelphia and Samuel S. Wilson lives in Danbury.

Frederick L. Wilson was active in many phases of Danbury life during his long residence in this city, and although his business was always his principal interest, he never neglected the duties of good citizenship, enjoying the respect and regard of his fellow townsmen. He was a prominent Mason, being a member in this order of Union Lodge, which he joined in 1877; of Eureka Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Wooster Council, Royal and Select Masters; Crusader Commandery, Knights Templar; and Mecca Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in New York City. He was also a member of Danbury Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and a communicant of St. James' Episcopal Church, in this city. His personal qualities won him the regard of his wide circle of acquaintances, and all who knew him held him in high esteem.

Mr. Wilson died at Danbury on March 7, 1932, in his seventy-eighth year, survived by his son, W. Sherman, of Philadelphia; his grandson, Frederick S. Wilson, who is now active head of the F. L. Wilson Company; and another grandson, Chester Eugene Wilson, of Philadelphia. Frederick L. Wilson was widely known in jewelry circles for his expert knowledge of the trade and the inherent rectitude of taste which made him so excellent a judge of artistic values. These qualifications meant much for his success, but more important, perhaps, were his unwavering integrity and lofty ideals, which he made from the beginning the cornerstone of his career and which have been woven inextricably into the company bearing his name.

REV. AARON C. COBURN, D.Litt.—The Wooster School, of Danbury, Connecticut, of which the Rev. Aaron C. Coburn is headmaster, has recently entered upon its eleventh year with appropriate celebration of a decade of steady progress. It was founded by Dr. Coburn in 1926 as a boys' school, in pursuit of an educational ideal by which boys should be brought to manhood with "character developed by the absorption of Christian principles—the mind trained through hard study in a strong, healthy body."

The original building of the school was a farm house located across Ridgebury Road from its present site, where classes were begun in 1926 with an enrollment of ten boys. During the past decade, this figure has grown steadily until the school now numbers sixty-five pupils, under the supervision of a carefully selected faculty of nine. The physical plant, in contrast to the single original building, comprises at the present time seven buildings, five of which are located on the new site. The value of the school's properties has grown meanwhile from $20,000 to an estimated $200,000. These statistics reflect the progress of an institution which has gained a notable reputation in its field. While distinctly a preparatory school its aim is not only to fit the student for college, but also to fit him spiritually and academically for life; in other words to make men of the boys. The Wooster School offers instruction comparable to the eighth grade and high school courses, and its students, with almost no exception, enter college. Graduates of the school are now enrolled in many leading universities and colleges of the country.

The Rev. Aaron C. Coburn, founder and headmaster of The Wooster School, was born in Brooklyn, Connecticut, in 1884, a son of Dr. J. Milton and Abbie M. Coburn. His father was for some years mayor of South Norwalk, Connecticut. Dr. Coburn received his preliminary education in the public schools of his birthplace and after completing the high school course, entered Amherst College, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1907. Subsequently, he prepared for the ministry at the Divinity School of the Episcopal Church in Philadelphia, taking the degree of Bachelor of Divinity in 1912. In 1913 he was ordained in the Episcopal Church and for more than a decade devoted himself to the active ministry. After serving briefly as assistant at Grace Church, New York City, he came to Danbury in 1913 as rector of St. James' Episcopal Church, filling this pulpit until 1927, when he resigned to devote his entire attention to The Wooster School. During the last year of his incumbency, 1926-27, he had already begun the operation of the school, and since that time has continued as headmaster without interruption. His leadership has made possible its progress, and the strength of his own ideals is reflected in its high standards. In May, 1936, in recognition of his attainments, Dr. Coburn received from Hobart University the honorary degree of Doctor of Literature.

Dr. Coburn married Eugenia B. Woolfolk and they are the parents of three children: 1. John, who was graduated from Princeton University in 1936, now teaching in Robert College, Istanbul, Turkey. 2. Helen, now attending Skidmore College. 3. Eugenia, her twin sister, who is a student at Bryn Mawr.

HAROLD BENEDICT SENIOR—Extensively engaged in the lumber business in Connecticut, Harold Benedict Senior has his headquarters in his native community of Bethel. His participation in local and State affairs has been such as to earn for him the gratitude and admiration of his contemporaries.

Mr. Senior, whose American ancestory dates back to the early part of the nineteenth century, was born in Bethel, December 25, 1886, the son of Arthur H. and Mary Evanna (Benedict) Senior. The first member of this family to come to this country was William Senior, of County Kent, England, who arrived here in May, 1830, with his wife and twelve children. Another child was born after the family settled at New Milford, where William engaged in sheep farming. Eventually the farm was taken over by his son William, who was the grandfather of Harold Benedict, and father of Arthur H. Senior, who was born on the family homestead and educated in the local schools. Arthur H. worked on the family farm for a time but later went to Woodbury where he learned the carpenter's trade, which he was to engage in for an extended period. In time he came to Bethel and worked in a hat factory here until he became associated with Gilbert Brothers, building contractors. This experience, coupled with his vocational training, enabled him to establish a building contracting business of his own in 1884. Later he added lumber and building supplies and successfully conducted this enterprise until his passing on September 5, 1916. He always took an active part in community affairs, was a popular figure socially and fraternized with Eureka Lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons.

The public schools furnished Harold Benedict Senior his early education, and, after completing his high school studies, he became a student at the University of Pennsylvania, where he was graduated in 1909 with the degree of Bachelor of Science in Architecture. Returning to Bethel, his native place, he entered his father's business, which had been started during the latter part of the nineteenth century, and worked his way through different departments until the death of the elder Senior, when he took over the venture. Since that time he has operated under his own name, handling a general line of lumber and building materials and doing extensive mill work.

Along with his work in this one industry Mr. Senior is a director of the Bethel National Bank and of the Union Savings Bank of Danbury. He has rendered valuable public service, having served in the Connecticut State Legislature and in other capacities. He was in the lower house for two terms, having been elected in 1927 and again in 1929. In 1931 he was elected to the Senate of this State, and served for one term. He is a Republican in his political views, and his public work includes that which he has performed as a charter member of the Board of Finance of the Town of Bethel, with which he has been connected since the consolidation of villages which, in 1919, brought into being the present town. He is a member, deacon and trustee of the First Congregational Church of Bethel. In the Free and Accepted Masons he belongs to Eureka Lodge. Each of these groups has benefited from his constructive and wholehearted labors in its behalf, and he is honored, trusted and respected as a result of his manifold accomplishments.

On February 15, 1910, Harold Benedict Senior married Grace B. Twiss.

SIMON COUCH BRADLEY—In the year 1660 John Bradley came to Connecticut from England, selected Fairfield as his home and settled there for the remainder of his life. Eight generations later, on July 25, 1858, Simon Couch Bradley, a direct lineal descendant of John Bradley, was born in the old Bradley Homestead on Greenfield Hill. His parents were Zalmon Bradley and Sarah Esther (Sherwood) Bradley. His boyhood was spent on the farm helping his father and attending the district schools. After finishing school he became actively associated with his father on the farm where, as was the custom at that time, the raising of onions was a major business. Southport was the chief shipping center, boats laden with onions sailing frequently to New York.

Early in life Mr. Bradley developed a keen interest in outdoor life. His favorite pastimes were hunting and fishing, and especially did he find pleasure in dogs, particularly hunting dogs, a hobby which was later to become his main source of livelihood.

In 1879, Mr. Bradley married Anna Belle Bulkley, also of Greenfield Hill. Two children graced this union, Elizabeth Bulkley and Sarah Esther. Elizabeth married the late Theodore Sturges and they had three children: i. Eunice Kneeland. ii. Edwin Cady. iii. Anne Lothrop. Sarah Esther married Joseph Nelson Hutchison, her only child being Frances Bradley, who married Edward Arthur Tyler. They have one son, John Bradley, named after the original John Bradley.

Following his marriage, Mr. Bradley continued to farm, now having his own acres, he also began to breed and handle dogs. Before the turn of the century he had a large kennel of dogs which he handled and trained. In 1900, he went to England to purchase dogs for breeding and spent some time there following the field trials. From this time until a very few years before his death his name was prominent as a breeder, judge and field trial official. One of his connections was as secretary of the Eastern Field Trial Club, where concluding field trials were held on the Paul Rainey Preserve at Cotton Point, Mississippi. Also for many years, in fact, until but three years before his death, he acted as one of the judges for the annual trials held at Pinehurst, North Carolina.

This interest and activity with dogs led Mr. Bradley to experiment in dog foods, a work in which he was assisted by his son-in-law, Theodore Sturges. In 1905, this experimentation progressed to the stage of an active business and the Kennel Food Supply Company was formed, a partnership including Mr. Bradley, Mr. Sturges and Mr. Henry L. Peirson of New York. The business prospered and was incorporated in 1920. Mr. Bradley being elected president and treasurer, which titles he held until his death. He was at all times the guiding power in the development of the business and his deep interest continued all his life.

Mr. Bradley early manifested a keen interest in civic affairs. In 1887, at the age of twenty-nine, he was elected to the Connecticut State Legislature, being one of its youngest members. While in that body he was a member of the committee that selected the site for Putnam Park in Redding. From that time on he participated helpfully and constructively in the public affairs of his community. He was associated with the Democratic Party but never let party principles or prejudices influence his judgment for the greatest good for the greatest number.

For a number of years he was first Selectman of of the town of Fairfield, being elected to that post in 1895. He served as Postmaster under the Wilson Administration and for three years he was chairman of the Democratic town committee. As a charter member of the board of finance he ably served the town one fourth of a century until his death on August 9, 1936.

His interests and activities included many and varied branches of public and private life. He was vice-president and director of the Southport Savings Bank and director and member of the executive committee of the Fairfield Trust Company, of which he was a charter incorporator. He was one of the founders of the original Greenfield Hill Country Club and the first president of the present club, which was formed in 1925, and where he enjoyed a game of golf up to the time of his death. He was among the first members of the Fairfield Luncheon Club, a charter member of the Unquawa Tribe, No. 60, of the Fairfield Improved Order of

S C Bradley

Redmen and a life member of the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. He was a member of the First Church of Christ in Fairfield.

Possessed with an unusual degree of energy and enthusiasm, Mr. Bradley's accomplishments were many and varied and his death on August 9, 1936, was an occasion of deep regret to all who knew him. During a full and well-rounded life he earned the admiration and affection of all with whom he was associated, and his kind, generous, sympathetic attitude towards his friends made him a well-known, well-loved figure to those he contacted in all walks of life. He always had the courage of his convictions and stood by his decisions, never following the line of least resistance. It can be said that his fine physique was an index to his character—large, manly, upright, willing to take on his broad shoulders many a civic obligation for which remuneration was the gratitude of his fellow citizens. Fairfielders will not forget Mr. Bradley nor the significant part he played in the life of the town.

WILLIAM EZRA MALLORY—Outstanding in the life of Connecticut is the hat industry of Danbury, in the development of which the Mallorys have played so important a role. The Mallory Hat Company, of this place, not only represents a leading industry, but it typifies, in a way, the whole history of hat-making from the era of the old hand-made hats down to the present. The part that William Ezra Mallory has taken in the promotion of this firm's interests has been a significant one, and as treasurer and a director of the company he has come to be widely and favorably known throughout the business world.

Mr. Mallory's ancestry dates back to very early times in America. Peter Mallory was the immigrant ancestor. He was born in England, landed in Boston in 1637, came early in life to New Haven, and was a signer of the plantation covenant, June 4, 1639. He took the oath of fidelity, July 1, 1644; married (first) Elizabeth Barnes, February, 1648, and married (second) Mary Preston. Their son, Peter Mallory, Jr., represented the second generation on these shores. This Peter Mallory, Junior, was born in New Haven, June 27, 1653, and there married, May 25, 1678, Elizabeth Trowbridge. The third generation of this particular family was represented by Stephen Mallory, born in New Haven and baptized October 12, 1694, married in 1718 to Mary Trumbull. Among their children were Daniel Mallory. His wife was Abigail Mallory. Their son, Daniel Mallory, was born about May 29, 1725, and died July 18, 1805; he maried, November 30, 1748, Sarah Lee, daughter of William Lee, and she was born about October 12, 1730, and died July 4, 1819. Daniel Mallory was on the committee to care for soldiers' families in 1777. He and his family lived in Fairfield County, Connecticut. His son, Samuel Mallory, born June 21, 1752, died July 23, 1834; married, October 16, 1777, Hannah Hull, born August 8, 1751, died September 3, 1836 in Danbury, and was the daughter of Timothy Hull and Anna (Gray) Hull, and grand-daughter of John Hull, of Redding, who went to Cuba in the 1741 expedition with the provincial troops and died of "an extraordinary sickness." William Mallory, one son of this marriage of Samuel and Hannah (Hull) Mallory, was born September 16, 1778, and died June 9, 1853, and another son was Ezra Mallory, who started the present great hat industry referred to above.

This Ezra Mallory, grandfather of William Ezra Mallory, was born February 20, 1785, in Redding, Connecticut, and died September 30, 1845, at Great Plain, Connecticut. Spending his boyhood in Redding, he later removed to Great Plain, town of Danbury, engaging there in the manufacture of hats. Skilled in all the branches of hat production rather than in the processes of business management, Ezra Mallory knew how to make a whole hat by hand. It was one day in 1823 when, at the age of thirty-eight, he selected the site for a hat-making shop, standing in contemplation in the dusty Great Plain Road a few rods from his farmhouse. This venture, small yet all-important to him, was destined to become the great Mallory Hat Company. The hats of those days, mostly beavers of tall bell-like shape with heavily rolled brims, were usually imported from England. Beginning operations with one hatter and an apprentice, Mr. Mallory served as an apprentice himself, learning the whole trade, which was not then divided into many separate skilled branches. He had to work with raw pelts instead of with fur detached from the pelt as we know it now. One fertile source of skins lay in the dunes of Coney Island, which, incidentally, owes its name to the coney rabbits that lived there. He also bought many pelts from the Indians, sometimes going to Canada for beaver, muskrat and other skins. He and his two workers cut the fur from the pelts with long-handled shears, and with their fingers separated the fur from the hair. They did the forming with a device resembling a violin bow, though five or six times larger. By snapping the catgut string upon a pile of fur on a bench, the particles were separated, scattered and gradually deposited in a smaller and finer sheet, free from other substances. Each sheet represented one hat only. With further manipulation, the fibres hooked themselves together into what ultimately became the fur fabric of the hat. Ezra Mallory himself used such a bow, and with his own hands dipped the bowed fur into a large cone-shaped form, into boiling water, and by alternately rolling and dipping, succeeded in shrinking and felting the fur into a cone-shaped body about one-quarter the original size. In a safe in the Mallory plant is carefully preserved today Ezra Mallory's original ledger, written in his bold hand and containing many quaintly humorous entries picturing the life of the period. For instance, in 1823, Jedediah Jones was credited, "By your old hat, $1." Ezra Mallory sold hats at retail or wholesale or in any possible way. Sometimes he credited the local grocer or shoemaker for merchandise received in return for a hat, or a woman might be credited with washing and mending, a landlady for a month's "keep."

Early in his career Ezra Mallory received a contract from a larger hat manufacturer in Danbury, and as other similar contracts came in, his shop employed five or six men instead of two. When sufficient orders came, he sometimes rode by horseback to South Norwalk, whence steamers departed "with reasonable certainty" for New York. In Connecticut he sold hats on foot and on horseback. As the years and the business increased, the Mallorys removed to the so-called "Montgomery" shop, in West Street, Danbury, in 1852. In 1861, the plant went to its present location. In 1856, the capital of E. A. Mallory and Company totaled $20,000, and the company made 8,640 dozen hats and employed ninety-five workers. At about that time the company started making soft hats, which had been introduced to America by Baron Kossuth, Hungarian statesman and nobleman.

Meanwhile, Ezra Mallory, the founder, died in 1845, and his son, Ezra Andrews Mallory, carried on the work. Ezra Mallory married, on January 21, 1807, in Bethel, Connecticut, Eliza Andrews, born November 28, 1788, in Bethel, daughter of Eden Andrews, born April 28, 1761, died April 26, 1839, at Bethel, and Deborah (Benedict) Andrews.

Ezra Andrews Mallory, one of the children of this marriage, was born June 4, 1820, at Great Plain, and died August 15, 1902, at Danbury. He led the firm for many years, being associated with P. A. Sutton in 1860. The firm was then known as E. A. Mallory and Company. Four years later he became associated with his brother, Samuel Mallory, who remained with the firm only two years. In 1872, Ezra Andrews Mallory admitted his son, Charles Arthur Mallory, to the firm, and in 1886, admitted another son, William Ezra Mallory. The firm was so continued until Ezra Andrews Mallory's death in 1902. Along with his other activities, Ezra Andrews Mallory was active in the aid of Danbury's poor and needy, having been one of the original incorporators of the Danbury Home for Destitute and Homeless Children in 1884. He participated in many charities. His children were: 1. Walter Ezra. 2. Charles Arthur (mentioned below). 3. William Ezra (mentioned below). 4. James Bell. 5. Jennie Eliza. Two of these children lived to maturity.

One of them, Charles Arthur Mallory, born October 16, 1850, died in 1935, became president of the hat company, which after 1904 was known as E. A. Mallory Sons, Incorporated. He also became active in banking and general business affairs, having been a trustee of the Union Savings Bank and a director of the City National Bank, of Danbury; vice-president of Danbury Hospital; president of the Danbury Relief Society; director of the Danbury and Bethel Gas and Electric Light Company; and a director of the Clark Box Company. He was a Republican and a Congregationalist. He carried on his work as president of the Mallory Hat Company until his retirement in 1933. He was thereupon succeeded in the presidency by Frederick T. Joy, who had been vice-president for many years, and who now heads the enterprise.

William Ezra Mallory, brother of Charles Arthur Mallory and another grandson of the founder, has for years served as treasurer and as a director of the company. He was born March 31, 1856, and studied in the public schools and at Weston Military Institute, in Weston, Connecticut, there being graduated in 1874. He spent a year in the printer's trade in the Danbury "News" office, then established a printing enterprise of his own at Bethel, publishing a newspaper called the Bethel "Press," the second newspaper in the town, the first having been P. T. Barnum's famous "Herald of Freedom." In 1877, Mr. Mallory bought the "Danburian," removing his printing office to Danbury and consolidating the two papers. He next proceeded to Arlington, New Jersey, becoming interested in publishing the Arlington "Journal," the Bloomfield "News" and the Montclair "Herald." His plant was destroyed by fire about six months after he settled in New Jersey, and he abandoned the business. He began to manufacture wire cloth, afterward building and organizing the present telephone service in Danbury, and establishing the first telephone exchange without switchboard, in the world. He sold his holdings after a time to a stock company, becoming a director and secretary of that corporation. In March, 1880, Mr. Mallory went west and bought a cattle ranch at Loup City, Nebraska, conducting it until the autumn of 1882, when he sold it and went to Council Bluffs, Iowa, to take a position as bookkeeper for the Shugart Implement Company, one of the largest organizations of its kind in the United States. For nine months he continued his work there. In 1886, he became a partner in the firm, then known as E. A. Mallory and Sons, in Danbury.

Times and methods have changed with the passing years. New machinery and labor-saving devices have been installed in all departments. In fact, departmentalization itself has developed since the founder, Ezra Mallory, started his first hat shop in Danbury. It was in 1845 that a man named Wells invented and secured a patent for a hat-forming machine, then regarded by many as grotesque and impossible. Soon the machine was being widely used, however, and other such machines were following in its wake. Now machines, hands and brains combine their forces to produce in large numbers all kinds of modern hats. The Mallorys have made a deep study of hat history from Biblical times down to the present, and a little booklet published by them in 1923, entitled "A Century of Hats and the Hats of the Century," by Edward Mott Woolley, admirably illustrated by Edward Penfield, commemorating the service of the Mallory family through 100 years of hat-making, recounted in some detail the development of hats through the ages, pointing to both styles and technical methods. They have done much to develop Danbury as the world's hat center, even as Pittsburgh is a steel center and Akron, Ohio, a center for rubber. The community has materially gained from the efforts of the Mallorys, from Ezra, the first hat man, down to the present William Ezra Mallory.

William Ezra Mallory is deeply interested in the affairs of Danbury and its people and institutions and has done much to promote the general well-being. He is a staunch Republican. His interests are many, but they center about the great hat industry that he has helped to build. He has done much to introduce the modern methods by which hair and fur are removed from the animal skin, the furs are mixed in a conical machine called graphically the "devil" by the whirring of cyclonic winds, and the important forming machine referred to above. He has especially had to do with the perfecting of methods for bringing the factory in touch with many quarters of the world that feed it with materials—the skins from far distant lands, the shellac for stiffening from India, the sweatband skins from France, the silks from Japan and Italy, the dyestuffs from Germany and America. In 1920, the company built a great three-story concrete building to supplement its other large factory facilities and to provide office quarters. In 1922, work was started on three additional stories to cover the whole building and on a sixty-foot extension of six stories—all of concrete. The company is now, as it has always been, justly proud of its policy of quality workmanship and materials, and its consistent practice is to discard old machinery and equipment for new whenever the new makes its appearance.

The family of William Ezra Mallory occupies a house at Ohehyahtah, West Wooster Street. In 1878, Mr. Mallory married Fannie Cornelia Raymond, who was born June 21, 1856, at Danbury, daughter of George M. and Mary Fredericka (White) Raymond. The children of this marriage have been the following: 1. Belle, who was born June 5, 1881, at Loup City, Nebraska. 2. Florence R., born March 13, 1888. 3. Maude Christine, born October 28, 1892. The last two were born in Danbury.

SYLVANUS D. LOCKE—During his long connection with the Locke Steel Chain Company, of Bridgeport, Sylvanus D. Locke has had a major part in the development of an organization which was first called into existence as a result of his father's inventive genius and whose operations have won the Locke name an important place in Connecticut industry.

Mr. Locke was born in Hoosick Falls, New York, on April 6, 1871, a son of Sylvanus D. and Ellen J. (Parker) Locke. His father, who was born in Richfield, Otsego County, New York, devoted his earliest active years to education and the law, but his fine inventive gifts led him eventually to creative achievements in industry, which thereafter received his entire attention. Patents on more than 200 devices were issued in his name, covering inventions of large importance which brought him world wide fame. Among these were his steel sprocket chain and the first grain binder. In the commercial production of this immeasurably valuable device Mr. Locke had a clear priority. Two of his binders were sold in 1872, four years ahead of all others placed upon the market, and, in 1873, he received high awards at the exposition in Vienna, Austria.

The old Wood binder, named for its manufacturer, was devised by Mr. Locke, and in later years he took out many supplementary patents on the binder. Unfortunately, as a result of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, which changed familiar patent procedure, he was deprived of his full rights under these patents, but his fame as a pioneer in the field is securely established.

Sylvanus D. Locke, the son, was the youngest of four children born to his parents. He was educated in New York public schools and at the Hudson River Institute, a military school, following which he enrolled at Cornell University, where he completed three years of a course in mechanical engineering. After leaving college he became associated with his father in business and later spent one year in the employ of the New York Central Railroad Company. In 1896, upon his father's death, he assumed the management of his business interests, a step leading to the formation of the Locke Steel Chain Company in 1897. This corporation was established to promote the sale of a sheet or stamped metal sprocket chain invented by the senior Locke in 1887. At his death it was not yet on the market, and the business of commercial organization, as well as the development of manufacturing equipment, fell in large part upon his son. The original location of the company was in New York City, but in May, 1899, it was moved to Bridgeport, where factory space was rented from the American Tube and Stamping Company. Four years later the business was moved to a plant on South Avenue and Water Street, and in September, 1914, the present plant was erected on Connecticut Avenue at the corner of Freeman Street. This fire-proof factory, containing about 50,000 square feet of floor space, consists of four one-story buildings of reinforced concrete construction. It has frontage on three thoroughfares and about 500 feet of railroad siding.

The plant expansion which has characterized the company's history reflects the growth of its business. Mr. Locke, who has served as vice-president and treasurer of the company since its organization in 1897, devised the manufacturing equipment, including the present automatic machinery, and has made important improvements in the firm's products. Five new patents granted him in 1914, made possible the commercial manufacture of the original lighter chain of hardened and tempered steel which replaced the original malleable iron link belt. The capacity of the plant is approximately 10,000,000 feet of chain annually, and the product is distributed by carload lots to implement manufacturers in the principal countries of the world. Although the company operates on an automatic basis, the high standards of hand craftsmanship have always been maintained, and an exceptionally loyal and able personnel has made possible the quality of product and efficient operating record which have distinguished the company's development. Many members of the organization have been with the company for over a quarter of a century, including the general manager, D. W. Haggerty, and the secretary, F. S. McDaniel, who joined the company in 1903, and the superintendent, Charles Parker, who came to the firm in 1902. Mr. Locke's own part in the development of the company has been decisive, and not only his technical skill but his executive capacities are woven into the history of its growth and progress.

During his long residence in Bridgeport, Mr. Locke has been a familiar figure in the city's life and, in addition to his business connections, he has been actively associated with other community institutions. Mr. Locke is on the following commissions and boards of the city government: the Incinerator Commission, the Zoning Commission, the Financial Advisory Board, and the Park Board. He is a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, is affiliated fraternally with the Free and Accepted Masons, and is a member of the Brooklawn Country Club. He formerly was a member of the Algonquin Club, the Fairfield Country Club, the Westport Country Club, and the Automobile Club. The quality of his citizenship is well known and highly valued, and the accomplishments of his career reflect credit equally upon himself and upon the Bridgeport community.

HARRY WILLARD FLECK, M.D.—For forty years, Dr. Harry Willard Fleck has been engaged in the practice of medicine at Bridgeport. During that time he has served the city and its people faithfully and by his successful record has become a prominent figure in his profession.

Dr. Fleck was born in Clearfield, Pennsylvania, on May 5, 1873, a son of Thomas Albert and Frances Elmira (Huff) Fleck. His father, a Pennsylvania merchant, was influential in the general life of Clearfield County and enjoyed the distinction of organizing the Republican Party in that county when it first came into existence before the Civil War.

Harry Willard Fleck received his early education in the public schools of his birthplace and in Clearfield Academy. In 1892, he completed the academic course at the University of Pennsylvania and, upon his graduation from that institution, entered Jefferson Medical College to prepare for his professional career. Here he took the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1896, and for one year thereafter served as interne in the Kensington Hospital. In June, 1897, he came to Bridgeport, Connecticut, entering upon the general practice which, he has since conducted with fidelity and success. Dr. Fleck has been a pioneer in employing many of the resources of modern medicine and, in 1900, introduced the use of X-rays into the State of Connecticut. In addition to the duties of his own practice, he is a member of the staff of Bridgeport Hospital in the medical department, has served it as radiologist, and has been associated with the development of this institution for many years. He is also radiologist in St. Vincent's Hospital. Dr. Fleck served as a captain in the American Army during the World War. He was the first chairman of the First Aid Committee of the Bridgeport Chapter of the American Red Cross.

Dr. Fleck is a member of the American Medical Association, the Connecticut State Medical Society, the Fairfield County Medical Society and the Bridgeport Medical Society. He is affiliated fraternally with the Free and Accepted Masons, and at various times has been a member of other community institutions. Travel is his favorite recreation and in the course of years he has indulged this taste extensively. He has crossed the ocean many times, visiting various foreign countries, and has also circumnavigated the globe.

On December 24, 1894, Dr. Harry Willard Fleck married, in Camden, New Jersey, Ella Gray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Gray, of Camden.

THOMAS MARCUS BULL, M.D.—Not only did Thomas Marcus Bull, M.D., achieve the noteworthy record of being the oldest physician in Naugatuck, in point of service, but he was one of the authentic pioneers of dermatology in Connecticut. A lifelong student, especially of science, always pursuing his researches with an open mind, he accepted many modern developments in medicine while they were still unpopular, and himself led the way to better methods and the use of safer means. Long at the head of his profession, he was recognized by colleagues and clientele as the highest authority in the State on dermatological questions.

(I) Thomas Bull, the American progenitor of the Bull family of Connecticut, was born in Great Britain, in the year 1610. He sailed from London, England, for America, on September 11, 1635, in the ship, "Hopewell," Thomas Babb, master. He landed in Boston, Massachusetts, and remained either in that city or in Cambridge until the following spring, when he was enrolled in a company of volunteers sent by the Massachusetts Colony to aid the infant settlements in Connecticut in their defense against the warlike tribes of Pequots, and as second in command under Captain John Mason, was conspicuous for his bravery in the memorable taking of their fort at Mystic, Connecticut, in 1637. He was known at this period of his life as Lieutenant and later, as Captain Thomas Bull. His name is recorded as juror, December 6, 1649, and frequently afterwards. In July, 1675, he was selected by the Colonial government to command the forces sent to resist the demand of the Duke of York for the surrender of Saybrook, Connecticut, as one among others of "the most important posts" in New England.

The family name of the wife of Captain Thomas Bull is not known, but her Christian name was Susannah. A brown stone slab in the ancient burying ground adjoining the Central Congregational Church in Hartford marks the place of her sepulture. On it is the following inscription:

> "Here lyeth the Body of Susannah Bull, wife of Captain Thomas Bull, deceased the 12th of August, 1680, aged 70 years."

Adjoining this is another stone bearing this inscription:

> "Here lyeth the Body of Captain Thomas Bull, who died October, 1684. He was one of the first settlers of Hartford, a Lieutenant in the great and decisive battle with the Pequots, at Mystic, May 26, 1637, and commander of the Fort of Saybrook in July, 1675, when its surrender was demanded by Major Andross."

There is also in the same ground an imposing brownstone monument "Erected by the Ancient Burying Ground Association of Hartford in memory of the first settlers of Hartford." One hundred and one names are inscribed on this monument, the first one of which is that of Thomas Bull. His name is also mentioned among the "Proprietors of the undivided lands of the Town of Hartford," in 1639. The children of Captain Thomas and Susannah Bull were as follows: 1. Thomas, known as Deacon Thomas, of whom further. 2. David. 3. Ruth. 4. Susanna. 5. Abigail. 6. Jonathan. 7. Joseph.

(II) Deacon Thomas (2) Bull, of Farmington, eldest son and child of Captain Thomas and Susannah Bull, was born in Hartford, Connecticut, the date not known. He married (first), probably in April, 1668, Esther Cowles. He married (second) Widow Mary Lewis, daughter of the famous schoolmaster, Ezekiel Cheever. They were married, January 3, 1692. She died January 10, 1728, aged eighty-seven or eighty-eight years. It is believed that eight children were born of the first marriage, namely: 1. John. 2. Thomas. 3. Esther. 4. Samuel. 5. Susannah. 6. Jonathan. 7. Sarah. 8. David, of whom further.

(III) David Bull, of Farmington, youngest son of Deacon Thomas (2) and Esther (Cowles) Bull, was born in Farmington, Connecticut, in 1687. He married Sarah Ashley, who bore him nine children, namely: 1. Jonathan. 2. Sarah. 3. David, Jr. 4. Noah. 5. Thomas, of whom further. 6. Thankful. 7. Abigail. 8. Esther. 9. Mary.

(IV) Major Thomas (3) Bull, fourth son and fifth child of David and Sarah (Ashley) Bull, was born in 1728, and died in 1804. He was adopted by his uncle, Deacon Samuel Bull, of Woodbury. He was a major in the Revolutionary War. He married (first), October 10, 1754, Elizabeth Curtiss, born in Southbury, then Woodbury, and died of consumption, April 30, 1770, aged thirty-two years. He married (second) Amarylis Prindle, who died December 10, 1800. Children: 1. Esther. 2. Samuel David, of whom further. 3. Nathan.

(V) Samuel David Bull, eldest son and second child of Major Thomas (3) and Elizabeth (Curtiss) Bull, was born in Woodbury, Litchfield County, Connecticut, March 30, 1763, and died there, October 17, 1810, aged forty-seven years. He married (first) Ruth Hinman, of Southbury, who died in 1799. He married (second), in Southbury, Connecticut, January 18, 1801, Elizabeth Mitchell, born in Southbury, May 28, 1778, died in Woodbury, May 2, 1843, daughter of Jonathan and Elizabeth (Borland) Mitchell, of Southbury. Children: 1. Thomas, of whom further. 2. David Samuel.

(VI) Thomas (4) Bull, eldest son and child of Samuel David and Elizabeth (Mitchell) Bull, was born in Woodbury, Connecticut, December 9, 1801. He married, in Woodbury, January 19, 1824, Susan Sherman, born in Woodbury, May 15, 1798, daughter of Aaron and Anna (Curtiss) Sherman, of Woodbury. Children: 1. Ann Elizabeth. 2. David Samuel, of whom further. 3. Julia Emily. 4. Susan Jane.

(VII) David Samuel Bull, only son and second child of Thomas (4) and Susan (Sherman) Bull, was born in Woodbury, Connecticut, March 12, 1826. He was a prominent and successful merchant during his early years, and throughout his business life was associated with the Woodbury Bank in an official capacity. A man of talent and capability, he was highly regarded by his neighbors. He married, in Woodbury, March 12, 1860 (his thirty-fourth birthday), Lucy Ann DeForest, born in Woodbury, January 13, 1832, daughter of Marcus and Laura Colton (Perkins) DeForest. Children: 1. Laura Elizabeth, born November 9, 1861. 2. Dr. Thomas Marcus, of whom further. 3. Lucy Emily, born August 10, 1865, died November 28, 1871.

(VIII) Dr. Thomas Marcus Bull, only son and second child of David Samuel and Lucy Ann (De-Forest) Bull, was born in Woodbury, Connecticut, August 27, 1863. He spent the first twenty-one years of his life in his native town, and in the local schools thereof gained the preparatory portion of his education. In early life he selected the profession of medicine for his active career, and all his energy was directed into that channel. After his graduation from the Woodbury High School, in 1881, he entered the Medical School of Columbia University, New York City, from which institution he graduated with the class of 1887, of which he was secretary. He then spent a year as interne at the Skin and Cancer Hospital, in New York City. For three years thereafter he engaged in practice in that city, and then returned to his native State and settled at Naugatuck, where he conducted a most successful and growing practice, extending over a half century. From the outset Dr. Bull specialized in dermatology and was regarded as having been extremely successful in his treatment of troubles of the skin, and held the post of dermatologist in the Waterbury Hospital.

Dr. Bull identified himself with the affairs of both Naugatuck and Waterbury, making his home in the former named place, but conducting his principal practice at the latter place. He was also keenly interested in many other aspects of the life of these cities, and took as active a part therein as his exacting professional duties permitted. He was a Republican in politics, but held no public office except in connection with borough educational matters, in which he was deeply interested. He was for years president of the Naugatuck Board of Education; was vice-president of the Naugatuck Savings Bank, and president of the New Haven County Medical Society, in 1912. Dr. Bull was a thirty-second degree Mason, and belonged to Shepherd Lodge, No. 78, Free and Accepted Masons; Allerton Chapter, No. 39, Royal Arch Masons; and Clark Commandery, No. 7, Knights Templar. He was also a member of Centennial Lodge, No. 100, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Gavel Lodge, No. 18, Knights of Pythias; Naugatuck Tribe, Improved Order of Red Men; Naugatuck Golf Club; and a director and former chairman of the athletic committee of the Young Men's Christian Association of Naugatuck. Dr. Bull was a member of the Congregational Church, at Naugatuck.

Dr. Thomas Marcus Bull married, February 19, 1891, at Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Clara Belle Chapman, of that city. She was born in Pittsfield, April 1, 1870, daughter of Amos and Margaret Elizabeth (Hart) Chapman, representing other families of old colonial stock. Children: 1. David Chapman, born April 26, 1892; graduated from Yale University in 1912, with the degree of Bachelor of Science, and in 1916, from Columbia Medical School, taking his degree of Doctor of Medicine, besides that of Master of Arts; he was connected with the Medical Corps of Squadron A, New York National Guard, during the mobilization of the New York militia in the Mexican Border troubles, and was stationed on the border; and surgeon in the Twelfth New York Infantry, with rank of lieutenant. He went to France as first lieutenant, later promoted to be captain. Was wounded and later returned to work for several years as resident surgeon of Bellevue Hospital and is at present assistant professor of surgery in Columbia University and operates at the Medical Unit in New York. 2. Margaret Emily, born April 22, 1894; a graduate of Wellesley College, class of 1916. 3. Elizabeth DeForest, born May 26, 1898; was valedictorian of the Naugatuck High School, in 1916, and that same year entered Wellesley College.

Quoting from a biographer of 1917:

> Dr. Bull is a fine example of that sterling type of character that has become associated in the popular mind with New England and which has so potently influenced the tone of American ideals and institutions. Honesty and sincerity are the foundations of his character, a certain austerity of conscience, perhaps, which is never exercised fully, however, save in judging himself, and tempered in its action towards all others with a wide tolerance of human frailties and shortcomings. A strong and practical ethical sense, a happy union of idealism with a practical knowledge of the affairs of the world and strong domestic instincts—these are the marks of the best type of New Englander, and these are an accurate description of the character of Dr. Bull as his friends know him, and in his dealings with all men.

Dr. Thomas Marcus Bull was a member of the University Club of Waterbury and the University Club at Winter Park, Florida. He died there March 28, 1938.

J. EDWARD KNAPP—An interesting side-light of the history of Greenwich, Connecticut, is the identification with the town of three successive generations of Knapps all of whom have followed the same business at some period in their lives; and grandfather, father and son figured prominently in the Masonic Order, each being a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner; they all were members of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and Royal Order of Jesters.

Frederick D. Knapp, grandfather of J. Edward Knapp, of this record, was born in Greenwich, October 6, 1852, and was educated there. In early life he engaged in the painting business, and also was tax collector for four years. He became associated with Isaac L. Mead, undertaker, in about 1885, and when Mr. Mead sold his interest, in 1907, it was purchased by Frederick D., and his son, Frederick H., and has since been continued under the name of Fred D. Knapp and Son, being probably the oldest established firm of funeral directors in the community.

Frederick H. Knapp, of the second generation, was born in Greenwich, December 6, 1877, and was educated in local schools and the Renouard School for Embalmers, from which he was graduated in 1898. He served his apprenticeship as funeral director in Worcester, Massachusetts, where he remained until 1905. As indicated, two years later he became a member of the partnership, Fred D. Knapp and Son, in Greenwich. Frederick H. Knapp died on May 15, 1935.

J. Edward Knapp, son of Frederick H. Knapp, was born in Greenwich, May 8, 1908, and supplemented his public and high school education at a later period with studies in the Renouard School for Embalmers, from which he was graduated in May, 1926. Between the time of his leaving high school and his association with his father in business, he gave scope to his undoubted musical gifts as the leader, and owner, of an orchestra. There seems to be no musical instrument that he cannot play, and he showed also the ability to secure loyalty and co-operation from those who played with him. Although his orchestra was good and filled many engagements, Mr. Knapp deserted this line of activity to become identified with his father as a funeral director. After completing his apprenticeship under the older man, in June, 1929, he successfully passed the State examinations. Since July 1, 1935, he has been a member of the Connecticut Board of Examiners of Embalmers.

Mention has been made of the fact that three generations of the Knapps have been thirty-second degree Masons and Shriners, and that all three were affiliated also with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Royal Order of Jesters, Frederick H. Knapp being a past director of the latter order. J. Edward Knapp is, in addition, a member of the Loyal Order of Moose and the Improved Order of Red Men. He is of the Congregational faith and active in local charities and humanitarian works.

On January 26, 1934, J. Edward Knapp married Margaret Jacobson, daughter of David and Ellen Jacobson.

J. FREDERICK CLOSE, M.D.—In the nine years that J. Frederick Close, M.D., has been a practicing physician in Greenwich, he has performed his professional labors with a knowledge and skill that has won him the esteem of a large clientele. His record is the most notable because he specializes in that most difficult science, the hygienic care of children.

Dr. Close is a native of Greenwich, Connecticut, born July 1, 1898, son of Frederick Warner and Sarah Elizabeth (Husted) Close. His father died when the son was two years old, and it was not without difficulties that he was given a sound preparation for college in the Greenwich grammar and high schools. Matriculating at Colgate University, he was graduated a Bachelor of Arts, in 1921, and four years later, received his medical degree as a member of the class of 1925, College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City. For two years he interned at Roosevelt Hospital, New York City, and for another year was in the Children's Hospital, at St. Louis, Missouri.

Initiating his medical practice, in 1928, at East Orange, New Jersey, Dr. Close remained there for less than a year, coming to Greenwich in the spring of 1929. His offices are now at No. 66 Milbank Avenue, in this town. He specializes in pediatrics, for which he is ideally fitted by both temperament, training and experience, a fact well recognized by members of his craft and the community. He is attending pediatrician at the Greenwich Hospital, consultant pediatrician for the Greenwich Municipal Hospital, and pediatrist at the Greenwich Shelter. His professional memberships include those in the local, county, and American Medical Associations, and he has served as secretary of the Greenwich Medical Society for the years 1935 and 1936. During the World War, Dr. Close was in the Students Auxiliary Training Corps. He is a popular member of the Rotary Club. Golf and fishing rank first among his recreations. Dr. Close is a member of the Second Congregational Church.

JOSEPH W. CONE—Equipped with the best technical education of the schools, Joseph W. Cone, of Greenwich, began the practice of civil engineering about thirty years ago. He is thoroughly well known in professional circles; is a member of the Connecticut Board of Registration for Professional Engineers and Surveyors, State Board of Civil Engineers, and is president of S. E. Minor and Company, Incorporated, Greenwich, which firm he became associated with in young manhood.

Mr. Cone was born in Southport, Connecticut, October 6, 1881, son of Francillon and Julia (Partree) Cone. He attended the Norfolk grammar and high schools, the Robbins School, and was graduated from the Sheffield School, Yale University, in 1905, with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. He also had won two years' general honors, and a prize in Civil Engineering. He has been with S. E. Minor and Company, Incorporated, since July 1, 1905, and is now its president and secretary. He is also secretary and a director of the Greenwich Mortgage Company; a director of the Greenwich Chamber of Commerce, and an active figure in community life and affairs.

Mr. Cone was a captain in the Coast Artillery during the World War. Numbered among his memberships in professional organizations are those in the Connecticut Society of Civil Engineers, director of the National Society of Professional Engineers, and he is a Sigma Xi. Mention has been made that he is a member of the State Board of Registration for Professional Engineers and Surveyors, and of the State Board of Engineers. His fraternal affiliations are with the Masonic Order, being a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason. His clubs are the Rotary and the Riverside Yacht, boating long being one of his recreations. Mr. Cone's interesting hobby is the collection of first, or rare, editions of Mark Twain's works. In politics he is a Republican, and he is of the Congregational faith.

At Greenwich, Connecticut, on June 10, 1910, Joseph W. Cone married (first) Estelle Whiting. He married (second), in Fall River, Massachusetts, on March 31, 1923, Lydia A. Slade. There are three daughters in the family: 1. Dorothy W. 2. Phoebe Slade. 3. Caroline Winslow.

JOHN C. DUREY—The subject of this sketch is engaged in the practice of law in Stamford. Since 1929, he has been senior partner of the firm of Durey, Pierson and Comley, one of the leading law firms of the State of Connecticut. This firm represents many important financial and industrial institutions, with several of which Mr. Durey is also connected in an executive capacity.

Mr. Durey was born in Saybrook, Ohio, October 12, 1880, a son of Thomas H. and Mary Julissa (Jenks) Durey. His father, who was born November 1, 1838, in Kent, England, came to this country when a young man and settled in Saybrook, Ohio, where other members of the family were located. Here Thomas H. Durey continued to live until his death in 1887.

John C. Durey attended the public schools at Saybrook and later enrolled at the Geneva Institute, Geneva, Ohio, from which he was graduated in 1899. Later he attended Yale University, where he prepared for his professional career, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Laws cum laude in 1906. He was a member of Phi Delta Phi and Corbey Court fraternities, and for two years served on the editorial board of the "Yale Law Journal." Upon admission to the Connecticut bar in 1907, he entered practice at Stamford as an associate of John E. Keeler who afterward became a justice of the Supreme Court of Errors, of Connecticut. Later he was admitted to partnership by Judge Keeler, under the firm name of Keeler and Durey. This firm was in existence from January 1, 1913, to May 1, 1918, when Mr. Keeler was elevated to the bench. In 1919, the firm of Durey and Pierson was formed and, in 1923, this firm consolidated with Frederick C. Taylor, under the name of Taylor, Durey and Pierson, which continued until Judge Taylor's death in November, 1928. In 1929, John M. Comley was admitted to the firm, which has since been known as Durey, Pierson and Comley. Mr. Durey is a director and vice-president of the First-Stamford National Bank and Trust Company, a director of the Stamford Gas and Electric Company, the Citizens' Savings Bank of Stamford and the Western Connecticut Title and Mortgage Company.

Despite the pressure of his other interests, Mr. Durey has found time to be active in the civic and social life of Stamford. He is president and trustee of the Stamford Home for the Aged and a director of the Stamford Hospital. Mr. Durey is a Republican in politics and a member and vestryman of St. John's Episcopal Church, of Stamford. He is a member of the Fairfield County Bar Association, the Connecticut Bar Association and the American Bar Association. Among his clubs are the Suburban, of which he was formerly president and governor, the Woodway Country Club, the Stamford Yacht Club, the University Club, of Bridgeport, the Union League Club, of New York, and the Yale Club, of New York.

On October 20, 1921, at Noroton, Mr. Durey married Kathryn Talbot St. John, a daughter of the late Talbot Munroe and Marie (Forbes) St. John. Mrs. Durey is a graduate of the Low-Heywood School for Girls, is a member of the Junior League, and of the boards of the Stamford Children's Home and the Visiting Nurses Association. Mr. and Mrs. Durey are the parents of three children: 1. John C., Jr., born February 11, 1930. 2. Forbes, born June 18, 1931. 3. Patricia Talbot, born August 4, 1934.

JUDGE WILLIAM ALBERT KELLY—Since 1931, William Albert Kelly has served as judge of the Town Court of Darien. His career, which covers almost two decades, has brought him distinction both in his profession, as a member of the noted firm of Cummings and Lockwood, Stamford, and in public life.

Judge Kelly was born in Providence, Rhode Island, on February 25, 1895, a son of Dr. John Devin and Marianna (Schraub) Kelly. His father, who was born April 1, 1848, in Norwalk, Connecticut, was a graduate of Colgate College and of the College of Physicians and Surgeons (Columbia University), from which he was graduated in 1880. He was a physician in New Haven during the greater part of his active life, practicing for about thirty years. He died on January 10, 1920, in Hamden, Connecticut, where his later activities centered.

William Albert Kelly was only three years old when he moved with his parents to New Haven and received his preliminary education in the public schools of New Haven and Hamden. He also attended Sanford School, at Redding Ridge, for a short time and, in 1917, was graduated from Yale College. He prepared for his profession in Yale Law School, taking his degree in 1919, and in the same year was admitted to the Connecticut bar. While a law student he was a member of the editorial board of the "Yale Law Journal." In 1921, Judge Kelly was admitted to the New York bar. Meanwhile, beginning in 1919, he was associated with the New York firm of Eidlitz and Hulse, engaging in general practice until 1923. In the latter year he returned to Connecticut to become associated with the firm of Cummings and Lockwood at Stamford and, on January 1, 1929, was admitted as a member of that firm, taking an active part in its extensive practice during the intervening period. He is known as an able counsellor and trial lawyer, whose legal scholarship and acumen have brought him high professional standing. These qualities made for him a place as judge of the Town Court of Darien, to which he was chosen in 1931 and in which he has since served.

Judge Kelly has also assumed other responsibilities in civic and public life. He has served as a member of the Darien Board of Finance since 1927; as a member of the Board of Trustees of Fairfield State Hospital since 1933; as a director of the Stamford branch of the Connecticut Humane Society since 1925, and as a member of the Board of Directors of the Connecticut Mental Hygiene Society. He has been active in Democratic politics for a number of years and, since 1934, has been chairman of the Fairfield County Democratic Committee. Judge Kelly is affiliated fraternally with Ivanhoe Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, at Darien, and is a member of Yale Chapter of the Phi Delta Phi fraternity. He is a member, in addition, of the Wee Burn Country Club, the Suburban Club, of Stamford, the Yale Club, of New York, and the several bar associations, including the American and Connecticut State Bar Associations and the Bar Association of the City of New York. Judge Kelly is a communicant of St. John's Episcopal Church in Stamford. He is fond of golf and gardening, and of breeding dogs and poultry, which are his principal leisure interests.

On November 7, 1925, at St. John's Church, Stamford, William Albert Kelly married Louise Freylinghuysen Smith, daughter of Charles and Laura Gaines (Chambers) Smith. Judge and Mrs. Kelly have one son, William Gaines, born March 15, 1928.

JOHN MILTON BURRALL—As a native and lifelong resident of the city of Waterbury, John Milton Burrall, deputy registrar of voters since 1934, has contributed substantially and usefully to the social, civic and business affairs of the community.

(I) The earliest known ancestor of the line of the Burrall family herein followed was William Burrall, a native of England, a chemist and refiner of metals, who was induced to come to America in 1715 by the owner of copper mines in Simsbury, Connecticut. The headquarters were located in Boston, Massachusetts, where Mr. Burrall resided for a time, removing to Simsbury, Connecticut, about 1720. He married (first) Joanna Westover, who remained in England, and shortly after his arrival here she died at Redworth, England. He married (second) Hannah, widow of Thomas Welton, of Waterbury, to whom she was married on March 9, 1714, and who died in Waterbury on April 9, 1717. She was born March 12, 1694, daughter of Josiah and Hannah (Westover) Allford, of Simsbury. William Burrall died in Connecticut, 1723.

(II) Colonel Charles (1) Burrall, son of William Burrall, was born February 21, 1720, in Simsbury, Connecticut, and died October 7, 1803. He settled in Canaan, Connecticut, of which town he was one of the grantees, probably before 1750, and was its representative in the General Court in 1760-61-62-63, 1766, 1769, 1770-71-72-73-74, 1778-79, 1781-82-83, 1785-86-87-88. In 1769 he was styled captain, 1770 major, and in 1778 and thenceforward colonel. He received his commission as colonel from Governor Trumbull, and led the troops of the State in the battle of Ticonderoga. His regiment was the Fourteenth Connecticut Militia, which did such good service under General Gates in New York in 1777, and later at Bennington, Vermont. He married, for his second wife, December 25, 1746, Abigail Kellogg, born on September 28, 1728, and died January 28, 1789.

(III) Captain Charles (2) Burrall, son of Colonel Charles (1) Burrall, was born February 18, 1751, and died January 17, 1820. He also represented the Town of Canaan, Connecticut, in the State Legislature in 1789-90, 1792-93-94-95. He married Anna Beebe of Canaan, Connecticut.

(IV) Charles (3) Burrall, son of Captain Charles (2) Burrall, married Lucy Beach, and among their children was John Milton, of whom further.

(V) John Milton (1) Burrall, son of Charles (3) and Lucy (Beach) Burrall, was born in Canaan, Connecticut, January 8, 1817. He was educated in the schools of Canaan and Hartford Academy, and after completing his studies he served an apprenticeship at the trade of cabinetmaking in Hartford, of which city he was a resident four years. He then engaged in business in Plymouth and conducted the same until October, 1849, in which year he formed a partnership with George Root of Waterbury, and they established a furniture store on East Main Street, Waterbury, under the firm name of J. M. Burrall & Company. In 1852 a building was erected at No. 60 Bank Street, where the partners conducted a furniture and undertaking business under the name of Burrall & Root, and later the business was conducted under the names of J. M. Burrall & Sons and J. M. Burrall & Company. Mr. Burrall was one of the oldest business men in Waterbury, also one of the most successful, conducting his business along honorable and straightforward lines, winning and retaining the respect and esteem of all with whom he had business relations. He was also one of the oldest directors of the Waterbury National Bank, a director of the Waterbury Savings Bank, a member of the Common Council, a member of the Board of Relief, a member of the District School Committee in 1859, in which work he took an active interest, and was one of the original members of the Citizens Engine Company, No. 2, of Waterbury. Mr. Burrall married (first), July 8, 1841, Mary Louise Coley, born in Plymouth, Connecticut, and died January 29, 1889. Their children were: 1. Charles Homer, who died in Plymouth, Connecticut, October 1, 1842. 2. Lucy Marion, born May 8, 1844, died March 9, 1866. 3. Edward Milton, born May 24, 1848, died November 4, 1901, married, May 17, 1877, Mary Eunice Booth, daughter of John C. Booth. 4. Charles William, of whom further. Mr. Burrall married (second), April 9, 1894, Mrs. Mary J. Bunnell.

(VI) Charles William Burrall, son of John Milton and Mary Louise (Coley) Burrall, was born in Waterbury, Connecticut, April 10, 1850. He acquired a practical education in the schools of his native city, and for many years thereafter he was successfully engaged in business pursuits, having been a member of the J. M. Burrall & Company, established by his father, which was a very thriving establishment, engaged in the furniture trade. He married, October 2, 1872, Cora LeRoy Pritchard, born in Waterbury, Connecticut, died aged forty-three years, daughter of George and Frances Jeannette (Scott) Pritchard. Three children were born of this marriage: 1. John Milton, of whom further. 2. Lucy Beach. 3. Mary Frances. Lucy Beach and Mary Frances are both living unmarried in Waterbury.

(VII) John Milton Burrall was born in Waterbury, August 13, 1873, the son of Charles William and Cora LeRoy (Pritchard) Burrall.

After a general education in the Waterbury public schools and at a business college, John Milton Burrall began his business career as a clerk for the American Ring Company, which he was to be associated with in various capacities until its dissolution in 1933. In the interim he made steady progress. He was promoted from the position of clerk, which he held in 1895, to that of secretary of the company in 1906, and five years later was named general manager, continuing in this office until the company went out of business. As one of the leading business leaders of this community he has also taken an active part in other business and financial enterprises, notably the Waterbury Savings Bank, for which he serves as a member of the board of directors.

Acutely aware of his civic obligations, Mr. Burrall has won a place of leadership in the civic affairs of Waterbury where he has served as deputy registrar of voters since 1934. He served as a former alderman from the Third Ward under Mayor Hotchkiss, a member of the Board of Public Safety and has been on the Board of Education. In his political convictions he subscribes to the principles of the Republican party and is an influential figure in the local organization. He is a member of Boy Scouts of America, having served as commissioner and president of the local organization, and is also on the Council of the Waterbury Girl Scouts. Since 1929 he has been president of the local chapter of the American Red Cross. He has been very active in promoting the interests of the State militia, and is listed as a charter member of Company H, Connecticut National Guard, which he joined as a private, serving successively as a non-commissioned officer, first lieutenant and battalion adjutant of the Second Battalion, a rank he assumed in 1913. He resigned from this organization two years later. During the World War he served as captain and supply officer of the Fifth Infantry, Connecticut State Guard, and as captain and regimental adjutant. Following this he served as a major on Governor Templeton's staff, 1923-1925, and at present is captain of the Second Company of the Governor's Foot Guards. Mr. Burrall worships at St. John's Episcopal Church of Waterbury, for which he serves as clerk of the parish and parish agent. Socially, he is a member of the Waterbury Club, the Waterbury Country Club, and the Waterbury Kiwanis Club.

On May 20, 1895, in New York City, Mr. Burrall married Inez Hart, daughter of Era Thomas Hart, a prominent manufacturer of Newark, New Jersey, and Elizabeth (Upson) Hart. Mr. and Mrs. Burrall are the parents of three sons: 1. John Milton, Jr., born April 3, 1908. 2. Henry Driggs, born November 15, 1911. 3. Stephen Hart, born February 21, 1913.

WARREN FRANCIS CRESSY—During his career at the Fairfield County bar, Warren Francis Cressy has developed a large practice, which reflects his high professional standing and the value placed upon his services by the interests which he represents. He is now senior partner of the firm of Cressy, Bartram, Melvin and Sherwood, at Stamford, successor to several notable law firms of earlier years and one of the strongest now engaged in practice.

Mr. Cressy was born in Oxford, Connecticut, on July 5, 1878, a son of Anson F. and Mary J. (Hill) Cressy. He is a direct descendant of Mighiel Cressy, founder of the old New England family of this name, who settled at Salem, Massachusetts, in 1649, residing there for the remainder of his life. Jason F. Cressy, grandfather of Warren F. Cressy, was born in Chesterfield, New Hampshire, and died at Hinsdale, in the same State. He was a life-long resident of New Hampshire and devoted his active career to agricultural pursuits. Anson F. Cressy, the father, was born in Hinsdale, but removed in later life to Oxford, Connecticut, where he died in 1879. A machinist and master mechanic, he served for a number of years as superintendent of the Joseph Swan Company, at Seymour, Connecticut, and demonstrated his considerable inventive skill by the development of a number of machine bits which are still in common use. His wife, Mary J. (Hill) Cressy, was born in Winhall, Vermont, in 1835, and died in Bristol, Connecticut, in 1897.

Warren Francis Cressy, of this record, received his early education in the public schools of Bristol and prepared for his profession at Yale Law School, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1905. In the same year he was admitted to the bar and began practice at New Haven as a partner of Ernest L. Averill, later assistant attorney-general. On January 1, 1907, however, he removed to Stamford, where his activities have since centered and became associated with the old firm of Fessenden and Carter. Upon the death of the senior partner in 1908, he continued with the surviving member, Galen A. Carter, under the earlier firm name and in 1912 was admitted to partnership in the firm. Its name was changed, in November, 1919, to Carter and Cressy, a form continued after the death of Mr. Carter on July 10, 1922. On January 1, 1928, having practiced alone meanwhile, he organized the firm of Cressy and Sherwood, with Clinton E. Sherwood, who had been a junior associate since December, 1922. The present firm was organized September 1, 1929. Floyd B. Bartram, then admitted to the firm, had been for eight years Judge of Probate, in Stamford, and Joseph L. Melvin was then junior partner in the firm of Mead, Mead and Melvin. Recently, Warren F. Cressy, Jr., has also become associated with the firm. Mr. Cressy has served as attorney and counsel for many important interests of Fairfield County, covering a wide range of cases in numerous phases of law. His judgment, both in his profession and in general business affairs, is highly regarded, and among other important connections he serves as director, secretary and member of the executive committee of the Stamford Savings Bank; and as counsel for the Stamford Savings Bank, the Stamford Trust Company, the Stamford Gas and Electric Company and the Stamford-Oyster Bay Ferry Corporation. He has found time to be active in civic affairs and public life, serving, variously, as a member of the Stamford Common Council and of the School Board; as trustee of the Stamford Taxpayers Association; as vice-president of the Stamford Council of the Boy Scouts of America; and in other capacities. He has given his hearty support to all worthy movements in the public interest, fully meeting the responsibilities of good citizenship and exercising a constructive influence of value in his community.

Mr. Cressy is a member of the American Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association, the Fairfield County Bar Association, the Stamford Bar Association and the New York County (N. Y.) Lawyers' Association. Mr. Cressy is president of the Association of Delegates of the State Bar Association and representative of the State Bar Association in the House of Delegates of the American Bar Association; and member of the State Board of Bar Examiners. He is affiliated fraternally with Union Lodge, No. 5, Free and Accepted Masons, and with Puritan Lodge, No. 43, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is also a member of the Stamford Rotary Club, the Hubbard Heights Golf Club, the Stamford Chamber of Commerce, of which he is a director, the Yale Club of New York, the Graduates' Club of New Haven and the University Club of Bridgeport. During the World War, Mr. Cressy was a "Four-Minute Speaker," assisted in the registration at Stamford under the draft act and was otherwise active in his country's cause. He is a Republican in politics and is a member and official of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Stamford.

On June 29, 1908, in Seymour, Connecticut, Warren Francis Cressy married May L. Butler, who was born in Union City, Connecticut, daughter of George and Mary (Nettle) Butler, both of English birth. Mrs. Cressy, who was educated in the public schools of Seymour, is affiliated with the Order of the Eastern Star in that community and was one of the organizers of the Schubert Club of Stamford, in which she has since been active.

Mr. and Mrs. Cressy are the parents of one son, Warren Francis, Jr., born in Stamford, October 19, 1909. He was graduated from Phillips Andover Academy in 1928, from Yale College in 1932 and from Yale Law School in 1935. Since his admission to the bar in that year, he has been associated in the practice of law with his father. On June 29, 1935, he married Bernice Foster, niece of the late Dr. Dean Foster.

JUDGE JAMES ELBERT BRINCKERHOFF— Since his admission to the Connecticut bar in 1905, Judge James Elbert Brinckerhoff, now a member of the law firm of Curtis, Brinckerhoff and Barrett, at Stamford, has risen steadily in his profession. In his practice, his service on the bench and as one of the State's most prominent Masons, he has won a distinguished reputation and is today widely known in Connecticut life.

Judge Brinckerhoff was born in New Canaan, on March 16, 1883, a son of Charles E. and Caravelle E. (Lobdell) Brinckerhoff. He is descended paternally from the old Dutch family established in this country by Joris Brinckerhoff, who emigrated from Amsterdam, Holland, in 1638, and settled on what is now Manhattan Island, New York. Charles E. Brinckerhoff, the father, was born in New Canaan, March 24, 1857, and during his active career was a merchant and business man. His wife, Caravelle E. (Lobdell) Brinckerhoff, was born near Bridgeport, October 2, 1856, daughter of James and Laura (Keeler) Lobdell and a descendant of old New England stock.

James Elbert Brinckerhoff spent his boyhood in New Canaan, and after completing the high school course there, entered Wyckoff School in preparation for further study at Yale. In 1904, he was graduated from Yale Law School with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and in January, 1905, was admitted to the Connecticut bar. Upon beginning his professional career he became associated with the Stamford firm of Curtis and Curtis and subsequently entered into partnership with the surviving partner, Louis J. Curtis, forming the firm of Curtis and Brinckerhoff in 1908. In 1922, with the admission of Frank P. Barrett, the firm was reorganized under its present name, Curtis, Brinckerhoff and Barrett. Judge Brinckerhoff, who has never limited his activity to any single field of law, conducts a general practice but is known as a specialist in real estate and corporation law and in the trial of causes. His legal scholarship and acumen have been reflected in his successful record. His service on the bench, as Deputy Judge of the City Court of Stamford from 1915 to 1927, and as Judge of that court from 1927 to 1929, enhanced his reputation and added another feature to the many civic responsibilities he has faithfully discharged.

Judge Brinckerhoff is a member of the American Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association, the Fairfield County Bar Association and the Stamford Bar Association. Among other important connections, his firm are counsel for the Fidelity Title and Trust Company and he himself is a director of the Mortgage Bond and Title Company of Stamford, and president of the Connecticut Title Association. He has been influential for years in Republican politics of the State, serving over a long period as president of the Republican Club of Stamford, and although he has held no public office except as judge, his active leadership and sympathetic support have been vital factors in the success of many civic causes in the community in which he makes his home. Judge Brinckerhoff has also devoted much of his time to Masonry, and in 1934, served as Grand Master of the Connecticut Grand Lodge, an honor conferred upon him in recognition of his many contributions to the progress of the order and his allegiance to its finest ideals. He is a member and Past Master of Union Lodge, No. 5, Free and Accepted Masons; a member of all higher bodies of both York and Scottish Rites, including Rittenhouse Chapter, No. 1, Royal Arch Masons; Washington Council, No. 6, Royal and Select Masters; Stamford Commandery, No. 12, Knights Templar; and Lafayette Consistory, thirty-second degree, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite; and a member of Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Bridgeport. Judge Brinckerhoff is also affiliated with Stamford Lodge, No. 24, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; is a member of the Stamford Rotary Club, of which he was president in 1926-27; and the Hubbard Heights Golf Club. In addition to these connections, he is a member of the Stamford Historical Society and a communicant of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church. During the World War, Judge Brinckerhoff was a "four-minute speaker" and was otherwise active in supporting the various movements of the period. His favorite recreation is golf.

On November 16, 1908, in New Canaan, Connecticut, James Elbert Brinckerhoff married Marion Brown Ballantyne Rae, daughter of Thomas and Jane (Meikle) Rae, born respectively at Symington and Inverness, Scotland. Her father, who came to the United States in early life, was a contractor and builder, having charge for many years of construction work for the Trinity Corporation in New York City. He was also president of the firm of Crane and Clarke, lumber dealers, of New York. Mrs. Brinckerhoff, who is a direct descendant of the national hero of Scotland, Robert Bruce, was born in Hoboken, New Jersey, October 29, 1883, and was educated in Mrs. Ayers' School and Wyckoff School at New Canaan. She is a member of the Stamford Woman's Club and of the New Canaan Congregational Church. Judge and Mrs. Brinckerhoff are the parents of four children: 1. Elbert Rae, born August 27, 1911. 2. Eleanor Harriet, a graduate of Connecticut State College. 3. Richard Loring, born March 5, 1919, now a student at Williams College. 4. Robert Bain, born November 25, 1921.

HARRY GULEY WATERBURY—Through his long association with the development of the Stamford Gas and Electric Company and his prominence in the city's public life, Harry Guley Waterbury has continued the active service in promoting the progress of Stamford which has distinguished his family for many generations.

Mr. Waterbury was born in Stamford on November 10, 1868, a son of Captain William Tell and Sarah (Guley) Waterbury. He is a direct descendant in the sixth generation of John Waterbury, who was among those to come from Wethersfield to Stamford, receiving a grant of land in this community in 1650. He died at Stamford eight years later, but his children remained and founded the numerous families of the name which are still prominent in the life of Fairfield County. In an old "History of Stamford," by the Rev. Mr. Huntington, the author speaks of this family in the highest terms.

"There were the Waterburys," he wrote, "then known as Senior and Junior, the former being a colonel in the Continental service, who had earned some reputation for good judgment and military ability in the field, and the latter soon to earn by his personal fitness for it, the rank of general of brigade."

From John Waterbury, the Stamford founder, the line is traced through David Waterbury, who was born at Stamford on February 12, 1722. He served with distinction in the French and Indian War, holding the commission of major, and was representative in the General Assembly when the Revolutionary War broke out. He espoused the cause of the colonies with warm ardor, being considered one of Stamford's greatest patriots. Enlisting in the Continental Army as a colonel, he was promoted in 1776 to brigadier-general, and with that rank commanded a brigade of Connecticut troops. After the war, he was again a representative and selectman, remaining as a resident of Stamford until his death on June 29, 1801.

Captain William Waterbury, fourth son of Brigadier-General David Waterbury, was born on October 10, 1765, and died on January 10, 1842. He devoted much of his life to the public service and was widely known for his opposition to the tax on the Congregational Church Society, using his private means liberally to establish the freedom of the church in the same spirit that he had given his services to the cause of political freedom. He married Mrs. Sally Jessup, daughter of Philip Lockwood.

Captain David (2) Waterbury, their eldest son, was born on April 17, 1819. At the age of fifteen he shipped aboard a market boat trading weekly between Stamford and New York, and rose rapidly in the merchant marine until, before his twentieth birthday, he was captain and owner of the sloop "Rival," of fifty tons burden. In 1852, with Edmund Lockwood and Lewis Waterbury, he purchased the steamer "William W. Frazier," a daily passenger and freight boat plying between Stamford and New York. Captain Lockwood commanded the vessel, and Captain Waterbury assumed the responsibilities of superintendent and general agent, with offices in Stamford. This steamer was the first to run regularly between Stamford and New York and the first on this route to be owned in Stamford. In 1859, the company built a new steamer, the "Ella," which was sold to the United States Government during the Civil War. In 1863, with Oliver Scofield replacing Captain Lockwood in the firm, the steamer "Stamford" was commissioned, to be followed, in 1865, by the "Shippan." In 1870, the line was sold by its owners to R. Cornell White, of New York, but it was a failure under this management and, in 1873, Captain Waterbury reorganized the company under the name of the Stamford Transportation Company, becoming its manager. Subsequently he again sold his transportation interests to the North and East River Steamboat Company. Meanwhile, in 1870, he had established a business in coal and wood at Stamford, which he continued until his death on November 22, 1894. His services to the development of Stamford as a commercial center have given his name a lasting place in its annals.

He married (first), on January 23, 1842, Sarah M. Selleck, daughter of John and Charlotte (Mead) Selleck, of Greenwich, Connecticut. Of their children, the eldest of the six who lived to reach maturity, was Captain William Tell Waterbury, father of Harry Guley Waterbury.

William Tell Waterbury was born in Stamford on March 4, 1843, and died here on February 12, 1912. Educated in the public schools of Stamford and in the famous Glendenning Academy, he followed his father's example in seeking a career at sea and accompanied the elder man on his voyages when the opportunity offered. After his graduation from school he obtained a place on a small sailing vessel in the Stamford and New York trade and within a relatively brief period qualified as a master and assumed command of the sloop. He was actively associated with maritime pursuits until a few years before his death, when he retired. Captain Waterbury was a member of the volunteer fire department, the only one of its day in the community, was affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons, and was otherwise active in the institutions of the town. His wife, Sarah Guley, was a daughter of Jacob Guley, who was born in England and came to America about 1844, entering the woolen business which he followed in various textile centers of the East. His wife and daughter joined him in 1851. Captain and Mrs. Waterbury were the parents of three children: Harry Guley, of this record, S. Maud, and Alice Dodge.

Harry Guley Waterbury has been a resident of Stamford throughout his life. He received his education in the local public schools and began his career with Lyman Hoyt and Son, furniture dealers, with whom he was associated for ten years. After this initial experience, he was appointed and served for two and a half years as assistant postmaster of Stamford, resigning to enter the employ of The Stamford Gas and Electric Company. At the time he was the only clerk of the company. As the organization developed with the extension of its business and the continued progress of the electrical industry, Mr. Waterbury assumed greater responsibilities in its operation and was at length appointed auditor of the company. This office he has held during the intervening years, administering the duties devolving upon him with efficiency and success, advancing until he became a director and secretary and treasurer in February, 1929, which positions he continued to hold until June 30, 1936, on which date The Stamford Gas and Electric Company was merged with The Connecticut Power Company. From that date he became assistant treasurer of The Connecticut Power Company, so serving until his retirement in February, 1937. He still remains a member of the divisional committee of the Stamford division of The Connecticut Power Company. He is also a director of the First-Stamford National Bank and Trust Company, and director and vice-president of the Stamford Savings Bank, taking an active part in their counsels. His judgment and broad knowledge of finance are valued not only by his immediate associates but by the community at large, which availed itself of his services as town treasurer in 1904-1905 and as a member of the Board of Finance from 1917 to 1923.

In addition to these connections, Mr. Waterbury was treasurer of the Woodland Cemetery Association and is now director. He is affiliated fraternally with the Free and Accepted Masons and is active in the order, being a member and Past Master of Union Lodge at Stamford; Past High Priest of Rittenhouse Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Past Master of Washington Council, Royal and Select Masons; a member of Stamford Commandery of the Knights Templar at Stamford; a member of the various Scottish Rite bodies, including Lafayette Consistory, and a member of Pyramid Temple at Bridgeport, of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is also a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, the Military Order of Foreign Wars and of the Masonic Past Masters' Association of Fairfield County.

On April 25, 1901, Harry Guley Waterbury married Mary L. Clark, daughter of George H. Clark, of Pittsfield, Massachusetts, and granddaughter of Selden Yale and Hannah N. (Sears) Clark, members of very old New England families. One of her ancestors, Jonathan Clark, was a signer of the Massachusetts Constitution. George H. Clark was born in Pittsfield, Massachusetts, on April 29, 1848, and died on September 7, 1916. He was a leading citizen of Pittsfield and in his business career was associated with the government paper mills, which were engaged in the production of the paper used in government currency. He married Mary Baker, born February 16, 1850, died February 6, 1915. Their daughter, Mrs. Waterbury, is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, to which she is eligible through the military services of both Clark and Yale ancestors.

Mr. and Mrs. Waterbury are the parents of one daughter, Beryl Clark, born March 20, 1902, a graduate of Smith College. She has had an active part in the work of various civic and charitable enterprises at Stamford, particularly the Community Chest, the Children's Home, and the Young Women's Christian Association.

GEORGE R. CLOSE—For more than thirty years, George R. Close has followed a career of public service as assistant town clerk and town clerk successively at Stamford. He has held his present office since 1915, a tenure reflecting the high value placed upon his abilities and devotion by the people of the municipality.

Mr. Close was born at Stamford on November 10, 1883, a son of Louis M. and Anna M. (Davis) Close. Educated in the public schools of Stamford, where he completed the high school course, he began his active career with the Yale and Towne Manufacturing Company, in June, 1903, continuing with this organization until October, 1905. In the latter month and year, he was appointed assistant town clerk of Stamford and served as such without interruption until August, 1915. Since that time he has held the office of town clerk, a position for which his earlier experience fully qualified him and which he has administered with fidelity and success.

Mr. Close was president of the Connecticut Town Clerks' Association, in which he has long been active, and is vice-president of the New England Town Clerks' Association, a member of various other organizations, including the Hubbard Heights Golf Club, of which he is secretary. He is affiliated fraternally with the Free and Accepted Masons, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Improved Order of Red Men. In politics he is a Republican and in religious faith, a Methodist.

On December 8, 1904, George R. Close married Florence Lockwood. They are the parents of one son, George Everett, born May 3, 1919.

JAMES ALEXANDER FRASER MacCAMMOND—Born in Hoboken, New Jersey, on March 10, 1881, James A. F. MacCammond is the son of David and Jessie S. (Fraser) MacCammond. He spent his early life in Hoboken, receiving his education in local public schools, and began his career as an office boy in a New York lawyer's office. Later, he was associated for about six years with a tin foil concern, serving as office boy, clerk and stenographer. At the end of this time he formed a connection with the Dumbarton Iron Works in New York City, whose employ he entered as a bookkeeper, and in 1911, he purchased a half interest in the business, continuing as a partner in the company until 1928, when it was sold. During this time he had a major part in all its operations.

Meanwhile, in 1908, Mr. MacCammond had become a resident of Darien. With passing years his activity in the life of the community increased, and after his release from business duties in New York, he was appointed, on May 19, 1928, town clerk and treasurer, which offices he has since administered. Mr. MacCammond was also a member for ten years of the Darien Board of Education. He is active fraternally in the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he is Past Master of Ivanhoe Lodge; is a member of the St. Andrew's Society in New York; and of the Congregational Church of Darien. His civic interests are varied, reflecting his concern for the welfare of the town and its institutions and his conception of the obligations of good citizenship.

On January 10, 1910, in Hoboken, New Jersey, James Alexander Fraser MacCammond married Elizabeth J. MacInnes. Her father was Archibald MacInnes, of Hoboken. Her mother's maiden name was Cook. Mr. and Mrs. MacCammond are the parents of three children: 1. Archibald Fraser, of Darien, who married Helen Marcia Perry and has one daughter, Marcia Elizabeth. 2. Innes Davidson. 3. James Alexander Fraser, Jr.

ALFRED TWEEDY—A member of the large group of men who followed their profession or business in New York City and have their homes in Connecticut, Alfred Tweedy, lawyer, has been exceptionally active in the affairs of Darien.

In the fall of 1930, he was elected Judge of Probate for the District of Darien, and in November, 1936, he was re-elected to succeed himself for the fourth time. Although nominated each time by the Republican Party, he was also endorsed by the Democrats. His contributions, as man and citizen, to town life and interests, have been numerous and progressive.

Judge Tweedy is a native of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, where he was born on February 24, 1880, a son of James Fisher Tweedy, a well known Wall Street broker, and Alice (Blecher) Tweedy. He was educated in New York City at the Collegiate School, from which he was graduated in 1900, and then entered Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University, from which he received his degree three years later. During the next seven years he was associated with the New York Telephone Company. He attended the night classes of the New York Law School and at the end of two years received the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He was admitted to the bar of the State of New York in 1910. At first he was associated with a well known law firm in the City of New York, and later opened his own office there for the general practice of law, where he has continuously practiced. His office is at No. 2 Rector Street in that city. He is a member of the Yale Club of New York and of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York.

In the year 1930 he was admitted to practice in the State of Connecticut. In addition to being Judge of Probate, he is chairman of the finance committee of the Darien Free Library, and a member of the executive committee of the Noroton Fire Company.

Judge Tweedy married Carrie Welch, also a native of Milwaukee, a daughter of Charles W. and the late Kate (Andrews) Welch.

CHARLES JENKINS FOOTE, M.D.—Carrying on a practice of medicine in New Haven, Dr. Charles Jenkins Foote has specialized mainly in internal medicine.

Dr. Foote was born August 28, 1861, in New Haven, Connecticut, son of Charles Cheney and Amelia Leavitt (Jenkins) Foote and member of an old and honorable family. His grandfather, Elial Todd Foote, was an early settler of Jamestown, New York, who, born in Gill, Massachusetts, went early to Jamestown, whence he came in 1842 to New Haven. He also was a physician. Charles Cheney Foote, father of the present Dr. Foote, was born in Jamestown, and he also was a physician by occupation. The mother, Amelia L. (Jenkins) Foote, was a native of Portland, Maine. On the maternal side of his house, Dr. Charles J. Foote's earliest ancestor in Connecticut was Ezra Stiles, the president of Yale University, who came to New Haven from Newport, Rhode Island.

Charles Jenkins Foote attended the Hopkins Grammar School, in New Haven, later becoming a student at Yale University here, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1883. In 1887, he took the degree of Doctor of Medicine at Harvard Medical School. In that year and in 1888, he served as an interne at Boston City Hospital. In 1888, he began his practice of medicine in New Haven, continuing this work down to the time of writing and specializing in internal medicine.

Between 1892 and 1902, he served as an instructor in bacteriology and clinical medicine at Yale Medical School. He has at all periods of his mature professional life written articles on bacteriology and internal medicine for different medical journals, and he is also a member of the New Haven Medical Association (of which he is a past president), the Connecticut Medical Society and the American Medical Association. In his political views he is a staunch Republican, and for years he was a deacon of the United Congregational Church. He belongs to the Yale Graduates' Club.

Dr. Charles Jenkins Foote married, in New Haven, Connecticut, on April 22, 1914, Grace W. Knouse, daughter of the Rev. William H. and Sara (Hull) Knouse. Mrs. Foote was a descendant on the maternal side of her house from Nathaniel Lynde, who was the first treasurer of Yale University and a prominent resident of Saybrook. Mrs. Foote died October 28, 1937. One daughter was born to Dr. and Mrs. Foote: Amelia Lynde.

WILLIAM D. HART—Born in Stamford, October 30, 1889, William D. Hart is the son of Patrick and Julia (Hilley) Hart; he was educated in St. John's Parochial, Stamford High School, and St. Thomas' Seminary, Hartford, Connecticut. He married, in Stamford, October 20, 1920, Isabel A. Crabbe, daughter of John Mervin and Margaret Crabbe. The children born of this marriage are: 1. Margaret Frances. 2. Ann Elizabeth.

For over twenty years Mr. Hart has been connected with the financial department of the town of Stamford and at present is its comptroller.

He is a Roman Catholic in his religious faith, a member of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church; is first vice-president of St. Mary's Holy Name Society; president of the Stamford Branch of the Diocesan Bureau of Social Service; Faithful Navigator of the Lafayette Assembly, fourth degree, Knights of Columbus; treasurer of the Hubbard Heights Golf Club, Incorporated; member of the board of directors of the Knights of Columbus Building Association; and has membership in the following groups: St. Augustine Council, No. 41, Knights of Columbus; the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Lodge No. 899; Charles Carroll of the Carrollton Club; International Association of Finance Officers; Municipal Finance Officers Association of Connecticut; and the Social Work Council of Stamford Community Chest.

Mr. Hart's residence is located at No. 20 Warren Street, Stamford, Connecticut.

HON. CLIFFORD BRITTIN WILSON—Conscientious and able service in practice as a lawyer and in public office by the Hon. Clifford Brittin Wilson has been accorded generous appreciation by the people of Bridgeport and Connecticut. He thrice was the lieutenant-governor of the State, and for five successive terms was Mayor of Bridgeport, of which he is a native. He was born December 2, 1879, son of James A. and Mary E. (Wordin) Wilson. Members of the Wilson family have been identified with Fairfield County for two hundred and sixty-seven years, the American founder coming to this section of Connecticut in the early sixteen hundreds. His father, at one time an educator but for many years an attorney, died in 1897. His mother, member of an early Connecticut family, lived until 1915.

Clifford Brittin Wilson was graduated from the Bridgeport High School, in 1898, when the loss of his father compelled him to forego further academic education. Immediately entering the law office of Edward P. Nobbs, he remained here until 1902. In the meanwhile he had studied law and was admitted to the bar in the latter named year. He was assistant clerk of the Probate Court from 1899 to 1903, served the fifth district of Bridgeport as a member of the board of aldermen, beginning with 1907, and was its president during 1908 and 1909, and acting mayor. From 1909 to his resignation on January 1, 1912, he was the appointee of the judiciary to the office of coroner of Fairfield County. In 1911 Mr. Wilson was elected Mayor of Bridgeport, on the Republican ticket, although his support at the polls was non-partisan. His regime as mayor extended over a decade and was marked by brilliant executive ability and efficiency. To quote a biographer:

> He was instrumental in bringing about many improvements in public buildings and during his administration the new high school building was erected and new bridges built on Stratford Avenue, East Washington Avenue and Grand Street. New fire and police stations were built and the manual system of fire alarms introduced. He brought about improvements in both the police and fire forces and replaced horses with motor driven apparatus in the fire department. There was no phase of the city's needs which did not command his close attention, thorough investigation and efficient effort for improvement. He placed the board of health and the board of charities on an efficient working basis. A new welfare building was erected and clinics for the benefit of the public were established. A new almshouse was also built and he gave much thought and consideration to the improvement of streets, resulting in the extension and broadening of the thoroughfares for the purpose of relieving congested centers. The rapid development of the city, owing to the establishment of many factories here, led to a growth in the city's population that could not have been anticipated, and while work of caring for the increase had been steadily carried forward, Mr. Wilson recognized the necessity for strenuous effort to meet existing conditions and did much to make adequate the public health service and the transportation and housing facilities. Every branch of the public service had increased duties and responsibilities, owing to Bridgeport's rapid growth, and the city realized that at its head there must be a man of practical business qualifications, who while working to meet the exigencies of the hour, must plan also for the future. Another tangible evidence of Mr. Wilson's close study of the situation was the providing of conveyors whereby the sewage of the city is treated before being discharged into the Sound, thereby preventing the pollution of the water. He was a member of the committee which drafted the building code for Bridgeport and it was adopted after he became mayor. In politics he has always been a Republican but has ever made partisanship subservient to the public good and placed the general welfare before personal preferment.

The progressive and constructive administration of Mr. Wilson as mayor of a city of major importance, a comprehensive and capable performance, attracted more than local attention. In 1914 he was nominated for the lieutenant-governorship of Connecticut, and was repeatedly re-elected so that his stay in this office extended from 1914 to 1921. He then retired from public life to give attention to private interests, and is the senior member of the well-known law firm, Wilson and Mountain. During the World War period he was colonel of the Fourth Military District, Connecticut State Guard, 1917 to 1919. His connection with the State National Guard began in August, 1904, when he became a member of Company B, Third Infantry as a private and was successively corporal, sergeant, second and first lieutenant and captain of his unit. It was as captain that he served with the Coast Artillery, when Company B became Company No. 4, of that corps. Fraternally, Mr. Wilson is a thirty-second degree Mason, a member of the Commandery, Knights Templar, Scottish Rite Consistory, and of the Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is a past grand of Poquonock Lodge, No. 4, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and a past chief patriarch of Stratford Encampment, No. 23. He is also a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Sons of Veterans.

At Milford, Connecticut, November 10, 1914, Clifford Brittin Wilson married Anastasia C. Dorsey, of Hartford.

HERBERT L. COHEN—Although a member of one of the younger groups of established lawyers in Bridgeport, Herbert L. Cohen has been eminently successful in the practice of the exacting profession of the law. Admitted to the Connecticut bar, in July, 1928, he has been the prosecutor for the Town of Fairfield since 1932.

Mr. Cohen was born in Bridgeport, April 18, 1905, son of Samuel and Esther (Schine) Cohen. After completing his elementary and preparatory education in the grammar and high schools of his native city, he matriculated at Yale University, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1925. He then pursued professional studies in the Yale Law School, of which he is a Bachelor of Laws, Class of 1928. As mentioned, he was admitted to the bar in July of that year, and began a general practice of law in Bridgeport. Mr. Cohen is a member of the Masonic Club; is active in local Republican politics, and was elected to the General Assembly from Fairfield County in 1933 and 1935.

On July 23, 1929, Herbert L. Cohen married Gertrude Mary Perelmutter, of New Haven, daughter of Benjamin and Bessie Perelmutter, and they have a daughter, Carol Susan Cohen, born September 7, 1934.

FRANCIS J. MERILLAT—Bridgeport is not only noteworthy for the fine type of its professional and business men, industrial and financial leaders, but for the number of its sons who return to the city to follow their various vocations. Francis J. Merillat, attorney, was born in Bridgeport, April 20, 1910, son of Oliver Francis and Nora Agnes (Herlihy) Merillat, his father being the production manager for the Bullard Company of the city.

Prepared for a college education and profession in local grammar and high schools, Mr. Merillat entered Yale University, from which he was graduated in 1931. Continuing in the New Haven institution, he received the degree, Bachelor of Laws, from the Yale Law School with the class of 1933. That same year, in June, he was admitted to the bar of Connecticut and has since engaged in a general practice of his profession with offices at No. 955 Main Street, Bridgeport. He is a member of the Bridgeport Bar Association, of the Bridgeport Knights of Columbus, third degree, Park City Council, No. 16. He is of the Catholic faith and worships at St. Charles Church. Greatly interested in Boy Scout work, he is a past district commissioner of the organization. Mr. Merillat is a member of the Young Democrat Club, of Bridgeport.

BRADFORD BOARDMAN—Inheriting a natural aptitude for the law from his distinguished father, to which he has added a comprehensive academic education and technical training, Bradford Boardman has won a noteworthy place in the younger professional and club coteries of Bridgeport. Though he has lived in Fairfield since 1929, he is a native of Bridgeport, born December 5, 1901, son of William Bradford and Alice Burr (Hall) Boardman. A biographical record of his father, accompanying this biography, outlines something of his background and the traditions and achievements which are both examples and inspiration. Hon. Frederic B. Hall, Mr. Boardman's grandfather, was for many years a justice and Chief Justice of the Connecticut Supreme Court.

Bradford Boardman prepared for higher formal studies in Phillips-Andover Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, from which he was graduated in 1920. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Yale College four years later, and continued in the Yale Law School, to become a Bachelor of Laws, class of 1927. That same year he was admitted to the Connecticut bar and became associated with Boardman and Grout in a general law practice, being admitted as a partner in 1933. He was an associate judge of the Fairfield Town Court, from 1931 to 1937, and is now Judge of Probate for the District of Fairfield, though continuing his law practice. He is a member of the Bridgeport, Connecticut, and American Bar Associations. Prominently active in social and club life, Bradford Boardman is a member of the University Club, Comedy Club, Fairfield Beach Club and the Black Rock Yacht Club. His recreations include sailing and outdoor sports.

At Bridgeport, Connecticut, on October 3, 1929, Bradford Boardman married Virginia Barrington, daughter of Judge Richard L. and Mary (Whiting) Barrington. Mr. and Mrs. Boardman are the parents of two sons: 1. William Bradford, II, born October 12, 1930. 2. Barrington, born May 30, 1933.

WILLIAM BRADFORD BOARDMAN—As an attorney of broad legal experience, including judicial activities, William Bradford Boardman is an outstanding member of the notable legal fraternity of Bridgeport, of which he has long been a prominent resident.

Mr. Boardman was born in Brimfield, Massachusetts, August 22, 1871, son of Moses Bradford and Ellen Emeline (Barber) Boardman. After attending local schools, and being graduated from the New Britain High School, he entered Yale College, from which he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts with the class of 1893. Returning later, he was graduated from the Yale Law School, in 1898. He had been a teacher in the University School at Bridgeport, from 1893 to 1896.

Mr. Boardman was admitted to the Connecticut bar in 1898, and became associated with Goodwin Stoddard, a Bridgeport lawyer, which connection was continued until 1906. Since 1907 he has engaged in a general practice of law in the city, first as a member of the firm of Hill and Boardman, and then as the senior member of Boardman and Grout. Mr. Boardman was judge of the Bridgeport City Court from 1921 to 1923, and since 1907 has been a member and since 1913, the secretary of the Connecticut Bar Examining Committee. From 1922 to 1924, he was president of the Connecticut State Bar Association and as a college man became a member of the Zeta Psi and the Phi Delta Phi fraternities. During the World War, Mr. Boardman was a private in the Connecticut State Guard, chairman of a Legal Advisory Board, active in many of the loan and other drives of that period. From 1912 to 1916, he was a member of the Bridgeport Board of Education, and since 1921 of the Bridgeport Public Library. Among his clubs are the University of Bridgeport, the Brooklawn Country, Contemporary and Yacht, and he is a member of the Society of Colonial Wars, and attends the Congregational Church.

In Bridgeport, Connecticut, on February 22, 1901, William Bradford Boardman married, Alice Burr Hall, daughter of the late Chief Justice Frederic B. Hall, and they have a son, Bradford (q. v.), graduate of Yale College, 1924, Yale Law School, 1927, partner in the firm of Boardman and Grout. Judge Boardman lived at No. 303 Mill Hill Avenue, in Bridgeport, until January, 1935, when he moved to Bronson Road, Greenfield Hill, in the town of Fairfield.

THE GATES FAMILY—The family of Gates has for years been notably represented in Connecticut, residing in Old Saybrook, though its members are now to be found in many parts of the country, going out from this State. The late Judge Charles S. Gates, an outstanding citizen of Old Saybrook, a public official and for years vice-president of the Essex Savings Bank here, was survived by two children. One of these, Gilman C. Gates, who was engaged in historical and legal researches, later died. The other, a daughter, Mrs. Lola L. (Gates) Junek, is the wife of Oscar Waldemar Junek, and lives in Chicago, Illinois.

Judge Charles S. Gates was born November 29, 1861, in East Haddam, Connecticut, son of George Franklin and Maria Amelia (Walker) Gates. His paternal ancestors were among East Haddam's early settlers.

Receiving his first formal education in East Haddam, his birthplace, Judge Gates came to Old Saybrook with his family to live when he was eleven years old. He attended Tater Hill School in East Haddam, and in Old Saybrook went to Seabury Institute, a widely known institution of learning for boys that was conducted by the Rev. Peter L. Shepard. Still later he was a student at the Morgan School, in Clinton, where he was graduated in 1881. In the autumn of that year he was engaged as a teacher in the Oyster River district school in Old Saybrook, and afterward he taught in the Westbrook and Ivoryton schools. He became a popular and successful teacher and one who had a practical method of imparting knowledge to others.

In 1890, Mr. Gates was appointed a railway clerk between New York and Boston, continuing on that assignment for ten years, at the end of which he was appointed transfer mail clerk at Saybrook Junction. For thirteen years he held that position. In 1901, at the death of Judge John Clark, he was elected judge of the Old Saybrook Probate Court, a post that he filled to the satisfaction of the district for thirty years until his retirement in 1931, when he reached the age limit prescribed for the office. Thenceforth he remained as clerk of court. In his long service on the bench he was regularly endorsed by both political parties, and he continued in office until he was succeeded by Elsie Teichert, who had been employed for some years as clerk in the office.

In 1922, Judge Gates was elected to succeed William R. Bushnell as town clerk, and he had served continuously thereafter in that post at the time of his death. Despite the fact that he had no formal legal training, he was regarded as one of the ablest judges of probate in the State. State inspectors of public records, lawyers and others who had occasion to do business in the Old Saybrook office repeatedly endorsed and complimented him on his splendid conduct of the office in his charge. Under Judge Gates's supervision the equipment and physical arrangements of the court office were thoroughly modernized.

His natural disposition fitted Judge Gates admirably for public service in the Old Saybrook community. Quite aside from his local activities, he was elected to serve Old Saybrook in the General Assembly of the State in 1917, and again in 1919. For some years he was chairman of the Board of Education, and during the World War he served as a member of the Old Saybrook draft board. He was a trustee of the Essex Savings Bank from 1909 onward, and was chosen a director in 1923 and vice-president of the institution in 1934. He was one of the incorporators of the Bankers' Trust Company, of Essex, in 1925, after which year he was a director and vice-president of that organization. He was also active in the Free and Accepted Masons, serving for some years as treasurer of Siloam Lodge, No. 32.

The works performed by Judge Gates were many-sided. He was instrumental in organizing the Board of Finance for Old Saybrook, where the first such board in Connecticut was founded in keeping with a bill that he helped to pass through the General Assembly in his first term as legislator. It was but a logical step that he himself should later serve on this board of his own creation, the necessity for which he so clearly saw. It was, moreover, through the efforts of Judge Gates and his son that there was carried out a project for transcription of all town records from 1648 to 1854. These records were sent to the State Library at Hartford, and photostatic copies were afterward returned to Old Saybrook for indexing and safe keeping. Old Saybrook is now said to be the only town in Connecticut to have these old records complete. In 1935, Judge Gates headed the movement to raise a fund for erection of the grandstand at the local ball grounds. He himself was deeply interested in baseball and was in youth a popular player, acting as catcher in a day when just a thin buckskin glove covering parts of the fingers was the hand's only protection.

Judge Gates married Nina Elizabeth Clarke, of Haddam, Connecticut. They became the parents of two children: Gilman C., of further mention, and Lola L., who married Dr. Oscar W. Junek, of Chicago, Illinois.

Gilman C. Gates was born October 17, 1894, in Old Saybrook, Connecticut, and here attended the public schools and Monson Academy. Taking up historical and legal research work, he performed an important work in this realm, and it was he who was in direct charge of the work of compiling and gathering together the old records of Saybrook, referred to above as one of the projects in which his father was so ardently interested. He did a great deal of writing, publishing in 1935 his book, "Saybrook at the Mouth of the Connecticut," in which one commentator, Edward M. Chapman, D.D., of Old Saybrook, found "The collection of documents makes the book of great value to the serious student of history." Governor Wilbur L. Cross characterized it as "the kind of local history I like," telling "the real story with well documented research" and "very readable." Edward P. Morris, professor emeritus at Yale, wrote: "There are plenty of histories that are largely guess work. Gates gives us the facts." Mr. Gates was also active in the affairs of the Protestant Episcopal Church, belonging to Grace Church, Old Saybrook, and participating in its work until his death, which occurred January 25, 1938. On October 9, 1924, he married Estelle (Alling) Hull, of New Haven, Connecticut.

The death of Judge Charles S. Gates occurred on July 20, 1937, and was an occasion of the deepest sorrow in every circle in which he was known. In a special memorial tribute the trustees of the Essex Savings Bank proclaimed itself as suffering in his passing "the irreparable loss of one of its honored and beloved officials," going on to say in part:

> Being a man of strong intellect, keen judgment and with a broad and practical experience in the home and business needs of the community, his advice and counsel in the conduct of this bank were invaluable.
> Honor, integrity and duty were to him living principles which he faithfully applied to the daily routine of his life and he inspired these same principles in those who were associated with him. It can truthfully be said of him that the enviable reputation which this institution now holds in the community it serves is due in no small part to his deep interest, his untiring efforts and his sound practical judgment.
> Personally Judge Gates was a man of high character, an affable companion and a friend to be cherished. His associates in this bank and all those with whom he came in contact in the varied walks of life held him in the highest esteem. As individuals and as an institution we have felt his kindly influence and as we were enriched by his presence among us, so are we impoverished by his loss.

The Deep River "New Era" of July 23, 1937, spoke admiringly in its leading editorial of Judge Gates's "keen mind, sound judgment and that most valuable requisition—good common sense."

> In the civic life of his town Judge Gates held a most unusual position. He had the respect and confidence of his townspeople and they sought his counsel and advice on personal matters as well as on matters pertaining to the welfare of the town.
> During his long period of public service he was brought into contact with a wide range of people and because of his courtesy and obliging manner it was not only a pleasure, but a privilege, to have an occasion which would call one to his office. The town has lost a good man. one who loved his fellowmen.

JOHN SHENTON—Against the background of notable parental activities in old England, stand out the achievements of John Shenton, of Bridgeport, in this Connecticut seat of industry. His father, George Shenton, was outstanding in his support of the British Labor Party, a close friend of Ramsay MacDonald. His mother was the former Anne Norton. Both parents are deceased.

Born on March 8, 1895, in Leicester, England, John Shenton attended academic and technical schools in his native land. In 1913, he migrated to the United States, settling in Bridgeport, where he secured employment with the Lake Submarine Boat Company. In 1918 he joined the Canadian Army, but was soon honorably discharged and again engaged in work in connection with the Lake Company at its shipyards, Seaview Island. In 1920, Mr. Shenton went with the New York Shipyards, and also was identified with the Marine Heights Shipbuilding Company, but returned to Bridgeport after two years. From 1922 to 1933, he was associated with the Singer Manufacturing Company, in its wood shop. In 1933, he was elected city treasurer for Bridgeport, an office to which he has been reelected for a second term now running. Mr. Shenton is especially interested in public life and public speaking, for both of which he has noteworthy gifts. He takes an active part in civic affairs and is always ready to lend a hand in the promotion of progressive and welfare movements. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and the Sons of St. George. He is a member of the Episcopal Church.

On December 31, 1917, John Shenton married Elizabeth N. Smith, of Bridgeport, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth N. (Shields) Smith, both of whom are deceased.

JOHN TALBOT CURTIS—A history of the law and its personnel in Bridgeport would give generous space to the records of John Talbot Curtis and his father, Judge Howard Junior Curtis. One was active in the law and upon the bench, from 1883 through 1930; the other has only a decade at the bar to his credit, but such has been his native abilities, comprehensive education and technical training, combined with an unusually varied experience, that he is rated highly by colleagues and clientele.

Judge Howard Junior Curtis was born in Stratford, Connecticut, June 29, 1857, son of Freeman L. and Georgianna (Howard) Curtis. After being graduated from Yale University, a Bachelor of Arts, in 1881, he acquired his law degree in the same institution two years later, and was admitted to the Connecticut bar that same year. He first practiced for ten years, 1883-1893, with Judge G. W. Wheeler, and then was appointed judge of the Civil Court of Common Pleas, Fairfield County, serving until 1907. In that year he was elevated to justice of the Superior Court of Connecticut, which post he filled with great skill until 1920, when he was made judge of the Supreme Court, from which post he was retired on June 29, 1927, having reached the legal age limit. Judge Curtis was a Democrat, a member of the Mill River Country Club and the University Club. His religious affiliations were with the Episcopal Church. His death on September 24, 1931, marked the passing of a leading citizen of Bridgeport, a lawyer and jurist of most notable qualities, a man greatly admired and beloved. He married Ellen V. Talbot, of Stratford, on June 5, 1888, and they were the parents of three children: 1. Howard W. 2. John Talbot, of this record. 3. Violetta Curtis.

John Talbot Curtis, son of Judge Howard Junior and Ellen V. (Talbot) Curtis, was born in Stratford, August 15, 1900, and received his preliminary education in the local grade schools, and the Bridgeport High School. He entered the Army and Navy Preparatory School, in Washington, D. C., from which he matriculated at the United States Military Academy, West Point, New York, from which he was graduated with the class of 1920, at the unusually low age of nineteen. Commissioned upon his graduation, he pursued for a year studies in the Infantry School, and was then assigned to the 14th Infantry, in the Panama Canal Zone. He ranked a first lieutenant when he resigned from the United States Army on September 11, 1922, to study law. Graduated from the Yale School of Law, in 1926, he was admitted to the bar on July 9, of that same year. While at New Haven, Mr. Curtis was editor of the "Yale Law Journal," for two years, was a member of the Student Council for an equal period, and was secretary of his class. He initiated his practice of the legal profession in 1926 with the Bridgeport law firm, Marsh, Stoddard and Day, continuing this connection until August 1, 1927. He was deputy judge of the Town Court of Stratford from August 1, 1926, to September 1, 1927, when he removed to New York City, where he practiced law from August 1, 1927, to October 1, 1932, in association with Milbank, Tweed, Hope and Webb, having been admitted to the New York bar, June 13, 1928. From October 1, 1932, to October 23, 1933, Mr. Curtis was in Washington, D. C., as counsel for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, returning to Bridgeport, where he has since maintained a general practice with Johnston Stoddard, under the title, Curtis and Stoddard.

Mr. Curtis is major of the 418th Infantry Reserve

Corps, a trustee of the Bridgeport Protestant Orphans' Asylum, the Fairfield Visiting Nurses' Association and also a trustee of the Family Welfare Society of Fairfield. He is a member of the University Club, the Yale Club of New York, the Army and Navy Club, Washington, D. C., and of the Fairfield Hunt, the Fairfield Country Club, and the Pequot Yacht Club, of Southport. His religious affiliations are with the Southport Episcopal Church.

In Brooklyn, New York, on November 5, 1928, John Talbot Curtis married Isobel Ramsey Buckley, daughter of Charles R. and Agnes (Bronson) Buckley, and they have two children: Charles Buckley, and Clare Howard.

DAVID S. DAY—To the exacting profession of the law, David S. Day has devoted his abilities for nearly a third of a century, being a member of the well-known firm of Marsh, Stoddard and Day, of Bridgeport, for the larger part of his career. He is a director of several corporations; has given a number of years to public service, and figures prominently in local civic and club life.

Mr. Day was born at Colchester, Connecticut, September 8, 1880, son of Erastus and Catharine (Olmstead) Day. After attending Colchester Academy, he matriculated at Yale University, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, in 1902. Two years later he became a Bachelor of Laws, Yale Law School, and in that same year, 1904, was admitted to the Connecticut bar. In 1905, he began a general practice of law in Bridgeport without a partner, but in less than a year had become associated with Morris Seymour. This partnership was continued until 1910, when Mr. Day became a member of Marsh, Stoddard and Day. This widely known firm while carrying on a general practice, specializes in corporation law, and serves as counsel for many large organizations.

Mr. Day is a director and treasurer of The D. M. Read Company, and also one of the directors of the Magazine Repeating Razor Company, The American Fabrics Company of Bridgeport, the Bridgeport Housing Company, the Bridgeport Gas Light Company, the Nazareth Cement Company, the Bridgeport Storage Warehouse Company, the Farmers and Mechanics Bank and the Morris Plan Bank of Bridgeport. In 1905, he was elected to represent the Town of Colchester in the General Assembly of Connecticut and was appointed a member of the judiciary committee, taking a prominent part in the proceedings of the House. He has served on the State Board of Pardons for the past fifteen years. He is a member of the Connecticut State Bar Association, the Fairfield County Bar Association and the American Bar Association. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons, while his clubs include memberships in the University Club of Bridgeport, the Algonquin Club, and the Brooklawn and Fairfield Country Clubs. Mr. Day is an enthusiastic sportsman and enjoys fishing, hunting and golf.

On April 30, 1913, David S. Day married Natalie Cornwall, daughter of Jesse B. Cornwall and a representative of a prominent Bridgeport family.

ALEXANDER L. DeLANEY—The record of Alexander L. DeLaney in public office and the practice of the legal profession in Bridgeport is especially notable and has met with generous approval by his colleagues, clients and citizens, whom he has served with loyalty, skill and the knowledge born of study and experience. He is a native and lifelong resident of Bridgeport, born September 10, 1877, son of William and Ellen (Leverty) DeLaney.

DeLaney is an old Irish name of French derivation, and traces back to Lannoy, in "Little France," and the family to Hugues de Lannoy, a Knight of "Tournie d'Auelin," 1096. A Philip de Launey came to the Massachusetts Colony in 1621. Alexander L. DeLaney is of Irish lineage, and his mother's ancestors were natives of the Isle of Shetland. The Levertys were among the pioneers of Bridgeport and later members won success in the operation of a chain of drug stores in Connecticut. The DeLaney family was large, there being sixteen children, and Alexander L., showed his force of character by taking care of the expenses of his education and professional training. After being graduated from the Bridgeport High School, he entered the New York Law School, from which he was graduated in 1899, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Admitted to the Connecticut bar at the beginning of the present century, he has since been an active attorney in his home city, in later years the senior partner of the law firm of DeLaney, Murphy and Kotler. During the period of the World War, Mr. DeLaney prosecuted many espionage cases. He is a member of the American Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association, the Fairfield County Bar Association, and the Bridgeport Bar Association. He is a life member of the Elks Club and also belongs to the Automobile, Algonquin and University Clubs. For recreations he enjoys motoring and fishing. He is a member of the Catholic Church.

Mr. DeLaney initiated his activities in public office as assistant clerk of the city court, of which he was made clerk at the end of his first term, and acted in that capacity for two years. In March, 1907, he was appointed prosecuting attorney, being retained in office for fourteen years and three months, doing notable work as a public prosecutor during the World War. In November, 1918, he was chosen to represent his district in the State Senate, and in 1920, was reelected on the Republican ticket, notwithstanding the fact that the district was a stronghold of the Democratic Party at that time. It was said of him that "owing to his knowledge of the needs of the commonwealth, his comprehensive grasp of the vital questions and issues of the day and his zealous and watchful regard of public rights, Mr. DeLaney was accorded a position of leadership in the Senate and during 1919 was a member of the committee on finance and chairman of the committee on constitutional amendments, while in 1921, he acted as chairman of the judiciary and joint rules committees. He gave deep thought and study to all measures brought before the Senate and espoused the moral side of every issue." On January 1, 1924, Mr. DeLaney was appointed city attorney of Bridgeport, serving until December 31, 1929, to enter private practice.

On September 28, 1904, Alexander L. DeLaney married Grace E. Fisher, of Philadelphia, Jefferson County, New York, who died on July 23, 1929.

MICHAEL E. BRUNO—A native of Bridgeport, Michael E. Bruno was born May 6, 1910, son of Anthony and Angeline (Buchino) Bruno. His father, a carriage and tool maker, was an active figure in Republican politics, and a substantial citizen.

Mr. Bruno, after being graduated from the Warren Harding School, entered Georgetown University, Washington, D. C., where he completed his formal and professional education. After receiving his degree of Bachelor of Laws from Georgetown, in June, 1933, he was admitted to the Connecticut bar in January of the following year. Law offices were opened at No. 1115 Main Street, Bridgeport, where he has since continued a general practice of his profession. In January, 1936, Ralph O. Bruno, brother of Michael E. Bruno, became associated with his brother in the practice of law.

Mr. Bruno is a member of the Connecticut State Bar Association, Fairfield County and Bridgeport Bar Associations. Keenly interested in politics, he is a liberal who gives allegiance to the Democratic party, and was a candidate, in 1935, for the office of city clerk. He is a member of St. Mary's Catholic Church, and of the Bridgeport Council of Catholic Men. Chief among his recreations are golf and horseback riding.

DANIEL E. BRENNAN—In the practice of law Daniel E. Brennan has performed a work of great value and significance in Bridgeport, earning the satisfaction and admiration of his contemporaries in all walks of life.

Mr. Brennan was born December 21, 1885, in Shenandoah, Pennsylvania, son of Daniel E. and Mary (Feeley) Brennan. His father was a hotel proprietor in Shenandoah and an active leader in Republican politics. He died in 1927 at the ripe old age of eighty-three years.

The public and high schools of Shenandoah, his Pennsylvania birthplace, furnished Daniel E. Brennan his early education, and later he attended Conway Hall, a preparatory school at Carlisle, Pennsylvania. He also was a student at the Dickinson School of Law, in Carlisle. Graduated from law school there in 1911, a Bachelor of Laws, he was admitted to the bar of the State of Connecticut on June 30, of that same year, and at once started his general professional practice in Bridgeport. Here he has carried forward his labors down to the present, earning the esteem and affection of all whose privilege it is to know him.

At the same time he has been an outstanding leader in Republican partisan affairs, holding a number of responsible public offices and performing a work of value to his city and State. In 1917 and 1918 he was assistant clerk of the City Court of Bridgeport. From 1927 to 1931 he was clerk of the City Court. In 1916 he was for one year prosecuting attorney handling liquor cases. He is a member of the Bridgeport Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association, the Fairfield County Bar Association and the American Bar Association.

Active in the affairs of the Knights of Columbus, he is connected with the Park City Council. He belongs to the Mill River Country Club, of which he was president in 1934 and 1935. He belongs to St. Augustine's Roman Catholic Church. During his student days he joined the Delta Theta Phi law fraternity, in which he still retains his active membership. He is fond of golf and all forms of healthful outdoor sports and recreations. The different organizations and projects with which Mr. Brennan has been associated have been of such character as to lend prestige to him, and his influence has, in turn, furthered many a worthy enterprise in his community and in professional and public life.

On April 23, 1912, Daniel E. Brennan married Mary S. Hemminger, of Carlisle, Pennsylvania,

Edward N. DeWitt

daughter of Jacob and Ellen (Mitten) Hemminger. Mr. Hemminger was a veteran of the Civil War, in which he defended the cause of the Union. Two children were born to the Brennans: 1. Daniel E., Jr., a graduate of Notre Dame University, now a student at Dickinson Law School, Carlisle, Pennsylvania. 2. Robert J., a graduate of La Salle Military Academy.

EDWARD A. DWORKEN—Engaged in the practice of law in Bridgeport, Edward A. Dworken has contributed in a very substantial way to the well-being of his native city.

He was born here January 28, 1910, son of Hyman H. and Bella (Elkin) Dworken. His father was, until his death in 1933, a merchant in Bridgeport. Edward A. Dworken attended the Grail School, in Fairfield, and the public schools of Bridgeport, later becoming a student at the University of Virginia. There he took his regular academic and pre-law course, afterward proceeding to Boston University and taking his Bachelor of Laws degree in 1934.

On July 9, 1935, he was admitted to the bar of the State of Connecticut, and at once he opened offices in Bridgeport for the practice of his profession. He continues his legal work today, and also is fond of certain types of research activity, in which he has extensively engaged from time to time. He is a member of the Boston University Alumni Association, and takes a lively interest in its affairs.

EDWARD NICHOLAS DE WITT, M.D.—The practice of ophthalmology in which Dr. Edward Nicholas De Witt, of Bridgeport and Fairfield, has been engaged for a number of years has resulted in many and lasting benefits to the people of this district.

Dr. De Witt was born August 12, 1890, in Hastings, Minnesota, son of John Jacob and Mary (Wehr) De Witt. His mother is now deceased.

In the public schools of Hastings, his Minnesota birthplace, Edward Nicholas De Witt received his early education. After completing his formal education in high school, he attended the University of Pennsylvania, where he was graduated in 1917 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts and Doctor of Medicine. He had his first practical experience as an interne at Pennsylvania Hospital, in Philadelphia, where he remained for a year. Then he spent a year as an interne at Bridgeport Hospital. At the time of the World War he enlisted in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, serving with the rank of first lieutenant. Opening offices in Bridgeport after the conclusion of hostilities and his return to civilian life, he proceeded to specialize in ophthalmology. Since that time he has effectively aided his community through his treatment of the ailments and diseases of the eye and has earned wide approval for his work.

Along with his own independent practice, Dr. De Witt serves as ophthalmologist at Bridgeport Hospital and at the Municipal Hospital in Bridgeport, having held these positions since 1926; is clinical professor of ocular pathology at Yale Medical School, New Haven; consulting ophthalmologist at Fairfield State Hospital, Newtown. In spare time he has adopted a hobby that is in harmony with his profession—the study of botany, in which he has always been deeply interested. He is a member of the Bridgeport Medical Society, the Fairfield County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, as well as of the American Optometrical Society and the Academy of Eye Societies. He is a member of the University Club of Bridgeport and the Phi Rho Sigma fraternity. Each of these groups and, indeed, all the organizations and projects in which he has been active have been greatly helped by his constructive efforts in their behalf, and he is widely known and respected among his contemporaries.

On June 30, 1927, in Aldon, New York, Dr. Edward Nicholas De Witt married Kathryne Gipple. They became the parents of one daughter, Kathryne Ann, born June 23, 1928.

WILLIAM E. ALLEN, JR.—One of Bridgeport's leading professional men, William E. Allen, Jr., came to occupy a position of high standing in legal circles here very shortly after he started the active practice of law. He holds this same position of respect and admiration today as a member of the law firm of Williamson, Willis, Lister and Foster.

Mr. Allen was born April 20, 1908, in Bridgeport, Connecticut, son of William E. and Celia (Horne) Allen. His father is sales engineer of the Crane Company. His mother died in 1933.

The Bridgeport graded and high schools provided William E. Allen, Jr., his early education, and later he took up his studies at Rutgers University, where he was a member of the class of 1929. He then went to the Law School of New York University, from which he was graduated in 1933, a Bachelor of Laws. Admitted to the Connecticut bar, he opened offices in Bridgeport, here engaging in a general legal practice in the same year. In September, 1935, he became a member of the law firm of Williamson, Willis, Lister and Foster, with which he carries on his professional practice today.

Mr. Allen is also active in a number of fraternal and social groups. He is a member of the Algonquin Club, the Kiwanis Club, the Scabbard and Blade, and the Kappa Sigma fraternity. He is a member of the Knights of Columbus and of St. Thomas' Roman Catholic Church, of Bridgeport. He belongs to the Fraternity Club, of New York City. He has long been active in Republican Party affairs and is a member of the Board of Appeals on Zoning. In spare time he is engaged in such occupations as the cultivation of tropical fish, a most difficult but interesting hobby. He likes a number of outdoor sports and all forms of healthful recreation in the open. Every interest that he has had in life has given him an opportunity for making some useful contribution to the general well-being of his fellow citizens in all departments of life, and, as a result, he is honored in an ever widening circle of friends and very highly respected for his achievements.

William E. Allen, Jr., married Dorothea Devitt, daughter of Thomas H. Devitt, former president of the Bridgeport Police Commission, who is now living retired in this city, and his wife, Mary L. (Stapleton) Devitt. The marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Allen took place on October 29, 1935.

WILLIAM HOWARD WILCOXSON—In both business and civic life William Howard Wilcoxson, of Stratford, has performed a work of importance to Connecticut. As a mechanical draftsman he has been connected with a number of different business enterprises, and since July 11, 1934, he has held the position of town clerk of Stratford.

Mr. Wilcoxson was born February 5, 1896, in Stratford, Connecticut, a representative of the eighth generation of the family in Stratford. He was descended from William Wilcoxson, who settled here in 1639, after coming to the New World from England in 1635, and living for four years in Concord, Massachusetts. The parents of William Howard Wilcoxson were Nathan F. and Eleanor A. (Wilcox) Wilcoxson. His father was for years one of Stratford's leading merchants. This long family background in Stratford has given William Howard Wilcoxson a deep interest in history and historical research, and it is said by those who know him well that he is probably better acquainted with Stratford's early history than any resident of the community.

Attending the Stratford public schools, William Howard Wilcoxson later became a student at the Connecticut State Trade School, in Bridgeport. Taking up mechanical draftsmanship, he became the first graduate draftsman from that school in 1913. He at once associated himself actively with the Bilton Machine Tool Company in his professional capacity, remaining for three years with them. Then he joined forces with the Remington U. M. C. and with the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, as well as with the American Chain Corporation and the Bullard Company. With each of these organizations he served in the draftsman's capacity, rendering invaluable assistance to his contemporaries in all walks and departments of life by virtue of his constructive labors.

At an early age he became interested in politics from the Republican point of view, and he was a candidate for Judge of Probate in Stratford in 1928. On July 11, 1934, came his appointment to the position of town clerk, an office that he held thereafter down to the present. He has aligned himself with a number of civic, social and fraternal organizations, including Okenuck Tribe, No. 49, of the Improved Order of Red Men, of which he is past sachem. He is also a member of Housatonic Lodge, No. 79, of the Grange, and belongs to the Lions Club, of Stratford, and to the Stratford Historical Society, of which he was secretary for eight years and president for two years. He holds membership likewise in the Congregational Church. Fond of photography, he has experimented along these lines for a quarter of a century. Every group or project with which he has associated himself has in some way gained from his endeavors in its behalf, and he is one of his community's very well-beloved and honored citizens. He resides at No. 151 Blakeman Place, Stratford.

CLARISSA M. FOWLER—Experience and ability have eminently qualified Miss Clarissa M. Fowler for the honor and distinction of being the first woman elected town clerk of Milford, an office she has occupied with outstanding success for the past year. Prior to assuming this post she had served in the clerk's office for fourteen years, doing title searching and drawing up public documents for several large title and insurance companies and at the time of her election was in business for herself in Milford. She can be truly characterized as one of the most able and prominent women in this part of New Haven County.

Miss Fowler was born in Milford, the daughter of Nathan Mark and Emma (Barnett) Fowler, both of whom reside in this community. She received a general education in the public schools and after completing her high school studies, began a career that has been marked for its distinction and success. In 1908, she joined the clerical staff of the town clerk's office and continued here until 1922, a period in which she had acted as assistant town clerk, being chosen for this position in 1916. Her long tenure of office and the splendid record she established in this municipal office were the underlying factors that later led to her election.

Miss Fowler retired from this department in 1922 to become associated with the Milford Land and Title Company, for which she drew public documents and did title searchings until 1931. During the latter year she entered business for herself and continued until October, 1935, when she was elected town clerk of Milford, an office she assumed on January 6, 1936. The efficiency and ability she has displayed in the administration of this office has gained her wide recognition and esteem. On the basis of her achievements she seems destined to be chosen for further important and responsible public office.

Miss Fowler is a member of the Business and Professional Women's Club, the Republican Women's Club, in which she is secretary, and the Milford Historical Society. In her religious convictions she worships at the Congregational Church.

MAURICE LIONEL CHENEY, M.D.—During a long and distinguished professional career in the City of Bridgeport, Dr. Maurice Lionel Cheney has achieved success and outstanding distinction as one of the most able surgeons of Fairfield County.

Dr. Cheney was born in Lyndonville, Vermont, July 21, 1894, the son of Dr. Albertus A. and Ida L. (Lyon) Cheney, both of his birthplace, and where his father is still an active and prominent physician. Dr. Cheney received a general education at the Lyndon Institute and after completing his studies here, attended Norwich University for one year. He then transferred to the University of Vermont, in which he secured his professional training and from which he was graduated with a Doctor of Medicine degree in the class of 1917. The following year he served as an interne at the Bridgeport Hospital, and then enlisted in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, being assigned to the 835th aerial squadron with a commission of lieutenant. He was dispatched abroad and served there for seven months, being promoted to the rank of captain on March 20, 1919. The following month he returned to the United States and was honorably discharged from the service.

Shortly after resuming civilian life he established himself in a practice at Bridgeport which he has been conducting since with marked success. Throughout his career here he has specialized in surgery and at present serves as an associate surgeon in the Bridgeport Hospital. Dr. Cheney was elected to the American College of Surgeons in 1926, and in addition to this affiliation is a member of the Bridgeport Medical Society, the Fairfield County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He also holds membership in several other organizations, among them the Sons of the American Revolution.

On December 24, 1917, at Burlington, Vermont, Dr. Cheney married Ethel Grisenthwaite, and they are the parents of two children: 1. Martha, born May 28, 1920. 2. Lionel, born December 6, 1921.

ARTHUR SHELDON GRISWOLD, M.D.—The name of Dr. Arthur Sheldon Griswold occupies a place of outstanding prominence in the medical profession of the City of Bridgeport, where he has practiced for over a decade and today enjoys an enviable reputation as an orthopedic surgeon. Today he is identified with a number of leading medical institutions, among them the Bridgeport Hospital, for which he has served as attending orthopedic surgeon since 1933.

Dr. Griswold was born in Lahore, India, March 15, 1896, the son of Hervey DeWitt and Fannie (Sheldon) Griswold, Presbyterian missionaries in India, who are now retired. He was brought to this country by his parents at the age of twelve and completed a general education in the public schools of New York State. He then attended the Mount Hermon Boys' School at Mount Hermon, Massachusetts, later matriculated at Yale University, in which he completed his academic education in 1918, and then entered the Yale Medical School, from which he was graduated with a Doctor of Medicine degree in 1921. The following year he served as an interne at the Bridgeport Hospital and, in 1922, became assistant to Dr. George W. Hawley, a specialist in orthopedic surgery, becoming his partner in 1930. Dr. Hawley definitely retired from all professional work in 1933. Since that time Dr. Griswold has practiced alone, and continues to enhance his prestige through his accomplishments. In addition to being attending surgeon at the Bridgeport Hospital, he is also a member of the Bridgeport Medical Society, the Fairfield County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society, the American Medical Association and the American Academy of Orthopedic Surgeons, and a Fellow of American College of Surgeons. He worships at the Congregational Church and devotes his hobbies to gardening and stamp collecting.

On June 23, 1923, at North Haven, Dr. Griswold married Edith Chapman, daughter of Edward and Frances (Hammond) Chapman. Dr. and Mrs. Griswold are the parents of four children: 1. Richard Sheldon. 2. Gordon Brewster. 3. Robert Chapman. 4. Kenneth DeWitt.

REV. JOHN FRANCIS DONOHUE—Since 1934, the Rev. John Francis Donohue has served as pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church at Ridgefield. He has devoted almost forty years of his life to the priesthood and in the course of his career has filled many charges in the Hartford Diocese.

Father Donohue was born in Litchfield, Connecticut, on December 15, 1871, son of Thomas and Mary (St. John) Donohue. Both his parents were born in County Tipperary, Ireland, the mother coming to America in 1863 and the father, who was a shoe maker by trade, on March 20, 1865. They were married at Winsted, Connecticut, in July, 1869, by Father Leo, the local priest. Five children were born of their marriage: 1. John Francis, of this record. 2. Mary E., who died on February 2, 1927. 3. Julia M., a teacher at Litchfield. 4. Thomas R., a resident of Waterbury, Connecticut. He married Anna Dwyer and has four children: i. Mary. ii. Thomas, a graduate of Crosby High School, a graduate at St. Thomas' Seminary, Hartford, and now in first year at St. Marys' Seminary, Baltimore. iii. Aileen. iv. James. 5. Jeffrey W., of Danbury. He married Rose Morgan and they have four children: i. John F., who received a scholarship from Danbury High School to Yale University, where he was graduated in June, 1936, now with Etna Life Insurance Company and located at Buffalo, New York. ii. Joseph P., graduate of Danbury High School and president of the senior class, as was his brother in earlier years, now a senior, St. Thomas' Seminary, Hartford. iii. Rosella, senior at Danbury High School. iv. Jeffrey W., Jr., graduate of St. Peter's School, Danbury, now freshman at Danbury High School.

Father John Francis Donohue received his early education in the public schools of Litchfield, his birthplace, following which he attended St. Charles' College, Maryland, for four years; St. John's Seminary, Brighton, Massachusetts, for two years; St. Joseph's Seminary, Troy, New York, for two years; St. Joseph's Seminary, Dunwoodie, New York, for one year; and Catholic University, Washington, D. C., for one year. At the latter institution he took the degree of Bachelor of Sacred Theology. On June 14, 1898, he was ordained to the priesthood by Cardinal Gibbons at Baltimore, and then returned to Connecticut where he was successively curate in Catholic Churches in the following communities: Thomaston, New Haven, New Milford, Litchfield and Meriden. At the end of this time he was appointed priest of the Catholic Church in South Coventry, Connecticut, and subsequently served in the parishes of Lakeville and New Britain. On November 22, 1934, he came to St. Mary's Church in Ridgefield, where he has since been pastor. Father Donohue is known as an able administrator as well as for his devotion as the spiritual leader of his people, and has always enjoyed the respect of those communities in which his activities have centered.

STANTON REINHART SMITH, M.D.—After an extensive career in the teaching profession, Dr. Stanton Reinhart Smith entered medicine and for the past twenty years has maintained a large and lucrative practice in the City of Bridgeport, where he is identified in a prominent capacity with several of the leading medical institutions. Throughout this period he has specialized in internal medicine, and by his accomplishments has won the confidence of the public and the respect of his professional colleagues.

Dr. Smith was born at Nordmont, Pennsylvania, August 13, 1883, the son of Samuel Turner and Emma A. (Reinhart) Smith. He received a general education in the public schools of his native State and after completing this part of his studies, matriculated at the East Stroudsburg Normal School, from which he was graduated in 1902. The same year he was appointed principal of the Delaware Water Gap High School, in Pennsylvania, and continued in this capacity for three years. He then entered Bucknell University, from which he received a Bachelor of Science degree in 1909, and a Master of Science degree in 1914. In the meantime he had secured a position as professor of biology at the West Chester High School, in Pennsylvania, and served in this capacity from 1901 to 1911. The following year he was a post-graduate student in the Botanical Department at the University of Pennsylvania, and between 1912 and 1915, was assistant professor of cryptogamic botany at the Medico-Chirurgical College in Philadelphia, in which he enrolled as a medical student and from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in the class of 1916. The same year he came to Bridgeport as resident physician of the Bridgeport Hospital, was named assistant surgeon in 1917, and became assistant physician in 1924. In conjunction with his practice he is also examiner for the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company, medical examiner for the Town of Fairfield, and belongs to the Bridgeport Medical Society, the Fairfield County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Rev. John F. Donohue

Fraternally, he is a member of the Masonic Order, and is a member of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity. His principal recreation is tennis.

On May 6, 1920, in New York City, Dr. Smith married Beatrice Eunice Stevenson. They are the parents of one child, Elizabeth May, born March 15, 1927.

EDWARD J. MAHER—During a long and distinguished career in Milford, which spans over twenty-one years, Edward J. Maher has enjoyed a place of outstanding prominence as one of the leading attorneys of this section of New Haven County and a leader in civic and political affairs.

Mr. Maher was born in the city of New Haven, April 24, 1864, the son of Michael and Johanna (Gorman) Maher, both deceased and former residents of his birthplace where his father was active in politics. After completing a general education in the Hillhouse High School in New Haven, Mr. Maher matriculated at Yale University in which he received his professional training. He was graduated from this institution with a Bachelor of Laws degree in 1894, received his Master of Laws degree in 1895, and completed six of the eight required courses for a Doctor of Civil Law degree. In 1894 he was admitted to the Connecticut State bar and four years later was accorded the same privilege in New York State.

Mr. Maher began his professional career in New Haven the year he received his Bachelor of Laws degree and continued here until 1909, when he removed to Long Island City, New York, where he established himself in a practice he was to conduct successfully for twelve years. At the expiration of this period he came to Milford and opened an office here, which he has maintained since.

His prominence politically dates back to the early part of his career. From the outset he emulated his distinguished father by taking a keen and active part in the affairs of his surroundings, and exhibited a brand of leadership that caused him to be named chairman of the Democratic Committee of the Town of New Haven in 1900, and later secretary to the State organization, an office he occupied between 1903 and 1904. Since then he has continued to contribute to the welfare of his surroundings and at the present time is a member of the Zoning Board of Appeals in Milford. In his religious convictions he worships at the Roman Catholic Church.

On April 26, 1899, in New York City, Mr. Maher married Mary F. Mallon, and they are the parents of six children: 1. Stephen F., who is now an attorney in New York City. 2. Edward J., Jr., deceased. 3. Adrian W., prosecuting attorney of Stratford. 4. Catherine C., who is a nun at the Visitation Convent in Baltimore, Maryland. 5. Marie J., who is deceased. 6. Margarette E., who is secretary to her brother, Adrian W.

ISAAC LONG HARSHBARGER, M.D.—Specializing in surgery, Dr. Isaac Long Harshbarger, of Bridgeport, came to be more and more active with the passing of the years in the furtherance of the health and welfare of his community. He carries on his professional work today, both in his own private practice and in his extensive hospital service, and is recognized as one of Connecticut's foremost citizens and civic workers.

Dr. Harshbarger was born October 4, 1897, at Port Republic, Virginia, son of Charles Peter Harshbarger, M.D., who was a physician at that place and who still continues his professional work there, and his wife, Elizabeth Susan (Long) Harshbarger.

The public and high schools of his native place in Virginia provided the early education of Isaac Long Harshbarger, who later attended the Medical School of the University of Virginia, taking the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1922. He served an interneship at the University of Virginia Hospital for one year, and for one year was at Bridgeport General Hospital. For three years he was a Fellow in Surgery at the Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minnesota, remaining there from 1924 to 1927. From 1927 to 1930 he was associated with Dr. D. C. Patterson, in Bridgeport, specializing in surgical practice. He opened his own offices in 1930, taking up the specialty of surgery and continuing in this same work down to the present. Since 1928 he has been assistant surgeon at Bridgeport City Hospital.

Along with his other activities, Dr. Harshbarger is a member of the Fairfield County Medical Society, the Bridgeport Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He belongs to the Kiwanis Club and the Saugatuck Fish and Game Club. He has always been intensely fond of healthful outdoor sports and recreations, notably hunting and fishing. While in college he joined the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, and he likewise belongs to the Phi Beta Pi medical fraternity. During the World War he was a member of the Students' Army Training Corps and a loyal helper of his country's interests. His contribution to society has been a noteworthy one along many lines, and he earned the praise and admiration of his contemporaries in all departments of life.

On June 30, 1927, in Minnesota, Dr. Isaac Long Harshbarger married Gertrude Ackerman. The following children were born to them: 1. James Edward, born on May 29, 1930. 2. Thomas John, born April 12, 1935. 3. Richard William, born May 19, 1936.

GEORGE K. TRAVER—Contributing in a very substantial way to the prosperity and the civic advancement of West Haven, George K. Traver now serves as town clerk of this community. He has been extensively engaged for a number of years in insurance adjustment work, and is widely known in both business and public life.

Mr. Traver was born January 16, 1888, in Lakeville, Connecticut, son of Ira D. and Minnie L. (Whiteman) Traver. The public schools of Lakeville provided his early education, and when he completed his high school studies there he became a student at the Eastman Business College, in Poughkeepsie, New York, from which he was graduated. He then became manager of the plumbing and heating business of R. C. Miller, at Lakeville, and after two years with that firm began working for Edward Raynsford, also in Lakeville. For Mr. Raynsford he did carpentry work, and for three years operated an automobile service station. He then became associated with the Rainer Corporation as service manager, spending two years with them in Newark, New Jersey.

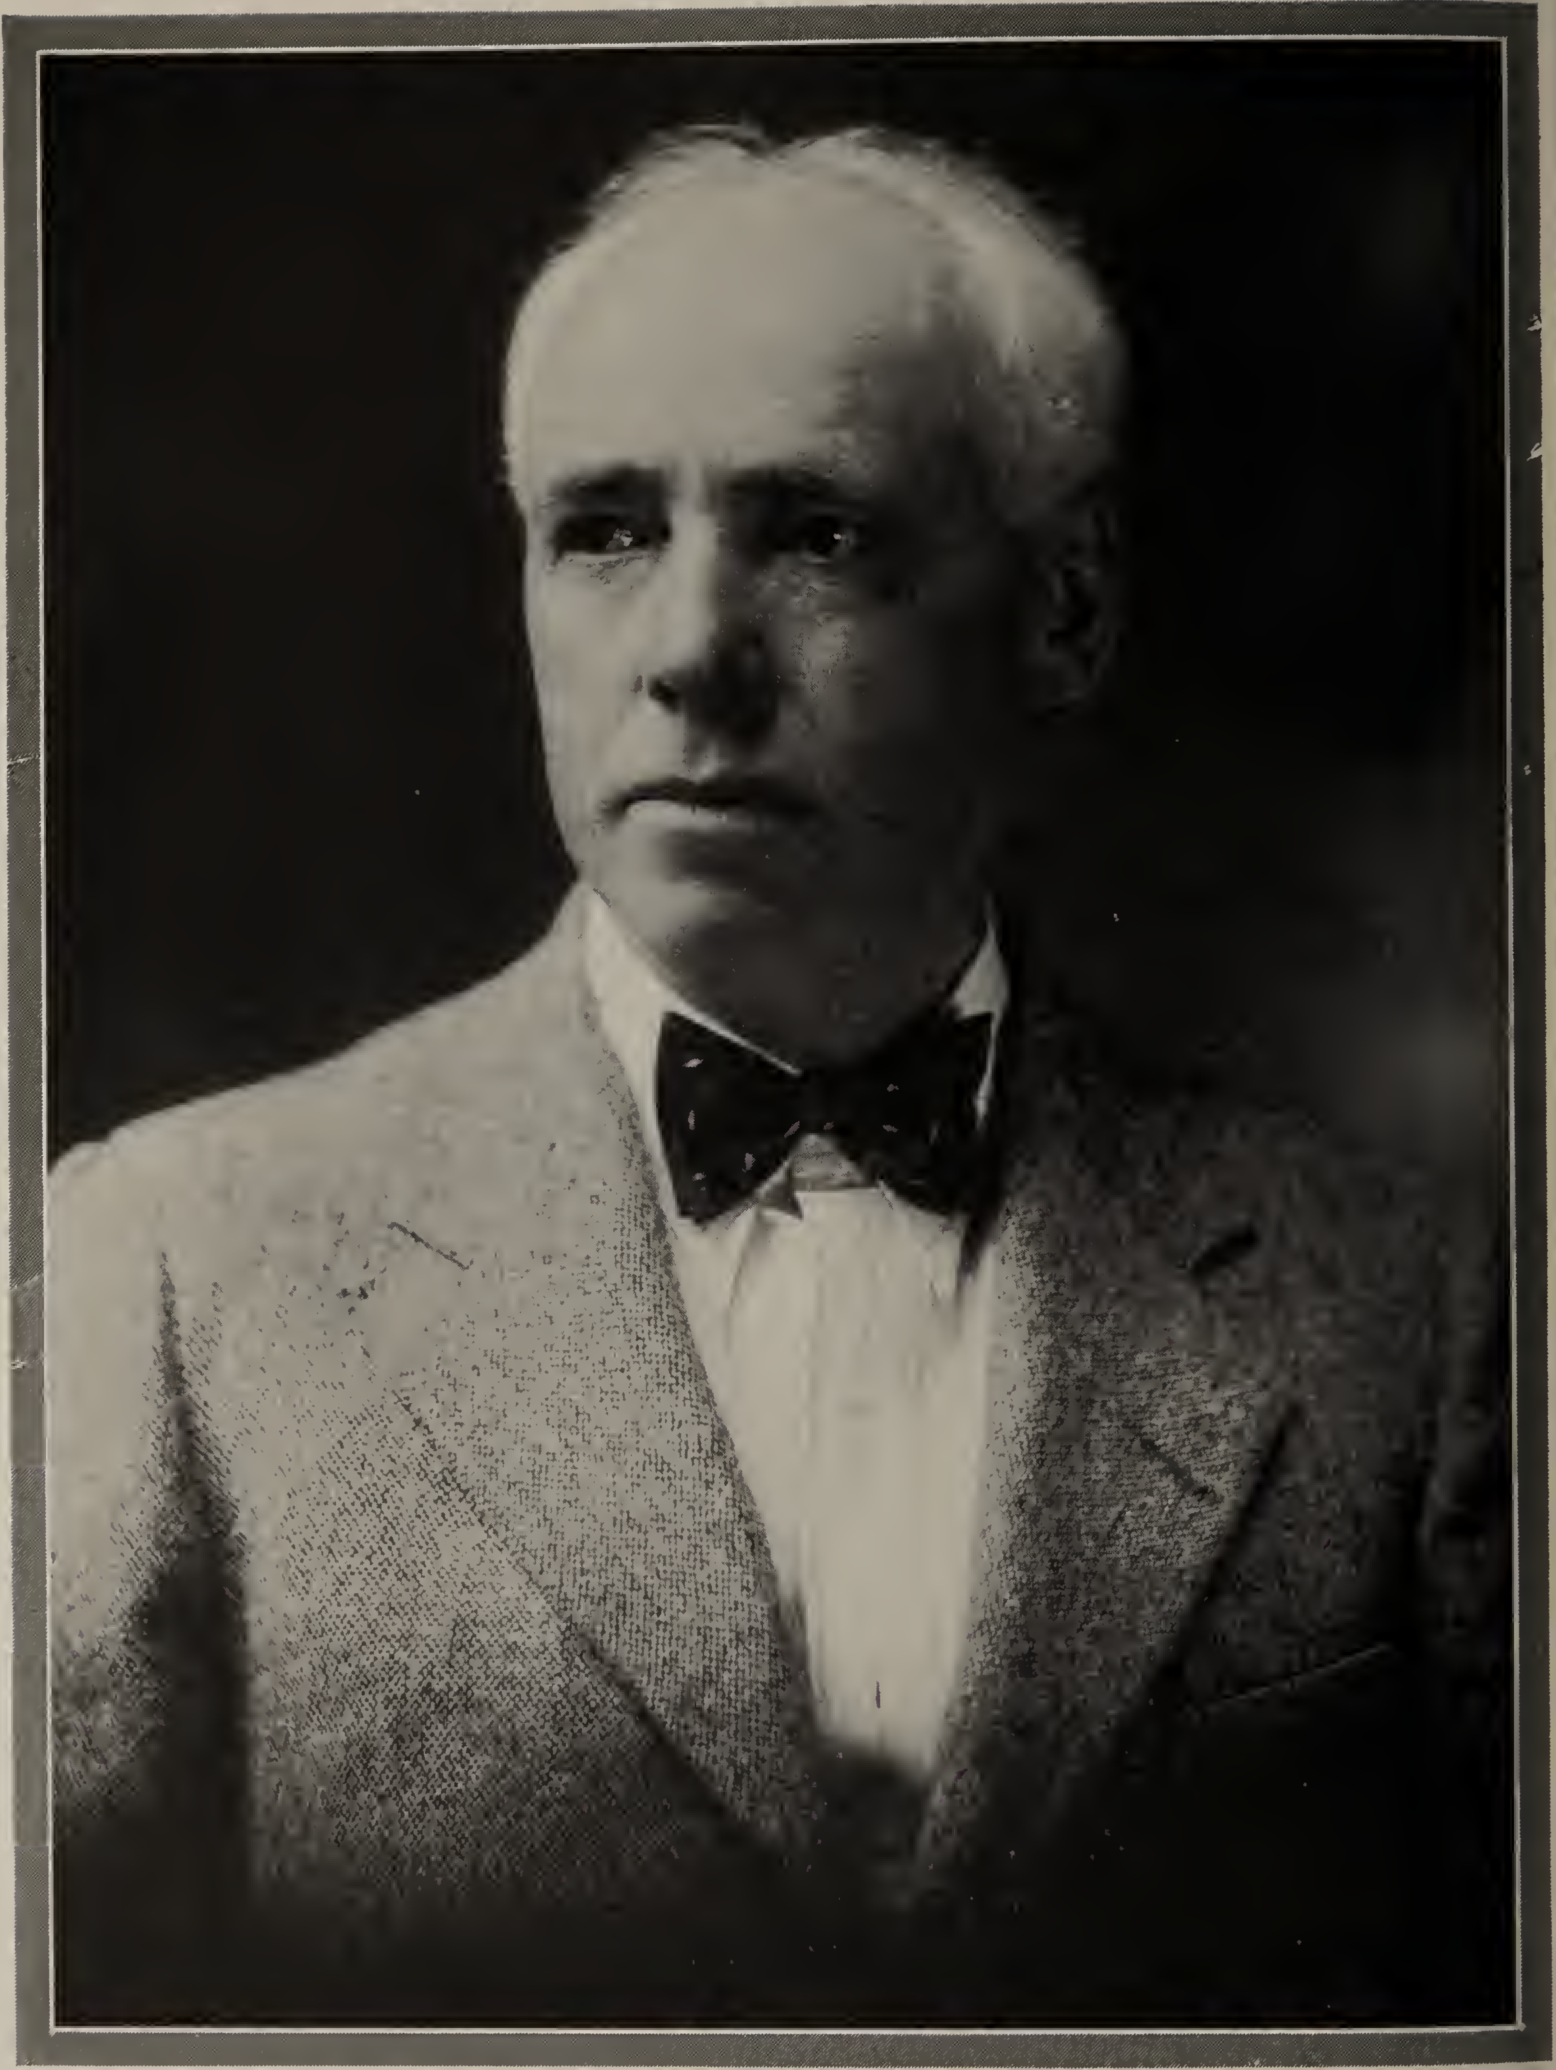
In 1917, he turned to the insurance adjustment field, associating himself with J. J. Windle, in New York City. After a year he went with C. J. Kirby, Jr., Incorporated, as vice-president, establishing his place of business at No. 45 Maiden Lane, New York City. Next he proceeded to Boston, Massachusetts, going into business there for himself and doing automobile insurance adjustment work. In September, 1922, he came to New Haven, where he has remained down to the present. He does a large volume of business along his chosen line of activity, and along with his other work performs the duties of his public office.

It was in November, 1935, that Mr. Traver was elected town clerk of West Haven. He took office on January 6, 1936, beginning a two-year term. He is active in many community organizations and projects, belonging to the West Haven First Methodist Church. He is a past president of the Men's Club of his church. He has long been deeply interested in social work among boys and young people, doing much to further the educational opportunities offered to many among the youth of Connecticut. He is a committeeman of Scout Troop No. 12, of West Haven, of the Boy Scouts of America. He is now serving his fourth term as president of Besseck, Incorporated, of Middlefield, Connecticut, and a member of the Chamber of Commerce and the Lions' Club of West Haven. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, belonging to the Commandery, Knights Templar, and to Pyramid Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in Bridgeport.

On October 22, 1913, in East Orange, New Jersey, George K. Traver married Jessie B. Perkins, daughter of John Perkins.

HELEN E. PLUMB—With her selection as town clerk at Trumbull in 1930, Miss Helen E. Plumb broadened her sphere of service to a community in which she has been an active figure for a considerable period. She has held her present office without interruption since that time.

Miss Plumb was born in Trumbull and comes of a well known local family. Her grandfather, Charles E. Plumb, who resided here throughout his life, was captain of Company C, Eighth Regiment, Connecticut National Guard, the volunteer company organized in this town. Her father, Arthur E. Plumb, was born at Trumbull on March 1, 1866, and is now associated with the City Savings Bank of Bridgeport. He has had a prominent part in local politics and the public life of the town since early manhood. For sixteen years he was county deputy, has served at various times on almost all town boards and at present is a member of the Board of Finance and the Town Plan and Zoning Commission. His wife, before her marriage, was Ruth Wallen.



Dr. James J. Donohue

Helen E. Plumb was educated in the public schools of Trumbull and at Central High School in Bridgeport. After her graduation she spent one year in chemical research work at the Remington Arms plant in Bridgeport but subsequently, in 1928, became assistant in the town clerk's office at Trumbull. Upon the death of the incumbent, Mr. Orville B. Burton, in 1930, she was appointed by the selectmen to fill the vacancy, a responsibility for which she was well qualified by her earlier experience, and was placed on the ticket for the office at the next election, held in October, 1930. Successful at the polls, she was elected for a one year term and in 1931 was reelected for a term of two years. In every succeeding election she has been returned to office, a reflection of her capable performance of her duties and the value placed upon her services by the people of the town.

Miss Plumb has also participated in many civic enterprises in her community and has served since 1933 as district chairman of the Trumbull Branch of the American Red Cross. In addition to these connections, she is well known for her interest in church work. She is one of the most active members of the local Congregational Church and for the past fifteen years has been superintendent of the Primary Department of the Sunday School.

JAMES JOSEPH DONOHUE, M.D.—As physician and surgeon, Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, public official, and one of the distinguished members of his profession in Connecticut, James Joseph Donohue, M.D., has performed notable services as a medical man and citizen of Norwich and his state. He has always given consideration to the larger duties and opportunities of the medical profession and his constant regard for the welfare of the whole community has been outstanding, as have been his endeavors to help his fellowmen in all walks of life.

Dr. Donohue was born in the Town of Norwich, Connecticut, December 3, 1872, son of Thomas and Ellen (Dooley) Donohue. Reared on his father's farm, his formal education was acquired in local schools and the Norwich Free Academy. Determined to become a doctor, he entered the University of Maryland, College of Physicians and Surgeons, and later studied in the New York Post-Graduate Medical School and Hospital. Returning to Norwich to establish himself in the practice of medicine the passing years have added to his reputation, especially as a surgeon. He is chief of the surgical staff of the William W. Backus Hospital of Norwich; consulting surgeon of the Norwich State Hospital; member of the Workmen's Compensation Commission of the State of Connecticut. He is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons; and among his professional affiliations are memberships in the Norwich Medical Society, the New London County Medical Association, the Connecticut State Medical Association and the American Medical Association. He is chairman of the Medical Committee of the International Association of Industrial Accident Boards and Commissions.

Despite the multifarious duties of his vocation and professional associations, Dr. Donohue has been to the fore in various activities not of necessity a part of his profession. He looks with especial pride upon the occasion when he acted as arbiter and mediator in the big strike of the Shore Line Electric Railway Company, in 1918, which involved New London, Windham and Middlesex Counties, when tension and feeling ran high, and he was successful in settling the dispute in a manner most satisfactory to both sides. At one time he was chairman of the board of trustees of the Norwich State Hospital, a former member of the board of trustees of the Connecticut State Hospital at Middletown, chairman of the Norwich Gas and Electrical Commission, a former treasurer of the Jewett City Textile Novelty Company, and is a director of the Thames Bank and Trust Company. He is a Democrat of long standing in his political principles, and a former member of the Connecticut State Central Committee. He is of the Roman Catholic faith, and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Columbus, and the Westbrook Fishing Club. His hobby is hunting and fishing.

At Norwich, Connecticut, on October 26, 1920, James Joseph Donohue, M.D., married Sara A. Bowman, daughter of John R. and Sara E. (Seamons) Bowman, and they are the parents of a son, James Chandler, born February 8, 1925.

EDWARD NOTHNAGLE—Through his active business connections and many civic interests, Edward Nothnagle has been a well known figure in the life of Trumbull and Fairfield County over a long period. He is now retired from business, but continues his public service in many capacities.

Mr. Nothnagle was born in Huntington, Connecticut, on September 12, 1863, a son of Phillip and Minnie (Mena) Nothnagle. Educated in the public schools of Bridgeport, he left high school at the age of sixteen to enter the meat business with his brother, Charles Nothnagle, in East Bridgeport, and operated a retail market there for a period of years. About 1896, however, he became interested in factory lubricants and entered this field, opening his own business which he developed successfully. This enterprise he conducted until 1923, when he sold his interests and retired from active business.

Meanwhile, as his increasing means allowed him opportunity, Mr. Nothnagle devoted more and more of his time to civic responsibilities in pursuit of an enlightened conception of his obligations as a citizen. He was for thirteen years a member of the Board of Education of Trumbull, where he made his home, and held the position of chairman of the board during all this time. He also served for sixteen years as chairman of the town Board of Finance and from 1925 to 1929, and again in 1935 and in 1937, was elected representative of the town. To his public duties he brought the soundness of judgment, the fidelity and broad viewpoint which have always distinguished him and his services have proved very fruitful in the public interest.

Mr. Nothnagle is now chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Fire District and treasurer of the Fire Department. He is also a charter member of the Fairfield Planning Association and has served as a director of this body since its organization, in 1925, exerting an important influence in its activities. One of the original sponsors and workers on the new Meritt Parkway, Mr. Nothnagle has devoted a great deal of time to this project. He is affiliated fraternally with the Free and Accepted Masons and in his earlier days his principal recreation was rifle shooting and boating. He is known as an excellent shot and in earlier years served an enlistment in the National Guard. In religious faith he is an Episcopalian and for some years has been senior warden of Trinity Episcopal Church.

On September 26, 1886, in Nichols, Connecticut, Mr. Nothnagle married Elizabeth Ambler. She died June 3, 1935. They were the parents of one son, Lester Ambler, graduated from Yale in 1908, and has been affiliated with the International Silver Company since that time. He married Edith Plumb of Trumbull, in 1912. They have two children: i. Lester Ambler, Jr., a student at Connecticut State College. ii. Ruth, a student at Harding High School in Bridgeport.

CHARLES RAYMOND BROCK—The well-known Connecticut dairyman, Charles Raymond Brock, brought to his business technical training acquired at Connecticut State College, and has managed the Brock-Hall Dairy Company with the same skill that characterizes the successful executives of important industries. He is also a prominent figure in civic organizations in both New Haven and Hamden, active both as a member and official.

Mr. Brock was born at Hamden, Connecticut, July 20, 1896, son of Charles W. and Minnie C. (Hurd) Brock and the grandson of Henry J. and Sarah (Roberts) Brock, both parents and grandparents being natives of Middletown, Connecticut. Charles W. Brock, born March 18, 1866, became identified with the dairy industry as a youth of twenty, when he operated a milk route for one H. F. Potter of Montowese, Connecticut. In 1890 he set up in business for himself, but this was sold on January 1, 1894, when he removed to New Haven where he continued the same line of activity near Hamden. In 1912, a place of one hundred and twenty-five acres was purchased and the collecting of a good herd of milch cows begun.

In the meantime, Charles Raymond Brock was receiving his academic education in the grammar and high schools of Hamden and New Haven, after which he went to the Connecticut State College, where he was graduated with the Class of 1919. Upon his return home he became associated with his father in business, and in 1921, the firm of C. W. Brock and Sons was incorporated, of which Charles R. Brock was made secretary and treasurer. In September, 1926, the Brock Company and the interests of the Hon. Henry F. Hall were merged, and, in May, 1927, were combined with those of George B. Hall, since which time the Brock-Hall Dairy Company has been the trade name. Charles Raymond Brock is secretary and manager of the corporation; Charles W. Brock is president; H. F. Hall is vice-president and George B. Hall serves as treasurer. Mr. Charles Raymond Brock is president of an affiliated company of the Fernwood Farms Dairy, Incorporated, of Waterbury, Connecticut.

Charles Raymond Brock is vice-president of the New Haven Chamber of Commerce, a member of the Hamden Chamber of Commerce, and of the Kiwanis Club, of New Haven, of which he was president in 1933. Among his clubs are the Quinnipiack and the New Haven Country. A sports lover, his favorite game is golf. Fraternally Mr. Brock is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons, being a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason; and with the Grange, both State and National. He is of the Congregational faith.

On September 24, 1921, Charles Raymond Brock married Elfie Blakeslee, daughter of Arthur A. and Flora (Foote) Blakeslee, and they are the parents of four children: 1. Jean Eleanor, born October, 1922. 2. Raymond Blakeslee, born January, 1924. 3. Muriel Elaine, born August, 1929. 4. Thelma Foote, born January, 1931.

VINCENT J. GRILLO, M.D.—In the relatively brief period which has marked his professional career, Dr. Vincent J. Grillo has built up a large and important practice in Hamden. He was born in this community and has made it the center of his activities since he entered professional life.

Dr. Grillo was born in Hamden on January 24, 1909, a son of Peter D. A. and Adeline (Gagliardi) Grillo. His father, who died in 1931, was a contractor and builder.

Vincent J. Grillo received his preliminary education in the public schools, entering Yale University upon completion of the course of study in New Haven High School. He was graduated from Yale in 1929 and spent the following four years in the Medical School of that university, where he prepared for his professional career and received the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1933. He was awarded the Sterling Scholarship for four years at Yale College and the Rosa Verdi and the Townsend Scholarships at the Yale School of Medicine. Dr. Grillo served his interneship at St. Francis' Hospital in Hartford, continuing there for eighteen months as resident physician and surgeon. In 1933 he served as medical examiner at the Connecticut State College. At the end of that time, on December 1, 1934, he opened offices in Hamden and entered upon the general practice of medicine and surgery, which he has continued with uninterrupted success. The demands on his services have grown rapidly and are now of large proportions. Dr. Grillo enjoys the highest professional standing. He is a diplomate of the National Board of Medical Examiners, being the only local physician to enjoy that distinction, and a member of the American Medical Association, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the New Haven County Medical Society. In addition to his professional connections, he is a prominent Catholic layman, taking an active part in the parish activities of St. Anne's Roman Catholic Church, including the Young Men's Catholic Club and the Holy Name Society. Dr. Grillo finds his principal recreation in sports, particularly golf and bowling, and in raising dogs, keeping several fine animals. His present home and offices are situated at 1324 Dixwell Avenue, Hamden.

Dr. Grillo married Mary Agnes Devlin, of New Haven, in August, 1937.

HENRY J. CONLAN—During his distinguished career, Henry J. Conlan, now serving his second term as assessor in West Haven, has assumed a place of outstanding distinction and leadership in the social, civic and business affairs of this section of New Haven County. In a business capacity he has operated a large and lucrative real estate and insurance business for the past eighteen years and in his social and civic interests is ranked as one of the most popular figures in West Haven and vicinity, where he has become particularly influential as a leader of the local Republican Party.

Mr. Conlan was born in New Haven, May 10, 1901, the son of William B. and Ellen (Lynch) Conlan. His father, who is now deceased, was associated with the Standard Lumber Company. Mr. Conlan received a general education in the public schools and completed this part of his studies at the Hillhouse High School. Shortly thereafter he established himself in an insurance and real estate business, opening offices in the Liberty Building at No. 152 Temple Street, New Haven. Four years later he started the Prospect Beach development and built forty-two homes in that district, where he was to be active until 1929, when he was elected chairman of the board of assessors of West Haven. He assumed this office on December 5th of that year and continued until March 1, 1933, when his term expired and he resumed his real estate and insurance activities. He was re-elected assessor on March 1, 1936, and has since continued in this office with characteristic distinction.

His career in politics dates back to 1920, when he became a member of the Western District Republican Club. The increasing interest he displayed in this organization and the contributions he made to its progress paved the way to the leadership of the Sixth District, which he occupied from 1925 to 1933. In his post as assessor he is former president of the State Assessors' Association, an office he held from January 1, 1930, to January 1, 1932. He has been equally active and prominent in the social affairs of his surroundings, being particularly active in the West Haven Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the West Haven Council of the Knights of Columbus. In his religious convictions he adheres to the Roman Catholic faith and worships at Our Lady of Victory Church of this denomination.

On October 22, 1927, Mr. Conlan married Helen Josephine O'Brien, and they are the parents of one child, Joyce Helen, born October 24, 1928.

WALTER BEECHER JOHNSON—One of the leading trucking and storage concerns in southwestern New Haven County outside of the City of New Haven is that owned and managed by Walter Beecher Johnson, at Seymour, during the past three decades and more. Mr. Johnson was born in Bethany, Connecticut, May 26, 1877, and received the advantages of a liberal education. He attended public schools of his home town and Woodbury Academy, and completed his education at Yale Business College. Remaining on his father's farm until he was twenty-eight years of age, in 1905, he came to Seymour and embarked in the trucking business, and at the same time established an up-to-date storage warehouse.

Mr. Johnson has been a director of the Seymour Savings Bank since 1934. A Democrat in his political allegiance, he has been chairman of the town committee, selectman from 1908 to 1919, and afterward a member of the Town Finance Board, and Town School Committee. A member of the State Senate during 1922-23, serving on important committees, he has been an active factor in matters affecting the welfare and progress of the community. He was deputy judge of Seymour from July, 1933, to February, 1935, being appointed on February 9th, of this year, postmaster, a post he has continued to fill efficiently and well. Fraternally, Mr. Johnson is affiliated with Morning Star Lodge, No. 47, Free and Accepted Masons; Mechanics Lodge, No. 73, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; Ansonia Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; the Knights of Pythias; the Seymour Chamber of Commerce, of which he is a trustee, and the Rotary Club, of which he was president during 1930-1931. He also serves as a trustee of Griffin Hospital at Derby.

On June 30, 1905, Walter Beecher Johnson married (first) Harriet H. Peck, of Woodbridge, Connecticut, and they were the parents of a daughter, Hazel V. He married (second) Edith F. Clark, of Vernon, Connecticut.

JUDGE JUSTUS J. FENNEL—As Judge of the Stamford City Court and one of the most prominent members of the local bar, Justus J. Fennel has won distinction both in his profession and in public life. He is a member of the well known firm of Fennel and Dimenstein in this city.

Judge Fennel was born in New York City on December 26, 1886, a son of Adam P. and Catherine (Barthel) Fennel, both natives of Germany. His father, who was born November 7, 1846, and died in March, 1895, came to the United States in early life and was engaged in the bakery business in Brooklyn until his retirement, following a successful career. The mother, Catherine (Barthel) Fennel, was born February 2, 1855, and died in New York City on December 29, 1893.

Justus J. Fennel received his preliminary education in New York public schools, completing his course at the High School of Commerce in February, 1905. For several years thereafter he was employed by the Yale & Towne Manufacturing Company at Stamford and thus secured his initial acquaintance with the city. Having meanwhile decided to adopt the profession of law, he eventually enrolled at Yale Law School, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1911. Admitted to the Connecticut bar in September of the same year, be became associated with the well known law firm of Cummings and Lockwood, whose senior member, Homer Cummings, later became Attorney General of the United States. Mr. Fennel continued this connection, with the exception of the war years, until September, 1919. From 1919 until 1926, he was engaged in the independent practice of law in Stamford, and on April 1, 1926, organized his present firm, Fennel and Dimenstein. In this firm he has as his associate, George Dimenstein, who came to him after a notable record at Yale, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1922, the degree of Bachelor of Laws, magna cum laude, in 1924, and served as a member of the editorial board of the "Yale Law Journal." This association has been very successful and the large practice enjoyed by the firm reflects its high professional standing.

Judge Fennel, who is an acknowledged leader of the Stamford bar, is widely known for his legal scholarship as well as his acumen. He has served as counsel in many important cases, is counsel for The Schick Dry Shave, Incorporated, and local counsel for the Standard Oil interests, in connection with which his services are highly valued by his associates. In April, 1927, he was chosen judge of the Stamford City Court, an office for which his thorough qualifications were apparent to all and which he has administered with fidelity and success.

On August 24, 1917, after the entry of the United States into the World War, Judge Fennel relinquished his professional duties to enlist in the army. He attended the Officers' Training Camp at Plattsburg, New York, completed his training at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, and in November, 1917, was commissioned captain. Assigned to command Battery C, of the Sixty-eighth Coast Artillery, he remained with these troops until after the close of the war, receiving his discharge at Fort Wadsworth, New York, on March 4, 1919. Upon his return to civil life, he resumed the practice of law. Judge Fennel has been very active in the American Legion, serving, variously, as Commander of the Stamford Post; member of the National Executive Committee and member of the National Legislative Committee. He is also a prominent Mason, being a member of Union Lodge, No. 5, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, a member of all higher bodies of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, including the Thirty-second degree of the Consistory, and of Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. Judge Fennel is also a member of Rippowam Lodge, No. 24, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; a member of Stamford Council, Boy Scouts of America, in whose work he has been much interested; a member and past president of the Kiwanis Club; a member of the Woodway Country Golf Club, and a member of the several bar associations, including the American Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association, the Fairfield County Bar Association and the Stamford Bar Association. Judge Fennel is a Republican in politics and a member and trustee of the First Presbyterian Church of Stamford. He has taken an enlightened interest in the cause of civic progress and has lent his support to many worthy community movements, which have benefited by his strong leadership and aid during his long residence in this city.

On March 24, 1923, in New York City, Justus J. Fennel married Mrs. Mitzi (Kerkow) Trainor, daughter of Charles and Paula (Pittner) Kerkow, who were of Austrian birth. Her father was for some years an interior architect and director in New York City. Mrs. Fennel, who was born in New York City on September 23, 1893, was educated in the public schools of the city and in Barnard College. She has been active in civic affairs and politics at Stamford, serving as a member and vice-president of the Republican Town Committee, and is a member of the Stamford's Woman's Club, the Schubert Club and other local organizations.

Judge and Mrs. Fennel are the parents of two children: 1. Mitzi Ruth, born January 8, 1924. 2. Justus John, Jr., born September 1, 1928. By a former marriage, Mrs. Fennel also has a son, Charles Kerkow, born September 4, 1914.

CLINTON J. HYDE, M.D.—Since 1919, Dr. Clinton J. Hyde has been engaged in the practice of medicine in Milford. In this region of Connecticut he is highly esteemed and honored among the members of his profession, who recognize the great usefulness of his accomplishments.

Dr. Hyde was born September 25, 1880, in Brooklyn, Connecticut, son of Irving John and Henrietta (Ennis) Hyde.

The public schools of New Haven and Willimantic furnished the early education of Clinton J. Hyde, who subsequently studied at New York University and Bellevue Medical College. He was graduated in 1903, a Doctor of Medicine. Then he went to work with a private sanitarium at Beacon, New York, and thereupon he became an interne at the Hudson River State Hospital for the Insane, continuing for five years in that position, remaining there until his removal in 1908 to Brooklyn, New York. For seven years he carried on a general practice of medicine in Brooklyn. In 1915 he came to Connecticut, opening his own sanitarium at Riverside. This institution was known as Riverside Sanitarium, and he conducted it until he opened his own private office in Hartford, specializing in nervous diseases. He remained in Hartford until February, 1919, the time of his coming to Milford. Here he carries forward his general practice of medicine at the present time.

Along with his own practice, Dr. Hyde is chief of the obstetrical service at Milford Hospital, having held this post since 1922, and chief of staff since November, 1936. He belongs to the Milford Medical Society, the New Haven Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is connected with a number of organizations that lead in civic affairs, including the Rotary Club, the Fellowcraft Club and several fraternal groups. He belongs to the Free and Accepted Masons, the Improved Order of Red Men, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Royal Arcanum, and in the Masonic order is also a member of the Order of Eastern Star. He belongs likewise to the Modern Woodmen of America and the Milford Wheel Club. In spare time, Dr. Hyde devotes a great deal of energy to outdoor life, being particularly fond of flower gardening. The grounds about his own home reveal his fine taste for color and form in natural decoration, the beautiful lawns and shrubs and flower beds attesting his artistry and diligence along these lines.

On September 25, 1907, in East Orange, New Jersey, Dr. Clinton J. Hyde married Nellie Elma Haviland. The children of this marriage are: 1. Elma Berenice, who became the wife of Russell Henderson. 2. David Clinton.

ROBERT D. BEARDSLEY—Engaged extensively in the practice of civil engineering, Robert D. Beardsley has had his own office in Naugatuck since 1912. He has served in many public offices of trust, having been appointed borough engineer for eleven successive terms down to the time of writing.

Mr. Beardsley was born June 29, 1877, in Plymouth, Connecticut, son of Arthur S. and Sarah M. (Melvin) Beardsley, and member of an old and honorable family. The original Beardsley ancestor in America was William Beardsley, who came from Stratford, England, in 1635, and became one of the original settlers of Stratford, Connecticut. Since that time the family has increased and its members have appeared in many parts of the country. At the 1935 Beardsley family reunion, in Stratford, there were 470 members of the house in attendance.

In the Plymouth public schools Robert D. Beardsley received his early education, and when he completed his high school studies he became a student at Connecticut State College. He was graduated at Storr's College in 1897. Employed by William G. Smith, a civil engineer, at Waterbury, for three years, he became engineer for the United Gas Improvement Company, in Waterbury, at about the turn of the century. He was afterward associated with George C. Ham, as an engineer, in Naugatuck, remaining for eleven years with Mr. Ham. In 1912, he opened his office in Naugatuck, where he has remained down to the present.

He has also held numerous public offices and has taken part extensively in the affairs of this region of Connecticut. His services as borough engineer have covered eleven terms. In 1908, he was elected borough auditor, an office in which he served for six terms. He was building inspector of Naugatuck for five terms. His chief activity has been centered in his work as city engineer, however, and in his own private practice. He has also been active in business affairs, serving as secretary for four years of the Naugatuck Building and Loan Association, which was organized in 1922. He was the first secretary of the organization, and since 1926 has been vice-president and a director. He belongs to the Connecticut State Society of Civil Engineers, and since organization has been active in the Naugatuck Chamber of Commerce. His labors have also included service in the military. For six years he was a member of Company A of the Second Regiment of the National Guard of the State of Connecticut, at Waterbury, and during the World War he was chief clerk of the draft board. He has always been fond, in spare time, of outdoor life and healthful outdoor sports. Fond of football, he played the game for seventeen years, and in 1896, while at Connecticut State College, was captain of his team.

On October 1, 1901, Robert D. Beardsley married Cecilia M. Sullivan, of Norwich, Connecticut, who died May 30, 1932. Four children were born to them: 1. Rev. Robert A. Beardsley, who is curate at the Sacred Heart Church, in New Haven. 2. Sarah L., a teacher of art in the graded schools. 3. Frederick M., a surveyor, associated in a professional way with his father. 4. Paul M., a title searcher, also associated with his father.

Mr. Beardsley is a member of St. Francis' Roman Catholic Church.

WALTER AUGUSTIN REILLY, M.D.—A true appraisal of a man's career is to be found in his devotion to duty, his services to his community and the success he achieves in his chosen mission. On the basis of this estimate Dr. Walter Augustin Reilly of Naugatuck can be ranked as one of the most highly esteemed and influential citizens of his generation in this city. Few men have come to hold a greater and warmer part in the hearts of his fellows and few have had more just cause to enjoy such adulation, for he was more than a medical man, in the strict professional sense; he was a distinctly human and sympathetic personality who employed his native, as well as scientific talents to the comfort and alleviation of those who sought his aid. From the outset of his long and distinguished career, which spanned over thirty-eight years, he enjoyed the confidence of the public at large, actively supported all movements designed to advance the general welfare of his surroundings and was a leader in social and civic affairs.

Dr. Reilly was born in the City of Bridgeport, March 27, 1876, the son of Thomas Francis and Catharine (Cook) Reilly. After a general education in the schools of his native community he matriculated at Holy Cross College in which he secured his academic education and from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree. Upon completing this part of his studies he went to New York City and entered the Bellevue Hospital Medical School in New York City from which he received his Doctor of Medicine degree in 1898. He then began a period of interneship, during which time he served on occasion as staff physician at the Mothers' and Babies' Hospital and the Bellevue Hospital in the aforementioned city.

The same year he came to Naugatuck and established himself in a medical practice that was to be marked for its outstanding distinction and success. To fully appreciate the place he came to assume in the life of the community, we quote in part from an editorial tribute printed shortly after his passing, which reads:

> No man who ever lived in Naugatuck had more friends than he. In fact, it might be said of him that everyone in this community, from child to oldest adult, was his friend. He was known not only as a skilled and successful practitioner but also as a kindly, genial, sympathetic, likeable man of the finest type of character. He was so devoted to his honorable profession and so eager at all times to be of service, that he never failed to respond to a sick call. The fact that his sleep might have been disturbed or that he had gone without rest for hours never deterred him from the performance of what he felt was his duty to those who needed his ministrations. Many, many times when the weather conditions were such that it seemed impossible for him to reach the bedside of a patient he insisted upon braving the elements so that he might bring relief to the sufferer and perhaps save a human life. He was noted for his cheerfulness in the sick room and for the careful and faithful attention he gave to his patients. Their recovery relieved his sincere anxiety and gave him much happiness. He found his greatest joy and comfort in his home, where he was a loving husband and devoted father.

Despite the heavy burdens imposed by professional duties, Dr. Reilly always recognized his civic and social obligations. For seven years he was health officer of Naugatuck. During his administration a serious smallpox epidemic broke out and it was due to his tireless and able efforts that the scourge was quickly brought under control. Dr. Reilly was widely known in fraternal circles. He belonged to Ojeda Council, No. 33, of the Knights of Columbus; Naugatuck Lodge, No. 967, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and Naugatuck Aerie, No. 640, of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. Professionally he served on the staff of the St. Mary's Hospital of Waterbury for a number of years and was a member of the New Haven County Medical Society and the Waterbury Medical Society.

On June 2, 1903, at the St. Francis Roman Catholic Church in Naugatuck, Dr. Reilly married Julia Agnes Burke, daughter of John Francis and Joeann (Driscoll) Burke. Dr. and Mrs. Reilly were the parents of one son: Dr. John Reilly, who was graduated from Fordham University in 1931 and then entered the Tufts Medical College from which he was graduated with a Doctor of Medicine degree in 1935. He served as an interne at the St. Mary's Hospital in Waterbury and, upon his father's passing, took over his practice.

Dr. Walter Augustin Reilly passed away at his home in Naugatuck, on June 3, 1936, at the age of sixty years. His death came as a distinct shock to the entire community which he had served with such outstanding devotion. Graphic evidence of the deep esteem he was held in was apparent at his funeral, which was attended by the leading business, official, professional figures of this region. He lived his life in accordance with the highest Christian ideals and conducted his activities on the highest ethical plane. Hundreds of tributes were paid to his memory, among them the following:

> Few deaths have shocked the people of Naugatuck any more than that of Dr. Walter A. Reilly. In our case a personal loss is felt, for he has been the family physician since the first time we saw light. Considerable space could be used in enumerating the many acts of kindness, patience and skill witnessed over a long period, but this has already been done in the news and editorial columns. Suffice it to say that Dr. Reilly was a great man, the type of person who is rare these days, the sort of individual who actually sacrifices his health in order that the well being of others might prosper. A man who has had such an exemplary life deserves his heavenly reward. May his soul rest in peace.

WILLIAM TOMKINS RODENBACH—To the industrial development of the Naugatuck Valley section of Connecticut, the late William Tomkins Rodenbach contributed importantly over a long period. For many years he was a manufacturer of plumbing supplies. He organized the Naugatuck Manufacturing Company; was the treasurer of the United States Rubber Company; and had been vice-president of the Naugatuck Savings Bank.

Mr. Rodenbach was a native of New York City, born in September, 1854. After completing his education at an early age, he was variously employed before removing to Naugatuck, where he thereafter made his home and the seat of his endeavors. Active in civic affairs, he served this city as mayor for three years and was president of the school board over a very long period. He had the honor of being a thirty-third degree Mason, a popular and well-known figure among his fraternal associates of that great organization. He attended the Congregational Church; and was notably generous in furthering welfare and humanitarian activities.

On December 20, 1882, William Tomkins Rodenbach married Mary S. Phinney, in New York City, and they were the parents of three children: 1. Charles P. 2. Katrina M., who married Theodore W. Reed, of Lowell, Massachusetts. 3. Margaret P., residing at home.

The death of Mr. Rodenbach in May, 1930, was widely mourned as the passing of one of the outstanding and progressive citizens of Naugatuck. Time will not diminish the regard in which his memory is held; nor can it take from that memory a wide appreciation of the good he accomplished as benefactor, man and friend.

DAVID EDWARD FITZ GERALD—Widely and favorably known as a lawyer and civic-minded citizen David Edward Fitz Gerald, of New Haven, has particularly interested himself in the affairs of Yale University and education in general. Among his other activities, he has been responsible for originating special scholarships at Yale for New Haven public school students, and in a variety of other ways he has helped to advance the cause of training the youth. In recognition of his extensive labors, not alone for Yale and for education, but in behalf of the general welfare, he has been signally honored in the Hall of Fame of the Harkness Memorial at Yale, where hangs his portrait among the thirty "immortals" of the university.

Mr. Fitz Gerald was born September 21, 1874, in New Haven, Connecticut, son of Edward and Ann (Connay) Fitz Gerald. His father was born July 12, 1847, in County Kerry, Ireland, and came to the United States in his youth. For many years he was a merchant in New Haven and an active worker in local politics, and in 1884 he was chairman of the Town Committee. Mrs. Fitz Gerald was also a native of County Kerry, Ireland, born in 1849, and she died in New Haven in 1880.

Attending St. John's School, in New Haven, David Edward Fitz Gerald was graduated from Hillhouse High School, and in 1891 matriculated at Yale University, there taking his degree of Bachelor of Law in 1895. In the following year he was awarded the degree of Master of Laws. Passing the Connecticut State bar examinations before he attained his majority, he was admitted upon becoming of age. In 1896, however, he began his legal work in association with the Hon. James P. Pigott, a former Congressman, and in 1897 became a member of the law firm of Fitz Gerald and Walsh. He remained as senior partner of that firm until 1920. From that year until 1932 he was senior partner of the firm of Fitz Gerald and Hadden, in which his partner was Judge William L. Hadden. In 1932 the firm was reorganized as Fitz Gerald, Foote and Fitz Gerald.

Early in his career David Edward Fitz Gerald began specializing in trial cases, handling some outstanding work along these lines. In 1906 he was attorney for the defendants in the trials arising out of the moulders' strike of that year. He defended the engineer in the case resulting from a wreck at Stamford, on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, and he also defended the rear-end brakeman and conductor in the White Mountain Express wreck at North Haven, Connecticut. Both of those were 1913 cases, and others of a similar nature established firmly his reputation as a trial lawyer. Mr. Fitz Gerald was in his early thirties when he was named with Clarence Deming and Judge William Case of the Superior Court to serve as an arbitration board in the dispute between the Connecticut Company and its electric car employes over an increase in wages. He joined Judge Case in making the award to the employes. This was the first tribunal of its kind in the Commonwealth, and was among the first in the United States to deal with such matters involving so many persons. Much editorial comment was forthcoming on the case and on the men who made the decision.

Along with his other activities, Mr. Fitz Gerald is a member of the New Haven County Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association, the American Bar Association and the American Society for Judicial Settlement of Judicial Disputes. From an early period of his life he felt inclined to utilize his legal knowledge for the benefit of the working groups in society, who he believed were all too little protected by the law and those skilled in legalism. He felt that greater political influence could be wielded by "boring from within" a party organization rather than by holding public office, though in 1922 he did accept the Democratic nomination for Governor of Connecticut. He was also elected mayor of New Haven, serving four terms from January 1, 1918, to 1926, inclusive, and his administration was noted for its wise policies in direction of the destinies of New Haven through World War days and in the years immediately thereafter. In 1917 he had been appointed a member of the Connecticut Council of Defense, and he was also chairman of the local draft boards. In 1918 he organized the Emergency War Board of New Haven. These offices, combined with the duties of wartime mayor of the city, gave him wide powers and responsibilities, and placed him in a position to render very effective assistance to the Federal Government. Local industries readily cooperated with him to the end of extending such aid. Mr. Fitz Gerald also performed other services of note in the political realm, having been chairman of the Democratic State committee from 1913 to 1922, and of the town committee from 1907 to 1909, and again from 1912 to 1922. He was a delegate-at-large to the Democratic national conventions in 1912, 1916, 1920, 1924, 1928, 1932 and 1936, and elected and now serving as Democratic National Committeeman from Connecticut and vice-chairman of the Democratic National Committee. As a result of his war work he was decorated by the King of Italy as a chevalier of the Crown of Italy. He is the only civilian member of Admiral Foote Post of the Grand Army of the Republic, in New Haven, and is an honorary member of Allan Osborn Camp of the Spanish-American War Veterans and a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. He is now Honorary Captain and Judge Advocate of the Second Company Governor's Foot Guards.

In social and fraternal affairs Mr. Fitz Gerald has also taken an important part. He is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Loyal Order of Moose, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, the Foresters of America, the Ancient Order of Hibernians and the Knights of Columbus. He belongs to the Quinnipiack Club, the Race Brook Country Club, the Woodbridge Country Club, the Hartford Club, the Union League, the Knights of St. Patrick, and the Catholic Club of New York City. He belongs to St. Aedan's Catholic Church, in New Haven.

At Milford, Connecticut, on November 14, 1900, David Edward Fitz Gerald married Alice J. Clark, daughter of Josiah Fowler and Sarah (McCue) Clark. They became the parents of two children: 1. David Edward, Jr., born in 1902, a graduate of Georgetown University, holding the degree of Bachelor of Arts from that institution, as well as the Bachelor of Laws degree from Yale University; he was admitted to the Connecticut bar in June, 1929, and became a member of the law firm of Fitz Gerald, Foote and Fitz Gerald. 2. John Clark, who holds the Bachelor of Arts degree from Trinity College and the Bachelor of Laws degree from Boston University; he was admitted to the bar of Connecticut, in December, 1932, and made a member of the law firm of Fitz Gerald, Foote and Fitz Gerald.

EDWARD EVERITT WILLIAMS, M.D.—During the thirteen years Dr. Edward Everitt Williams has practiced in Naugatuck he has gained an enviable reputation for his professional accomplishments and won wide popularity and esteem for the contributions he has made to the social and civic life of his surroundings.

Dr. Williams was born in Canton, New York, January 11, 1897, the son of Dr. Frank Fay and Lillabelle Amelia (Thornton) Williams. Mrs. Williams died January 8, 1937. His father, who is also a physician, has conducted a large and successful practice for a number of years in Canton, New York. After a general education in the public schools of his native community, Dr. Williams matriculated at St. Lawrence University, from which he was graduated with the Class of 1919. He then enrolled at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University in New York City, in which he secured his professional training and by which he was awarded a degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1923. Eighteen months following completion of his training he served as an interne at the Newark City Hospital in Newark, New Jersey, and on January 1, 1925, came to Naugatuck to establish himself in a general practice, which he has conducted since with outstanding distinction and success. In conjunction with his regular activities he also serves as plant physician for the Naugatuck Chemical Company and acts in the same capacity for Peter Paul, Incorporated, both of this community. Professionally he is highly esteemed and is a member of the County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society, the Waterbury Medical Society and the American Medical Association.

Throughout his residence in this community he has taken a keen and active interest in social and civic affairs. He is a member of the Naugatuck Golf Club, the Naugatuck Young Men's Christian Association and fraternizes with the Order of Free and Accepted Masons, in which he holds a thirty-second degree and is a Shriner. During the World War Dr. Williams enlisted in the United States Army, Medical Corps. In March, 1938, Dr. Williams was commissioned Major of the 301st Medical Regiment Reserve of the 76th Division. Fond of sports, Dr. Williams finds particular pleasure in horseback riding and owns a horse of his own.

HON. OMAR W. PLATT—Since 1910 the Hon. Omar W. Platt, of Milford, has served as Judge of Probate. He is also prosecuting attorney, having begun his service in this connection in 1901 and rounded out his thirty-sixth year in that office in July, 1937, and is widely and favorably known in the community for his work as president of the Library Board of Milford.

Judge Platt was born January 30, 1874, in Milford, Connecticut, son of William and Almira A. (Hand) Platt. His father, who was born in 1824 and died in 1911, was for years deputy sheriff in Milford. He was a prominent merchant of the community, carrying on this work until he was fifty years of age. He retired from his active endeavors in 1874. The Platts are an old family of Milford, Richard Platt having been one of the first settlers here in 1639. He came from the New Haven Colony and originally from England. Along with his other activities, the father of Judge Platt served as assessor and as a member of the Board of Relief.

In the graded and high schools of Milford, his Connecticut birthplace and the ancient seat of his family, Omar W. Platt received his early education, completing his training at the Hopkins Preparatory School and Yale University, both in New Haven. He was graduated as a Bachelor of Arts from Yale in 1899, and from Yale Law School in 1903. Admitted to the Connecticut State bar, he at once started a general practice of law in Milford, where he has remained since that time. He was elected Judge of Probate about 1910, and has since continued in this office, as already noted. In addition to carrying on his work in this connection and as head of the Library Board and as prosecuting attorney, Judge Platt has long been a member of the School Board of Milford and has been president of this body since 1921. He first served on the School Board in 1905. He has been president of the Milford Hospital Society since its inception. He is also president of the Milford Trust Company.

Lending his talents to his community and State along many different lines of endeavor, Judge Platt served three times as State Representative,—in 1901, 1903 and 1909,—and in 1905, was made State Senator. He worships in the faith of the Congregational Church. Intensely public-spirited, he has contributed, as his record plainly shows, to many different branches of Milford and Connecticut life, and has earned high honors among his fellow citizens.

On November 17, 1904, in Milford, Connecticut, Judge Omar W. Platt married Carlotta F. Baldwin, daughter of Roger S. and Angelina (Frost) Baldwin.

JOHN S. NICKUM, M.D.—For many years one of the leading physicians of Bridgeport, Dr. John S. Nickum is active in both private practice and hospital service.

Dr. Nickum was born February 3, 1892, in Hellertown, Pennsylvania, son of Benjamin Franklin and Katharine (Schneider) Nickum. His father, who died in 1934, was a shoe manufacturer in Allentown, Pennsylvania, over a period of many years, and was one of that city's foremost business men.

The public and high schools of his native district provided John S. Nickum's early education. Afterward he became a student at Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, where he was graduated in 1913. In 1914, he was graduated from Muhlenberg College, and in 1918, he took the degree of Doctor of Medicine at Tufts Medical College. Serving a one-year interneship at Bridgeport Hospital, he opened offices for the private practice of medicine in Bridgeport at the end of that time, and today continues to do a general line of work in his profession.

He is also assistant attending physician at Bridgeport Hospital, having held this position since 1925. At the time of the World War he was commissioned first lieutenant and sent to the hospital for his interneship. He is a member of the Bridgeport Medical Society, the Fairfield County Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and the American College of Physicians.

Taking his full part in civic and social affairs in his community, Dr. Nickum is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and many of its branches, holding the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry. He is a member also of the Brooklawn Country Club. Above all else Dr. Nickum enjoys his home life and his many friendly associations.

He married (first) on September 9, 1917, Esther Katherine Aichroth, who died August 6, 1921. There was one child of this marriage, Betty Anne. On June 27, 1924, at Bridgeport, Connecticut, he married (second) Elizabeth Rose. Two children have been born to them: 1. Nancy Rose. 2. Jane Elizabeth.

The Nickums worship in the faith of the Presbyterian Church, being members of the First Presbyterian Church of Bridgeport.

JOHN A. ADAMSON—Not only as a public official but as a private citizen, Chief of Police John A. Adamson has furthered the progress and betterment of Naugatuck, of which city he is a native and lifelong resident. Born January 16, 1880, he is the son of John C. and Martha (Tenney) Adamson, both deceased.

Educated in the public schools of Naugatuck, Mr. Adamson was connected with the United States Rubber Company for nineteen years, his specialty, for the larger part of this time, being the making of boots and shoes. During the World War period he did police duty at the plant of this rubber company, which was then turning out large quantities of military supplies. He went with the Police Department in 1919, as a supernumerary, while retaining his place with the rubber company. Seven years later he resigned to enter the Naugatuck police force as a regular. Since January, 1930, Mr. Adamson has been Chief of the Police Department, and has won the esteem of the people of the city by his efficient work and leadership. He is a member of St. Francis Catholic Church.

On November 11, 1901, John A. Adamson married Catherine Frances Glynn, daughter of James and Ellen (Hutchinson) Glynn.

ORWIN BRADFORD GRIFFIN, Ph.D.—One of the outstanding secondary school educators in Connecticut, Doctor Orwin Bradford Griffin has served as superintendent of schools of Litchfield for the past ten years, coming to his office with a most impressive record as an educator and continuing to display the same talents which led to his previous distinction.

Orwin Bradford Griffin was born May 29, 1893, in Peabody, Massachusetts, son of George A. and the late Julia (Bradford) Griffin, of Peabody. Julia (Bradford) Griffin was a member of one of the leading Colonial families of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, tracing her ancestry back to Governor Bradford of the "Mayflower's" first voyage in 1620.

After graduating from the grammar and high schools in Peabody, Orwin Bradford Griffin entered the College of Liberal Arts of Boston University, graduating in 1915 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Two years later, continuing to study in Boston University, Mr. Griffin received his Master of Arts degree from the Graduate School in 1917. Then, determining to follow a career as a teacher, having already taught from 1911 to 1915, in the evening schools of Peabody and in the Peabody High School, and from 1915 to 1917, having taught various subjects in the high school of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, Mr. Griffin became a Jacob Sleeper Fellow of Boston University and spent the award studying education at Teachers' College, Columbia University, New York City. At the time this fellowship was awarded, the faculty of Boston University declared that it was "the highest award within the gift of the Faculty." In 1918, Mr. Griffin turned to active teaching, although he continued to study and, in 1928, was awarded his degree of Doctor of Philosophy by Teachers' College, having completed his work in the field of Educational Research. Doctor Griffin's first post in 1918, was as an instructor in English in the Hartford High School, a position which he held until 1921, at which time he became head of the English Department and sub-master at Wilby High School, Waterbury. Remaining in Waterbury until 1929, Doctor Griffin then came to Litchfield as superintendent of the Litchfield schools and principal of the Litchfield High School with Francis I. Enslin as vice-principal. Under Doctor Griffin's supervision are the grammar schools of Litchfield, East Litchfield, Milton, Marsh, Northfield and Bantam, and the Litchfield High School. The enrollment in the grade schools as a whole exceeds five hundred and twenty-five pupils with twenty teachers; the High School has an enrollment of two hundred and fifteen children with ten teachers and an athletic coach. Doctor Griffin has also built up the high school library until it lists more than a thousand volumes. In addition to his secondary school work, Doctor Griffin has been instructor in the History of Education at Teachers' College in New York City, in the summer of 1926, and during the academic year of 1926-1927; visiting professor of Education at the College of Education, University of Minnesota, in the summer of 1927; and visiting professor of Education at George Washington University, in the summer of 1928. Through the years, Doctor Griffin has come to be known very widely as an educator, being a member of the National Education Association, a life member of the Department of Superintendence of the American Association of School Administrators, formerly one of the nine directors of the New England Association of School Superintendents, a member of the National Council of Teachers of English, as well as belonging to other educational organizations. Doctor Griffin has also been a prolific writer, contributing many articles concerned with educational topics to professional journals as well as being the author of the popular book, "Tales of Old Litchfield." Active in the affairs of the Congregational Church, he is a deacon of the Litchfield Congregation and superintendent of the church Sunday School. A member of Mattatuck Chapter, Connecticut Society, Sons of the American Revolution, he is also a member of St. Paul's Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, Phi Beta Kappa of Boston University, Phi Delta Kappa and Kappa Delta Pi of Columbia University (Teachers' College), and past president and secretary of the Men's Forum of Litchfield. Always interested in civic affairs, Doctor Griffin is particularly concerned with Boy Scout Work, being an executive of the local council, Boy Scouts of America. He is also chairman of the Litchfield Home and Farm Accident Prevention Committee, Litchfield Chapter, American Red Cross.

Doctor Orwin Bradford Griffin, married, at Hartford, June 28, 1921, Olga L. Swenson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Swenson of Hartford. Doctor and Mrs. Griffin are the parents of three children: 1. Laura M., born in 1923. 2. Orwin Bradford, Jr., born in 1925. 3. Phoebe L., born in 1930.

JOSEPH A. FITZGERALD—New Haven, because of the influence of Yale University situated in the city, has been notable in the field of public school education by reason of high standards, and the distinguished abilities of the educators who have headed its system. To the fine traditions of the past, Joseph A. Fitzgerald has made a notable contribution, both as a teacher and a principal of city schools, and as superintendent of New Haven schools, with their enrollment of between thirty and thirty-five thousand pupils and a teachers corps of more than fifteen hundred. Not only has he had an important part in shaping the policies and administration of the city's school system, but he has been outstanding in his introduction and promotion of progressive movements for fair treatment of the teaching profession. He never has been afraid to fight for what he holds to be right and just, nor has he failed of success in many of these endeavors.

Mr. Fitzgerald is a native of Worcester, Massachusetts, born March 19, 1890, son of William and Annie (Havy) Fitzgerald. His preparation for his profession has been varied and complete, for after attending elementary schools, he studied at the Boston College High School, Boston College, Boston Teachers College, the Yale School of Education and has taken courses in other institutions of learning. He began teaching in the public schools of Boston, at the Agassiz School, in 1914. He then came to Connecticut and taught in Glastonbury schools. He still had a reputation to make when he came to New Haven as principal of the Abraham Lincoln School, and in 1923 went to the large Ivy Street School. When the new Bassett Street School was erected in 1927, he became its head and, beginning in 1930 was principal of the Augusta Lewis Troup Junior High School for six years. Following the death of Superintendent McCarthy, it was because of a wise and widely approved recognition of the abilities and experience and record of Mr. Fitzgerald that he was selected as the Superintendent of Schools for New Haven. It is an interesting side light upon this decision of the Board of Education, that Mr. Fitzgerald, without any regard to his own future, had been in conflict with the board upon several occasions, and had carried his fight to the State Legislature. Perhaps no greater compliment could have been paid to his integrity, utter honesty in the defense of his convictions, and the fairness he had displayed in battles for the betterment of conditions and salaries under which teachers work, than this choice of him as the man in charge of the large city school system.

Mr. Fitzgerald has also taught at Albertus Magnus College, and is a much sought after lecturer to other educational institutions, especially normal schools and girls' colleges. He was editor-in-chief of the "New Haven Teachers Journal," one of the finest publications of its kind. His connection with the Teachers' League is particularly noteworthy, as a member and chairman of the salary committee during the depression years which retarded the progress of education. In this capacity, and as a progressive educator, he led his professional colleagues in the fight for the betterment of salaries, tenure of office and constitutional reorganization in the League. Still a young man, he promises to go far and achieve even more greatly.

To think of Mr. Fitzgerald as a professor immersed to the point of forgetfulness in his profession, is to have a distorted idea of him as a man among men and a good citizen. He is one who enters heartily into all phases of everday activities. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus, an initiate of the third degree, San Salvador Council, and of the fourth degree, John Barry Assembly. He is a popular figure in the New Haven Rotary Club, and is a member of the Quinnipiack Club and the Knights of St. Patrick. There are few local movements making for the betterment of the city and its people to which he does not lend support. As already indicated, he was finance officer in the Connecticut State Teachers' Association and president of the New Haven Teachers' League. He is of the Catholic faith, a member of St. Bernadette's Church, New Haven.

On December 29, 1915, at Boston, Massachusetts, Joseph A. Fitzgerald married Mary D. Welsh, daughter of John and Annette (Nyhan) Welsh, and they are the parents of three children: 1. Claire Annette, a student at Albertus Magnus College, New Haven. 2. William J., attending Hillhouse High School. 3. Paul Francis, student in the grammar schools.

JOSEPH H. HOWARD, M.D.—Specializing in obstetrics and gynecology, Dr. Joseph H. Howard is one of Bridgeport's widely known physicians.

Dr. Howard was born August 30, 1892, in Bridge-

Joseph A. Fitzgerald

port, Connecticut, son of Patrick Henry and Anna M. (Synnott) Howard. His mother died December 31, 1935.

The public and high schools of Bridgeport provided the early education of Joseph H. Howard, who later became a student at Georgetown University, where he took his degrees of Bachelor of Science in 1916 and Doctor of Medicine in 1918. For one year he served an interneship at Bridgeport Hospital. From 1919 to 1927, he was engaged in a general practice of medicine, and spent 1926-1927, in post graduate work in European clinics, specializing in obstetrics and gynecology. He has continued in this work down to the present, also serving since 1927 as attending obstetrician at St. Vincent's Hospital. Before that year he was assistant surgeon and one of the hospital's most active professional workers. Since 1919 he has been gynecologist at the City Dispensary. Since 1927 he has been consultant in obstetrics and gynecology at Englewood Hospital, in Bridgeport.

Along with his active medical work, Dr. Howard is a diplomat of the American Board of Obstetrics and Gynecology, a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons, and a member of the Bridgeport Medical Society, the Fairfield County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and is a Fellow of the American Medical Association. At one time he was secretary of the Bridgeport Medical Society. He is a member of Brooklawn Country Club and the University Club, and belongs to Assumption Roman Catholic Church.

Public work has augmented his other accomplishments. In 1925 and 1926, Dr. Howard served as a member of the Bridgeport Board of Health. He is widely and favorably known in his profession and in many departments of Connecticut life, and his labors have brought him splendid rewards of satisfaction and appreciation.

On October 10, 1923, in Robinson, Illinois, Dr. Joseph H. Howard married Eleanor Scott. Four children were born to them: 1. Patricia Jane. 2. J. Scott. 3. David Rosford. 4. Nathaniel Phoenix.

RUDOLPH KARL—The service that Rudolph Karl has rendered to the Town of Litchfield as its clerk and registrar has caused him to be widely and favorably known among his fellow citizens here and to be honored in an ever widening circle of acquaintance.

Mr. Karl was born May 15, 1868, in New York City, son of the late Peter and Wilhelmina (Hudel) Karl. Both his parents were native Germans, who came to New York in 1858. Peter Karl, the father, served during the Civil War in a New York volunteer regiment, giving valiant service to the country of his adoption. After the war, he came to Litchfield, where for years he conducted a tailoring business and took an active part in community affairs.

The public schools of New York City, his birthplace, furnished Rudolph Karl's early education. In 1880, he came with his parents to Litchfield, where he completed his studies at Litchfield High School. Leaving the classroom at about the age of fifteen years, he became a clerk in the post office in Litchfield, thereafter serving as assistant postmaster under five Litchfield postmasters. For nine years he was engaged in the railway mail service, and from 1910 to 1915, was postmaster of the town. Then came a period in which Mr. Karl took up commercial photography here, conducting his own studio with eminent success and building up a fine business, particularly in picture postcards, both domestic and foreign. He has a large collection of historical pictures, which furnish his friends and acquaintances with many a fascinating hour.

With his brothers he operated that business until 1925. In that year he was elected clerk and registrar for the Town of Litchfield, afterward being re-elected to this post. In his political views he is a staunch Republican. For four years he was a member of the Board of Burgesses of the Borough of Litchfield. He has been a member of the Republican town committee since about 1918. He is a member of the Sons of Veterans, and serves as State adjutant of the organization.

Mr. Karl lives on East Street, Litchfield, and his offices are in Town Hall, where he carries on his work as clerk and registrar of the town.

ALBERT WILLIAM CLOCK—In the world of banking and finance Albert William Clock has played a prominent part in the community of Litchfield, where he is president of the First National Bank.

Mr. Clock was born June 21, 1894, in Litchfield, Connecticut, son of the late Elgin G. and Margaret (Stausebach) Clock. His father, who was a painter by occupation and was also long engaged in the insurance business, was a native of Connecticut. The mother was born in New York State.

The graded and high schools of Litchfield provided the early education of Albert William Clock, who completed his formal studies when he was about nineteen years of age. For some months before graduation from high school, he was employed on a part-time basis by the First National Bank. Then, after he was graduated, he devoted his entire time to this work, becoming assistant cashier, cashier and finally, on January 12, 1937, president of the bank. For a number of years he has been one of the bank's directors, and he is in active charge of the institution. The other officers are: Colonel Samuel H. Fisher, chairman of the board of directors; Walter Howe, vice-president; Everett C. Osborn, cashier; and Donald C. Peck, assistant cashier. The First National is the only commercial bank in Litchfield and is one of the strongest in Litchfield County.

Along with his work with it, Mr. Clock has shouldered other responsibilities. He is a director of the Clark Insurance Agency, in Litchfield. Politically he is a Republican. In 1925, he was elected treasurer of the Town of Litchfield, an office that he has continued to hold to the time of writing. He served as the first vice-president of the Connecticut Safe Deposit Association, is now president and a member of its executive committee. A graduate of the American Institute of Banking, Mr. Clock is a member of the Litchfield County chapter of the institute. He also serves as a member of the board of review of the Boy Scouts of America for the Ethan Allen district, and is a member of the board of managers of the Litchfield Community House, Incorporated, and a trustee of the White Memorial Foundation.

He is president of the West Cemetery Improvement and a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Congregational Church. Adding military service to his other achievements, Mr. Clock entered the Army of the United States in September, 1917, going over-seas for World War service with the 304th Infantry Regiment, Seventy-sixth Division, and carrying on his work with the Army until he was honorably discharged on February 28, 1919, with the rank of sergeant. He is today active in American Legion affairs, being a past commander, past adjutant and past treasurer of his post. He takes an active part in practically every civic movement, is well known in financial circles in Connecticut, and is a member of the Grange.

Albert William Clock married, on June 26, 1920, in Litchfield, Connecticut, Helen P. Webster, daughter of Almon B. and Clara (Atwood) Webster. Three children were born to them: 1. Robert M., on April 11, 1921. 2. Ernest Webster, on September 9, 1924. 3. Marjory L., on September 15, 1929. The Clock family residence is situated in Lake Street, Litchfield.

DAVID S. GREENSPUN, M.D.—Engaged in a general practice of medicine, Dr. David S. Greenspun, of Bridgeport, has been specializing in internal medicine since 1930.

Dr. Greenspun was born April 12, 1899, in Odessa, Russia, son of Abraham and Tessie (Stoven) Greenspun. His father resides in Bridgeport. The family came to this country from Russia, their ancestral home, settling in Bridgeport when David S. Greenspun was only three years of age.

In the public and high schools of this city David S. Greenspun received his early education, later attending Sheffield Scientific School, Yale College, in New Haven, as a member of the class of 1921. In 1925, he was graduated from the Medical School of Yale University with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and thereafter he served an interneship at Bridgeport Hospital for one year. At the conclusion of that year he opened offices in Bridgeport, where he proceeded to carry on a general practice of medicine. In 1930, he settled upon internal medicine as his specialty, and has since continued in this work, developing a very large and satisfying practice.

Dr. Greenspun also is a member of the staff of the Bridgeport Hospital Medical Service. He is a member of the Bridgeport Medical Society, the Fairfield County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He also belongs to the Professional Club and the Free and Accepted Masons. During the World War he enlisted in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, entering the service in September, 1918, and remaining until his honorable discharge in November, 1918, after the signing of the Armistice and the conclusion of hostilities. He has been consistently fond of all the finer things of life, particularly music. He plays the violin in a very creditable way, and greatly enjoys music as both performer and listener. The out-of-doors holds a special appeal for him, and he is particularly fond of golf.

In New York City, on June 18, 1927, Dr. David S. Greenspun married Belle Slosberg. One child, Roger A., was born to this marriage on December 16, 1929.

JOHN FRANCIS FORWARD—One of the leading members of the Hartford bar, John Francis Forward has filled an important position in the business and public life of this district of Connecticut. His contribution has been a highly significant one, rich in its value to his community, county and State, and is respected and honored in every circle in which he is known.

Mr. Forward was born October 16, 1872, in South Hadley, Massachusetts, son of George H. and Frances Loomis (McMaster) Forward. His father, George H. Forward, was the son of Francis Forward of Granby, Massachusetts, who was born in Belchertown in that State, where members of the Forward family had lived since the coming of Rev. Justus Forward in 1775, he being the first minister in Belchertown, and from whom John Francis Forward, the subject of this biography, is directly descended in the ninth generation.

Mr. Forward's mother, Frances Loomis (McMaster) Forward, was the daughter of John McMaster and Laura (Bissell) McMaster. John McMaster was born in Amherst, Massachusetts, and lived in Canton, Connecticut, Agawam and Granby, Massachusetts. He was a direct descendant of John McMaster who came from Scotland in 1720, and settled at Worcester, Massachusetts. His wife, Laura (Bissell) McMaster, was from East Windsor Hill, Connecticut, and was descended from the Bissell, Thompson, Ellsworth and Wolcott families.

Mr. Forward attended the public schools of Springfield, Massachusetts, where he was graduated from high school, then became a student at Trinity College, Hartford, where in 1896, he took the degree of Bachelor of Science. Turning his attention to educational work, he was a teacher at Salisbury Academy, Salisbury, Connecticut, from 1896 to 1898. In 1899, he became a student in the law office of Andrew F. Gates, of Hartford, with a view to preparing himself for the practice of law, and in 1902, he was duly admitted to the bar of the State of Connecticut.

Opening his own office for the practice of his profession, he readily distinguished himself by his careful preparation of cases and his loyalty to his clients. His practice rapidly and consistently increased in proportions and in importance as the years went on. In 1921, he formed a partnership with Edward J. Daly, the two men starting the firm of Forward and Daly. Mr. Forward is today recognized as a leader of the Hartford bar, and is widely admired because of his clear and cogent reasoning and his deep knowledge of the law. He has won many notable verdicts.

Adding public service to his other activities, Mr. Forward served at one time as special prosecutor for the City of Hartford. In 1917, he was made public defender of the County of Hartford, continuing his work in that connection until his resignation in 1929. He has also had a number of important business affiliations, being secretary and a director of the Roto Company and of the Gray and Prior Machine Company, as well as of the Baldwin-Stewart Electric Company. He is president of the Lakeland Company, of Hartford, and a director and secretary of the National Sherardizing and Machine Company. From 1919 to 1922, he was a member of the Board of Street Commissioners. From 1920 to 1922, Mr. Forward was president of the University Club and, from 1924 to 1926, of the Trinity College Alumni Association. He is an ex-vestryman of Trinity Church. A Republican in his political views, Mr. Forward was in 1910, that party's candidate for representative from Hartford in the General Assembly, being defeated in the election by a very small margin. He is a captain of the staff of the First Company, Governor's Foot Guard, with which he has been connected for over thirty-five years. Mr. Forward is a member of the American Bar, the Connecticut State Bar, the Hartford County Bar Associations, the Sons of the American Revolution, The Connecticut Historical Society, the Dramatic League, the Hartford Club, the Get Together Club, and the Rotary Club.

CORNELIUS STEPHEN CONKLIN, M.D.—During the past two decades, Dr. Cornelius Stephen Conklin has been engaged in the practice of medicine in Bridgeport. He is a leading figure in the professional life of the city and as a specialist in obstetrics enjoys a large practice.

Dr. Conklin was born in Ansonia, Connecticut, on November 29, 1889, a son of William H. and Mary (Walsh) Conklin. His father, who was also a physician, practiced in Ansonia for fifty-three years until his death on January 11, 1935.

Cornelius Stephen Conklin received his preliminary education in the public schools of his birthplace and after completing the high school course, spent two years as a student in Niagara University. At the end of that time he transferred to Fordham University, New York City, where he prepared for his professional career in the medical school of the institution, taking the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1916. For one year afterward, he was an interne in St. Vincent's Hospital, Bridgeport, but with the entry of the United States into the World War, he took a post-graduate course in the Army Medical School, and continued in active service in the Regular Army Medical Corps for three years, holding the rank of first lieutenant. Seventeen months of this period were spent abroad with the American Expeditionary Forces. In April, 1920, Dr. Conklin received his honorable discharge from the army and returned to Bridgeport, where he opened offices for the practice of his profession, gradually limiting his attention to obstetrical cases. In this field he is now a well known specialist.

Dr. Conklin is also obstetrician at St. Vincent's Hospital, Bridgeport. He was president of the hospital staff at that institution in 1928, and from January, 1935, to January, 1936, was president of the Bridgeport Medical Society, a distinction indicating his position in the city's medical life. Dr. Conklin is a member, in addition, of the American Medical Association, the Connecticut State Medical Association, and the Fairfield County Medical Society. He is a Roman Catholic in religious faith, and is affiliated fraternally with the Knights of Columbus, as well as Ansonia Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He finds his favorite recreation in outdoor sports, particularly football, which he himself played in younger years as a member of his high school and college teams.

On October 15, 1924, in Stratford, Cornelius Stephen Conklin married Josephine Mary Baldwin. They have three children: 1. Mary, born September 4, 1925. 2. Cornelius, born January 26, 1927. 3. William, born March 19, 1931.

WILLIAM CLINTON SANFORD—For many years a prominent figure both in the general life of Redding and in the town's public affairs, William Clinton Sanford won distinction for his ability and industry, his exemplary citizenship and the fine public spirit which marked his entire career. Teacher, farmer, merchant and in later life a real estate and insurance operator, he was also a public servant of rare fidelity and a civic leader whose disinterested concern for the welfare of his community commanded the respect of all.

Mr. Sanford was born in Redding, on July 7, 1859, a son of James and Sarah (Meeker) Sanford. He was a member of old American families and a direct descendant of the Rev. John Beach, of Revolutionary fame, who was the first rector of Christ Church, Redding, where William Clinton Sanford worshipped devoutly throughout his life.

Educated in the Sanford public school at Redding, Mr. Sanford himself became a teacher at the early age of sixteen and for a period of about ten years continued to teach in the local district schools. During this time he also engaged in general truck farming, supplying vegetables to the Bridgeport markets, and furnished hay to the horse railroad operating in Danbury. Subsequently, for another period of ten years, Mr. Sanford operated a butcher route and a general store, while about 1899, he became teacher of manual training in the Sanford School, continuing until 1905. In 1911, he entered the real estate and insurance business, in which he was active until his death.

In all the associations of his active career, Mr. Sanford demonstrated the loyalty to responsibilities and the fine ability which characterized him. These qualities were no less manifest in his service in public life, which began while he was still a young man and continued intermittently until his death. He held many town offices, including the post of selectman, which he filled for several terms, and in 1886 was called to a wider field when he was elected to the General Assembly as the youngest member to represent his town. He was also Justice of the Peace for about ten years, and from 1925 until the close of his life was town treasurer. He deservedly won the confidence of his fellow townsmen and by his efficient administration of his various offices contributed substantially to the proper handling of the public business and the advancement of the town's welfare. Mr. Sanford was a member of many representative town organizations and had an active part in its social life. For many years he was Senior Warden of Christ Church and was always one of its most generous and loyal supporters, giving his unwavering allegiance to the Christian faith and the principles of Christian loyalty.

On January 25, 1881, in Weston, Connecticut, William Clinton Sanford married Edith Jane Cole, daughter of William and Mary Jane (Brown) Cole. Her father was a farmer in the Weston community. Mr. and Mrs. Sanford became the parents of one son, J. Harold, who resides at the family home, Pleasant Valley, Redding.

Mr. Sanford died in New York City after an illness of many months on March 17, 1936. Word of his passing was received with the deepest regret by his fellow townsmen who had for so many years acknowledged his pre-eminence as a man and citizen in their midst and who felt for him the greatest affection because of his human sympathies and many helpful acts of kindness as a neighbor and friend.

JOSEPH CHARLES QUATRANO, M.D.—A physician at Bridgeport since he entered upon the practice of his profession a few years ago, Dr. Joseph Charles Quatrano has won a place for himself in the city's medical life and is numbered among the successful younger practitioners of the community.

Dr. Quatrano was born in New Haven, Connecticut, on September 16, 1901, a son of Achille and Mary Elizabeth (Vechione) Quatrano. Educated in the public schools of New Haven and in Booth Preparatory School, he subsequently decided to adopt the profession of medicine and entered the University of Vermont, at Burlington, Vermont. Here he took his medical degree in 1931. For one year thereafter he served as interne in the Bishop De Goesbriand Hospital, at Burlington, and spent a second year at St. Vincent's Hospital, in Bridgeport, Connecticut. On April 6, 1932, he was licensed by the Connecticut State Board and, in 1933, began private practice, opening offices in Bridgeport, where his activities have since centered. Both by training and native aptitude he is qualified for the responsibilities of his profession, and in a relatively brief period has risen rapidly, ministering to a growing circle. Dr. Quatrano is a member of the American Medical Association, the Connecticut State Medical Society, the Bridgeport Medical Society and the Fairfield County Medical Society. In addition to his own practice, he is a member of the surgical staff of St. Vincent's Hospital, Bridgeport, as assistant to Dr. William H. Curley. Dr. Quatrano is also a member of the Longshore Country Club, and of St. Augustine Roman Catholic Church. During school days he received two years of military training and now holds the commission of first lieutenant n the Medical Reserve Corps of the United States Army. He is fond of flowers and gardening, which are the principal recreations of his leisure hours.

On November 26, 1932, Dr. Joseph Charles Quatrano married Anne B. Briscoe, daughter of James and Martha Rose (Jordan) Briscoe. They are the parents of one son, Joseph Charles, Jr., born November 7, 1933.

The elder Mr. Curtin, also a native of Hartford, as been engaged in the Postal service throughut most of his active career, and at the present me is superintendent of Station A in Hartford. His wife is a native of Ireland.

Thomas F. Curtin attended Our Lady of Sorrows arochial school in Hartford, and later was graduted from St. Thomas' Seminary. He next enrolled in the Business School of Fordham University, New York City, after which he spent two years at St. Bernard's Seminary at Rochester, New York. He then completed his college work at Providence College, graduating in 1932 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He next matriculated at Boston College, School of Law, and received his Bachelor of Laws degree in 1935. Admitted to the Connecticut Bar later in the same year, he was associated with Saul Berman in the general practice of law in Hartford until January 20, 1937, when he came to Torrington, where he since has been a member of the firm of Hubbard and Cramer. In his short career in Torrington, Mr. Curtin has become a very active member of the local legal profession, and on July 1, 1937, he was appointed prosecutor of the Torrington City Court, in which office he has since served most capably, earning for himself the respect and admiration of the local populace.

Mr. Curtin is affiliated with the Litchfield County Bar Association and was appointed by County Bar Association as librarian of the City Law Library. He is a member of Torrington Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Fraternal Order of Eagles; is also greatly interested in amateur theatrical work and is one of the most active members of the Torrington Civic Players. He is a member of St. Francis' Roman Catholic Church.

He was married September 26, 1936, at Providence, Rhode Island, to Helen R. O'Dowd, a native of that city.

SUTHERLAND ALSOP BECKWITH—Sheriff of Litchfield County, Sutherland Alsop Beckwith is not only a public official with an engineering and business background but also a leading citizen who devotes a great portion of his time to various civic concerns in Torrington and in the County.

Sutherland Alsop Beckwith was born in Litchfield, December 16, 1890, son of Doctor Joseph Gail and Annie (Alsop) Beckwith, both members of well known New England families who have been distinguished since before the Revolution. Doctor Joseph Gail Beckwith was a general practitioner in Litchfield, where his father before him was also a physician and a banker.

After passing through grade schools in Litchfield, and graduating from the Torrington High School, Sutherland Alsop Beckwith entered Yale University, graduating from the Sheffield Scientific School in 1915 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. A private in the Connecticut National Guard, Mr. Beckwith enlisted in 1916 in Battery D, 10th Connecticut Artillery Regiment, went into training at Tobyhanna, Pennsylvania, honorably discharged October, 1916, when four batteries were disbanded. Enlisted in 1917 and went to third officers' training camp and commissioned second lieutenant in the field artillery, and assigned to the 105th Field Artillery, 27th Division, with which outfit he served in France. Returning to the United States in January of 1919 for discharge, he was commissioned second lieutenant in the Officers' Reserve Corps; later became captain and assigned to 355th Field Artillery. In 1919, shortly after Captain Beckwith returned to civil life, he became associated with the Torrington Company, in an executive capacity, a position which he held for about five years, leaving it for another period of five years of service with the traffic section of the State Motor Vehicle Department of Connecticut. This service was followed by some eighteen months as Works Progress Administration director for the Hartford division and then by a brief period of association with the Connecticut State Public Works Department. Then, in October, 1937, Mr. Beckwith was appointed by Governor Wilbur Cross of Connecticut to fill the unexpired term of Frank H. Turkington, as sheriff of Litchfield County. A former chairman of the Litchfield Town Democratic Committee, Sheriff Beckwith has also been registrar of voters for the town of Litchfield. A man of wide and varied civic interests, the Sheriff is chairman of the Safety Committee, District Council, Boy Scouts of America; chairman of the Troop Committee, Litchfield Troop; and a member of the executive committee of the Litchfield Community Association. A member of the Torrington Post, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Sheriff Beckwith is a past commander of Morgan Weir Post, American Legion; past county commander of the American Legion, a vestryman of St. Michael's Episcopal Church, and a member of the Litchfield Grange and of Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity. He is a member of Torrington Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Order of Red Men in Torrington.

Sutherland Alsop Beckwith married, July 30, 1932, Charlotte Coopernail, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. George P. Coopernail of Bedford, New York. Sheriff and Mrs. Beckwith are the parents of two children: 1. Ann Louise, born July, 1934. 2. Margaret Elizabeth, born August, 1936.

LUTHER CALDWELL HEIDGER, M.D.—Practicing medicine in Stratford, Dr. Luther C. (L. Caldwell) Heidger is highly esteemed and respected for his accomplishments as a practicing physician.

Dr. Heidger was born April 23, 1897, at De Lancey, New York. After completing his preparatory school work, he became a student at Muskingum College, Concord, Ohio. He was graduated from the Medical College of the University of Vermont in June, 1921, taking the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and thereupon began his interneship in Bridgeport General Hospital. In 1921 and 1922, he continued that interneship, then, from 1922 to 1924, was director of the communicable disease department of the Bridgeport health service. Since 1930 he has served as medical examiner of Stratford, where he has his home.

Along with his other activities, Dr. Heidger is a member of the Fairfield County Medical Society, the Bridgeport Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is also an assistant on the staff of Bridgeport Hospital. Belonging to several social organizations, Dr. Heidger is a member of the University Club and the Longshore Country Club, as well as a member of the United Presbyterian Church. He was regimental surgeon of the 242d Coast Artillery, National Guard, for eight years, with rank of captain, and is now a captain in the National Guard Reserve Corps. Formerly he was in charge of Englewood Hospital and the Hillside Home.

Aside from earning distinction and honor for his practice of medicine in Stratford, where he has carried on his professional labors since 1924, Dr. Heidger has many other interests. One of them is aviation. He also enjoys horseback riding, tennis and golf. He owns his own airplane, and purchases a new one each year. In 1936, he had his seventh plane. He also has been keenly interested in athletic sports since his school days, when he played basketball and football. At the University of Vermont he was a member of the track team and captain of the varsity basketball team. He is a member of the American Legion.

On February 12, 1937, Dr. Heidger married Bessie C. Young, who was assistant superintendent of the Bridgeport General Hospital.

WILLIAM F. NIERINTZ—City Engineer of Torrington, William F. Nierintz is one of the leading Civil Engineers of Connecticut and heads his own company, the Nierintz Engineering Company of Torrington, Civil Engineers, Land Surveyors, Structural and Sales Engineers.

William F. Nierintz was born in Torrington,

L. Caldwell Heidgen M.D.

March 6, 1899, son of August and Ida (Gudzinsky) Nierintz. August Nierintz, a son of German parents, was born in Torrington, where he has spent his life as a machinist and as a toolmaker.

After attending the grade schools and the high school of Torrington until he was seventeen years of age, William F. Nierintz entered the employment of W. A. Williston, Civil Engineer of Torrington, with whom he worked until 1924, during the period fitting himself for the practice of his profession by private studies. In 1923, Mr. Nierintz, with Mr. Raymond A. Wilcox, formed a partnership known as the Wilcox Engineering Company, an association which endured until 1937, when he organized his own firm, the Nierintz Engineering Company, which is now an active firm in the same fields as the former partnership. Although always interested in civic affairs, Mr. Nierintz has remained an independent in politics and has never sought public office, although in 1937, he was persuaded by his friends to accept the post of City Engineer of Torrington, an office to which, at the present time, he is devoting a great portion of his time and energy. A member of the Connecticut Society of Civil Engineers, Mr. Nierintz is a member of the Torrington Congregational Church, the Torrington Rod and Gun Club, the Goshen Rod and Gun Club and the Improved Order of Red Men.

William F. Nierintz married, September 18, 1937, at Torrington, Virginia Louise Zeiner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward O. Zeiner of Torrington.

WILLIAM A. PATTEN—Mayor of Torrington, the first Democratic executive in the city's history, William A. Patten is also at present associated with the jewelry firm of A. R. Patten of Torrington and is also widely known as a former baseball player in the Eastern League.

William A Patten was born July 14, 1894, at Tolland, son of Arthur R. and Susan May (Kurau) Patten, both natives of Connecticut. For many years, the elder Patten has operated a jewelry business in Torrington, under the name of A. R. Patten, Jeweler and Optometrist.

After attending the public schools of Torrington until about sixteen years of age, William A. Patten became apprenticed to the machinist trade in Torrington and, becoming a skilled toolmaker, was employed in that capacity by several firms, including the Winchester Repeating Arms Company in New Haven, until 1921. Previously to that date, Mr. Patten had been playing semi-professional baseball as a pitcher and he then determined to turn professional and entered the Eastern League, where, with the Waterbury and Albany teams, among others, he played until 1924, when he left the game to enter the automobile business. In this field, as an agency manager for Lucius H. Elmer, in New Milford, Winsted, and in Torrington, where he resided, Mr. Patten was active until 1929, when he became associated with his father, a position in which he has engaged through the present time. A Democrat, Mr. Patten became active in Torrington's political life as soon as he became permanently established in the city, being elected in 1935 to a two-year term as a member of the Torrington City Council and then, in 1937, being elected the mayor of the city, the first Democrat to hold the office in Torrington's history. A member of the Democratic Town Committee, Mr. Patten is a director of the Torrington Rod and Gun Club, a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Connecticut League of Municipalities, and belongs to the Torrington Congregational Church.

William A. Patten married, at West Haven, in July, 1924, Cora Bartholomew, daughter of Henry B. Bartholomew, member of a prominent family of Ashley Falls. Mr. and Mrs. Patten are the parents of a daughter: Susan, born in May, 1927.

DANIEL C. PATTERSON, M.D.—For the past thirty years, Dr. Daniel C. Patterson, of Bridgeport, has devoted himself to the practice of medicine in this State. He has risen to a position of recognized prominence in his profession and is today one of Connecticut's leading surgeons.

Dr. Patterson was born in New Brunswick, Canada, on October 1, 1882, a son of William E. and Abigail (Cleveland) Patterson, the former of whom was a contractor and builder in New London. After completing his preliminary education in Bulkeley School, at New London, he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, University of Maryland, to prepare for his chosen profession. In 1906, he was graduated from the College of Physicians and Surgeons of this institution in Baltimore, taking the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and for two years served as interne in Mercy Hospital, Baltimore. This period terminated in 1907, at which time Dr. Patterson settled in Bridgeport, opening offices for the general practice of his profession. With the entry of the United States into the World War, he volunteered and was commissioned captain in the Medical Reserve Corps and, in 1917, was called to active duty with the National Army. In June, 1918, he went abroad with the American Expeditionary Forces and was in charge of a surgical team at Field and Evacuation Hospitals until after the Armistice. Upon his return to the United States, he received his honorable discharge on May 1, 1919, and returned to his professional duties in Bridgeport. Since that time he has limited his practice to the field of surgery, in which he has met with distinguished success. In addition to his own large practice, Dr. Patterson is attending surgeon at Bridgeport Hospital, an office he has filled since 1921, and has been a member of the staff of this institution since 1908. His high professional standing is reflected in his recent election as president of the New England Surgical Society and by his appointment as a member of the Medical Examining Board of the State of Connecticut.

Dr. Patterson is also a member of the American Medical Association, the Connecticut State Medical Society, of which he is the president, and the Bridgeport and Fairfield County Medical Societies. At Bridgeport he has a number of community interests aside from his professional connections, serving as a director of the Boys' Club and the Young Men's Christian Association, and participating in civic movements with whose aims he is in sympathy. Dr. Patterson is a member of the University Club, of Bridgeport, the Brooklawn Country Club, and the Black Rock Yacht Club, and the Graduates Club, of New Haven. He is fond of outdoor life and sports, particularly yachting, racing, and golf, which are his favorite recreations.

On April 28, 1917, Dr. Daniel C. Patterson married Marian P. Gibney, daughter of Dr. Virgil P. and Julia (Trubee) Gibney. They are the parents of two children: 1. Gibney, born April 27, 1922. 2. Gail C., born September 22, 1930.

JOSEPH A. ASHWELL—The name of Joseph A. Ashwell is listed among the prominent business executives of the City of Bristol where for nearly a decade he has been associated with the New Departure Division of the General Motors Corporation as director of purchases. Prior to coming here he had worked in a similar capacity for several manufacturing organizations in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. Ashwell was born in Brooklyn, New York, October 21, 1889, the son of Henry A. and Agnes C. Ashwell. For many years his father was a manufacturer of hat blocks in New York City. After a general education in the public schools of Brooklyn and under private tutors, Mr. Ashwell entered his father's business when he was about eighteen years old. He continued here until 1917, when he enlisted in the United States Army for World War service. Upon completing his training he was commissioned a second lieutenant and was stationed at Camp Devens, Massachusetts, where he aided in training troops for overseas service.

Mr. Ashwell was honorably discharged from the Army on May 2, 1919, and a few months later resumed his business career as director of purchases for the Bosch Magneto Company in Springfield, Massachusetts, also serving in this capacity for the Graham-Davis Company which had plants at Amesbury and Boston. In July, 1928, he came to Bristol to accept a position with the New Departure Division of the General Motors Corporation which he has since been associated with. In the business life of the community he is universally respected for his accomplishments and ability.

He is a member of the National Association of Purchasing Agents, and in his social affiliations belongs to the Chippanee Country Club and fraternizes with the Order of Free and Accepted Masons, in which he is identified with the Norwalk Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; the Springfield (Massachusetts) Commandery, Knights Templar; and the Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine of Hartford.

On May 17, 1919, at "The Little Church Around the Corner," in New York City, Mr. Ashwell married Anne Reinecke, of Palisades, New Jersey, daughter of William and Margaret (Winters) Reinecke. Mr. and Mrs. Ashwell are the parents of one son: William H., born May 21, 1920.

LEROY IRVING HOLLY—Stamford's improvement and progress have been materially furthered by Leroy Irving Holly, an enterprising business man and well known financier, who was also active in civic affairs. Born in Wisconsin, December 1, 1883, he was a son of John and Sarah A. (Dann) Holly and represented old and prominent families of Fairfield County, Connecticut. His grandfather, Charles Holly, was a native of Stamford and always made his home in this locality. He served in the Civil War, gallantly defending the Union cause, and afterward followed the occupation of farming, while he also engaged in the charcoal business.

John Holly was born at Hunting Ridge, near Stamford, and throughout his commercial career was a dealer in meat. He engaged in business in Stamford and also at Darien, Connecticut, and prosperity attended his well directed efforts. Like his father he was a Republican and adhered to the Methodist Episcopal faith, in which he was reared. He passed away in January, 1924, at Stamford. Mrs. John Holly was a native of this city and a daughter of Seth Stevens and Mary (Slater) Dann. Squier Dann, the great-grandfather of Mrs. Holly, was born in 1755, and died March 25, 1839. He was a resident of East Hunting Ridge and was a Connecticut soldier during the Revolutionary War. His wife, Rachel (Lockwood) Dann, was born in 1753 and died November 5, 1819. Their son, Jonathan Dann, followed the occupation of farming and always lived on the homestead at East Hunting Ridge. He fought in the War of 1812 and was a member of the Whig party, while his religious views were in accord with the tenets of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He married Mary Stevens and they were the parents of Seth Stevens Dann, who was born February 19, 1830, at East Hunting Ridge, where the family had settled in Colonial times. Seth Stevens Dann was also an agriculturalist and likewise prospered in business affairs, operating a large cooperage plant. The greater part of the output was sold in Cove Mills and the remainder was sent to New York City. In politics he was a staunch Republican and his life was governed by the teachings of the Methodist Episcopal Church. On December 28, 1851, he married Mary Slater, who was a daughter of Charles Slater, of Stamford, and died June 23, 1861. He was married, November 22, 1862, to Emily Jane Webb, a daughter of Alfred and Sarah (Weed) Webb.

L D Haley

Leroy Irving Holly was reared in Stamford and received a public school education. For five years he was in the employ of Edwin H. Fox and Company of Stamford, jobbers of paper, at first doing inside work, and later traveled for the firm. When it was incorporated under the name of The Stamford Paper Company he was elected president and filled that office for fifteen years. At the end of that time the business was sold to the Shuttleworth-Holly Company, Incorporated, and he held a small interest therein for one year. Mr. Holly next became purchasing agent for the Mianus Motor Works of Stamford, acting in that capacity during the World War, and afterward purchased Harry Smith's holdings in the firm of Downes and Smith, Incorporated, of which he was president. The Stamford Development Company, of which he was vice-president, also benefited by his keen sagacity and broad experience, and he likewise figured prominently in financial affairs as one of the incorporators of the Stamford Savings Bank.

On October 25, 1905, Mr. Holly was married in Stamford to Bertha E. Edwards, who was born in Providence, Rhode Island, September 24, 1886, and is a graduate of one of the high schools of Stamford, Connecticut. Her parents, Albert W. and Laura B. (Sweet) Edwards, are both deceased. Mr. Edwards was also a native of Providence and served in the Union Army during the Civil War. He enlisted in the Union Army at the age of fifteen years and his own father also enlisted at the same time. They both served four years and were mustered out together. For a number of years he engaged in the retail grocery business at Glenville, Connecticut, and afterward removed to Providence, Rhode Island, where he passed away. Mr. Holly was a member of the official board of the Methodist Episcopal Church and his wife is also an earnest worker in its behalf. He was a thirty-second degree Mason, a member of Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and of the Council of Boy Scouts. He was a member and a director of the Chamber of Commerce, and belonged to the Kiwanis Club, the Stamford Yacht Club, and the Hubbard Heights Golf Club. During the World War he joined the Connecticut National Guard, serving under Captain Daskam, and Mrs. Holly was active in Red Cross work. She was a member of the Schubert Club and is a member of the local chapter of the Order of the Eastern Star. Mr. Holly cast his ballot for the candidates of the Republican Party and had been city treasurer for four years, discharging his duties with customary thoroughness and efficiency. He was chairman of the Republican Town Committee for three years. Much of his leisure time he spent in the open and hunting, fishing and aquatic sports affording him needed relaxation and diversion. Enterprising, farsighted and straight-forward, Mr. Holly was a fine type of the modern business man, and his public spirit had been manifest by tangible efforts in Stamford's behalf. He had a wide acquaintance in the city and stood deservedly high in public esteem. He passed away, July 12, 1934. An editorial excerpt from the Stamford "Advocate" is quoted in closing:

> The sudden death of Leroy I. Holly has come as startling news to the entire community. Although he had retired from active participation in the affairs of the electric business which he built up, he was still exceedingly active in the life of Stamford. For a time there was talk of his embarking in an entirely new business venture. He was also prominently mentioned as a candidate on the Republican ticket for Mayor at the coming election.
> A little over a year ago he resigned the chairmanship of the Republican Town Committee, which position he had held for three years. His willingness to take time from his business to serve his fellow citizens as chairman of the Town Committee of one of the dominant parties is an evidence of his public spirit. There were some who criticized his incumbency of that office because he was unwilling to engage in dickers and wire-pulling. Dickering and wire-pulling is too often considered a necessary part of political leadership. It would be fine for our political life if all political leaders held the same notion of the duties of a town committee chairman which Mr. Holly held.

For quite a long period Mr. Holly was City Treasurer. On one occasion, speaking in all confidence he expressed the belief that his refusal, when city treasurer to grant special favors had injured his business. The public life of any community needs more men of Mr. Holly's stamp who regard the holding of office not as a means for obtaining advantage, but as a means for service.

Although Mr. Holly happened to be born in Wisconsin, his family came from Stamford and the Hollys have long been prominent in Stamford life. It was indeed one of the members of that family, William H. Holly, who, one hundred and five years ago started the "Intelligence" the newspaper to which he later gave the name "The Advocate."

Leroy I. Holly was popularly called "Roy" Holly, and he had a happy faculty for making friends. His passing creates a general sense of loss which goes beyond the wide circle of his friends, beyond the circle of many fraternal and other groups where his sound judgment and leadership was prized. The sense of loss touches the rank and file of the voters and of the residents of Stamford, many of whom may never have had the privilege of knowing him personally.

RICHARD H. JACKSON—Vice-president, secretary, and director of the Sessions Clock Company, of Forestville, Richard H. Jackson serves as sales manager of his company.

Richard H. Jackson was born June 24, 1884, at New York City, son of James and Jane (Diamond) Jackson. James Jackson, deceased, was a salesman in New York City.

Richard H. Jackson, after attending the grammar and high schools of New York City, left school in his 'teens to become an employe of a jewelry firm in Geneva, New York, where, over a five-year period, he familiarized himself with the various details of the business. With this grounding, Mr. Jackson returned to New York City to take charge of the clock repair department of Macy's Department Store. After a year of such employment, he became associated with the Sessions Clock Company, first as a traveling salesman, then resident manager of the company's New York office and, finally, being called to Forestville, first as sales manager, and later as vice-president and secretary. A member of the Bristol Episcopal Church, and having served as a vestryman, Mr. Jackson is also a member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to Hopewell Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons of New York City. Mr. Jackson, who is a member of the Republican Party, is also prominent in Bristol Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, having served the lodge for five years as a trustee.

Richard H. Jackson married, June 21, 1909, at New York City, Mary B. Taylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Taylor, of New York City. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson are the parents of three children: 1. Richard H., Jr., born July 13, 1910. 2. Ruth T., born September 9, 1911. 3. Howard J., born December 11, 1913.

WILLIAM KENNETH SESSIONS—President of the Sessions Clock Company, one of Bristol's largest industries and one of America's leading manufacturers of time-pieces, William Kenneth Sessions, of Forestville and Bristol, is not only a prominent industrialist but also very active in the civic life of Bristol and an outstanding member of the Masonic fraternity.

William Kenneth Sessions was born in Bristol, February 21, 1887, a son of William E. and Emily (Brown) Sessions. The Sessions line was established in America in 1639 when Alexander Sessions came to Plymouth Colony, Massachusetts, his descendant, Calvin, migrating to Burlington, Connecticut, and setting up a small textile mill. Calvin Sessions was the father of four sons, Samuel W., Albert J., John H. and Willard, who came to Bristol about 1845 and set themselves up as manufacturers. William E. Sessions, son of John H. Sessions, born February 21, 1857, graduated from the Hartford High School in 1876 and immediately went to work in his father's trunk hardware manufacturing plant. Three years later, William E. Sessions joined his father in organizing a second manufacturing establishment, the Bristol Foundry Company, a concern of which William E. Sessions was president. For sixteen years, the foundry, then a small company employing about twenty men, remained on Laurel Street, but in 1895, Mr. Sessions purchased the thirty-acre tract on Farmington Avenue and erected the large factory now occupied by the business. Then, in 1902, Mr. Sessions entered the clock manufacturing business when he and his nephew, Albert L. Sessions, acquired the E. N. Welch Manufacturing Company, reorganizing it as the Sessions Clock Company. The Welch Manufacturing Company originated in 1833 when J. C. Brown, William G. Bartholomew and William Hills bought a large tract of land in Forestville with water rights and threw a dam across the river. For twenty-two years their firm, known as the Forestville Manufacturing Company, did an excellent business but, then, coming into difficulties, William E. Welch acquired the assets. With Elisha N. Welch who, the year before, had purchased the Manross Clock business, William E. Welch organized the E. N. Welch Company which, until 1887, when Elisha N. Welch died, was the largest clock manufacturing establishment in Bristol. Thereafter, the company faltered and went into receivership. In 1902, William E. Sessions and his nephew bought the establishment, rebuilt and modernized the buildings and equipment. Since his death the manufacture of the famous Westminster Chimes clocks and the well-known Sessions electric clocks have been added to its list of products. William E. Sessions served as president of the company until his death, August 23, 1920. Besides heading the foundry and clock companies, Mr. Sessions also organized the Bristol Trust Company and served as its president until his death. A deeply religious man, he joined the Prospect Methodist Episcopal Church when but twelve years of age and, during a life-time of devotion, served the church in several official capacities, including the presidency of the board of trustees. He was also a trustee of Wesleyan University, in Middletown, and the president of the Bristol Water Company before it was taken over by the City of Bristol.

William Kenneth Sessions, son of William E. Sessions, passed through the graded schools and the high school of Bristol and, after two years at Wesleyan University, followed special studies at Yale, finally, in 1908, joining the staff of the Sessions foundry. In 1909, he became vice-president of the foundry and then, in 1917, treasurer of the Sessions Clock Company, an office which he held until 1920 when he succeeded his father, William E. Sessions, as the company's president, an office which he has subsequently occupied. Among Mr. Sessions' other business interests are: treasurer and director of the Sessions Foundry Company and director of the Bristol Brass Company and the Bristol Bank and Trust Company. Mr. Sessions is also keenly interested in the civic life of Bristol, being, as a Republican, a member of the City of Bristol Fire Commission and past treasurer of the Bristol Boys' Club. He is a member of Franklin Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons; the Commandery, Knights Templar; the Council, Royal and Select Masters; the Consistory, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite; the Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Hartford.

William Kenneth Sessions married, October 27, 1909, at Bristol, Marjorie Alice Goodenough, daughter of the Rev. Dr. A. H. Goodenough. Mr. and Mrs. Sessions are the parents of two children: 1. Emily G., who married William Penfield Gordon, of Waterbury. 2. William K., Jr., born in 1914, a graduate of Nichols Junior College.

JOSEPH B. SESSIONS—President of the Sessions Foundry Company and treasurer of the Sessions Clock Company, Joseph B. Sessions is also a director of the Terryville Trust Company and director of the Bristol Bank and Trust Company, as well as holding directorates in other Connecticut industrial and financial organizations.

Joseph B. Sessions was born in Bristol, November 11, 1881, the eldest son of William E. and Emily (Brown) Sessions. Leaving the Bristol High School in his sophomore year, studying at Taft School, Watertown, he completed his education at Wesleyan University. Naturally endowed with considerable mechanical ability, he entered the Sessions Foundry Company, of which his father was then the president, as a worker in the pattern department. Quickly, he worked his way through the various departments of the organization until, in 1911, he was elected the treasurer of the company. After the death of his father on August 23, 1920, he was chosen as the president of the foundry, an office which he has subsequently occupied. At about the same time, Mr. Sessions also succeeded his father as president of the Bristol Trust Company, an organization of which he had been a director since its establishment which was merged with the Bristol American Bank and Trust Company on January 1, 1932, the name later changed to Bristol Bank and Trust Company. And again, like his father, Mr. Sessions has been intimately identified with the Prospect Methodist Church, serving the church in several official capacities. Mr. Sessions is also a member of the Society of Automotive Engineers.

Joseph B. Sessions married, September 9, 1903, at Bristol, Mary Esther Stewart, daughter of Lemuel L. and Gierstein (Spencer) Stewart. Mr. and Mrs. Sessions are the parents of three children: 1. Edwin S., born October 20, 1908, vice-president and secretary of the Sessions Foundry Company. 2. Helen, born March 6, 1910, married Frank E. Kendall. 3. Harold S., accidently killed October 24, 1935. There are two grandchildren: Barbara, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin S. Sessions, and Hunter Sessions, son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Kendall.

J. MOSS IVES—Since the early part of the seventeenth century the Ives family has exerted an influential power in the social, civic and business life of the State of Connecticut. As a member of this distinguished family, Judge J. Moss Ives, prominent attorney and financier in Danbury, perpetuated the traditions of his forebears as one of the leading citizens of the aforementioned community until his death.

Mr. Ives was born February 5, 1876, at Danbury, the son of George Edward and Mary Elizabeth (Parmelee) Ives. The name Ives is an old one. Delving into the past we find it is of Norman origin and was first heard in England when Guilbert Yves crossed the channel from Normandy as a follower of William the Conqueror. Later the appellation was changed to its present form. The founder of the family in America was one Captain William Ives, a native of England.

(I) Captain William Ives sailed from England in 1637, on the good ship "Truelove" bound for Boston. The following year he is listed as one of the sixty-three original "free planters" of the Quinnipiac settlement of the New Haven colony, where he and his wife were members of the meeting house as early as 1646, and where his name is registered as one of the first signers. He had two sons: John and Joseph, who were among the first signers of the Wallingford Plantation, founded about 1670.

(II) John, son of Captain William Ives, was born about 1640, and married Hannah Merriam, in 1667. Wallingford history also indicates that he had a wife, Mary. The lineage is carried on through his son, John, of whom further.

(III) John (2), son of John (1), was born in Wallingford, November 16, 1669, and died in 1738. He married, December 6, 1693, Mary Gillette, and they were the parents of twelve children, among them John, of whom further.

(IV) John (3), son of John (2), was born at Wallingford, September 28, 1694, and died August 4, 1745. He married Hannah Royce, who died November 1, 1770, and they were the parents of John, of whom further.

(V) John (4), only child of John (3), was born in Wallingford, July 4, 1729, and died February, 1816. He was twice married, (first), July 4, 1749, to Mary Hall, daughter of Dr. Isaac Hall; (second), to Sarah Atkins, who died November 24, 1814. Of the eleven children born to John (4), lineage is traced through his son Isaac.

(VI) Isaac, son of John (4), was born in Wallingford, January 13, 1764, and died June 10, 1845. He was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree from Yale College in 1788, studied law there and later at Litchfield, lived in New York for several years and then came to Danbury. He married (first), March 14, 1792, Jerusha Benedict, who was born in 1772, and died August 18, 1794. On December 20, 1796, he married (second), Sarah Amelia White, who was born May 17, 1773, and died in 1851. Descent is traced through their son, George White, of whom further.

(VII) George White, son of Isaac and Sarah Amelia (White) Ives, was born February 28, 1799, and died December 11, 1862. He was one of the outstanding men of his generation in Danbury, where he was instrumental in organizing the first savings bank, served as treasurer and director of the first railroad company that came to Danbury, was a founder of the Danbury Gas Company, the Danbury National Bank, and was one of the organizers of the Wooster Cemetery Association, where a monument to his memory was erected by the citizens of Danbury. On December 27, 1831, he married Sarah Hotchkiss Wilcox, daughter of Edward and Sarina (Taylor) Wilcox, and they became the parents of five children. Lineage is traced from this point through their son, George Edward.

(VIII) George Edward, son of George White and Sarah Hotchkiss (Wilcox) Ives, was born August 3, 1845, and died November 5, 1894, at Danbury. A talented musician, Mr. Ives received a musical education in New York, completing his training in June, 1862. Though only sixteen years of age at the time, he organized a volunteer military band among his New York acquaintances, at the instigation of Colonel Nelson White, and entered the Union service under General Tyler, who commanded the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery. Mr. Ives was leader of this unit throughout the conflict. According to a newspaper article written many years later it was his band that prompted General Ulysses S. Grant to make his historic remark that he only knew two tunes, one of them was "Yankee Doodle" and the other wasn't. James R. Young, of Waterbury, was present when the Union general made this observation. "While Mr. Young was an orderly at General Grant's headquarters in the siege of Richmond," the news dispatch goes on to state, "President Abraham Lincoln was visiting with General Grant after a review of the army. They were discussing the relative merits of the various sections of the army.

J. Moss Ives.

"'That's a good band,' President Lincoln remarked, indicating the First Connecticut Heavy Artillery band under Mr. Ives' leadership. Mr. Ives was then but a boy of 16 years.

"'It's the best band in the army, they tell me,' General Grant replied. 'But you couldn't prove it by me. I know only two tunes. One is Yankee Doodle and the other isn't.'

"Several cabinet officers and other notables were in the group and General Grant's witticism made an impression that lasted.

"The young band leader, of course, never heard the praise which the president gave his organization."

After the war Mr. Ives returned to Danbury, where he was to live for the rest of his life. He organized and led many bands and orchestras, taught both theoretical and practical phases of music and became a strong influence in the musical fraternity of this vicinity. Later he served as teller of the Danbury Savings Bank, founded by his father and in which the elder Ives was at one time trustee. On January 1, 1874, George Edward Ives married Mary Elizabeth Parmelee, who was born January 2, 1850. They were the parents of J. Moss Ives.

J. Moss Ives attended the public schools of Danbury, his native town, and after completing his high school studies he went to Yale University, in New Haven, being graduated from the Law School there n 1899, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. While at Yale he belonged to the Book and Gavel Society. In 1899, the year of his graduation, he was admitted o the bar of Connecticut, beginning his active practice in Danbury. He worked his way forward to a position of ever increasing prominence as the years moved on, achieving substantial success.

His official career in the City of Danbury dates back to 1901, when he was named corporation counsel, an office in which he served until 1913. In he meantime he also had been elected to serve in various other capacities. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1905, served as prosecuting attorney of Danbury from 1907 to 1910, was appointed to the staff of Governor Rollin S. Woodruff n 1907, and later served on the staffs of Governors Lilley and Weeks, also on the staff of Governor E. J. Lake, as judge advocate general. From 1918 o 1926, he was judge of the City Court, and in 929 and 1933, occupied the post of judge of the District Traffic Court.

In a professional capacity he served as secretary of the National Conference on Uniform State Laws, from 1899 to 1904, and throughout his career was a member of the American Bar Association and the Association of the Bar of the City of New York. He was a member of the committee on admissions to the bar of Fairfield County. Mr. Ives began his career with the firm of Brewster, Davis and Ives, headed by Judge Lyman D. Brewster, and in 1906, became a partner of Samuel Tweedy. At the time of his death he was a member of the firm of Ives and Sherwood. The nature of his activities also brought him prominently into the business and civic life of this community. He was a member of the board of directors of the Danbury National Bank and the Savings Bank of Danbury, vice-president and trustee of the Danbury Public Library, and trustee of the Brewster Home for the Aged. Mr. Ives fraternized with the Order of Free and Accepted Masons, was a Republican in politics and worshipped at the First Congregational Church in which he was a deacon. During the World War he was a member of the military emergency board and adjutant general of the Connecticut State Guard. After the conflict he was on duty with the General Staff of the War Department in Washington, D. C., assisting in the reorganization of the National Guard and the Reserve Corps, a program that took place between 1920 and 1921. At the time he held the rank of major in the United States Reserve Corps. Mr. Ives was a writer and lecturer of talent. He was the author of "The Ark and the Dove," a book published in 1936, and had also written a number of magazine articles. Socially he was a member of the University Club of Bridgeport.

On December 5, 1900, Judge J. Moss Ives married Minnie L. Goodman, daughter of John Goodman, of Worcester, Massachusetts, and they were the parents of the following children: 1. Richard Goodman, born February 9, 1902, married Charlotte Young of Braintree, Massachusetts, and is the father of two children: Sarane and Nancy. 2. Lyman Brewster, born September 22, 1903. 3. Moss White, born May 2, 1905. 4. Walter Bigelow, born June 11, 1908. 5. Chester Brown, born December 2, 1910. 6. Sarane Wilcox. Judge Ives died April 8, 1939.

EDWARD EVANS GILL—Plant Manager of the Bristol New Departure Division of the General Motors Corporation, Edward Evans Gill of Bristol was one of the leading members of the American Legion in Connecticut, being one of the earlier participants in the organization and having served as a vice-commander in the Connecticut Department.

Edward Evans Gill was born August 19, 1892, at Plymouth, Connecticut, son of John G. and Elizabeth (Beaton) Gill. John G. Gill is now living in retirement.

Edward Evans Gill attended grade and high schools in Terryville, Connecticut, and Newark, New Jersey. At an early age he entered the employ of the Eagle Lock Company at Terryville, remaining with the company for seven years. In July, 1917, Mr. Gill's business career was interrupted by the World War. Enlisting in the Air Service, he was shortly given his appointment as a sergeant and sent to France with the 477th Squadron, an outfit with which Mr. Gill served for two years. Discharged in February of 1919, a month later he went into the Production Department of the New Departure Company at Bristol, and has remained in the organization ever since, being successively promoted through various offices, including that of production manager until, in 1935, he was made plant manager of the Bristol Division.

A member of the Terryville Congregational Church and the Chippanee Country Club, Bristol Chamber of Commerce, Hartford County Manufacturers' Association and the American Society of Metals, Mr. Gill has devoted much of his time to preserving his war-time associations, being past commander of Plymouth Post, American Legion, and taking a very active part in the Connecticut Department's affairs.

Edward Evans Gill married, February 1, 1919, at New York City, Ruth Barnes, daughter of Edwin I. and Grace (M.) Barnes, of Terryville.

ST. STANISLAUS (ROMAN CATHOLIC) CHURCH — REV. GEORGE G. BARTLEWSKI, PASTOR—On West Street near the Hartford-Danbury highway are located the buildings and property of the St. Stanislaus Parish. This parish was founded on April 21, 1919, by its present pastor, the Rev. George G. Bartlewski. Under his guidance and leadership the original minute group prospered until today it numbers two thousand members.

The present church edifice was erected in 1920. Next to the church building is the St. Stanislaus Parochial School, constructed in 1930. It houses eight class rooms and a spacious gymnasium, which provides adequately for the educational and recreational activities. Able instructors from the order of St. Joseph supervise the studies.

Numerous church and fraternal organizations bind strongly the members of this parish. The social and patriotic endeavours of these societies have contributed to the progress and welfare of the parish. Worthy of note is the youth movement in this parish. The annual social, and especially, sports program which the younger members of St. Stanislaus Social and Athletic Association promote, has spread their prowess not only in the city, but even in the State.

MILTON L. GEARING—The manager of the Meriden plant of the New Departure division of the General Motors Corporation, Milton L. Gearing, holds a position of importance in the industrial, financial and civic life of this city. Of a mechanical turn of mind, with a gift for salesmanship and promotion, he prepared himself for a connection with manufacturing by study in an engineering school, before beginning his career.

Milton L. Gearing was born April 26, 1901, at Bristol, Connecticut, son of Charles M. and Clara Louise (Zacher) Gearing. His father served as manager of the Meriden plant for many years and is now vice-president and director of the Meriden National Bank.

After attending the Federal Hill Public School (Bristol) and Southwest Public School (Hartford), Mr. Gearing was graduated from Hartford High School. He then studied engineering for three years at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy, New York. Leaving college in 1923, he became an employee in the factory of the New Departure Company, Meriden, and eventually became foreman of a finishing department; he spent some time in the engineering and sales department of the company and was made manager of the New Departure plant at Elmwood, Connecticut, in 1929. In 1932 the Elmwood plant was merged with the Meriden plant, and Mr. Gearing became manager of the Meriden plant, New Departure Division, General Motors Corporation. He is a director of the Meriden National Bank, and a director of the City Savings Bank of Meriden. He is a member of Chi Phi fraternity; is a Republican; a past director of the Meriden Chamber of Commerce; past president of the Meriden Community Fund; a director of the Meriden Boys' Club and of the Home Club of Meriden; and is a member of the Hartford Gun Club and the Massicoe Gun Club. Mr. and Mrs. Howard Dwight Allen reside at No. 43 North Main Street, Terryville.

CLIFFORD SPENCER BURDGE—Although he is the youngest bank president in the City of Bristol, Clifford Spencer Burdge, head of the North Side Bank and Trust Company since its organization, has a record of many years devoted to the banking profession, much of it spent with the Connecticut Department of Banking. Since assuming his present office he has also taken an increasingly important part in the general life of his city, despite the arduous task of directing a financial institution that was founded at the beginning of the nation's great depression.

Mr. Burdge was born at New Haven on July 26, 1887, son of the late David Vincent and Ella Louise (Spencer) Burdge. His father was a dentist, practicing in New Haven.

Clifford Spencer Burdge was educated in the public schools of that city, leaving high school in 1904 to accept a position with the Mechanics Bank, New Haven, with which he served in various capacities for more than ten years. In 1916, he resigned to become assistant treasurer of the Shelton Trust Company, at Shelton, and in 1919 was associated with former Governor Holcomb in liquidating the affairs of this institution. During the following year he entered the State Banking Department at Hartford, as an examiner, remaining until 1924, when he was elected treasurer and director of the Meriden Savings Bank. He devoted himself to his duties with this bank during the succeeding five years. In 1929, when Mr. Dewitt Page and his associates were organizing the North Side Bank and Trust Company at Bristol, Mr. Burdge was prevailed upon to come to Bristol and since that time has served as president and director of the bank. He is in full charge of its operations and has received the credit for the success of this institution, which he has carried through one of the greatest depressions in the history of the nation.

Mr. Burdge is a Republican in politics and a member of the First Congregational Church of Bristol.

He is an active member of several fraternal and social organizations, including King Hiram Lodge, No. 12, Free and Accepted Masons; Quinnipiack Lodge, No. 1, Independent Order of Odd Fellows (New Haven); the Endee Club, and the Bristol Club. As a member of the New Haven Grays, he saw service with that unit on the Mexican Border, but was prevented, because of physical disability, from continuing in the army during the World War. Mr. Burdge is also a member of the Bristol Chamber of Commerce, in whose councils he has been influential, and is a member of the board of finance of the City of Bristol.

He married, on April 14, 1917, in New Haven, Charlotte Fowler, daughter of Charles Holt and Kate (Starkweather) Fowler. Mr. and Mrs. Burdge have one son, Clifford S., Jr., born June 16, 1923. The family reside on Westminster Road, Bristol.

LESLIE H. JOCKMUS—For more than twenty years, Leslie H. Jockmus has been associated with the Ansonia Manufacturing Company, one of the principal industrial organizations of Ansonia. During this period he has risen to his present position as executive head of the company and, since 1931, has directed its operations. He is very well known in the business life of the city and in civic affairs of New Haven County.

Mr. Jockmus was born at Ilion, New York, on April 8, 1891, a son of George and Maud H. (Harter) Jockmus, and a grandson of Herman Jockmus, who came from Germany and settled at Ilion. He was a veteran of the Civil War. George Jockmus, the father, was born at Ilion, and his wife at Mohawk, New York.

Leslie H. Jockmus moved to Cooperstown with his parents when he was a boy and received his preliminary education in the public schools there. Later he attended Peddie School, at Hightstown, New Jersey, from which he was graduated in 1912, and Eastman Business College, at Poughkeepsie, New York, where he completed his course in 1914. For a short time he was associated with the De Laval Separator Company, at Poughkeepsie, terminating that connection to become wholesale manager for John Van Benschoten, automobiles, in the same city. In 1917, he came to the Ansonia Manufacturing Company, a business established originally by his uncle, Charles H. Jockmus, in 1893. It manufactures brass screw machine products and electrical devices, turned work from rods, brass stampings, brass forgings and castings and light manufactures. The plant, which normally employs two hundred fifty men, three-quarters of whom are skilled mechanics, operates as a jobbing shop, not selling under any specific name, but turning out a variety of articles of all sizes for universal use. During the World War, the normal products of the company were displaced by munition manufactures for the use of the American and Allied Armies, particularly time fuses, detonating fuses and 37 mm. high explosives. After the war the usual line was resumed. The company was well established in its field when Mr. Jockmus joined it, but in its subsequent development he had an active part. After serving in various positions while he learned the business, he assumed larger responsibilities and, in 1927, became general manager of the company. Upon his uncle's death in 1931, he succeeded to the presidency and took over the ownership of the company which he has still retained. He is thoroughly equipped both in technical knowledge and executive capacities for the direction of its operations and has guided it skillfully during the past seven years.

Mr. Jockmus is also president and director of the Lava Cap Gold Mining Corporation, of Ansonia, a company operating mines at Nevada City, California; director of the Derby Gas and Electric Company; and an incorporator and director of the Ansonia Savings Bank. He is a director of Grace Hospital at New Haven, and has been active in various civic and community causes at Ansonia. A Republican in politics, he has always met the duties of good citizenship, and has made his influence effective in promoting the progress and welfare of the city. Mr. Jockmus is affiliated fraternally with the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he is a member of all higher bodies of the Scottish Rite, including the thirty-second degree of the Consistory, and a member of Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Bridgeport. He is also a member of the Race Brook Country Club, of Orange, the Waterbury Country Club, the Union League Club, of New Haven, and the Quinnipiack Club, of New Haven.

On November 24, 1924, at Ansonia, Mr. Jockmus married Esther Marie Nordstrom, and they are the parents of one daughter, Jane Marie. The residence of the family is now situated in New Haven.

LEROY WESLEY GREENO—Prominent in the banking field of Bristol for the past twenty years, Leroy Wesley Greeno now serves as a director and treasurer of the North Side Bank and Trust Company, of which institution he became the first treasurer. He was born May 17, 1884, at Westfield, Massachusetts, the son of John William and Josephine (Maud) Greeno, both deceased. John William Greeno came to Bristol about 1888, and was engaged as a carpenter and contractor at the time of his death.

Leroy Wesley Greeno graduated from the public schools of Bristol, and after completing his High School studies, took a business course at Morse Business College, Hartford. In 1903 he became secretary to the manager of the Phoenix Life Insurance Company, at their Hartford office, and one year later entered the employ of the Sessions Foundry Company at Bristol, as a stenographer. A year with this firm was followed by a year as office manager for the Bristol Specialty Company, and then a short period with the Southern New England Telephone Company as a collector, at New Britain, after which he became a member of the clerical force of the Corbin Lock Company. The following year he returned to Bristol and entered the employ of the New Departure Manufacturing Company, as a clerical worker in their Bell Department. Soon afterwards he was transferred to the Automobile Department, and in 1909 he was made paymaster, which position he held for seven years. In 1916 he went with the Bristol National Bank, and served in various capacities, being appointed assistant cashier in 1927, and remaining as such until 1929 when he took up his duties with the North Side Bank and Trust Company. He is also treasurer and director of the Bristol Memorial Works, Incorporated, and has been interested in the Boy Scout movement for the past twenty years, being treasurer of Bristol Council, Boy Scouts of America. He was awarded the Silver Beaver in 1937.

Mr. Greeno is a staunch Republican, and is a member of the Bristol Board of Relief. He is affiliated with Franklin Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, and is treasurer of Ionic Council No. 33, Royal and Select Masters and is a thirty-second degree Mason. In addition, he belongs to Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, Ethan Lodge, Knights of Pythias, the Sphinx Kaabens Club of Waterbury, and the Bristol Club.

He was married June 5, 1909, at New Britain to Jessie May Gladden, and they are the parents of a daughter, June, born August 30, 1917.

MATTHEW FRANCIS HAYES—A native of Terryville, Matthew Francis Hayes has been identified with business and public life here, since his youth, and he has a long and creditable record of public service. He was born May 16, 1877, the son of Thomas and Mary (Hanley) Hayes. For many years prior to his death, Thomas Hayes was associated with the Eagle Lock Company.

Matthew Francis Hayes was educated in the local public schools and, at the age of fourteen years, received a position with the Eagle Lock Company. He served in various capacities for the next fourteen years, and then entered the employ of a grocery firm, where he worked for three years, when he engaged in his own retail business, disposing of it after eleven years to devote his full time to public office, having been elected Collector of Taxes for the Town of Plymouth in 1913, and being reelected each term until 1935, when he assumed the additional post of Town Clerk, still retaining the office of Tax Collector. In 1934 he was elected Probate Judge, and since then has functioned as Town Clerk and Probate Judge through subsequent reelections.

He is a Roman Catholic, a lifelong Republican, active in civic, financial and fraternal affairs, and a leader in the life of his community and director of the Chapman Machine Company, the Terryville Fuel Corporation, and has been a director of the Terryville Trust Company since its organization in 1928. He is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus, Foresters of America and the Plymouth Grange. He was married on October 14, 1923, to Rose Graham, daughter of the late Daniel and Catherine (Heslin) Graham. Judge and Mrs. Hayes became the parents of one daughter, Mary C. Mrs. Hayes died May 29, 1935.

LEAVENWORTH PORTER SPERRY—Leavenworth Porter Sperry, treasurer of the Scovill Manufacturing Company, of Waterbury, Connecticut, was born in Waterbury, May 16, 1883, the son of Mark Leavenworth Sperry, former president of the Scovill Company and identified with it for sixty-four years. His mother was Julia Sherman (Porter) Sperry, the descent on both sides being from prominent Colonial ancestry.

Mr. Sperry was educated in private schools of Waterbury, the Waterbury High School, the Hotchkiss School at Lakeville, Connecticut, and Yale University (Sheffield Scientific School), graduating with the Class of 1902, degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. He also attended the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Upon the completion of his education Mr. Sperry entered the employ of the Scovill Manufacturing Company, April, 1903, and after serving in various departments was elected assistant secretary, February 12, 1918. His election as secretary followed

February 24, 1920, and he was elected treasurer, June 20, 1929. He was made a director, October 22, 1918.

In addition to his office with the Scovill Manufacturing Company, Mr. Sperry is vice-president and a director of the Hamilton Beach Manufacturing Company, of Racine, Wisconsin; vice-president and a director of A. Schrader's Sons, Inc., of Brooklyn, New York; a director of the Lone Star Cement Corporation; secretary, treasurer and a director of the Mad River Company, of Waterbury; and a director in the following corporations: the Union Hardware Company of Torrington, the American Hardware Company of New Britain; the Citizens and Manufacturers' National Bank of Waterbury, the Waterbury Savings Bank, the Waterbury Button Company and the Mattatuck Historical Society. He is a trustee of the Waterbury Hospital and a member of the Alumni Advisory Board of Yale University.

In politics Mr. Sperry is a Republican and has served as a member of the Board of Aldermen and of the Board of Health, 1910-11. He was appointed a member of the Waterbury Charter Commission by Governor Trumbull by act of the legislature of 1929, a commission created to investigate conditions in the Waterbury municipal government and recommend changes in the city charter. The commission made a most exhaustive study of this subject, recommending many changes in the then existing methods pursued in administering the city's affairs, including that of the financial structure and operation, system of taxation, and, in fact, the administration of every department. Among other things a new rate system was set up for the water department and a new system of tax collection adopted. Many of the commission's recommendations were adopted and it was conceded that the members had achieved through their efforts many notable improvements in the city government and savings for the city.

He is a member of the Waterbury Club, the Country Club of Waterbury, the Home Club of Waterbury, Graduates' Club of New Haven, Fisher's Island Club and the Laurentian Club of Canada.

February 15, 1912, Leavenworth Porter Sperry married Olive Smith, daughter of J. Richard Smith, former president of the Waterbury Button Company. Their children are: 1. Mark L., II. 2. Leavenworth P., Jr. 3. Richard Smith, deceased. 4. Olive Ives, deceased. 5. Catherine Leavenworth, deceased.

The family attends the First Congregational Church of Waterbury.

MARK LEAVENWORTH SPERRY—Mark Leavenworth Sperry, who was for sixty-four years connected with the Scovill Manufacturing Company, and who advanced from the position of bookkeeper to president of that important industry, was born in Waterbury, Connecticut, October 23, 1842, the son of Corydon Stillman and Catherine (Leavenworth) Sperry, descendants of old Connecticut families whose members were prominent in the affairs of the colony in its early days and in the years that followed. Mr. Sperry died at St. Petersburg, Florida, February 10, 1926.

Mr. Sperry's father, Corydon S. Sperry, was one of Waterbury's leading manufacturers and actively identified with the progress of the community, coming to Waterbury from Bristol in 1835 to become associated with his father-in-law, Mark Leavenworth, one of the pioneers in Waterbury industry. The latter was born in New Haven, August 30, 1774, and was a grandson of the Rev. Mark Leavenworth, a well-known divine of Colonial days and pastor of the First Church of Waterbury. On the paternal side, too, the family ancestry goes back to the early days of the Connecticut Colony, one of the noted ancestors being Richard Sperry, of the New Haven Colony, who is recorded in history as having assisted in hiding Judges Goffe and Whalley in the historically famous Judges' Cave.

Mark Leavenworth Sperry attended the public schools of Waterbury and, being left an orphan at the age of fourteen years, went into the office of the Waterbury Knitting Company in a clerical capacity. In 1862, as a bookkeeper, he made his first connection with the Scovill Manufacturing Company, to which he was to devote a lifetime of service. He was elected secretary January 25, 1869; made a director December 21, 1877; vice-president November 10, 1910, and elected president October 22, 1918. He resigned as president, July 8, 1920, because of ill health, but continued as a director until his death. During his long years of connection with the company in an administrative capacity, the development of the business was great and much of the credit for the important position gained by this leader in the brass industry of the world is due to his ability and efforts.

In addition to his activities with the Scovill Manufacturing Company, Mr. Sperry was an organizer of the Greene Consolidated Copper Company, of which he was vice-president and a director. He was also a director of the Chino Copper Company, now owned by the Kennecott Copper Company; vice-president of the Waterbury Trust Company, and a trustee of the Dime Savings Bank, of Waterbury. He was Republican in politics, and always evinced a keen interest in the affairs of his home community, although he declined to take public office, except for several years as a member of the Board of Education.

Mr. Sperry was a member of the Odd Fellows and the Home Club, of Waterbury, and was one of the organizers of the Waterbury Club, of which he was elected president.

March 14, 1878, Mr. Sperry married Julia Sherman Porter, daughter of Ansel Charles and Ruth Ann (Sherman) Porter, and their children are: 1. Ethel Millicent, who married Judge Walter D. Makepeace, of Waterbury. 2. Leavenworth Porter (q. v.). 3. Ruth Sherman. 4. Roger Sherman, who married Pauline Denklau. 5. Evelyn Stillman, who died in infancy. 6. Mark Leavenworth, Jr., who married Lois McBrier.

REV. ALEXIS DAWSON KENDRICK—Much of his career the Rev. Alexis Dawson Kendrick devoted to the ministry of the Baptist Church in the South. In later life, however, he settled in Windsor, Connecticut, and took over agricultural interests there, but he always retained his intimate contact with the church and served regularly in its work.

Mr. Kendrick was born at Montezuma, Georgia, on September 7, 1873, a son of John Francis and Annie Delphia (Marshall) Kendrick. He was a direct descendant, through his mother, of Thomas Marshall, who came from England to Boston in 1630, founding the family whose later generations gave many members to the church. Captain Samuel Marshall, son of Thomas, settled in Windsor, Connecticut, before 1637, and his son, Deacon Thomas Marshall, served the First Church of Windsor. The Rev. Daniel Marshall, son of Deacon Thomas, was born in 1706. In later years he migrated to Georgia and founded there in 1771, at Appling in Columbia County, the first Baptist Church in the colony. This church is now recognized as the mother church of all Baptist congregations in Georgia. His son, the Rev. Abraham Marshall, and Jesse Peters (colored), also founded in Georgia, the first Baptist Church for the colored people of that State. From Rev. Abraham Marshall the line of descent is traced through his son, the Rev. Jabez Peliades Marshall; his grandson, the Rev. Alexis Epinetus Marshall; and his great-granddaughter, Annie Delphia Marshall, who married John Francis Kendrick. Rev. Alexis Abraham Marshall, a brother of Annie Delphia Marshall, was a Baptist minister.

Rev. Alexis Dawson Kendrick, son of John Francis and Annie Delphia (Marshall) Kendrick, was educated in public school, a Baptist School of Georgia, and at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, in Louisville, Kentcky. After entering the ministry, he held pastorates in Georgia and Louisiana and finally became minister of the First Baptist Church at Americus, Georgia. From that charge, he came to Windsor, Connecticut, in 1918, and took over the management of the Marshall-Phelps farms, which he operated successfully until his death. Meanwhile, he continued to preach as supply pastor in various churches of the locality. He was zealous in the faith and eloquent in discourse, winning the admiration of all to whom he ministered. He was equally respected for his sterling qualities of citizenship, manifested in his deep interest in all civic and educational, as well as religious affairs. A charter member of the Windsor Historical Society, he had a profound regard for the fine traditions of the nation's past and sought to perpetuate, in the life of today, the ideals of the founders. Mr. Kendrick was also a member of the Windsor Chamber of Commerce and the Hartford County Farm Bureau. During his residence in the North he was a prominent and influential figure in the Windsor community and his death at Elm Grove, on April 24, 1931, was a source of deep regret to his fellow townsmen as well as his numerous friends and associates of earlier years in the South.

On December 1, 1904, the Rev. Alexis Dawson Kendrick married Carrie Phelps Marshall and they became the parents of the following children: 1. Marshall Alexis, born September 12, 1905; educated at the Windsor High School and in Connecticut State College, from which he was graduated in 1928 with the degree of Bachelor of Science in Agriculture. He is living in East Hartford and is part owner of a Baby Laundry business. He married Frances E. Mansur, a registered nurse, and has two children: Oliver Marshall and Charles Hollis. 2. Charlotte Phelps, born March 8, 1908; educated at Windsor High School, Connecticut State College and the Hartford Seminary Foundation, the Hartford School of Religious Education, receiving from the latter institution the degree of Bachelor of Religious Education in 1933 and the further degree of Master of Arts in 1936. The subject of her thesis was, "The Religious Development of Poquonock and Rainbow" (Windsor, Connecticut). She is now employed by the Connecticut Council of Churches as a recreational worker and is also Director of Religious Education of the Poquonock Community (Congregational) Church, Incorporated. 3. Annie Maria, born December 17, 1909, died April 9, 1911. 4. David Francis, born March 13, 1912, died December 17, 1924. 5. Alexis Daniel, born March 22, 1914; was graduated from Windsor High School in 1933. He is farming at home. 6. William Phelps, born December 6, 1916; was graduated from Windsor High School in 1936. He is a freshman at the Federal College in Hartford.

Mrs. Alexis Dawson Kendrick, who was born at the old Marshall homestead in Windsor, on June 22, 1883, still makes her home at the Elm Grove family estate, which is very well known, under the name of the Marshall-Phelps Farms, for its high-grade tobacco and other agricultural products. She has long been active in the civic life of her community and is a member of the Abigail Wolcott Ellsworth Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Windsor Historical Society, the Hartford County Farm Bureau, and the Poquonock Community (Congregational) Church, Incorporated. She is also a member of the Alumnae Association of Wheaton, Norton, Massachusetts, where she was graduated in 1904. She is the house mother of the Poquonock (Windsor) Youth Hostel.

Mrs. Kendrick is the daughter of David E. and Charlotte A. (Phelps) Marshall and comes of families long eminent in the life of Windsor and the State. She is a direct descendant, as was her late husband, of the Windsor pioneer, Captain Samuel Marshall, who is shown by ancient records to have had a lot within the Old Palisade erected for protection at the time of the Pequot War in 1637. During King Philip's War, he was one of five captains elected to lead the Connecticut forces against the Narragansett Indians and lost his life in the attack on the Indian Fort in Rhode Island, December 19, 1675. Among his nine children was David (1), born July 24, 1661, the progenitor of the Marshall family whose members have lived at Elm Grove through successive generations down to the present day. David (2), son of David (1), was born on April 14, 1692, and married, on December 15, 1721, Sarah Phelps. Their son, Lieutenant David (3), was born October 21, 1728, and from him the line of descent is traced through Captain Elihu, born March 21, 1765; Elihu (2), born July 12, 1800, a prosperous farmer, teacher and civic leader in the town of Windsor throughout his active life; and David E. Marshall, his son, who was Mrs. Kendrick's father.

David E. Marshall was born at Elm Grove on August 11, 1843, and died on September 12, 1919. Educated in local public schools and at Union Academy in Windsor Center, he devoted his active life to agricultural pursuits, developing the Marshall-Phelps Farms as one of the principal enterprises of its kind in the district. A leader in church and civic affairs, he was an outstanding citizen of his community and exercised a wholesome and constructive influence in its life throughout his career. He married, on December 30, 1875, Charlotte A. Phelps, who was born at Poquonock, October 6, 1854, and died on March 27, 1918. They became the parents of two children: 1. David Wilton, born July 15, 1877, died January 23, 1902. 2. Carrie Phelps, who married the Rev. Alexis Dawson Kendrick.

Charlotte A. (Phelps) Marshall, was a daughter of the Hon. Eli Phelps, of Windsor. The Phelps family has given to Connecticut and Hartford County many of its leading citizens since that early day when the church of Dorchester, Massachusetts, migrated to Windsor and there established the oldest Congregational Church now in existence in America. William Phelps, who was one of eight commissioners appointed by the General Court of Massachusetts to govern the three towns of Windsor, Wethersfield and Hartford, which comprised the original colony of Connecticut, was in attendance at the first meeting of the Court at Hartford on April 26, 1636. His son, Samuel, was a large land owner in Windsor and part of his original estate still remains in possession of his direct descendants. William Phelps, son of Samuel, was born in 1669 and married, in 1693, Hannah Hayden. He died November 21, 1711. His son, William (3), was born on March 13, 1693, and in the next generation was Eli, son of William (3), who was born on August 16, 1746. Eli Phelps was a lifelong resident of the Elm Grove Community in Windsor, continuing the fine tradition of prominence and civic leadership associated with the family name since the days of the first William Phelps. His son, the Hon. Eli (2) Phelps, father of Charlotte A. Phelps, was born on September 1, 1807. His education was limited to his attendance upon the local district schools, but while he was still in early life he demonstrated his conspicuous abilities and with passing years grew steadily in stature and influence. He was one of the most successful farmers of the county, accumulating a considerable fortune for those days, which he employed in the furtherance of worthy causes both civic and benevolent. He was very active in religious work, serving as treasurer of the Ecclesiastical Society of the church in which he was a member. In his religious opinions he was liberal and tolerant, yet strenuous and steadfast, believing in the "Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man." He was one of the active members of the Universalist Society. Because of his character and attainments, it was natural that he should enjoy the confidence of his fellow citizens, and on many occasions he was tendered public office, which he accepted as a means for further public service. For a number of years he represented his town in the General Assembly and over a long period was an acknowledged leader of the Democratic Party in Windsor. Eli Phelps died on September 1, 1879. He was able, loyal and devoted, and enjoys a remembrance justly due his qualities as a man and citizen. He married, on May 27, 1846, Abigail Humphrey, of Norfolk, Connecticut, who was born on March 7, 1820, and died on June 15, 1906, member of a family long prominent in the history of the nation.

Eli and Abigail (Humphrey) Phelps became the parents of five children: 1. William, born at Elm Grove, on December 23, 1847, died on January 11, 1906. Educated in the public schools of his native town and at Connecticut Literary Institute in Suffield, he spent his entire life at Elm Grove, devoting himself to farming and family interests. In early years he was an active Democrat and in later life strongly espoused the principles of the Prohibition Party. At the time of his death he was the Clerk of the Poquonock Congregational Church. He married Marietta Dickinson, born September 7, 1843, died June 23, 1899, daughter of Nathan and Jemimah (Brainard) Dickinson, of Haddam, Connecticut. 2. James, who died in infancy. 3. Emily, who also died in infancy. 4. Maria, born November 22, 1852, who resided at the Elm Grove homestead until her death, March 15, 1923. Miss Phelps attended Wilbraham Academy and was graduated from Maplewood Music Seminary, East Haddam, in 1872. She was a charter member of the Abigail Wolcott Ellsworth Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution and also of the Windsor Historical Society. She was active in the church life of the community. 5. Charlotte A., who became the wife of David E. Marshall, mentioned above. She attended the Connecticut Literary Institution and Verner Episcopal School in East Windsor. She was a member of the Poquonock Congregational Church and of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

WILLIAM HARRIS BROWN—For many years prominent in the business life of New Haven, William Harris Brown made his home in Orange. He was particularly well known as president and treasurer of the Coe and Brown Company, famed manufacturers of leather belting. His participation in the business affairs of this Connecticut city and district was a significant one, rich in its beneficial results and contributive to the general well-being of the people here. In his personal relationships he was kind, generous, fair-minded, thoughtful always of others, and his accomplishments brought him the respect of many friends, as his personality and temperament earned for him their lasting affection.

Mr. Brown was born September 15, 1857, in Newark, New Jersey. He attended the Newark public schools and later became a student at a private boarding school on the Hudson River. At the conclusion of that time he came to New Haven, where he became associated with his grandfather, Harris Eames, in Harris Eames and Company, manufacturers of leather belting. When Mr. Eames died, the enterprise was continued as the Coe and Brown Company, with headquarters at No. 204 George Street, New Haven. Mr. Brown was made president and treasurer of the organization, so continuing until his death on April 7, 1938, at his home in Orange.

Successful in his commercial activities, Mr. Brown was also active in civic and social affairs. For years he was a resident of New Haven before he took up his residence in Orange, and in both of these communities, as well as in West Haven, he was an accredited leader in public affairs. In West Haven he was president of the Young Men's Republican Club. He belonged at one time to the Union League, of New Haven, and to the New Haven Grays. Later he was a member of the Governor's Foot Guard. Fraternally, he had many and important affiliations. In the Free and Accepted Masons he was a Past Master of Annawan Lodge. The Knights Templar Commandery claimed him as a member, and he also held the thirty-second degree of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry. He was a member of both the Royal Arcanum and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

He was essentially a home man, fond above all else of his family and friendly associations. William Harris Brown married, in 1877, Mary Downey, who died in 1925. They had one son, Ernest William, who became captain in the Medical Corps, United States Navy, during the World War, and he is now a resident of Washington, D. C.; and a grandson, Gordon Eames Brown, of Buffalo, New York. On March 20, 1926, William Harris Brown married (second) Jane E. Coombes, daughter of John and Anna (Schappa) Coombes, both of whom are now deceased. Mrs. Brown survives her husband.

His passing was an occasion of profound regret in the wide circle of his acquaintance. New Haven and this district of Connecticut were notably the gainers from his labors, and his life was rich in true achievement.

FREDERICK R. HOUDE—Although numbered among the younger coterie of Branford professional men, Frederick R. Houde has won an important place in the varied circles of the borough. He has practiced law since 1934; is a director of the Branford Community Council, and a popular figure in club life.

Mr. Houde was born in Branford, January 11, 1905, son of Adelor Joseph and Catherine Jane (Reilly) Houde. His father for more than a quarter of a century has been identified with the Malleable Iron Fittings Company, of the town. After attending the grade schools and being graduated from the local high school, he matriculated at the University of Vermont, but, before completing his studies in this institution, went with the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad in a clerical capacity, remaining for some time. In September, 1929, Mr. Houde entered Boston College, and in June, 1933, was graduated from its Law School, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. In January of 1934, he was admitted to the Connecticut bar and since then has been an active attorney engaged in a general practice, with offices in Branford at No. 260 Main Street. He is a member of various bar associations, of the Branford Dramatic Club, and is a director of the Branford Community Council. Fraternally, Mr. Houde is affiliated with the local lodge of the Knights of Columbus. His college fraternity is Sigma Nu, and he is a member of the Nisi Prius Club, of Boston. He is of the Catholic faith, a member of St. Mary's Church, Branford, and of the Holy Name Society.

DAVID S. GAMBLE, JR.—Known as one of New Haven's leading business men, David S. Gamble, Jr., has carried forward the reputation for commercial leadership established by his father before him. He is now president and treasurer of the Gamble-Desmond Company, as well as one of his city's very public-spirited and civic-minded citizens.

Mr. Gamble was born June 24, 1873, in New York City, son of David S. and Mary A. G. (Conlan) Gamble. His father, who was founder of the Gamble-Desmond Company and its active head until his death on November 12, 1913, came to this country from Ireland, where he was born in 1839. A record of the life of the elder David S. Gamble is to be found under separate heading on the next page.

Attending the public schools of New Haven, David S. Gamble, Jr., was graduated from Hillhouse High School in 1893. He then became a student at Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, New York, subsequently becoming associated with his father in the elder man's business activities in New Haven. Joining that business in 1895, he became its secretary after a time and was given a proprietary interest in the firm. At the father's death, Mr. Gamble was elected president of the organization, later being elected treasurer as well. In both these positions he carries forward his work today, directing the destinies of this important organization and maintaining the excellent traditions and methods established by his sire.

In addition to his work with the Gamble-Desmond Company, Mr. Gamble is a leader in social and civic affairs. He is a member of several local business groups, and as vice president of the Congress Bank and one of its organizers, has done much for the furtherance of his city's interests. During the World War period he ably assisted his country as a pioneer in the different campaigns in New Haven. He is a member of the New Haven Chamber of Commerce, the New Haven Country Club, the Madison Country Club and St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, of New Haven.

David S. Gamble, Jr., married, on January 17, 1905, in Savannah, Georgia, Frances Julia Bannon, daughter of Edward and Anna (Doyle) Bannon. The following children were born of this union: 1. Frances Mary, who became the wife of William A. Webster, of New Haven, and mother of twins, William and Mary. 2. David S., 3rd, who is engaged in the national advertising business in New York City; married Frederica Vanderbilt Webb, of New York City. 3. John Edward, now associated with his father. 4. Jane. 5. William A. The Gamble family residence is situated at No. 24 Everett Street, New Haven.

DAVID S. GAMBLE—An outstanding merchant of his day, David S. Gamble distinguished himself as founder and president of the Gamble-Desmond Company department stores, of New Haven, and came to be known far beyond the borders of this State. His unfailing fairness in all his dealings caused him to be widely known and respected, and his loyal citizenship and public spirit rendered him one of New Haven's true benefactors. He began his career in a humble position, gradually working his way upward until he reached the top, and all along the line of life's march he formed friendships that were close and lasting. Indeed, the nature of the loyalties that were accorded him paid high tribute to his kindness and generosity and his many delightful qualities of personality.

Mr. Gamble was born in 1839 in Kilrush, County Clare, Ireland, and came to America in 1861, just as he had attained his majority and just as the American Civil War was beginning. He received a common school education in his native land, though he did not pursue his studies further. In those early years he had a pronounced leaning toward the dry goods business, and, on landing in New York, or soon afterward, he became connected with the old A. T. Stewart Company, the predecessor of the John Wanamaker organization. He later was associated with the Simpson, Crawford Company, and still later with the B. Altman Company, both of New York. That metropolitan experience, covering nearly ten years, greatly enhanced his value as a business leader.

Arriving in New Haven as almost a stranger, he soon was superintendent for the Edward Malley Company, and was creditably serving in that capacity when he was called to Providence, Rhode Island, as manager of the H. B. Ladd Company. There he received further useful experience, and at his return to New Haven was made general manager of the Malley organization. About 1884, Mr. Gamble left the Malley establishment to go into partnership with Frank M. Brown, who had formed the F. M. Brown Company in 1879. In 1898, the F. M. Brown Company was reorganized as the Gamble-Desmond Company, with David S. Gamble as president, John D. Desmond as vice-president, and Edward E. Fields as secretary and treasurer. "The force and brains of Mr. Gamble have largely made this store," said one commentator, "and will remain in it, along with his name, such a memorial as he would have wished, the best any man might possibly have. His integrity and ideal business methods have given to this store the confidence of all the discerning in New Haven, and that confidence will continue as a tribute to the founder."

Becoming eminently successful in his work, Mr. Gamble resisted all efforts to swing him aside from a straight department store business, such as he had planned for himself and for his organization. He developed to perfection the system by which this store was operated, so that the company could practically operate itself, leaving him free for valued civic activities or for the periods of relaxation that he needed in his later life. He was active in many local groups in New Haven, and his interest in all that concerned the public welfare was a notable characteristic of the man. He belonged to several associations and clubs, and was a member of the Knights of Columbus, the Knights of St. Patrick and the Royal Arcanum. He was widely and favorably known, and his works are still an enlivening power in the world.

David S. Gamble married (first), in 1870, Mary A. G. Conlan, of Killingworth, a graduate of Plattsburg Convent, of Plattsburg, New York. They were the parents of three children, two of whom survived Mr. Gamble: 1. Mary R. 2. David S., Jr., who is president and treasurer of the Gamble-Desmond Company, of New Haven. Mrs. Gamble died in February, 1879. Mr. Gamble married (second), in 1882, Mary E. J. Byrnes, of New Haven, Connecticut. They were the parents of two children: 1. Mrs. Alden R. Ludlow, of Long Island, New York. 2. Francis J. B.

The death of David S. Gamble occurred on November 12, 1913, when he was seventy-four years old, and removed from New Haven a man of brilliant achievement and spotless reputation. He has been described as "keen-witted, kind-hearted, ruggedly honest, broad-minded, conscientious." His loyalty and the inspiration of his presence were qualities for all who were associated with him to see and know. His life record will adorn the annals of New Haven and of this State.

CHRISTIAN LAURITZ NELSON—Taking an active part in the affairs of the business world as president of Leake and Nelson Company, Incorporated, of Bridgeport, Christian Lauritz Nelson particularly concerns himself with all kinds of structural steel manufacturing operations.

Mr. Nelson was born May 19, 1887, in Denmark, son of Anton and Marie (Langvad) Nelson. His father was a Danish farmer. The schools of Denmark provided Christian Lauritz Nelson's early education, but he was only twelve years of age when he went to sea aboard a German sailing vessel. For four years he followed the sea, landing at San Francisco, California, in 1903. From that year until 1918, he was employed by several different steel manufacturing companies in different parts of the United States. Among his other activities, he served as foreman with Levering and Garrigues, steel fabricators, of New York City.

He came to Bridgeport to handle some steel structural work connected with the erection of the First National Bank and Trust Company Building. Already he had done important work along these lines in other parts of Connecticut. In 1921, he went into business for himself, establishing the C. L. Nelson Erecting Company. In 1928, the firm known as the Leake and Nelson Company was formed and incorporated, and Mr. Nelson became its president in 1934. This company is engaged in structural steel erection. It manufactures ornamental iron work and miscellaneous structural steel, and does iron work in all its branches, and rigging work, electric welding, and heavy machinery trucking are also among its services, its special equipment being valued at $250,000.

Quite aside from his labors in this connection, Mr. Nelson is interested in a variety of civic and social undertakings in Bridgeport. He is a staunch Republican. Fraternally he is connected with the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he holds the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and is also active in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Lodge No. 36 of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Mr. Nelson is a member of the Algonquin Club, of Bridgeport. During the World War period he was associated with the Lake Torpedo Boat Company, of Bridgeport, engaged in the building of submarines.

Christian Lauritz Nelson married (first), in Bridgeport, Connecticut, in 1915, Pauline Broch, daughter of Gustave Broch, of this city. Mrs. Nelson died on March 9, 1929. They were the parents of one son, William Edward, who became a student at St. John's College, Annapolis, Maryland. Christian L. Nelson married (second), May 16, 1930, Amelia A. Brennan, daughter of Joseph Brennan, of Bridgeport. One son, Christian Lauritz, Jr., was born of this marriage. The Nelson family home is situated at No. 365 Clinton Avenue, Bridgeport.

JOHN C. LYNCH, M.D., D.D.S.—Consultant in Neurology at New York City Post-Graduate Hospital and other medical institutions, Dr. John C. Lynch, of Bridgeport, Connecticut, has given many years of notable service in the general practice of medicine, as well as a specialist of distinction in neurology, and psychiatry; also as a teacher in New York City medical institutions.

Dr. Lynch, of Irish-Scotch ancestry, was born February 6, 1865, in Trumbull, Connecticut. Graduating from the public schools of that town he took four years preparatory at the then noted Emory Strong Commercial-Military Institute, in Bridgeport, and graduated from the New York College of Dentistry in 1884. He quickly decided, however, that his life activities should be pursued in a larger field and sought the advice of Dr. Robert Hubbard, of Bridgeport, then and for many years one of the outstanding physicians of the United States, as well as for many years personal physician to P. T. Barnum and others of public and private importance. Dr. Hubbard immediately took young Lynch as a student and he two years later graduated from the New York University Medical School in 1886.

His years of hard, diligent application to studies laid a foundation for pulmonary tuberculosis, which compelled the relinquishment of a hospital interneship. The importance of as much pure outdoor air as possible led him to the hills of Newtown and New Canaan, Connecticut, where he began active practice as a Medical Doctor, successively as an associate of Drs. A. P. Smith and William A. Brownson. At the urgent invitation of Dr. Hubbard he associated himself with the latter in 1888. His abilities were so quickly recognized that within another two years his became another of the independent Medical Doctor shingles of Bridgeport.

Ever determined that his "wagon should be hitched to that star," he took post-graduate work with the eminent authorities at Vienna and Berlin in embryology, pathology, bacteriology and internal medicine in 1894, and in 1897 at Johns Hopkins in pathology, neurology and general medicine. In 1898, came appointment as instructor in neurology at New York Polyclinic Post-Graduate School, then advancement as adjunct to Professor William B. Pritchard, until resignation in 1909. Thence he went to New York Post-Graduate Medical School and Hospital as Associate Professor with Dr. John J. McPhee, until he retired from teaching in 1933. He has also been bacteriologist, pathologist, neurologist and visiting physician at Bridgeport Hospital as well as continuing post-graduate work in London and Paris. He is at present consultant in the department of neurology and psychiatry at New York Post-Graduate Hospital, Park City Hospital, Bridgeport, and Norwalk Hospital. His World War service was as neurologist with the Draft Advisory Board. He is a member of the American Medical Association, the Fairfield County Medical Association and the Bridgeport Medical Society, serving the latter as president in 1898. His interest in the civic and social problems of his fellow citizens has had active outlet as a member of the Bridgeport Board of Health and Bridgeport Board of Charities.

En passant a brief reference to one of Dr. Lynch's early missionary activities. In 1892, his knowledge of the wide-and-rapidly-growing menace and the dire results of the social diseases now so openly discussed, moved him, with the co-operation of a newspaper friend, to institute a "try out" crusade in Bridgeport. So prompt was the closing of eyes and ears and so peremptory the remonstrances of public tongue that the crusade died aborning.

Dr. Lynch is a member of all Masonic orders to the thirty-second degree, affiliating with Pyramid Temple, Bridgeport. In 1895, he married Sadie Esther Walls, of Bridgeport, who died, the mother of two sons, in 1931. The sons are: 1. Hubbard, now a physician in New York and Westport, Connecticut. 2. John Charles, Jr., whose interests are theatrical. Dr. Hubbard Lynch married Mae Yoeman, of Plymouth, Massachusetts and New York. Their children are: i. Hubbard, Jr. ii. Dallas. January 5, 1934, Dr. John C. Lynch married Florence Johnson, daughter of Carl and Jennie Johnson, of Bridgeport.

WILLIAM HENRY SKINNER—More than a half a century of faithful service in the employ of the Remington Arms Company, Incorporated, of Bridgeport, brought William Henry Skinner into a position of leadership in the industrial world. He retired, however, from that organization on March 31, 1938, since which time he has devoted his major attention to the work of the Bridgeport Savings and Loan Association, of which he has been secretary since 1905.

Mr. Skinner was born April 26, 1871, in Bridgeport, Connecticut, son of the late Walter John and Frances (Lathrop) Skinner. His father, born March 4, 1837, in Compton Greenfield, near Bristol, England, came in 1854 to Bridgeport, and was employed for more than fifty years by the Wheeler and Wilson Sewing Company, which later came to be known as the Singer Sewing Machine Company. He died June 20, 1913. His wife, a native of Bridgeport, and the eighth direct descendant from Rev. John Lathrop who came to New England, September 18, 1634, died March 4, 1894.

Their son, William Henry Skinner, attended the schools of Bridgeport, his birthplace, and afterward entered the employ of the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, which subsequently became the Remington Arms Company, Incorporated. He remained for many years with this organization, his period of employment dating from September 12, 1887, to March 31, 1938, and he was the holder of many important positions in connection with the company. From 1923 to 1932 he was supervisor of the shipping department. Then he was transferred to the sales and order department, where he was engaged until his retirement. He was active in building and loan affairs in this part of Connecticut from an early period, beginning his secretaryship of the Bridgeport Savings and Loan Association on June 1, 1905.

Down to the time of writing Mr. Skinner has carried on this work. The Association opened permanent offices on April 1, 1938, at No. 900 Barnum Avenue, Bridgeport, under his direct management. On May 13, 1913, the Connecticut Building and Loan League was established, and Mr. Skinner was made the first secretary of the organization, so serving for twenty-two years, during which period he was instrumental in organizing several building and loan associations in different parts of the State.

In addition to his other activities, Mr. Skinner is a member of the advisory board of the East Side branch of the Bridgeport City Trust Company. He has consistently taken part in the life of his community and its people, helping with many worth while projects. During the World War he was in charge of the Liberty Loan department at the Remington plant. He has long been a leader in welfare work, lending assistance to the Red Cross and Community Chest organizations. Politically he is a Republican, and he attends the Washington Park Methodist Episcopal Church. He is connected with both the Free and Accepted Masons and the Knights of Pythias.

William Henry Skinner married, on June 5, 1895, in Bridgeport, Connecticut, Nellie Frances Hinckley, daughter of John and Esther (Lynch) Hinckley, of this city. Mrs. Skinner died January 30, 1920. One son, John Wesley Skinner, was the only child of this marriage, and he was born on January 26, 1899. He was graduated from Bridgeport High School after which he engaged in the automobile business and in 1932, he opened the Chevrolet Agency in Fairfield. He has continued his work in Fairfield down to the time of writing. His business improved continuously—so much so, in fact, that, on December 15, 1937, he was able to move it into his own building. He married, on March 6, 1934, Lillian M. Phillips, of Bridgeport.

EDWARD MERRILL BEACH—Although the name of Edward Merrill Beach is outstandingly identified with banking and finance in Bridgeport, there are few phases of life which do not engage his interest. He is a native of Trumbull, Connecticut, born January 14, 1894, son of Banford S. and Harriet St. John (Merrill) Beach. Both parents were natives of Connecticut, his father born at Trumbull, the mother in Norwalk. Merrill is a name prominent in New England annals since the middle of the seventeenth century. The Merrill family came first to Massachusetts in 1633. Nathaniel Merrill, first of line in America, settled at Newbury, Massachusetts, then removed to Hartford and then Norwalk, Connecticut. John Beach, from whom our subject descended, and his two brothers, Richard and Thomas, settled in Connecticut in 1639.

Banford S. Beach, the father, long engaged in farming and was a prominent figure in Trumbull civic and political affairs. He served the town as selectman upon numerous occasions, and represented it in the Connecticut Legislature. The son, Edward Merrill Beach, attended schools in Trumbull and Bridgeport. Since then he has done a great deal of private studying and prepared himself for banking as a career.

In 1913, Mr. Beach became messenger for the old First National Bank, of Bridgeport, which later became the First National Bank and Trust Company. During a quarter of a century he has been promoted through practically every department of the institution. He was appointed assistant cashier, in 1926; made cashier, in 1935, and been vice-president since January 1, 1937. He has been a specialist in the credits and loans department of finance, and keeps in close touch with the banking fraternity by membership in professional organizations. He is a past president of the Connecticut State Creditmen's Association, the Bridgeport Creditmen's Association, and the Bridgeport Chapter of the American Institute of Banking. He is president of the Bridgeport Clearing House, serving it in this capacity during the banking holiday of 1933, the most critical period in the history of American banking. He acquitted himself well in this crisis and won high repute in financial circles.

Mr. Beach enlisted in July, 1918, for service during the World War; was assigned to the Quartermaster's Corps, and received his honorable discharge, May 27, 1919. Fraternally, Mr. Beach is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, Blue Lodge, Chapter Council and Commandery and all the Scottish Rite bodies, including the thirty-second degree. He is a director of the Bridgeport Community Chest and the Bridgeport Chamber of Commerce, is independent politically, and has served as a member of the Trumbull Board of Education. Numbered among his clubs are the Algonquin Club, of which he is president; and the Brooklawn Country Club. He is a member of the First Presbyterian Church of Bridgeport.

In Bridgeport, on September 29, 1923, Edward Merrill Beach married Florence E. Greening, daughter of Joseph S. and Lizzie (Percy) Greening, of Bridgeport. Mr. and Mrs. Beach are the parents of one son, Robert Greening.

JAMES BREWER GREGORY, JR. — The name Gregory is not only associated with one of the oldest business establishments in Bridgeport but is that of a family, members of which have lived in Connecticut for nearly three hundred years. James Brewer Gregory, Jr., traces his descent from the first of the name in the State, Henry Gregory, who settled at Stratford, Connecticut.

Gregory is derived from Gregor, some of the Clan McGregor, changing their name to Gregory when the clan was prosecuted in Scotland and outlawed. The English family traces to Adam Gregory of Lancastershire, England, 1450. John Gregory came here from Saybrook Colony. Henry, son of John, and of the sixth generation from the above Adam, migrated to the Massachusetts Bay Colony, settling first at Boston, in 1633; removed to Springfield, Massachusetts, in 1639; and shortly after to Stratford. Traditionally, he spent his later years at Danbury, Connecticut.

The paternal grandfather of James Brewer Gregory, Jr., was born in Danbury, and went to Bridgeport to live in 1829. He was Ira Gregory, who established the retail coal and oil business, known as Ira Gregory and Company, now operated (1938) by the third generation representative. Ira Gregory married Maria Gregory, member of another branch of the family, of Danbury, and their son, James Brewer Gregory, Sr., was born in Bridgeport, April 6, 1845. His whole business career was identified with Ira Gregory and Company. He married Ella Deming Bassett, a native of Nashville, Tennessee, born October 31, 1851, and died in 1909. Mr. Gregory, Sr., lived until November 29, 1929.

Their son, James Brewer Gregory, Jr., was born in Bridgeport, September 24, 1882. After completing his education, he became associated with the old established firm, in 1899, and since the turn of the century has been increasingly active in the direction of its affairs. As mentioned, Ira Gregory and Company specializes in the sale of fuels of several varieties, Mr. Gregory figures prominently in Bridgeport business and fraternal affairs, being a thirty-second degree Mason; a Republican in politics and a supporter of civic movements undertaken for the benefit of the city and the welfare of its people. He is a member and vestryman of Trinity Protestant Episcopal Church, Bridgeport.

James Brewer Gregory, Jr., married (first), in Norwalk, Connecticut, on March 2, 1904, Mary Isabel Russell, daughter of Chester Russell, of Bridgeport. She died November 17, 1929, leaving five children: 1. James Brewer, III. 2. Ella Isabel. 3. Ira De Ver. 4. Warren Bennett. 5. Esther Marie. Mr. Gregory, Jr., married (second), at Stratford, Connecticut, on July 6, 1935, Eleanor Agnes Cushman, daughter of Alton C. and Mary (Caterson) Cushman, of Stratford. The Cushman family, in America, goes back to Robert, born in Canterbury, England, 1580, who came to Plymouth, Massachusetts, in 1621, but returned to England, in 1626, leaving his son, Thomas, in the care of Governor Bradford.

FRANK AUGUSTUS WHEELER—Prominently connected with the business life of Bridgeport, Frank Augustus Wheeler is the operator of Wheeler and Company, in this city, retail dealers in grain, groceries and seeds.

Mr. Wheeler was born September 24, 1875, in New Haven, Connecticut, son of Wallace Augustus and Catherine (Bardwell) Wheeler. She was born in New Haven. His father was born in 1849, in Vermont, and died in 1926 in Bridgeport. He was one of Connecticut's leading citizens. In 1870, he came to New Haven, settling in Bridgeport in 1877.

The Wheeler family has been closely associated with the business of Wheeler and Company, referred to above, which was founded in 1876 by Frank A. Wheeler's uncles, E. E. Wheeler, W. J. Wheeler and Sylvester Pike. Wallace Augustus Wheeler, the father, entered the business in 1877. Frank A. Wheeler was two years old when brought to Bridgeport by his parents, and here he attended the public schools. In 1897, he entered this business, which, since his father's death, in 1926, he has carried on single-handed as fiduciary of his father's estate. It is now known as Wheeler and Company, maintaining its old style, and Mr. Wheeler has adhered to the wise policies established by the founders.

Along with his labors in this connection, Mr. Wheeler is a director of the City Savings Bank, of Bridgeport, and the First National Bank and Trust Company, also of this city. He belongs to the local Rotary Club, and is a director of the Bridgeport Boys' Club. He is a staunch Republican. He was a member of the East Washington Avenue Bridge Commission, at Bridgeport. He is a member of the First Universalist Church.

In New York City, 1901, Frank Augustus Wheeler married Amy Tooker, of Poughkeepsie, New York.

WILLIAM FRANCIS SEVERN—As president of The A. W. Burritt Company, of Bridgeport, William Francis Severn heads one of the city's large business enterprises, handling lumber and building materials. He became associated with this organization when he was sixteen and has spent practically his entire career in its service.

Mr. Severn was born in Mystic on October 17, 1877, a son of William Isaac and Frances Louise (Skinner) Severn. His father, who was born in Philadelphia, was a ship's carpenter in Mystic for a period of years. Later he removed to New London, where he died in 1908. The mother, Frances Louise (Skinner) Severn, was born in Bridgeport and returned here after her husband's death. She was descended from one of the city's pioneer families.

William F. Severn was educated in the public schools of Mystic and Bridgeport. He began his career at the age of fourteen in the employ of the Housatonic Railroad Company and remained with the road for a brief time after it was absorbed by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, working in New Haven. In 1893, however, when he was sixteen, he became a stenographer in the office of The A. W. Burritt Company, of Bridgeport. This association he has since continued. Working in various departments of the company he rose gradually within the organization, and eventually succeeded to the office of vice-president. In 1918, he was elected president of the company, which has been under his leadership since that time. Approximately one hundred and fifty persons are employed in the Bridgeport plant of the company, a reflection of its substantial business and the position which it occupies in its field.

In addition to his long connection with The A. W. Burritt Company, Mr. Severn's interests have also expanded in other directions, principally banking and finance. He has been president and a director for some years of the North End Bank and Trust Company, of Bridgeport. Mr. Severn's favorite diversions are golf, swimming and bowling.

He married, on September 14, 1899, Marion Lu Keeney, of Waterbury. Mr. and Mrs. Severn have one son, Douglas Keeney, born March 4, 1901. He was graduated from Massachusetts Institute of Technology and is now engaged in business in Norwich.

THEODORE WALLINGFORD BRAITLING—President and treasurer of Fred K. Braitling, Incorporated, of Bridgeport, Theodore Wallingford Braitling, of Bridgeport, heads one of the largest and most unique manufacturing enterprises in the United States—the manufacturing of dolls' shoes, stockings and novelties. The business, which was founded by Mr. Braitling's father in 1865, was, until the time of the World War, the only one of its kind in the United States and, although recently competitors have entered the field, the company remains the largest in the country, conducting its sales not only in the United States territory but also exporting abroad.

Theodore Wallingford Braitling was born in East Wallingford, September 2, 1891, son of Charles Frederick and Anna Matilda (Keilpflug) Braitling, both deceased. Charles Frederick Braitling, who was born in Paris, France, came to America as a young man and spent most of his life as a manufacturer in Bridgeport.

Theodore Wallingford Braitling attended the Bridgeport public schools and the Stratford High School, and then entered his father's business. When the United States entered the World War, he enlisted in the United States Navy, January, 1918, and served throughout hostilities, being attached to a submarine chaser which, based upon Plymouth, England, was a unit in the English Channel Patrol. Discharged after the Armistice with the rank of quartermaster, first class, Mr. Braitling held this for two years in the United States Naval Reserve. Returning to the family business, which, upon the death of Charles Frederick Braitling in 1912, had been incorporated as the Fred K. Braitling Company, with Fred K. Braitling, brother of Theodore Wallingford Braitling, as president, Mr. Braitling took over the designing and developing end of the business and, in 1935, when his brother, Fred K. Braitling, died, Mr. Braitling became the president and treasurer, offices which he has occupied through the present time. He still interests himself in the designing of toys for the firm, as well as directing the business, and also maintains the old method of operating by hand work with a minimum of machine processing. A Republican in political interests, Mr. Braitling, who resides in Stratford, is a member of the Bridgeport Chamber of Commerce, the Lions Club, of Bridgeport, and Trinity Episcopal Church, of Southport.

REV. JOHN C. LYNCH—The Rev. John C. Lynch has been in charge of the work of St. Patrick's Church, Bridgeport, since coming to this parish on July 27, 1914. His accomplishments have been numerous and many-sided in character, earning for him the warm admiration and respect of his contemporaries and the love of his flock and his host of Bridgeport friends. Not only has he substantially contributed to the advancement of the spiritual life, but he has interested himself in community affairs and has brought a deep enrichment to all phases of human activity with which he has had to do.

The part that St. Patrick's has taken in the spiritual life of Bridgeport has been a significant one, rich in its good effects. The parish was originally formed by dividing a part of St. Augustine's, on the north. It was on May 21, 1889, that the first pastor, the Rev. James Nihil, was appointed by the Right Rev. L. S. McMahon, Bishop of Hartford, to take charge here. Father Cremin had at that time, secured a piece of property in Lindley Street, known as the Lindley estate; but Father Nihil found that it was not sufficiently centrally located for the needs of the parish. So, in April, 1890, he purchased the Eli Thompson estate for $27,000, a property 250 by 200 feet, situated on three streets: Thompson, Parallel and North Avenue. For the first twelve months of Father Nihil's pastorate, services were held in the Grand Street School, and the Mansion House became the parochial residence. Excavation for the new church was begun on May 3, 1890, and so rapidly was the work pushed forward that on August third of that year the basement was ready. On December 3, 1890, the cornerstone was laid. The people began at once to worship here, and so continued for twenty-three years. Through this period many new developments took place. The necessity of religion to the inmates of the Fairfield County Jail was felt, and the Rev. Thomas J. Picker, at Bishop Tierney's request, went from St. Patrick's to attend the needy there. Next came the establishment, and later the growth, of St. Vincent's Hospital, dating from 1903. To the spiritual needs of the patients there the pastor and his assistant, the Rev. Charles McGowan, capably ministered.

The cornerstone of this new edifice was laid on June 20, 1910, by the Right Rev. John J. Nilam, Bishop of Hartford. Then, on July 29, 1914, Father Nihil was transferred to the pastorate of St. Augustine's Church. The new church edifice was dedicated on November 9, 1913, at a crowded ceremony at which all the pews were filled and in addition about one hundred fifty extra chairs brought in for the occasion. The grand illumination in the sanctuary and the large Cross surmounting the tall spire was seen in the evening from a great distance. Especially the Cross, when illuminated, is visible far out to sea. The interior of the building is both commodious and beautiful. The church auditorium seats about one thousand people and is rich in design. Nothing exists there to distract from the religious atmosphere. There are four marble columns on each side with gold frieze in beautiful design. The sanctuary is of white marble and the floors there are of Carrara marble, shipped here especially from Italy for the purpose. The altar-rails are of American white marble. In front of the main altar is a beautiful carved replica of the Last Supper. This was made in Italy and is illuminated during services. At the left of the altar is a lifelike painting of the Savior taken from the Cross, and on the right a painting of the Presentation of the Child Jesus in the temple. The altar cloths are all white and are handsomely embroidered. All the eight candelabras are of gold. Near the main altar, on the right, is a statue of St. Theresa, or the Little Flower Girl, given to the church by the pastor, Father Lynch, in memory of his sister, Mary E. Lynch. To the left of the altar is the statue of the Sacred Heart. The windows, all designed as memorials, portray the life of St. Patrick. The Stations of the Cross are handsome oil paintings encased in expensively carved wooden frames. Father Lynch has been mainly responsible for the immaculately artistic quality of the church interior, having had much done to enhance its beauty and increase its adequacy to the parish needs.

There is a large basement where confessions are heard and children's classes are held. It seats about seven hundred people. There is a large choir-loft, back of which is a magnificent rose window, and a beautiful pipe-organ, and a large choir furnishes the music for the services each Sunday. The exterior of the building is of granite blocks, Gothic in architectural style, with one huge entrance consisting of three separate doors. This entrance is approached by twelve granite steps. The church is considered one of the finest in Connecticut.

St. Patrick's School, of cream colored fire-proof brick, is situated at Charles Street and Gem Avenue. The cornerstone was laid in 1922, and the school opened in February, 1923. The building contains the latest and best equipment for school work. There are brick floors in halls, iron stair cases and white walls. Each room has highly polished desks and the scholars are so well trained that although the school has been built fifteen years and is used every school day it looks like new, without a scratch. The seats are so arranged that the light from the windows comes over the left shoulder of the pupils, all these details being carefully worked out by Father Lynch, who is the principal. His office, on the first floor, is well lighted, has a highly polished oak desk, an oak cabinet where all cards are kept, and papers of importance are preserved. On the white walls, is a beautiful three foot oak panel above which are pictures of all the graduating classes. This office is kept dust proof. On this wall is a large master clock. There is a nurse's room equipped with all necessities for sick purposes. A nurse makes a visit to the school every week, and a dentist looks over the children's teeth periodically. The children are taught by the Sisters of St. Joseph. Mother Superior Constance, a very pleasant and capable teacher, has charge of the school. There are nine grades housed in this building, each grade having between forty to fifty pupils. In the fourth grade there are fifty-four and all are doing excellent work. There is a fine school orchestra, composed of boys and girls numbering about fifty. The school, one of the best parochial schools in the State, is of such high standing that one of its graduates won a scholarship to Yale College and is still making good. Each scholar must have a rating of eighty percent to pass. Father Lynch has also organized the Holy Name Society, the Young Ladies' Guild, the Altar Society, Angels' Sodality, the League of the Sacred Heart and the Boy Scouts.

Father Lynch's ordination to the priesthood was on December 18, 1886, at the Grand Seminary, Montreal, Province of Quebec, Canada, where he took special courses as a theological student. His first assignment was to St. Peter's Church, in Hartford, and on April 16, 1887, he was appointed assistant at St. Mary's Church, in Portland, Connecticut. There he remained until March 18, 1894, when he became assistant at St. John's Church, in Stamford. Afterward he was pastor of St. Catherine's Church, in Broadbrook, Connecticut, for a year, at the conclusion of which he went to St. Mary's, Stonington. After thirteen years at Stonington, he was assigned, on July 27, 1914, to St. Patrick's, in Bridgeport. Here he celebrated, on December 18, 1936, his fiftieth anniversary of ordination to the priesthood. His service has been a notable and distinctive one, bringing him the love of a host of friends in all departments of Bridgeport life, and his contribution to the advancement of the Catholic and Christian cause has been highly useful to the Church and to the world.

WILLIAM GERALD LINEBURGH—For many years successfully engaged in business affairs in Bridgeport, William Gerald Lineburgh has concerned himself with real estate and insurance. He is also the inventor of what is called the "Standard Signal Lamp," a device for traffic guidance, which is said to comply with "all traffic laws" and is intended to signal vehicles at the rear of a car as to whether a right or left turn or a complete stop is to be made.

Mr. Lineburgh was born July 19, 1894, at Bridgeport, Connecticut, son of William Golden and Belle Story (Wallace) Lineburgh. The grandfather, also named William Golden Lineburgh, was a prominent Knickerbocker Dutchman, who established, in 1871, the business that was afterward taken over in turn by his son, who incorporated it, and by his grandson, William Gerald Lineburgh. William Golden Lineburgh, the father of William Gerald Lineburgh, was born January 20, 1863, in Bridgeport, and attended private schools here. He began business in 1885 and is now president and treasurer of W. G. Lineburgh and Son, Incorporated, dealers in general insurance. They are general agents for the Hartford Steam Boiler Company, among others. Mr. Lineburgh is a member of the Bridgeport Chamber of Commerce, the Bridgeport Underwriters' Association and the Congregational Church; was a member of the local Red Cross organization during the World War; and is a staunch Republican in his political views. His wife, Belle Story (Wallace) Lineburgh, William Gerald Lineburgh's mother, is of Scottish descent.

William Gerald Lineburgh attended the public schools of Bridgeport and Freehold Military Academy, at Freehold, New Jersey, later becoming a student at the University School, in Bridgeport. In 1920 he entered the business world on his own account, becoming secretary and assistant treasurer of his grandfather's, later his father's firm known as W. G. Lineburgh and Son, Incorporated. This establishment, as before indicated, does an extensive business in real estate and insurance, and is one of the best-known and most successful in its line of activity in the Bridgeport district. It handles steam boiler, plate glass, workmen's compensation, automobile, liability and burglar insurance, and also does a large mortgage business. It has quarters in Rooms 512 and 513 City Savings Bank Building, at Main and Bank Streets, in Bridgeport. William G. Lineburgh is president and treasurer; John J. Caraher, vice-president (the firm was at one time known as Lineburgh, Caraher and Company); and William Gerald Lineburgh, secretary.

William Gerald Lineburgh's invention of his widely known "signal lamp" has been one of the remarkable achievements of his career. It was put on the market at the time, but was later discontinued. It consisted of a semi-cylindrical lamp divided into three compartments, each containing a small Tungsten electric bulb and each controlled either independently of the others or in combination with them. The first compartment, in red, contained the letters "LEFT," implying a turn in that direction. The second compartment, in white, contained the letters "STOP"; and the third, in green, said "RIGHT." The three-way signal was operated by one convenient lever, obviating mistakes.

During the World War, in addition to all his other activities, Mr. Lineburgh served in Company H of the Connecticut Home Guard; later reinlisted in Company A, 4th Regiment Connecticut State Guard. He is a member of the Governor's Foot Guard, of New Haven, with the rank of corporal. In his political views he is a staunch Republican. From 1930 to 1933, inclusive, he served as a member of the Police Commission of Bridgeport, and he is an associate member of the International Association of Chief of Police. He belongs to the Brooklawn Country Club, the Laurel Beach Country Club, the Lions' Club (in which he is a charter member), the Young Men's Christian Association and Tennis Club. His fraternal affiliations include the Corinthian Lodge, No. 104, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Jerusalem Chapter, No. 13, Royal Arch Masons, Obeh Grotto, and Police Square Club. He worships in the faith of the United Congregational Church, of Bridgeport, in which he is a Junior Warden.

In Bridgeport, Connecticut, on April 24, 1915, William Gerald Lineburgh married Dorothy Stickles Hard, daughter of Robert Bassett and May E. (Stickles) Hard, of Bridgeport. Two children were born to them: 1. Wallace Hard. 2. Geraldine Thomas.

WALTER PATRICK BARRETT—State senator from the twenty-first district of Connecticut, Walter Patrick Barrett of Bridgeport is also the assistant purchasing agent of Jenkins Brothers Company of Bridgeport and is widely known both for his talents in amateur theatricals and as a singer, especially on the radio.

Walter Patrick Barrett was born in Bridgeport, July 9, 1905, son of Patrick J. and Julia (Ryan) Barrett, both natives of Ireland. Patrick Barrett was born in County Tipperary and his wife in County Carlow. Patrick Barrett, who first settled in Brookfield, became prominent there, particularly for his work and success in organizing and collecting funds for the erection of St. Joseph's Church. Later, in Bridgeport, Mr. Barrett was superintendent of maintenance of the Maplewood School.

Walter Patrick Barrett, after attending the Bridgeport Parochial School, graduated from the Bridgeport High School in 1922. He entered the establishment of the Jenkins Brothers Company as an office boy. He has remained with this company since, holding various positions, including that of secretary to the general manager, Bernard J. Lee. At present he is assistant purchasing agent, to which he was appointed in 1931. Always keenly interested in civic matters, Mr. Barrett has given freely of his time along these lines. He was elected in 1932 to the Bridgeport Common Council, being one of four Democratic councilmen elected. In 1936 he was a candidate for the State Senate from the twenty-first district and won an encouraging victory. Mr. Barrett has been active in amateur theatricals and also, as a singer, has appeared on many radio broadcasts. He is a member of the Sacred Heart Church and of the Holy Name Society of that Church and also belongs to the Schwaebisher Maennerchor of Bridgeport.

Walter Patrick Barrett married, in Bridgeport, July 7, 1930, Helen Marie Condon, daughter of Daniel J. and Margaret (Burns) Condon, of Bridgeport. Mrs. Barrett, before her marriage, was a teacher in the Bridgeport Public Schools. Mr. and Mrs. Barrett are the parents of a daughter: Andrea Burns.

WILLIAM WOODWORTH BENT—For over thirty years the name of William Woodworth Bent, judge of probate, District of Bridgeport, has been prominently identified with the bar and bench of this city, where he also has been active in public affairs, as a leader of the local Democratic organization and in a social and fraternal capacity.

Judge Bent was born in Norwich, April 17, 1883, the son of Martin Francis and Harriet Peckham (Woodworth) Bent, the former a native of Wareham, Massachusetts, and the latter of Norwich, where she was a member of a family of early colonial stock. His father, who came to Norwich during the Civil War, was a blacksmith by trade. After receiving the early part of his general education in the public schools of Norwich, Mr. Bent completed this part of his studies at the Norwich Free Academy in 1902, and the same year matriculated at the Yale Law School, from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Laws degree in 1905. Shortly after finishing his professional training on June 30, 1905, he was admitted to the bar of New London County and shortly afterwards established himself in a general practice at Bridgeport as a partner in the firm of Lounsbury and Bent, with which he was associated from 1905 to 1909. During the latter year he formed a partnership in the firm of Buckingham and Bent and continued here until 1929, when he became judge of probate in the District of Bridgeport, an office he has since occupied with distinction and success.

During the early part of his career he took a keen and active interest in political affairs, serving as chairman of the Democratic Town Committee from 1911 to 1913, during which period he was nominated and elected to the House of Representatives. He is president of the Connecticut Probate Assembly and maintains membership in the American Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association and the Bridgeport Bar Association. He is a member of the board of directors of the Federal Building and Loan Association, the North End Building and Loan Association and socially belongs to the Bridgeport University Club, Algonquin Club, the local Masonic Club and the Lions Club, in which he is a former president and district governor. Judge Bent is also a member of the Fairfield County Yale Alumni Association, the Yale Law School Alumni Association and the Bridgeport Chamber of Commerce. He fraternizes with the Order of Free and Accepted Masons, the Royal Arcanum and the Independent Order of Foresters. In his religious convictions he adheres to the Episcopalian faith and worships at St. George's Church of that denomination at Bridgeport, in which he is a vestryman. Through his ancestry he is a member in the Sons of the American Revolution, and during the World War was a "four minute" speaker. Fond of outdoor sports the Judge finds his principal recreations in swimming and the game of volley ball.

On September 7, 1908, Mr. Bent married Corrine Ethel Secor, daughter of Audubon and Laura (Smith) Secor, of this city. Judge and Mrs. Bent are the parents of the following children: 1. Laura B., a graduate of Smith College, 1931, who is now Mrs. Ronald B. MacKenzie. 2. David W., who was graduated from Yale University with a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1937, and is now studying law at the University of Michigan. 3. Mary W., who was graduated from Cornell University, 1937, with a Bachelor of Arts degree, and is now taking a secretarial course at the Katharine Gibbs School in New York. 4. Ethel, a high school student.

MICHAEL FRANCIS KANE—State senator from the 23rd district of Connecticut, Michael Francis Kane, of Bridgeport, has been the employment and personnel manager of the Acme Shear Company, of Bridgeport, for twenty years.

Michael Francis Kane was born in Brookfield, Connecticut, August 28, 1879, son of James and Hannah (Beahn) Kane, residents of Brookfield who settled there from Ireland in 1862. James Kane, who was first employed by the old Housatonic Railroad, was later in the service of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad.

Michael Francis Kane, after studying in the public schools of Brookfield, attended a private school conducted by the Rev. E. L. Whitcombe, an Episcopal minister of Brookfield, and later attended the old Newtown Academy, Newtown, Connecticut. After leaving school, Mr. Kane was employed in a general store in Brookfield for about five years. After three years with the Lenox Shear Company of Brookfield, in 1901 he entered the employ of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad as a fireman running between Danbury and New York, and Danbury and Pittsfield, Mass. In 1906 Mr. Kane left the Railroad and came to Bridgeport to become associated with the Acme Shear Company. In the 32 years which have followed, Mr. Kane has risen in position from a polisher and foreman in the plant to his present position as manager of employment and personnel, which office he has occupied since 1920.

Mr. Kane has always taken an active part in the civic life of Bridgeport. His first important public office was that of Alderman from the ninth district, an office to which he was elected in 1928 and re-elected in 1930, serving then as the President of the Board of Aldermen and Acting Mayor. Then in 1932 Mr. Kane was elected State Senator from the 23rd district, serving in 1933, and was again elected to the Senatorship in 1936 to serve in 1937. A fourth degree member of the Knights of Columbus, Mr. Kane is a member of St. Charles Church and belongs as well to the Employment Managers Association.

Michael Francis Kane married Winifred A. Rochford, daughter of Michael and Bridget (O'Hara) Rochford. Mr. and Mrs. Kane are the parents of four children: 1. Josephine, now Mrs. Gregory T. Dial of New York City. 2. James Edmund. 3. Rita Bernadette. 4. Eleanor Marguerite.

JOHN McMULLEN—For a number of years one of Norwalk's influential citizens, John McMullen contributed in a notable way to the development of the city. Coming to Norwalk about 1906, he purchased Judah Island, formerly known as Burritt's Island, where he made his home. He made many changes on the island, including much dredging, the reclamation of considerable property, and building a sea-wall. This island lies about one mile south of the business district of South Norwalk, and consists of twenty-eight acres. After Mr. McMullen located here, he engaged a large force of men in the work of landscaping, laying out three miles of roads and pathways, also renovating and building additions to the Burritt mansion. Judah Island, with such improvements as these, became one of the most attractive places on Long Island Sound. Mr. McMullen was not only generous of his means in doing such work here, but he opened his home to the public for affairs of benevolence and public good. The place became a recreation spot for him after his busy day of professional activities, and he and his charming wife were surrounded by hosts of friends.

Mr. McMullen was a native of the State, having been born Octoer 16, 1848, at Ragged Hill, Windham County, Connecticut, son of Tole and Margaret McMullen, both of whom came from Ireland and settled in Windham County. The elder McMullen became active in farming and so continuing for the rest of his life. They had four sons: Hugh, deceased; James, deceased; Frank and John. Frank McMullen was born in Ireland, and was brought to America at the age of six months by his parents, and was educated in Windham County. He was engaged in farming in Woodstock, Connecticut, and, about 1874, went West and settled in California. After living for some time at Santa Rosa, California, he proceeded to Bandon, Oregon, where he farmed until his death. He married, in Putnam, Connecticut, in 1860, Catherine Carroll. They were the parents of the following children: 1. Francis, who died in infancy. 2. Jane, now deceased. 3. Anna, also deceased. 4. Laura, wife of James Hughes, a dairy farmer at Bandon, Oregon, until his retirement. He died November 14, 1929, in Norwalk, Connecticut; they had two daughters: i. Agnes, who was married (first) to Roland Leep, who is now deceased, and (second), to Pieter Rollandet; she has a son, James Leep. ii. Anne, wife of Dr. Joseph J. Millard, of Norwalk; they have two daughters, Joan and Laura Hughes. 5. Frank, who married Mary Hughes.

Mrs. Laura Hughes, a woman long active in civic affairs, is a member of the women's board of Norwalk Hospital, where, in association with other women in Norwalk, she carries on the work begun by her uncle, as well as being head of a group of workers who make practically everything but sheets and hand towels, and give these items free to the hospital; she is also a director of the Norwalk Dispensary Board and of the Day Nursery, which was the gift of John McMullen's wife.

John McMullen, who was born after his parents arrived in this country, attended the public schools, and for a short time went to college at Ellicott City, Baltimore, Maryland. Returning to Connecticut, he became a carpenter in his home community. Then, n 1876, he went to San Francisco, California, engaging in business on his own account as a builder of bridges and later developing his enterprise into a dredging business, which he conducted in the West n association with George W. Catt. Mr. Catt was he husband of Carrie Chapman Catt, the famous eader of women's affairs. He organized the Atlanic, Gulf and Pacific Dredging Company, of New York, of which George W. Catt was vice-president n charge of the New York office at the time of his death in 1905. Mr. D. D. Barlow then became vice-resident of the company. Mr. McMullen came to New York to look after the New York office at hat juncture, and was president of the company ntil resigning shortly before his death, when Mr. Barlow became president.

His organization came to be widely known for its achievements, handling some of the largest contracts executed in Seattle, Honolulu, San Francisco nd Manila. The dredging of Manila Harbor proided an especially interesting work for Mr. McMullen, who, though not trained in engineering heory, was nonetheless a practical engineer of the nest kind. During the World War he aided the overnment considerably, both through the facilities f his company and as a private citizen. Quite side from his own professional activities, he did verything in his power to improve engineering andards in the country at large, so making a disnctive contribution to his times. A practical elf-made man, of little education, he advanced himelf by his own efforts to the extent that he acquired fund of knowledge that would readily rank him nong men of education. Beyond his own satisaction of having acquired considerable self-attained arning, he imbued many young folks and helped them through the country's various educational institutions. Particularly did he concern himself with engineering education. He endowed Cornell University, at Ithaca, New York, with a fund to provide help for poor boys who desired to take engineering courses. The McMullen scholarship at Cornell is still widely known at that great institution of learning, and exists, not only as a living memorial to its founder, but as a solid aid to many a needy student and to humanity. A beautiful bronze tablet memorializes Mr. McMullen in the Memorial Room of Willard Straight Hall, at Ithaca, New York. In all the movements for charity and education in which Mr. McMullen was interested, he was ably assisted by his wife.

Mr. McMullen was deeply interested also in charitable and philanthropic work. He was one of the organizers of Norwalk Hospital, and was chairman of the committee that built the hospital building, as well as a generous giver to the institution's treasury. When not occupied with one or another of his manifold activities, he was fond of reading as a recreation, deriving a great deal of enjoyment from the poetry of Tennyson.

John McMullen married, on October 2, 1879, in San Francisco, California, Lena Peterson, who died in May, 1919. Through his professional duties and on occasional pleasure excursions, he traversed the seven seas of the world and visited the great seaports of all the continents. His wife was his close companion on all these voyages. Mrs. McMullen was active in many civic affairs, among them being the home for the aged and the Norwalk Day Nursery.

The death of John McMullen, on August 29, 1921, at his estate on Judah Island, Norwalk, Connecticut, was an occasion of deep sorrow. His life was a truly useful one, rich in good deeds and influence, and he will be long and affectionately remembered by those who knew him or were privileged to call him friend.

Among other business interests, he is a director of the Southington Building and Loan Association. A member of the Knights of Columbus, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Eagles, Mr. Egan also belongs to the local organizations of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the Disabled Veterans' Association. He is a member of St. Thomas' Church.

Thomas Edward Egan, Jr., married, in Haverhill, Massachusetts, August 24, 1925, Ruth Lennon, daughter of John and Mary (Ryan) Lennon, of Haverhill. Mr. and Mrs. Egan are the parents of a daughter: Ruth.

HERMAN ARTHUR MUUS—Town clerk and treasurer of Southington and vice-president of the Clark Realty Corporation of Southington, Herman Arthur Muus has followed a varied career as a public official, salesman, construction executive and business-man in both New Britain and Southington.

Herman Arthur Muus was born in Southington, January 12, 1898, son of Arthur Herman and Jane (Christian) Muus. Arthur Herman Muus, who died July 31, 1930, was a native of Brooklyn, New York, and, as one of the founders of the Beaton and Corbin Manufacturing Company of Southington, was identified with the company for thirty-nine years as an electro-plater. He was of German ancestry while his widow, who now divides her time between Southington and Stamford, is a member of an old Knickerbocker family, having been born in the Catskills of a family tracing its descent back to the original Dutch settlers.

Herman Arthur Muus, after graduating from the public and high schools in Southington was employed by a hardware firm until 1918, when he enlisted in the United States Army and was assigned to the Railway Transport Division at 45 Broadway, New York City, where he served until discharged in 1919. Following a period then as a mills supply salesman for Rockliffe Brothers Company of New Britain, Mr. Muus became a traveling salesman for Peck, Stow and Wilcox Company, of Southington, leaving them to be a salesman for the Southington Manufacturing Company of Southington. Then, in 1926, Mr. Muus entered the real estate business with the Clark Realty Corporation of Southington, an organization of which he is now vice-president. From 1932 to 1935, Mr. Muus was in charge of building construction. Always vitally interested in civic concerns, Mr. Muus in 1932 became clerk of the Southington Board of Assessors and in 1935, he was elected town treasurer and town clerk, offices which he has occupied through the present time. He is a director of Southington Chamber of Commerce, which was Incorporated in February, 1938, and member of the Town Clerks' Association of Connecticut. Maintaining his World War associations by membership in Kilconic Post, No. 72, American Legion of Southington, of which he was commander in 1929, Mr. Muus is also a member of Friendship Lodge, No. 33, Free and Accepted Masons and Meriden Lodge, No. 35, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and belongs to Grace Methodist Episcopal Church of Southington.

Herman Arthur Muus, married June 29, 1921, in Southington, Margaret Mohr, daughter of Mathias and Wilhelmina Louise (Stuhrmann) Mohr, of Southington. Mr. and Mrs. Muus are the parents of two children: 1. Jane Wilhelmina, born May 20, 1923. 2. Ann Louise, born August 22, 1931.

LOUIS JOSEPH DUMONT, M.D.—Doing much in the different communities in Maine and Connecticut where he has lived and worked for the preservation of public health, Dr. Louis Joseph Dumont is now health officer of the City of New Britain. The medical profession is fortunate, indeed, in listing him among its workers and members, and his position in his community is one of true leadership and standing.

Dr. Dumont was born June 1, 1890, in Lewiston, Maine, son of Dr. Joseph and Alice (Tremblay) Dumont. His father came originally from Quebec City, Province of Quebec, Canada, and the mother from Lake St. John, Province of Quebec. The father likewise was a physician, carrying on his practice for many years in Lewiston, Maine. He was a graduate of the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Michigan.

The public schools of Lewiston, his birthplace in Maine, furnished the early education of Louis Joseph Dumont, who afterward became a student in the Medical School of the University of Montreal, being there graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1913. He served an interneship, in 1914, at St. Paul's Contagious Hospital, in Montreal. Then, from 1914 to 1920, he was engaged in the practice of medicine at Lewiston, Maine, acting as both physician and surgeon and establishing himself solidly in the affections of his patients, colleagues and all with whom he was in any way associated. In 1920, he was made health officer at Lewiston and Auburn, Maine, serving at the head of the health department of those cities until October, 1929. He then came to New Britain, Connecticut, as city health officer. Since that time he has carried forward his work here, earning the warm esteem and satisfaction of all with whom he is in any way associated and distinguishing himself as an outstanding figure in the life of his times.

Gentleness and fairness have characterized all his dealings with others, whether in his professional capacity or in his private human relationships, and in his public undertakings he has shown a commendable unselfishness and strength of purpose. He is a member of the New Britain Medical Society, the Connecticut Public Health Association and the American Public Health Association. During the World War he served in the United States Army Medical Corps, holding the rank of first lieutenant. His service was mainly at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia.

In Montreal, Province of Quebec, Canada, on July 31, 1913, Dr. Louis Joseph Dumont married Stella Lemay, daughter of George and Louise (La Rue) Lemay. Mrs. Dumont's father was a New York City man, and her mother was a native of Quebec City. One daughter, Irene, was born of this marriage.

JAMES ROBERT LACEY—For many years engaged in the practice of law in Southington, James Robert Lacey has served since 1932 as prosecuting attorney of the Town Court of this place. His career has been of very special value to the people of Southington, who have richly benefited from his labors in their behalf and have come to regard him as an outstanding citizen.

Mr. Lacey was born April 15, 1905, in Southington, Connecticut, son of James R. and Catherine (Callahan) Lacey, both residents of Southington. For years his father was engaged in the carriage manufacturing business. Later he became a candidate for public office, serving as chairman of the Board of Education of Southington. He is now a member of the Board of Finance of the town, as well as of the Board of Sewer Commissioners. He has also served as deputy sheriff of the county, having held that office under Sheriff George Gabb. Hartford County has richly benefited from his labors, and the Lacey family is an old and honorable one in this district, whither they came from Ireland. The grandfather of James Robert Lacey came from that land, settling in Bristol, Connecticut, where James R. Lacey was born. The mother, Catherine (Callahan) Lacey, was born in Southington.

The public and high schools of Southington provided the earliest formal education of James Robert Lacey, who later became a student at the Law School of Boston University, taking the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1927. He was admitted to the bar of the State of Connecticut, and immediately thereafter, in January, 1928, began his practice of law in New Britain. There he continued his work until 1930. In that year he came to Southington, here continuing his practice. Two years later, in 1932, he was made prosecuting attorney of the Town Court of Southington, and he so continues today.

Taking part in the general life of his community, Mr. Lacey is a Republican in his political views, and a member of the Roman Catholic Church. He belongs to the Hartford County Bar Association. The Southington community is, indeed, richer for his helpful efforts in its behalf, and he is respected and honored in an ever widening circle.

JAMES SIMONE—First selectman of Southington, James Simone, in association with his brothers, conducts a large oil and ice retail business in the Southington district.

Born in Casaratas, Italy, August 6, 1898, James Simone was brought to Southington at the age of three by his parents, Joseph and Rose Simone, who are residents of Southington.

After passing through the Southington schools, James Simone rapidly established himself in the community and, by 1927, was in business for himself as a jobber of tools and dies. Then, in 1931, he associated himself with his brothers in their retail oil and ice business, by his ability soon developing the activity until, as at present, the firm supplies a large part of the Southington territory with oil and ice. Always interested in civic matters, Mr. Simone enrolled himself as a Republican and has served his town in several capacities, including membership on the Board of Relief for three years, from 1930 to 1933, and membership on the Board of Selectmen, from 1932 through the present, his last two terms being as first Selectman. Mr. Simone is also very active in fraternal organizations, belonging to the Knights of Columbus, the Sons of Italy, the Red Men, Maria Della Neva Society, the Fraternal Order of Eagles, Sons of Italy Lodge, and the Sons of Italy Club.

James Simone married, September 11, 1922, in Southington, Anna Sirullo, of Southington. Mr. and Mrs. Simone are the parents of two children: 1. James, Jr., born February 9, 1928. 2. Richard, born August 7, 1932.

FREDERICK JAMES MORRISON, M.D.—A native of Connecticut, Dr. Frederick James Morrison performed an important work in the State as a member of the medical profession, serving in different communities within its borders and was head resident surgeon at Fitch's Hospital for Soldiers in Darien at the time of his death.

Dr. Morrison was born December 16, 1887, at Thompsonville, Connecticut, son of James and Mary E. (Robinson) Morrison. His father was engaged for years in the postal service of the United States Government.

Attending the Bulkeley School, at New London, Connecticut, Frederick James Morrison afterward became a student at the University of Maryland, taking the degree of Doctor of Medicine there in 1911. He served an interneship at Frank Memorial Hospital, in Baltimore, remaining there for a year, and for six months he was an interne at the Memorial Hospital in New London. It was in 1912 that he started his active practice of medicine, performing his first professional work at Wilton, where he remained until 1917. He then proceeded to Westport. The World War somewhat interrupted his professional activities when, in 1917, he was commissioned a first lieutenant. In April, 1918, he went overseas for active service and was assigned to Base Hospital No. 43. He returned a year later, in April, 1919, holding the rank of captain at the time of his honorable discharge. Then he continued his military activities as a member of the National Guard of the State of Connecticut, being promoted to major in 1921 and holding that office in the Field Artillery. In 1922 he was made regimental surgeon.

Resuming his civilian duties, he practiced medicine in Norwalk after 1919, specializing in the treatment of nose, throat and ear cases in that city. There he remained until October, 1935, when he was appointed head resident surgeon at Fitch's Hospital for Soldiers, in Darien. He continued with his work in Darien the remainder of his life, distinguishing himself by his faithful ministration to those whose health was placed in his care. He was also prominent in civic and social affairs, notably as a member of St. John's Lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Norwalk Club, the Shorehaven Country Club, and the Protestant Episcopal Church.

On June 6, 1915, at Wilton, Connecticut, Dr. Frederick James Morrison married Lucy M. Marks, daughter of the Rev. Charles A. and Mary (Devine) Marks. His death occurred May 24, 1938.

JEREMIAH E. SULLIVAN—President and treasurer of the Brick and Sullivan Shoe Store, the oldest such establishment in Willimantic in point of continuous operation, Jeremiah E. Sullivan is one of the outstanding merchants of Windham County.

Jeremiah E. Sullivan was born in Willimantic, March 13, 1869, son of Eugene and Bridget (Moran) Sullivan, natives of Ireland.

After passing through the public schools and a parochial school in Willimantic, Jeremiah E. Sullivan, when fifteen years of age, obtained his first employment in the factory of the Willimantic Linen Company, where he worked for a year. Then, following another year as a clerk in the retail shoe store of J. F. Clune, Mr. Sullivan joined the staff of the shoe store of W. N. Potter, where he remained for six years, leaving that establishment to become a partner with John E. Brick in a shoe store which was opened in 1893. This store prospered immediately and the partnership endured until Mr. Brick's death in 1934, since which time Mr. Sullivan has continued to operate the establishment as president and treasurer. Adding a directorate in the Willimantic Building and Loan Association to his shoe store interest, Mr. Sullivan has, for many years, concerned himself with civic affairs, being at present a trustee and a member of the executive board of the Windham Community Memorial Hospital, as well as belonging to the Willimantic Chamber of Commerce, and the Willimantic Rotary Club. Mr. Sullivan is also a member of the Willimantic Council of the Knights of Columbus, the Willimantic Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, as well as belonging to St. Joseph's Church. He finds his recreation in bowling.

Jeremiah E. Sullivan married in Willimantic, June 27, 1907, Grace Vanderman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Vanderman, of Willimantic.

HON. FRANK MELVIN LINCOLN—For many years the Hon. Frank Melvin Lincoln has effectively served the Willimantic community through his contribution to its business and civic life. He has carried on an insurance agency and several other enterprises, and has held many public offices, including that of Judge of the Police Court.

Judge Lincoln was born July 17, 1880, at North Windham, Connecticut, son of Melvin Eugene and Edith M. (Lincoln) Lincoln. His grandparents were Lorin and Elizabeth (Parker) Lincoln on the paternal side of his house. The father, Melvin Eugene Lincoln, a native of Chaplin, moved to Willimantic early in life. He was born February 23, 1849, and successfully contributed in a number of ways to the general welfare of this State, particularly participating in city affairs. He was postmaster of Willimantic during the Administration of President Grover Cleveland. His first work was as a teacher. Later he was employed in a grist mill and sawmill and did general teaming until he was twenty years old. In Willimantic, he engaged in the grocery business, then turned to the lumber and coal trade, forming the firm of L. and M. E. Lincoln in 1873. In 1882, he admitted Charles L. Boss as a partner. He was president of the Willimantic Savings Institute for nine years and one of its trustees for thirty-three years. He was elected president of the United Charities Association of Willimantic when it was organized in 1914. He married (first), November 23, 1871, Sarah A. Burnham; and they had a son, Louis B. Lincoln, who became associated in business with his father and also took up newspaper work. Melvin Eugene Lincoln married (second), December 19, 1878, after the death of his first wife, Edith M. Lincoln.

Their son, Frank Melvin Lincoln, attended the public schools of Willimantic, and later studied at Windham High School. His first formal employment was as special delivery messenger in the Post Office. Later he was employed by Henry Howey, proprietor of a meat market; and, after learning that trade, he was engaged in the meat business with his father for six years until they disposed of their business by sale. He and his father then purchased the insurance agency of F. F. Webb, continuing the enterprise until June 1, 1908, when they established a partnership with his brother, L. B. Lincoln, and Charles L. Boss under the firm name of the Lincoln and Boss Lumber and Coal Company, Incorporated. This company represented a consolidation of the Lincoln Insurance Agency and the lumber and coal business of Charles L. Boss. Frank Melvin Lincoln was made secretary of the new organization, and so served until January, 1919, when he purchased the insurance department of the company, which he now conducts under the name of Lincoln's Insurance Agency.

His success in the insurance trade has been a significant one, but his labors have by no means ended with insurance or with his other business undertakings, such as his secretary-treasurership and directorship in the Willimantic Industrial Corporation. He has filled a number of important public offices, serving for some years on the Board of Selectmen of Willimantic, as well as on the Board of Relief. In 1929, he was elected to the Connecticut State House of Representatives. He has also acted as city tax collector. In 1933, he was appointed judge of the Police Court, receiving his third appointment to this same post in 1935. Fraternally he is connected with the Free and Accepted Masons, in which order he is affiliated with Eastern Star Lodge, Trinity Royal Arch Masons, Olive Branch Council of Royal and Select Masters, St. John's Commandery of Knights Templar, Norwich Consistory of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite (in which he holds the thirty-second degree), and Sphinx Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He also belongs to Nimrod Grotto, in Norwich, and the Tall Cedars of Lebanon. He belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Lodge No. 1440, of the Loyal Order of Moose and Willimantic Lodge No. 1311, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. For twenty-one years he was connected with the Fire Department of Willimantic, and for twelve of those years he was on the Board of Fire Engineers. In 1916, he was elected a selectman of the Town of Windham, an office to which he was re-elected in 1917, 1918 and 1919. He has served as both vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce and treasurer of the Chamber of Commerce Realty Company. He is a staunch Democrat and a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

The Hon. Frank M. Lincoln married, on October 22, 1906, Elizabeth F. Rose, daughter of Joseph F. and Mary (McFetteridge) Rose, who were natives of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The ceremony took place in New London, Connecticut. Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln became the parents of a son, Melvin Eugene II, who was born October 24, 1908, in Willimantic, Connecticut, studied in the public schools here, completing his high school work, and is now employed by the Scottish Union and National Insurance Company, of Hartford, Connecticut.

J. FRANCIS MORIARTY—Few men in the community of Windham have come to enjoy the high esteem and popularity that has been accorded to J. Francis Moriarty, for years a prominent business man here and since 1932 town clerk and treasurer.

A native of Willimantic, Mr. Moriarty was born here on May 29, 1894, the son of William J. and Margaret (Fitzgerald) Moriarty, both deceased, the former in 1907, and the latter in 1894. His father, who was born in Meriden, came to Willimantic during his youth and was for a time associated with the Hooker Hotel.

Mr. Moriarty received the early part of his general education in the parochial schools of Willimantic and later completed his studies at the Windham High School from which he was graduated in 1912. After finishing his schooling he secured a position with J. C. Lincoln, Willimantic furniture dealer and was associated with the firm for twenty years, resigning in 1932 to assume the post of town clerk and treasurer, which he has since occupied with distinction and success.

Aside from his business and official career he is widely known in social and fraternal circles. He is a genial personality who makes and holds friends. In his service affiliations he is a member of the local Chamber of Commerce and fraternally, belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Columbus, in which he is Past Grand Knight. In his religious convictions he worships at the St. Joseph's Church of this city.

On June 26, 1934, Mr. Moriarty married Alice I. Healy, daughter of James D. Healy.

EDSON C. STOCKING—Superintendent of Pine Acres Farm, an eighteen hundred acres estate in Hampton, the best example of a private forest on a large scale in all Connecticut, Edson C. Stocking is one of the outstanding forest conservationists and foresters of the State.

Edson C. Stocking was born in Avon, July 24, 1903, son of the late James M. and Sophie (Clark) Stocking. James M. Stocking, who died in 1924, operated a sixty-five acre farm in Avon; his wife, Sophie (Clark) Stocking, now resides at Simsbury with her daughter, Dorothy. Two other sons are Milton Stocking, a Connecticut State Forest Ranger, and W. Clark Stocking, a gardener for Robert E. Darling in Simsbury. A second daughter, Helen, is now Mrs. Clarence Headle, of Simsbury.

Edson C. Stocking, after attending the public schools in Simsbury, and graduating from the Simsbury High School in 1923, was by that time already well established as a forester. He began working as a boy after school hours on the farm of Richard B. Eno, of Simsbury, and later working for the Connecticut State Forestry Department under Mr. Austin F. Hawes, State Forester, following that with a winter in the woods and mill of the Ansonia Forests Products Company of Norfolk. In the Spring of 1924, Mr. Stocking returned to the State Forestry Service working for the Department in cooperation with the Talcott Mountain Forest Protection Association. In the summer of 1924, he was promoted to be assistant State Fire Warden for the Western District of Connecticut and was also placed in charge of the first Connecticut State Forest Nursery at Simsbury. After two years in this employment, Mr. Stocking went to the Pine Acres Estate of James L. Goodwin, of Hartford, and there, through the present time, has remained as superintendent of this gigantic private forest, considered to be an outstanding example of what the practice of private forestry can accomplish in New England. In connection with his professional interests in forestry and his personal concern with conservation, Mr. Stocking is active in many organizations, being president of the Windham County Farmers' Association, as well as a director for four years; director of the Quinebaug Fruit Growers' Association, member of the Society of American foresters and of the Connecticut Forest and Park Association. A member of the Hampton Congregational Church, Mr. Stocking is also a past president and director of the Willimantic Rotary Club.

Edson C. Stocking married at Collinsville, May 2, 1926, Isabel H. Sisson, daughter of Elbridge and Mary (August) Sisson. Mr. and Mrs. Stocking are the parents of two children: 1. Marion Isabel, born May 10, 1927. 2. Clarence E., born April 27, 1929.

LEON FRIEND PECK—In his accomplishments, Leon Friend Peck, superintendent of streets for the City of Hartford during the past quarter of a century, ranks among the most able and highly esteemed public officials in this community. His efficient administration, his wide and diversified engineering knowledge, and his personal attributes as a genial and popular personality have been factors in the success he has come to enjoy. As superintendent of streets during this long period he has been responsible for saving the city thousands of dollars, conducting his office shrewdly and ably. Further distinction is attached to his name by the fact that he is a member of one of the oldest and most distinguished families in the State.

Mr. Peck was born in Hamden, Connecticut, April 23, 1875, the son of Friend Joseph and Alice (Northup) Peck, also the parents of the following children: 1. Florence M., prominent educator and formerly for many years principal and proprietor of the Phelps School for Girls at Hillfield-Mount Carmel. She attended the private school of Miss Orton and Miss Nichols, in New Haven, and later was graduated from Belmont College, in Nashville, Tennessee. 2. Alice D., who attended normal school in New Haven. Two children died in infancy.

Mr. Peck's father, Friend Joseph Peck, was born in Hamden, July 31, 1847, engaged in the dairy business for a number of years and was a prominent Democrat in politics, having represented his district in the State Legislature in 1911, and served as a member of the Board of Finance during the same period. His wife, a native of Woodbridge, was the daughter of George and Laura (Truesdale) Northup.

The Peck family is listed among the earliest in the State and traces its American ancestry to Henry Peck, one of the first settlers in New Haven and the signer of the fundamental agreement in this place. He came here during the spring of 1638, as did Deacon William Peck, to whom it is thought he was related. It is believed they came to this country in the company of Governor Eaton, and under the leadership of the Rev. John Davenport, who with others arrived at Boston on the ship "Hector," June 26, 1637. Lineage is traced through Deacon William Peck's second son, Joseph, who was baptized in New Haven, September 5, 1647, and married Sarah Alling, November 28, 1672; through their second son, Samuel Peck, who was baptized in New Haven, December 19, 1677, died here about 1739, and married Abigail Hitchcock; through their third son, Amos Peck, born in New Haven, January 29, 1713, removed to Mount Carmel, Town of Hamden, where he was deacon of the church, and died January 28, 1783. He married Elizabeth Leek, great-granddaughter of Philip Leek, who was born in Dover, England, in 1611, and became one of the first settlers of New Haven in 1638. They were the parents of Joseph Peck, who was born in Hamden, July 5, 1762, died there August 9, 1845, and married Olive Chatterton. Their son, Zeri Peck, a blacksmith and farmer at Mount Carmel, was the grandfather of Leon Friend Peck, of this review. He was born April 2, 1794, died May 29, 1867, and married Alma Warner, who passed away at the advanced age of ninety years.

After completing a general education at the Cheshire Military Academy in 1892, Leon Friend Peck matriculated at the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University, in which he secured his professional training and from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Philosophy degree in the class of 1897. As an undergraduate he had specialized in civil engineering and when he completed his studies, he entered this branch of the profession with an engineer in Torrington, who he was to be associated with for about one year. On September 1, 1898, he accepted an invitation to join the staff of S. E. Minor, a civil engineer, who had a general private and municipal practice in Greenwich. Mr. Peck soon demonstrated his ability and usefulness and became chief assistant engineer of his new employer. He continued to gain a wide and favorable reputation in engineering circles and in October, 1909, was elected superintendent of highways for Greenwich. Hearing of his success the City of Hartford called upon him to consider the post of superintendent of streets. He accepted and assumed office here on April 1, 1913. Since that time he has served with signal distinction, setting a record of efficiency and excellence that has gone to establish him among the most capable superintendents of streets in the history of this city. He is also superintendent of highways of the Bureau of Public Works of the metropolitan district of Hartford County. Physical evidence of his success is to be found in the beautiful and well-planned highway system of the metropolis. It is a feature that can be pointed to with pride by the citizens here, who recognize Mr. Peck's contributions and esteem him as an individual.

Mr. Peck's interest in the profession at large is to be found in his memberships. He belongs to the American Society of Civil Engineers, the Connecticut Society of Civil Engineers, in which he has served as president and director, and the American Internationale Permanente des Congres de la Route. He is also a member of the American Society of Municipal Engineers, and his clubs include the University and City, of Hartford.

On October 27, 1904, Mr. Peck married, at New Paltz, New York, Mary LeFevre, of that city, and daughter of Peter and Rachael (Freer) LeFevre. Mr. and Mrs. Peck are the parents of two children: 1. Miriam, who was born August 6, 1906, attended Connecticut College for Women, at New London. 2. Carlton, born July 12, 1909, graduated from Yale University, class of 1932, Scientific Department.

FRED M. LITTLE—In his success Fred M. Little, vice-president, treasurer and manager of the Jordan Buick Company of Willimantic, exemplified, in the best traditions, the American conception of a self-made man. He began his long journey to success as a mere lad of twelve, when he began peddling in the local mills after school hours and during vacation periods. This was but the start. In the years that followed he was to engage in various pursuits, educate himself technically and conduct a mechanical repair shop, all of which equipped him eminently for the responsibilities he has undertaken since joining the Jordan Buick Company in 1921.

Mr. Little was born in Willimantic, April 8, 1888, the son of Thomas J. and Katherine M. (Jordan) Little. His father, who was a native of Mansfield, and died May 6, 1932, worked as an overseer in the American Thread Company of Willimantic for over half a century, and was an active member of the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, as well as the old hook and ladder fire department in Willimantic. His wife survives him and has now reached the advanced age of eighty-two years.

Mr. Little attended the public schools of Willimantic, and after completing this part of his education began his career as a clerk in the J. F. Carr and H. E. Remington Clothing stores. He continued with this firm until he joined the Jordan Hardware Company, where he repaired bicycles and did other mechanical work. By 1910, after serving what might be termed a well rounded apprenticeship in this trade, he established a tire repair shop and later an independent automobile repair shop. His skill, ability and integrity won him a large and important clientele, among whom was Ernest P. Chesbro, Sr., who entrusted all of his repair work to Mr. Little. During this period the young man conserved his funds and eventually had saved enough to take a course in electrical engineering at Pratt Institute in New York, and a commercial course at Huntzinger's Business College. By the time he completed his training the United States had entered the World War and he secured a responsible position with the Groton Iron Works in Connecticut. After the conflict was over he became associated with the Atwood Machine Company of Stonington, where he was placed in charge of the drilling and index well. He resigned from this company to assume the post of stock manager for the Packard Company of New London, and was serving in this capacity in 1921, when his uncle, William Jordan, organized the Jordan Buick Company in Willimantic and invited him to join the firm in which he has since served with outstanding success as vice-president, treasurer and general manager.

On June 23, 1927, Mr. Little married Mildred R. Sweeney, daughter of Mr. William J. Sweeney, of this city.

ERNEST P. CHESBRO, JR.—As manager of the local branch of the Dunlop Tire and Rubber Company in Willimantic, Ernest P. Chesbro is emulating his distinguished father, who was one of the pioneers of the automobile and automobile accessory businesses in Windham County and one of the most influential figures of his generation in the social, civic and business life of this section.

Mr. Chesbro was born in Willimantic, November 2, 1891, the son of Ernest P. and Carrie O. (Sweetland) Chesbro, the former a native of Mystic. His father, who was born July 29, 1858, and died in 1935, attended the private and common schools of Windham until he was sixteen years of age, at which time he began his business career in a carriage factory, where he continued for three years. At the expiration of this period he became a clerk in a store operated by the American Thread Company, which he was associated with until 1884, when he joined the old New England Railway, now part of the New York, New Haven and Hartford system. Eventually he retired from this work to purchase the insurance business of H. A. Loomer, and thus embarked upon one of the most productive periods of his life, for in addition to managing this firm he also operated a bicycle and carriage shop, and formed a partnership in the retail and wholesale coal business with George S. Elliott. About seven years later he sold out his interest in the coal venture to Mr. Elliott and turned his attention to the establishment of the first automobile agency in the city of Willimantic. In this instance he sold the first automobile in local history and continued in this business with substantial success for about eight years, selling out in 1912 to the Jordan Automobile Company. From that time until his passing he was to center his attention on the real estate, insurance and manufacturing businesses which he had established. As a manufacturer he was associated with his brother in the production of drugs and sundries which were marketed on a retail basis throughout this section. Paralleling his business success was his prominence in the official life of the community and State. He was a leader of the local Republican Party, represented Willimantic in the State from 1913 to 1915, served two terms as first selectman and, prior to the incorporation of the city, was a member of the court of burgesses, as well as serving as councilman from the fourth ward. At the time of his passing he was president of the Willimantic Building and Loan Association, belonged to the Willimantic Chamber of Commerce, and worshipped at the First Baptist Church.

Ernest P. Chesbro, Jr., received the early part of his general education in the public schools of Windham and after completing his studies became associated with his father in the automobile business. When the elder Chesbro sold out to the Jordan people in 1912, Mr. Chesbro remained with the new firm for a year, and later, in 1915, joined the Ford Automobile agency, owned by Louis Elmer, in Hartford, and was to be associated with this concern until 1928, save for the period he served with the American forces during the World War. He then returned to Willimantic where from 1930 to 1937, he engaged in the restaurant business, which he sold out during the latter year. Since that time he has been manager for the local branch of the Dunlop Tire and Rubber Company, and has enjoyed substantial success in this capacity.

Throughout his life, Mr. Chesbro has been an active and popular figure in the social life of Willimantic where he is a member of the Willimantic Country Club and fraternizes with the Eastern Star Lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he also belongs to the Trinity Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; the Olive Branch Council, Royal and Select Masters; the St. John's Commandery, Knights Templar; and the Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. In addition he is a member of the local lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. When the United States entered the World War, Mr. Chesbro enlisted, as heretofore indicated, joining the 6th Division of the Ordnance District Repair Shop of the Regular Army, on January 13, 1918. He served overseas one year with this unit and was discharged July, 1919, with the grade of sergeant.

On October 22, 1935, at Montville, Mr. Chesbro married Esther May Sanderson, daughter of Fred A. Sanderson.

HERBERT A. GILLETTE—A resident of Mansfield, Herbert A. Gillette has for years figured prominently in the business life of Willimantic and this district of the State of Connecticut.

Mr. Gillette was born October 16, 1889, at Clinton, Connecticut, son of Josiah and Irene (Manwaring) Gillette. The paternal grandfather was William Ely Gillette, who was, through most of his active career, principal of Bacon Academy. Josiah Gillette, the father of Herbert A. Gillette, was a native of Colchester, Connecticut. The mother was born in Clinton.

The public school at Old Lyme, Connecticut, provided the earliest formal education of Herbert A. Gillette, who afterward attended Mount Hermon Seminary and, in 1908, was graduated from Connecticut State College. His first employment was with the Hon. Lewis Sperry, United States Congressman, of East Windsor Hill, Windsor, whose farm Mr. Gillette managed for two years. Mr. Gillette then rented a farm at Liberty Hill, Lebanon, operating that property for about a year. At the end of that period he became general manager of the estate of Jerome Alexandre Norfolk, with whom he continued for four years. During the World War, he effectively served the United States Government, serving in the Extension Department at Jackson, Mississippi, for two years. Thereafter he was associated with Charles Treadway as general manager of his estate at Bristol, Connecticut, so continuing for four years.

It was about 1921 that Mr. Gillette came to Mansfield to live, buying a farm on Spring Hill. He now is also operating a retail grocery establishment at Storrs, and is president and treasurer of the Gillette Company, Incorporated, of Willimantic, wholesale dealers in tobacco, confections and the like. He is also active in the general affairs of the community and district where he makes his home. For eight years he was a member of the School Board of Mansfield, and for two years he was a selectman. For three years he was town assessor of Mansfield and a member of the Board of Finance. In November, 1937, he was elected Probate Judge of his town, and still serves in that position. He is also active in Uriel Lodge, No. 24, of the Free and Accepted Masons, of Merrow, Connecticut. He worships in the Baptist faith.

In November, 1910, at Columbia, Herbert A. Gillette married Adelaide Isham, daughter of Henry and Elizabeth (Buell) Isham. The children of this marriage are: 1. Hazel E., now Hazel E. (Gillette) McCauley, a graduate of Connecticut State College, where she took the Bachelor of Science degree. 2. Lois I., also a graduate of Connecticut State College, same degree. 3. Marjorie, a student at Connecticut State Teachers' College, New Britain.

WILLIAM HENRY HAMMOND—As a true and worthy representative of the Hammond family, which for generations has been prominently identified with the history of Windham County, William Henry Hammond occupied a distinguished place in the affairs of Hampton, where for a number of years he engaged in farming and the dairy business.

Mr. Hammond was born January 4, 1850, the son of Captain George R. and Sarah Elizabeth (Bottum) Hammond, the former a native of his son's birthplace, the latter of Mansfield. His father, who was born May 28, 1814, and died January 16, 1892, was one of the most prominent and influential men of his generation in Hampton, where he engaged in farming, was widely known as a cheese manufacturer and also owned the largest herd of sheep in the town. The elder Hammond was active in politics, represented Hampton in the State Legislature during the session of 1867, and held numerous town offices, including that of justice of the peace. He derived his military title from the rank he held in the State militia.

The Hammond family is one of the oldest in New England. It traces its American ancestry to one Thomas Hammond, a native of Lavenham, County of Suffolk, England, who came to this country with his wife, Elizabeth (Cason) Hammond, about 1636, and settled in Hingham, Massachusetts, where they lived until 1656, when they removed to Newton, where Thomas passed away in 1675, at the age of eighty-eight years. The first member of the family to come to Windham County, according to record, was Josiah Hammond, who settled on a farm in that part of Pomfret which is now known as Hampton. He came here about the middle of the eighteenth century and the property he acquired was to be lived upon and worked by his descendant, William Henry Hammond of this review.

Mr. Hammond received the early part of his general education in the public schools of his native community and later completed this part of his studies at the Norwich Free Academy at Norwich, after which he attended the Springfield Business College at Springfield, Massachusetts. He then returned to Hampton and began to assist his father in the management of the old homestead farm, which he inherited when the elder Hammond passed away. He managed his affairs with ability and sagacity, raising a general crop and also devoting his energies to the operation of a dairy business. Through his accomplishments he became recognized as one of the most successful farmers in this part of Windham County and probably would have continued at this place had it not been for a disastrous fire which destroyed all of his buildings in 1912. At that time he sold the property and later acquired the Cleveland homestead on Hampton Hill, where he was to live in retirement until his passing.

Like his forebears, Mr. Hammond took a keen interest in the social and civic affairs of his surroundings and contributed liberally to the general welfare, serving in a number of town offices, including that of selectman. He was a member of the Hampton Grange, No. 36, was a Republican in politics, and worshipped at the Congregational Church.

On February 7, 1873, Mr. Hammond married Alice M. Sharpe, born March 10, 1852, the daughter of Horace Ingalls and Sarah (Austin) Sharpe. Mr. and Mrs. Hammond were the parents of the following children: 1. Arthur Sharpe, who was born September 8, 1874, and died February 23, 1884. 2. Annie Eleanor, who was born September 13, 1879, graduated from the Worcester Normal School in 1901, taught school and married Herman D. Edmond, who died in 1924. She is the mother of one son, Stuart D. Edmond, who is a graduate of Amherst Agricultural College, now known as the Massachusetts Agricultural College. 3. George Austin, who was born April 23, 1882, and died June 30, 1883. 4. Helen Storrs, who was born May 31, 1886, attended Woodstock Academy, graduated from Emerson College, Boston, and is now married to Leslie R. Mathews, and the mother of two children: i. Burr. ii. Hugh.

William Henry Hammond died at his home on Hampton Hill, June 30, 1919, at the age of sixty-nine. His death was learned with profound sorrow by a host of friends and associates throughout the county, who had known and respected him as a man of high principles and ability.

FRANCIS THEODORE PHILLIPS—The business and financial life of Waterbury has benefited to a marked degree from the work of Francis Theodore Phillips in his official connection with the R. F. Griggs Company, investment bankers. His years of association with leading banking and investment houses have rendered him an outstanding figure in his times, and Connecticut is, indeed, fortunate in including such a man among her citizens.

Mr. Phillips was born June 4, 1892, in Brooklyn, New York, son of Lewis Rowley and Elizabeth Frances (Smith) Phillips. His father, a native of Jamaica, British West Indies, was born there August 31, 1867, and died in New York City on February 7, 1928. He was engaged in the wholesale dry goods business in New York throughout his entire business career. His wife, Elizabeth Frances (Smith) Phillips, was born October 22, 1867. The paternal ancestry of Francis Theodore Phillips is English. Members of the Phillips family lived for about a century in Jamaica, and in that period the children were sent to England to be educated. On the maternal side of his house, Francis T. Phillips' forebears were of Colonial New England ancestry. His grandfather, Andrew A. Smith, was born in 1817, in Berlin, Connecticut, grandson of Captain Ebenezer Smith, of General Washington's staff. His great-grandfather, Frederick Wilhelm, who was of German ancestry, married into the North family of Philadelphia, and in that Pennsylvania city resided most of his life.

Attending Adelphi Academy and the Boys' High School, in Brooklyn, New York, Francis Theodore Phillips afterward took a course of study at Princeton University, in Princeton, New Jersey, where he was graduated in 1913 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. He was employed soon afterward by F. S. Smithers and Company, members of the New York Stock Exchange, and remained with them from November, 1913, to January, 1916. In February, 1916, he joined the R. F. Griggs Company as a clerk, and was prominently and actively associated with that investment banking house from that time forward. In 1926 he became its assistant secretary, and in 1929 was made the company's treasurer. Later he was also elected to the vice-presidency and secretaryship and was also made a director.

During the World War, he served from August, 1917, to January, 1919, with the rank of first lieutenant in the Field Artillery Reserve Corps from November, 1917, until he was promoted to Field Artillery captain in August, 1918. He served at different Army camps, and at the time of his discharge from the service was acting as lieutenant colonel of the Third Regiment, Field Artillery Replacement Depot, at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Kentucky.

The Waterbury community has benefited to a remarkable extent from the labors of Mr. Phillips. Politically he has maintained a consistent alignment with the Republican party, on whose ticket he was elected to the Board of Aldermen of the city, serving as an alderman from January 1, 1934, to December 31, 1937. He was a police commissioner in 1934 and 1935. In 1936 he was made treasurer of the Republican town committee. His business and other connections are numerous. He is assistant treasurer and a director of Phillips and Benjamin, a firm of wholesale druggists; assistant treasurer of the Potter County Gas, Inc., producers of natural gas in Pennsylvania;, treasurer and a director of the New England Cartographers, Inc.; a director of the International Electro-Geometer, Inc.; a director and treasurer of Traders, Inc., an investment trading company in Waterbury; and secretary, treasurer and a director of the Fifty Leavenworth Company, of Waterbury. Along with all these affiliations, Mr. Phillips is a member and director of the Waterbury Country Club, the Waterbury Club, the Nassau Club and Dial Lodge (at Princeton, New Jersey), and the Princeton Club of New York and the Bankers Club of New York. He is president of the Connecticut Junior-Senior Golfing Society. He worships in the faith of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

On December 1, 1917, Francis Theodore Phillips married Ruth H. Johnston, daughter of the late Charles L. Johnston, a retired physician of Brooklyn, New York. They became the parents of three children: 1. Francis Theodore, Jr. 2. Charles R. 3. Ruth Elizabeth. The family residence is situated at No. 30 Hewlett Street, Waterbury.

EDWIN FRANK BUGBEE—At the bar, in public life and as a banker, Edwin Frank Bugbee has been outstanding during the varied phases of his active life. He is a native of Willimantic and practically all of his career has been identified with this city. He was born January 21, 1868, son of Edwin and Sarah M. (Preston) Bugbee.

After being graduated from the Willimantic High School, in 1886, Edwin F. Bugbee went to Williston Seminary at Easthampton, Massachusetts, where he completed his academic education. There followed studies at the old Eastman Business College, Poughkeepsie, New York, and in 1889 he was graduated from the Law School of Yale University, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Admitted to the bar of Connecticut, Mr. Bugbee began the practice of his profession in Willimantic as the junior partner of John L. Hunter, an association which was continued at that time for three years. From 1893 to 1913 he served as prosecuting attorney. He was also a member of the Connecticut State House of Representatives during this period, where he made a reputation as a legislator, and did some especially fine work as a member of the banking commission. He then was partner with the J. L. Hunter law firm for a decade, or until 1920, when he became attorney for the Willimantic Trust Company with the title of vice-president. Six years later he was elected president, and during the most extraordinary modern decade in the history of financial institutions (1928-38), was at the helm of the Willimantic Trust Company, guiding it over the stormy seas that were characteristic of this era.

Mr. Bugbee is also president of the Willimantic Company, Incorporated, an investment corporation; is a director of the Willimantic Development Company, and is connected with other enterprises. Always a staunch believer in his home city, he has been active in its Chamber of Commerce, and serves as chairman of the Board of Finance in Willimantic. During the World War period he was to the fore in many of the Liberty Loan and humanitarian organization "drives"; was an effective "four-minute" speaker, and rendered many other patriotic services. He is a Democrat in politics. Fraternally, Mr. Bugbee is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons, St. John's Commandery, Knights Templar, Willimantic; Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; Order of the Eastern Star; and also with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Knights of Pythias. Among his clubs are the Willimantic Country and the Natchong Game, in the North, and the College Arms Golf Club, in the South. He spends his winters in Florida, at De Land, and does a great deal of trout and salmon fishing in northern Maine and Canada. At any season of the year he enjoys golf. He is a Congregationalist in his religious faith and connections.

In 1896, Edwin F. Bugbee married (first) Alice Johnson, of Mansfield, Connecticut. Some years after her death he married (second), in 1927, Irma Hawkins, of Willimantic.

WILLIAM PATRICK STUART KEATING, M.D.—Since shortly after the turn of the century Dr. William Patrick Stuart Keating has been engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in Willimantic. His accomplishments have been many-sided and constructive in this sphere of work, and he has earned the warm admiration and respect of all who know him.

Dr. Keating was born March 31, 1874, in South Manchester, Connecticut, son of William M. and Mary J. (Stuart) Keating. His father was born at Borris, County Carlow, Ireland, and studied in the national schools of that country. Afterward he studied music in Dublin, Ireland, where he was graduated, and then he taught music in the national schools. Going to London, England, he was a teacher there for a short time, teaching music there until he sailed for New York. On this side of the Atlantic he settled at Newington, Connecticut, remaining for a brief period in that community and then going to Windsor Locks, where he taught music and was organist in the Protestant Episcopal Church. Afterward he taught music at New Britain and was for several years bookkeeper with the firm of Russell and Erwin. Removing to South Manchester, Connecticut, he was there organist in the Catholic Church and overseer in the Cheney Brothers silk mill for a number of years. At the same time he became organist in the North Manchester Catholic Church. Later, the two churches became individual parishes, and Mr. Keating took the North Manchester church. He continued to serve in St. James' Church for the rest of his life, which ended July 31, 1906. His wife died in October, 1901. They were the parents of the following children: 1. William Patrick Stuart, of further mention. 2. Johanna Elizabeth, born March 1, 1876, at South Manchester. 3. Arthur Edward, born June 7, 1878, at South Manchester, was married to Ida Anderson; he became an overseer at the Cheney Brothers silk mill in South Manchester. 4. Emma Julia, born July 24, 1880, at South Manchester, twin of Elizabeth and wife of John Doyle. Mr. Doyle is now deceased. 5. Elizabeth, born also on July 24, 1880, twin of Emma and now deceased. 6. Rev. Paul Francis, born July 9, 1882, at South Manchester, became a priest of the Roman Catholic faith, being ordained at Hartford on May 30, 1910, by Bishop Nilan. 7. Mary Jane, born October 30, 1888, became the wife of Henry Mathieu, shoe dealer of Willimantic, and the mother of three children: Mary Elizabeth, and Claire and Ezilda, twins, the latter two registered nurses.

The first-named and eldest of these seven children, William Patrick Stuart Keating, attended the public schools of South Manchester and the high school there, and early determined upon medicine as his life's work. Entering Jefferson Medical College, in Philadelphia, he completed a four-year course of study there and was graduated in 1898 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He then served as an interne at St. Agnes' Hospital, Philadelphia, for a year, gaining a broad and valuable practical experience that well fitted him for his subsequent endeavors. He then came to Willimantic and practiced with Dr. Welden, 1898-1900. Proceeding afterward to South Manchester, he practiced his profession there for two years, and in 1903 returned to Willimantic. Since that year he has carried on his formal practice of medicine in Willimantic, coming to be recognized as one of the talented physicians of this community and district.

His accomplishments were such, moreover, as to lead him into other aspects of medicine, such as public health work. He was health officer of Willimantic from 1905 onward for many years. He became intensely interested in the cause of education, and was from 1908 to 1917 a member of the City Board of Education, being again elected to the office in 1919, after he returned from wartime service in France. Politically, Dr. Keating has always been a staunch Democrat. He is a member of the Willimantic Medical Society, the Windham County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He belongs also to the New England Jefferson Medical College Alumni Association. Fraternally, he is connected with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, belonging to Willimantic Lodge, No. 1311; the Loyal Order of Moose, in which he is Past Dictator of Willimantic Lodge, No. 1440; and the Knights of Columbus, in which he is Past Deputy Grand Knight of San Jose Council, No. 14, and is a holder of the fourth degree. He is a Veteran Companion of Connecticut Commandery of the Military Order of Foreign 'Wars of the United States, a Past Commander of James Shea Post, No. 19, of the American Legion and the Yankee Division Veterans' Association, of which he is State Chaplain. He also is a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and is Junior Vice-Commander in Windham County.

Dr. Keating's military service began in 1913, when he became a medical officer in the Reserve Corps of the Connecticut National Guard and was given the rank of first lieutenant. He was active in all the encampments of the State group. In February, 1916, he was commissioned first lieutenant in the sanitary detachment and was assigned to the First Connecticut Infantry Regiment. In that year he went to the Mexican border, being stationed for three months at Nogales, Arizona. In those months he came to be widely known in military circles. He was particularly acclaimed among the Connecticut people for saving the life of Charles North, a private in Company A, First Connecticut Infantry, of Rockville, Connecticut, who was struck by lightning. Given up for dead by the regimental surgeon, Mr. North was treated by Dr. Keating, who, taking over the case, struggled over the patient for four and one-half hours. At the end of that time Mr. North regained consciousness, whereupon he remained for weeks in Dr. Keating's care until at length he was sent home, restored to health. The incident won much newspaper comment in all parts of the United States. Dr. Keating was mustered out of the Mexican border service on October 26, 1916, and on March 26, 1917, was again called to the colors and assigned, from New Haven, to the 102nd Infantry Regiment, Twenty-sixth Division, as a first lieutenant in the medical department for World War service. Going overseas, he was later transferred to the 101st Infantry Regiment, Twenty-sixth Division, as battalion surgeon. He served in the front line trenches in the Soissons sector, and on June 26, 1918, was transferred to the 148th Field Artillery Regiment as medical instructor. He was on active duty at Chateau-Thierry, where he was both wounded and gassed. It was then necessary to transfer him, and he was sent to Bordeaux, France, as sanitary officer that he might regain his health, and there he remained from September to December, 1918. Afterward he was in charge of the German prison camp, where there were 1,000 prisoners, and while he was there he was advanced to the rank of captain. He left France on July 3, 1919, and was mustered out of the service at Camp Upton, New York, on July twenty-first of that year, after serving twenty-three months in France. In September, 1928, he was commissioned major in the 301st Medical Regiment, Medical Reserve. On March 1, 1930, he was appointed resident surgeon of Fitch's Home for Soldiers, at Noroton Heights, Connecticut, serving to April 1, 1937, when he resigned and returned to Willimantic. His wife, a graduate nurse who completed her course in St. Luke's Hospital, Newburgh, New York, established an emergency hospital in the Willimantic State Armory while her husband was overseas, and she had full charge of it through the influenza epidemic of 1918.

Dr. Keating has retained his deep interest in music, serving for six years before entering the Army as organist at St. Joseph's Church, in Willimantic. He plays both organ and piano, as well as several other musical instruments. He continues his scholarly tendencies, both in music and in medicine, and keeps in close touch with all the newer developments and researches in his profession.

Dr. William P. S. Keating married, in Willimantic, Connecticut, on October 12, 1914, Elsie W. Greene, daughter of B. Frank and Elizabeth (McGinn) Greene and a direct descendant of General Nathanael Greene, of Revolutionary War fame. Dr. and Mrs. Keating became the parents of one son, Stuart William Keating, who was born August 24, 1916, in Willimantic. He graduated from New York University, where he took a course in office management and business administration, and is now employed by a branch of United Motors, at New London, Connecticut.

HON. NELSON J. AYLING—Professional and public affairs have provided the Hon. Nelson J. Ayling ample opportunity for helpful service of a practical nature to his fellow citizens in the Norwich district of Connecticut. Here he has for years been Judge of Probate, and his community, his State and his fellow citizens have been the gainers from his efforts.

Judge Ayling was born October 1, 1868, in Columbus, Pennsylvania, son of Henry M. and Mary J. (Carrier) Ayling, and grandson of John and Jane (Trussler) Ayling. His paternal grandparents came from the County of Surrey, England, settling in Columbus Township, Warren County, Pennsylvania, then a comparatively new district close to the frontier and characterized by pioneer conditions. They reared thirteen children, each of whom married and had children. One of the thirteen was Henry M. Ayling, father of Judge Ayling. Henry M. Ayling was born June 26, 1835, in Surrey, England, coming to this country with his father as a young lad and living the strenuous frontier life, helping on the farm and engaging in lumbering operations in winter. Later he became active in lumbering on his own account, rafting the lumber down the Allegheny River and often to Ohio River ports. Still later he resumed farming activities, in which he was also successful. He and his wife were both highly esteemed residents of their Pennsylvania district. His wife, Mary J. (Carrier) Ayling, was a daughter of Nelson and Thurza (Marble) Carrier, and descendant of early Colonial settlers. One of her forebears, Martha (Allen) Carrier, wife of Thomas Carrier, was burned at the stake in the witchcraft period of 1692. Henry M. and Mary J. (Carrier) Ayling became the parents of two children: 1. Nelson J., of further mention. 2. Lola M., wife of Warren R. Carr, who was with the Erie Railroad Company.

Nelson J. Ayling was reared on his father's farm through the first nineteen years of his life, with the exception of the time in which he was away at school. He acquired a thorough knowledge of farm work, but later attended a business college at Oswego, New York. Then he took employment as a bookkeeper and stenographer with Sawyer, Manning and Company, yarn and knitgoods manufacturers, of Boston, Massachusetts, remaining with them until 1891, when he accepted similar work with the Union Hardware Company, of Torrington, Connecticut, one of the largest and best-known business enterprises in this State. His employers at Torrington recognized Mr. Ayling's ability and faithfulness and gradually they increased his responsibilities, making him purchasing agent and giving him full charge of the requisition department. His connection with manufacturing served only as a means to an end, however, and the tempting future opening before him in the business world was powerless to hold him when he saw a possibility of striving toward his ultimate goal.

In 1894, he began studying law with Halsey and Briscoe, of Norwich, and in December, 1898, was admitted to the bar of New London County. His practice started at once, and he continued this new work with unusual success until he was appointed Judge of Probate of the Norwich District on January 1, 1905. The Norwich Probate District is the largest in eastern Connecticut, including Norwich, Griswold, Preston, Lisbon, Franklin, Sprague and Voluntown. To the responsibilities of this large district, Mr. Ayling brought qualifications of a high order, most of all his faithfulness and thoroughness. He made a deep study of the working of probate courts and probate law, and continues these studies down to the time of writing. At the annual meetings of the Probate Judges' Association of Connecticut, he has advocated standardization of the application of probate laws in this State, as well as of ways and means management and of probate court procedure. His district has deeply appreciated the quality of his work, and since his first election to the judgeship in 1905 he has been biennially reelected without a single interim. In each of these elections, except for those in which the opposing party was in power, he has been the candidate of both the Republican and Democratic Parties. He is himself a Republican, but his honest administration of his public duties has led to his acceptance in the ranks of both parties with more openness than has been the case with any other local leader. He is a constant worker in behalf of his own party organization, and his influence in Norwich is a strong one.

In November, 1902, Mr. Ayling was elected to the Connecticut State Senate from the Tenth District, and in the upper law-making body of the State he served on the committees of agriculture, rules and amendments, both the rules and amendments committees being joint groups including House members. Along with his other activities, he has been a trustee of the Norwich Savings Society, and a director of the Uncas-Merchants National Bank. He belongs to Somerset Lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons, in which order he is also affiliated with Franklin Chapter, No. 4, of Royal Arch Masons, Franklin Council, No. 3, of Royal and Select Masters, Columbian Commandery, No. 4, of Knights Templar (Norwich), and Sphinx Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine (Hartford). He is a past commander of Harmony Lodge, No. 27, of the Knights of Pythias, in which he is also a member of Harmony Division of the Uniform Rank. He belongs to Gardner Lodge, No. 16, of the Knights of Pythias, of Norwich, and is a past exalted ruler of Norwich Lodge, No. 430, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, having been ruler when the new Elks' Home in Main Street was built. He was also chairman of the building committee that erected the new Elks' lodge room addition. He also is a member of the Past Exalted Rulers' Association and of the Arcanum Club, of Norwich.

He belongs to the New London County Bar Association and the Connecticut State Bar Association.

At Norwich, Connecticut, on June 7, 1904, he married (first) Mildred Gifford, daughter of G. Parker and Olive E. (Fisher) Gifford, of that city. They became the parents of two children: 1. John Henry, born September 10, 1912, died June 10, 1920. 2. Ruth Gifford, born December 1, 1915. Mrs. Ayling died March 9, 1916. On October 10, 1936, Judge Ayling married (second) Margaret M. Johnston, of Norwich.

Unmarried

EDWIN PARK ROOT—During his long service with the New Haven Clock Company, Edwin Park Root rose from positions of minor responsibility to the presidency of the organization. His devoted loyalty was invaluable to the company and his distinguished abilities made him a leader not only in its counsels, but in the industry as a whole. His business interests were also supplemented by many civic connections through which he enhanced the value of his contributions to the New Haven community, which was his life-long home.

Mr. Root was born in New Haven on June 19, 1861, a son of Lafayette F. and Elizabeth (Benham) Root. He received a public school education and at the early age of fourteen, entered the employ of the New Haven Clock Company, with which he spent the remainder of his active career. His industry won him favorable attention and brought him gradual promotion within the organization. In each new office he gave further evidence of his capacities and his steady rise continued through half a century. During much of this period he was entrusted with important executive responsibilities and at length, in 1923, he succeeded the late Walter Camp as president of the corporation. He remained as head of the company until 1929 when, with advancing years, he retired to become chairman of the board of directors. Subsequently he also relinquished this office, but continued as a member of the board of directors until his death. His ripe experience and sound judgment had beneficial consequences for the company until the last. The strength and substantial position of the organization as it exists today owe much to his efforts and the industry as a whole responded to the stabilizing force of his leadership. Mr. Root was the founder of The Clock Manufacturers' Association, which first brought the members of the industry together to consider their common welfare, and the welfare of the entire industry was always a subject of his concern.

Mr. Root had other business interests. He was vice-president and director of the First National Bank and Trust Company, of New Haven; vice-president and trustee of the National Savings Bank; a director of the Morris Plan Bank, Peck Brothers Company, the Atlas-Ansonia Company, and the New Haven Water Company. These organizations he served with characteristic zeal and fidelity and his counsel was always highly valued by his associates in their management. Despite the pressure of his business duties he did not ignore the obligations of good citizenship, but, instead, welcomed every opportunity for civic service and willingly assumed the responsibilities involved. As vice-president and director of the Connecticut State Prison and a member of the State Board of Parole, he gave freely of his time and energy to the State. He was for thirty years a member of the Free Public Libraries Board of New Haven and was its president during the last twelve years of his life. For twenty-seven years he was identified with the Young Men's Christian Association as a member of the Board of Trustees and for the last ten years of his life he served as chairman of that board. He was a director of the General Hospital Society and a trustee of the New Haven Hospital. He was president of the Little Theatre Company, of New Haven, and for thirty-six years was a member of the board of Lowell House, later Farnam Community House, and served as its vice-president. Yale University officially recognized his valued and varied contributions to his City and State by conferring upon him the honorary degree of Master of Arts in 1931.

In addition to his other connections, Mr. Root was a member of the National Economic League and of its national council. He was a Republican in politics, a member of the Congregational Church and a member of several clubs, including the Quinnipiack Club, the Giant Valley Club, the New Haven Lawn Club, and the New Haven Country. He never married.

Mr. Root died in New Haven on February 7, 1938, in his seventy-seventh year. With his death the city lost a figure long distinguished in its life, and the State a citizen of the rarest qualities. Many tributes were paid him for the value of his career and the inspiration of his example, and in bringing this record to a close the following quotation is made from the resolution adopted by the executive committee in behalf of the board of directors and employes of the New Haven Clock Company:

> With profound sorrow we are called upon to record the death . . . of Edwin P. Root . . . a member of our Board of Directors. He has been identified with and rendered loyal service to our company for three score and three years. He entered this plant as a lad of fourteen in 1875. His merit and useful service won him successive promotions, until in 1923 he succeeded the late Walter Camp as president of the Corporation. . . .
> The affairs of our Company always received his first and loyal consideration. He was continually aware of his responsibilities to this business and was ceaseless in his efforts to consult with its personnel, forward its interests, and to maintain its honorable name. . . . Throughout his busy life he found time for unselfish public service of many kinds. . . . His was a long, active, useful and inspirational life. We, his intimate associates and fellow workers for many years, extend our condolences to his family, and in testimony of our high regard and deep affection, these minutes are inscribed in his memory on our records.

PHILIP H. ENGLISH—As treasurer of the New Haven Clock Company, Philip H. English continues in the third generation the association of his family with one of New England's principal industries. He is a grandson of the founder of the company and has devoted the greater part of his career to its service.

Mr. English was born in this city on January 31, 1893, a son of Henry Fowler and Alice N. (Kimball) English, and a descendant of the old New England family founded at Salem, Massachusetts, by Clement English during the seventeenth century. Benjamin English, son of the American progenitor, was born in 1676, and at the age of twenty-five, settled in New Haven, where his descendants have since made their home. James Edward English, grandfather of Philip H. English, was born in New Haven, on March 13, 1812. After early experience in the lumber industry and as a ship builder and operator, he began the manufacture of clocks in association with Hiram Camp and Harmanus M. Welch. Out of their association came the New Haven Clock Company, which has been developed under capable leadership into one of the great industries of the country. James Edward English had other important business connections, was a generous benefactor of his native city and its institutions, and from 1867 to 1869 was Governor of the Commonwealth. His son, Henry Fowler English, a graduate of Sheffield Scientific School and Yale Law School, continued the traditions of business prominence and civic leadership long associated in New Haven with the family name. His wife, Alice N. (Kimball) English, came of a Boston family. She died in July, 1936.

Philip H. English received his preliminary education in Hopkins Grammar School and Phillips Academy, at Andover, Massachusetts, from which he was graduated in 1911. From that institution he went on to Yale University, where he pursued the classical course leading to the degree of Bachelor of Arts, which was conferred upon him in 1915. In the same year he entered the employ of the Acme Wire Company, launching upon his business career. Through his enlistment as a private in Company F, Second Regiment, Connecticut National Guard, he was summoned to the Mexican border for service in 1916, during the disturbances of that year. He was promoted successively to the rank of corporal and sergeant, and when the United States entered the World War, he continued to serve in the National Army. Commissioned first lieutenant, he was attached to the 102nd Infantry and served with this regiment in Company F, Company C, Company M, and with Headquarters, 26th Division, American Expeditionary Forces. In September, 1917, he went to France with the American Expeditionary Forces, where he saw action in the Toul sector, at St. Mihiel and Chateau Thierry, and in the Meuse-Argonne offensive, which brought the war to a close. He spent nineteen months in France altogether, returning to New Haven after the Armistice. For several years, however, he continued to be active in military affairs. In 1920, he was recommissioned second lieutenant of Company A, 169th Infantry, and a year later was promoted to first lieutenant. In 1922, he was advanced to the rank of captain of his company and held that commission until 1923, when he resigned.

Meanwhile, Mr. English had resumed his career in civil life. After his return from the war, he joined the New Haven Clock Company, in 1919, and was employed for a time in the production department, where he familiarized himself with the technical operations of the company. Gradually, after sufficient training, he assumed broader responsibilities and in 1921 was elected secretary and director of the company founded by his grandfather. In 1930, he also assumed the office of treasurer, administering both until 1937, when he retired as secretary, confining his attention thereafter to his duties as treasurer. In seventeen years of service as one of the company's principal executives, he has taken an active part in its management, bringing to the counsels of the company his characteristic energy and soundness of judgment.

Despite the pressure of his business duties, Mr. English has also found time to participate in New Haven's civic life. He was a member of the Board of Education for eight years, from 1924 to 1932; has served since 1938 as a member of the New Haven Public Library Board; and has lent effective support to many valuable community causes. He has been particularly interested in the Boy Scout movement and as an executive of the New Haven Council, has been in charge of winter and summer camping activities of the city Boy Scout troops. Mr. English is a member of the New Haven Rotary Club, the Graduates Club, the New Haven Country Club, the New Haven Lawn Club and the Quinnipiack Club.

He married, on June 18, 1921, Katharine T. Dana, of Lawrence, Long Island. Mr. and Mrs. English have two sons: 1. James Dana, born March 15, 1933. 2. Richard Locke, born March 5, 1934.

JOHN D. McWILLIAMS—The Peck-McWilliams Company, of Norwich, is well known in the buildng field in Connecticut as one of its oldest and outstanding firms. The company was established n 1889 by the father of the John D. McWilliams of this record, John McWilliams and Henry G. Peck. The older man had come to the United States as a youth from his native Ireland and served a long apprenticeship in the contract construction business before he formed the partnership of almost half a century ago. He was the head of the company until his death in 1924.

John D. McWilliams, born in Norwich, July 23, 891, son of John and Elizabeth Ann (McClure) McWilliams, the latter a native of Connecticut. The on was given the advantages of a good education, and he had been graduated from Mercersburg Academy, Pennsylvania, in 1910, before he became associated in business with his father. In the good old-fashioned way he had to learn the business from the bottom up, serving in all sorts of capacities before taking his place as an executive of the firm. Since 1930, he has been president of the Peck-McWilliams Company, which has erected a number of notable buildings, such as the Community Church, at Storrs College, and the Norwich Free Academy, besides a very large number of homes, stores and public structures.

Mr. McWilliams is not only well known in the Norwich section for his business and executive abilities, but also for his keen interest in civic, military and fraternal affairs. His career was interrupted by the World War, when in May, 1917, he enlisted in the 20th Engineers' of the United States Army. He was overseas with the American Expeditionary Forces for seventeen months, and not until the fall of 1919 was he given his honorable discharge and returned to civilian activities. Mr. McWilliams is first vice-commander of the Connecticut American Legion, a first selectman of the Town of Norwich, and fraternally is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons. He is a member of the board of directors of the Thames Bank and Trust Company, and of the Maplewood Cemetery Association.

On August 28, 1919, John D. McWilliams married Ethel V. McClafferty, and they have a daughter, Ann, born April 15, 1922.

HERBERT MORGAN LEROU—Ably representing the pharmaceutical profession in Norwich, Herbert Morgan Lerou has in many ways usefully served his fellow citizens here. Recognized as a leader in the ranks of pharmacists, he was elected president of the National Association of Boards of Pharmacy in August, 1928. Formerly he also served Norwich as mayor, and today he continues to take a lively and helpful interest in the life of his town.

Mr. Lerou was born March 23, 1871, in East Haddam, Connecticut, son of Evans M. and Elizabeth (Evans) Lerou. His father was a native Frenchman, and received his early education in Paris, France. Coming to the United States in young manhood, Evans M. Lerou became a silversmith, settling in East Haddam, Connecticut, as foreman in a leading silver manufacturing establishment and there remaining until his death in 1881. His wife, Herbert M. Lerou's mother, was born in Swansea, South Wales. The Lerous had four children.

One of the four was Herbert Morgan Lerou, who studied in the schools of Meriden. After completing his high school work, he was employed as a clerk in the drug store of John R. Briggs, in Meriden, studying pharmacy there while carrying on his work in that city. Next he became associated with C. A. Pelton, a druggist of Middletown, Connecticut, with whom he remained for several years. There he continued his studies, passing the examinations of the State Board of Pharmacy in 1894, and being listed as a registered pharmacist. Settling then in Springfield, Massachusetts, he was for eight years pharmacist with the N. F. Wheeler Company. Rising high in his profession, he improved every opportunity, accumulated some capital and came to Norwich in 1902.

Here he opened his own drug store in the West End of Norwich, where he stayed until, in 1910, he opened a second store at No. 289 Main Street. Eventually he sold his first establishment though for some time he conducted both stores. Not only did he demonstrate his skill as a pharmacist and the pleasing character of his personality, which brought him an ever-growing clientele, but he made a point of personally supervising all the important work undertaken in his store. At the same time he concerned himself with the general business life of Norwich, becoming one of the incorporators of the Chelsea Savings Bank and a director of the Uncas-Merchants National Bank, and long enjoying an enviable reputation as a business man and a citizen.

His business connections brought him gradually into contact with the people of Norwich in such a way that he became also interested in the community's political life. Seeking to advance the general good, Mr. Lerou aligned himself with the Republican Party, and in 1905, was elected to represent his ward in the Common Council. In 1906, he was elected registrar, and in 1910, he was chosen a member of the City Board of Education, of which he was secretary for two years. His high standing as a pharmacist brought him appointment at the hands of Governor Holcomb, on February 21, 1917, as a member of the Connecticut State Board of Pharmacy for a five-year term. His election as mayor of Norwich took place on June 7, 1920, in a closely contested battle that brought Mr. Lerou victory by one vote. He has also served on the Police Commission.

In addition to all his other activities, Mr. Lerou is a trustee of Maplewood Cemetery and an incorporator of the Masonic Temple Corporation, of Norwich. In the year 1923-24, he was president of the Norwich Chamber of Commerce. He is a member of the Rotary Club and the Arcanum Club, in Norwich, as well as of the Connecticut State Pharmaceutical Association, and is vice-president of the Norwich Building and Loan Association. He is a member of the United Congregational Church, in Norwich. Active in the Free and Accepted Masons, he is a member and treasurer of Somerset Lodge and a member of Franklin Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, Franklin Council of Royal and Select Masters, Columbian Commandery of Knights Templar, Norwich Consistory of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite and Sphinx Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and holds the degrees of King Solomon Lodge of Perfection, Van Rensselaer Council of the Princes of Jerusalem, Norwich Chapter of Rose Croix, and Connecticut Consistory of Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret. In September, 1929, in Dayton, Ohio, he was nominated for the thirty-third degree.

Herbert Morgan Lerou married (first), February 7, 1895, Bertha B. Carroll, daughter of Charles and Emily (Rathbun) Carroll, of Norwich. She died in Springfield, Massachusetts, March 2, 1902, leaving two children, of whom one, Edna Evans, now survives. Mr. Lerou married (second), March 24, 1908, Mary S. Tourtelotte, daughter of James Newton and Harriet (Clark) Tourtelotte, of Norwich. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lerou are members of the Congregational Church.

ARCHIBALD MITCHELL—As treasurer of the Porteous-Mitchell Company, Incorporated, Norwich's very well known dry goods establishment, Archibald Mitchell, 4th, is active in the management of an organization with which he has been associated for almost forty years. He is one of the leaders in the city's business life.

Mr. Mitchell was born in St. Andrews, Scotland, on February 19, 1881, son of Andrew and Mary (High) Mitchell and grandson of Archibald Mitchell, a builder at Cupar, Scotland. His father, who was born at Cupar, was also associated with the family building business there.

Archibald Mitchell, 4th, was educated in the public schools of St. Andrews and after completing the high school course attended Madras College, a large institution of higher education in the same community. As a youth in Scotland he served his apprenticeship in the dry goods business and at the age of twenty emigrated to the United States. Coming directly to Norwich, he secured a place in the Porteous-Mitchell store, of which his uncle, Archibald Mitchell, was one of the founders. Employed at first in minor capacities, he rose gradually within the organization as he demonstrated his qualifications for larger responsibilities and worked in all departments of the business. In 1906, the Porteous-Mitchell Company was incorporated and a number of years later Mr. Mitchell was elected a director of the corporation. In 1925, he became treasurer of the firm and has since continued in this office. His long experience and sound judgment have been continuously valuable to the organization, and his counsel is a major factor in its management.

J. Harold Root

Mr. Mitchell is also a director of the Dime Savings Bank. He is an incorporator of the Norwich Free Academy and has been active from time to time in various civic connections. He has been especially interested in the Young Men's Christian Association and is now honorary vice-president of the Norwich organization. Although he has remained by preference in private life, his influence is important in the community and is widely recognized by its people as a wholesome and constructive force. Mr. Mitchell is a member of the United Congregational Church and of the Norwich Golf Club, where he enjoys his favorite recreation.

He married, at Norwich, in 1920, Helen C. Hamilton, daughter of George W. and Antoinette (Cole) Hamilton.

VIRTUME P. A. QUINN—In Versailles, the Quinns have long been identified with the best interests of the place. Both have taken valuable parts in the social, civic and political circles, the older man as a merchant, the younger, Virtume P. A. Quinn, of this record, as a lawyer and public official.

Mr. Quinn was born in Norwich, Connecticut, December 16, 1888, son of John and Julia (Peloquin) Quinn. His father is a native of Moosup, this State, while the mother was born in Canada. The older man is a retired merchant of Versailles, and a former Selectman. He was a representative of his district in the Connecticut General Assembly; for twenty years was the postmaster; and for a time was chairman of the Republican Town Committee. During more recent years he served on the Board of Relief, and is a popular figure in the town.

Virtume P. A. Quinn was educated in the grammar schools of his birthplace, the Norwich Free Academy, and then entered the University of Maryland, from which he was graduated in 1912, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. He was associated in Norwich with the late Amos A. Browning until 1917, when his partner died. Since that date Mr. Quinn has practiced independently with marked success. As indicated, he is prominent in politics and civic affairs of Sprague. He is prosecuting attorney and counsel for the Town of Sprague and, before that, had been town counsel for Ledyard and Lisbon. Mr. Quinn is a member of the Connecticut State Bar Association and the American Bar Association. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus. He is of the Roman Catholic faith.

At Baltic, Connecticut, June 30, 1913, Virtume P. A. Quinn, married Mary V. Roy, and they are the parents of five children: 1. Maureen V., a teacher in Griswold High School. 2. Genevieve C., connected with Diocesan Social Service. 3. John V., a student in France. 4. Irene D. 5. Francis J.

JAMES HAROLD ROOT, M.D.—A resident of Waterbury and for years one of the community's leading professional men, Dr. James H. (J. Harold) Root occupies a position of leadership and standing in medical circles, notably in his specialty, which is pediatrics.

Dr. Root was born April 1, 1893, in Waterbury, Connecticut, son of Samuel and Mary (Stone) Root. His father came from Pennsylvania in the early eighties of the last century and was a manufacturer of knives until his retirement from that industry. After his retirement he became active in the direction of a number of private real estate transactions.

The public schools of Waterbury furnished James Harold Root's early education. When he was graduated from the Taft School, he entered Sheffield Scientific School at Yale University, taking the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy in 1914. At Harvard Medical School, in Cambridge, Massachusetts, he received the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1918. There followed a period of interneship at Boston City Hospital, interrupted by the World War. On October 1, 1918, Dr. Root enlisted in the United States Army Medical Corps, holding the rank of first lieutenant while in the military, and he was formally discharged from the service on December 21 of the same year after the signing of the armistice. He then resumed his professional activities, serving further as an interne, but this time at Johns Hopkins Hospital, in Baltimore, Maryland, where he undertook his pediatric work in 1919. Later in that same year he started the practice of medicine in Waterbury, here specializing in pediatrics. Many children have come to know and love him as a result of his careful handling of their cases and his understanding of the child temperament. He is now attending pediatrician at Waterbury Hospital and consulting pediatrician at Torrington Hospital. In 1935 and 1936 he was president of the staff of Waterbury Hospital.

For years he has maintained close relationships with the different societies of his profession. In the Waterbury Medical Society he was president in 1938. He also belongs to the New Haven County Medical Society and the Connecticut State Medical Society, and is a Fellow of the American Medical Association and the American College of Physicians. He also belongs to the Hezekiah Beardsley Club, of Connecticut, a pediatric organization, of which he was president 1937-38, and is a Fellow of the American Academy of Pediatrics. In his political views he is a staunch Republican. He belongs to both the Free and Accepted Masons and the Waterbury Club.

Dr. James Harold Root married, in June, 1915, Charlotte Louise Cowles, daughter of Charles A. and Louise (Terry) Cowles, of Ansonia, Connecticut. One son, James Harold Root, Jr., was born of this marriage. The Root family residence is situated at No. 22 Fleming Street, Waterbury.

CHARLES A. GAGER—During more than thirty years of service to the Norwich community, Charles A Gager has been one of the leading undertakers and funeral directors of the city. He is widely known not only in business circles of this section but in fraternal and civic life and has always demonstrated the qualities of progressive citizenship which are among the finest assets of any community.

Mr. Gager was born in Bozrah, near Norwich, on July 4, 1876, a son of Charles A. and Harriet M. (Fargo) Gager. His father, born on the old Gager homestead at Bozrah, on June 15, 1837, was a farmer there until his retirement in 1906, when he moved to Norwich. The mother, Harriet M. Fargo, was born in Montville and died at Norwich on September 24, 1920.

Charles A. Gager was one of five children in this family. He was educated in the public schools of his birthplace and remained on the home farm until he was twenty-one years old, at which time he entered the employ of the Henry Allen and Son Company, leading undertakers of Norwich. With this firm he served a thorough apprenticeship in his profession and continued the connection for a period of six years. At the end of this time he successfully passed the State Board examinations on March 1, 1905, and established himself as a funeral director in the Bulletin Building, on Franklin Street, Norwich. Mr. Gager quickly established his reputation in the field and built up a substantial business, based on the excellent standards of service which he maintained and on the sympathy and tact with which he performed the duties devolving upon him. He has always employed the most modern equipment in his work and has kept in advance, rather than merely abreast of the times; as for example, when he obtained and put in service the first motor-driven hearse in the city. In August, 1938, after thirty-three years in business at his original location, he moved into his new Funeral Home at 108 Broadway, Norwich, one of the finest undertaking establishments in the State. It is one of the business institutions of the city which reflects great credit upon the community and accurately indicates Mr. Gager's position as a leading undertaker of the Norwich section.

Mr. Gager is a member of the Funeral Directors' Association of Connecticut and of many non-professional bodies, including the Norwich Rotary Club, the Circus Fans Association of America; Norwich Grange, of which he is a charter member and with which he has been affiliated for over thirty years; Norwich Lodge, No. 430, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Shetucket Lodge, No. 16, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; the Masonic order and others. He is very active in Masonry, being a member of Somerset Lodge, No. 34, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and of all higher bodies of both York and Scottish Rites, including Franklin Chapter, No. 3, Royal Arch Masons; Franklin Council, No. 4, Royal and Select Masters; Columbian Commandery, Knights Templar, at Norwich; King Solomon Lodge of Perfection; Van Rensselaer Council, Princes of Jerusalem; Norwich Chapter of Rose Croix; Connecticut Consistory, thirty-second degree, Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret; and Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Hartford. Mr. Gager is an independent in politics and has never neglected the duties of good citizenship, despite the pressure of his other interests. He is fond of outdoor life and sports, finding recreation in fishing and in the operation of his fine 200-acre farm in Montville, where he raises thoroughbred cattle.

On December 17, 1906, at Norwich, Charles A. Gager married Mira L. Rallion, daughter of Herman and Emma D. (Crocker) Rallion, of Norwich. Her father was an old-time grocer in this city. Mr. and Mrs. Gager attend the Universalist Church.

ALBERT JABEZ BAILEY—Making a notable contribution to the profession of law in Norwich, Albert Jabez Bailey has also figured prominently n the public life of his community and district, erving in important offices in New London County nd this region of Connecticut.

Mr. Bailey was born July 1, 1882, in Bozrah, Connecticut, son of Jabez Hough and Fannie E. Spicer) Bailey. Jabez Hough Bailey was a native of this State and Mrs. Bailey was a native of Hyde Park, Vermont. In early life his father devoted ttention to farming and teaming, afterward becom-ng a Government employee and so continuing for wenty-eight years, acting as rural mail carrier until is retirement.

The public schools of his native place provided Albert Jabez Bailey's earliest formal education, and ater he became a student at Norwich Free Academy, hen at Yale Law School, where he was gradu-ted in 1906 with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. n June of that year he was admitted to the bar f this State, whereupon he began his practice in Norwich. For a few years he was a partner in he firm of Foss and Bailey, but then he decided to ollow an independent course in his profession. His chievements caused him to be widely known in is profession, and his strong and logical argument, is forceful presentation and his powers of deduc-on rendered him a good court lawyer. His devo-on to his clients' interests has brought him the espect and affection of all who know him, and his osition is one of true leadership and standing.

In his public relationships he has done much for Norwich and this State. In 1914 he was elected to ie Connecticut State Legislature, and in 1916 he as re-elected. In his first year of service he was member of the committee on cities and boroughs, id in his second term he served on the judiciary ommittee. In the fall of 1916 he was elected a iember of the State Central Committee of the epublican Party for the Nineteenth District and as served continuously to date. In 1915 he was amed clerk of the Norwich City Court, so serv-ig until 1926. In January of that year he was ap-ointed compensation commissioner for the Second istrict of Connecticut. Beginning in 1923, and con-nuing until 1925, Mr. Bailey served as assistant erk of bills in the Legislature for both the Lower ouse and the Senate, and since 1924 he has served s treasurer of New London County. He is not ly one of the outstanding Republican workers in e State, but his consideration of the general wel-re has been always uppermost in his mind. He , among his other duties, assistant registrar of oters in Norwich. Fraternally he is connected with e Free and Accepted Masons and Calhoun Chapter of the Phi Alpha Delta Society. He is a member and was formerly president of the Arcanum Club, in Norwich.

On October 10, 1914, Albert Jabez Bailey married, in New York City, Mrs. Leila (Bishop) Chivers, who had a son, Paul V. Chivers, of a former marriage. Mrs. Bailey died August 3, 1933. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey were the parents of two children, both daughters, Natalie and Janet.

ARTHUR E. STORY—As secretary-treasurer and a director of the Chelsea Savings Bank, of Norwich, Arthur E. Story performs a work of value and distinction in his community.

Mr. Story was born in Norwich, son of Arthur L. and Mercy Louise (Palmer) Story. His father, also a native of Norwich, was for years deputy sheriff of New London County, and at the time of his death was assistant superintendent of the Connecticut State Police.

Receiving his preliminary education at Norwich Free Academy, Arthur E. Story later became a student at Harvard University, in Cambridge, Massachusetts. He began his career in banking after completing his work at Harvard, spending two years with the Merchants' National Bank as a clerk and afterward becoming assistant cashier. He associated himself, in 1923, with the Chelsea Savings Bank, in the capacity of assistant secretary and treasurer, being elevated to the rank of secretary and treasurer in 1934 and also being given a directorship in the bank.

His service in Norwich has been a many-sided one, rich in value to the community. Formerly, he served as city clerk, as a member of the Board of Water Commissioners and as a member of the Board of Gas and Light Commissioners. He was a Presidential Elector for Connecticut, and, as such, helped to elect President Franklin D. Roosevelt. He is a trustee of Norwich State Hospital, president of the Fort Griswold-Groton Monument Commission, an honorary member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and of the Spanish War Veterans.

Mr. Story belongs to the Harvard Club of Connecticut. He also is treasurer of the Salvation Army and the Boy Scout organizations in Norwich, and is national treasurer of American Youth Hostels, Incorporated, of America. In the Free and Accepted Masons he has many affiliations, being a member of St. James' Lodge, of Norwich; Franklin Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Columbian Commandery, Knights Templar; different bodies of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, in which he holds the thirty-second degree; and Sphinx Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He also belongs to the Arcanum Club, of Norwich. He is a trustee of Park Congregational Church, in Norwich.

In Norwich, Connecticut, in 1906, Arthur E. Story married Helen Melissa Kies, daughter of the late George A. and Jennie M. (Palmer) Kies. Her father was prominent in Masonry, having been at one time Grand Commander of the Masonic Lodge of Connecticut and at the time of his death Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge.

WILLIAM H. OAT—As secretary and manager of the Bulletin Company, publishers of the Norwich "Bulletin," William H. Oat occupies a position of leadership in the journalism of Eastern Connecticut. He has, through his journalistic and other activities, exerted a large influence upon the life of his community, his district and his times.

Mr. Oat was born February 23, 1867, in New London, Connecticut, son of Lewis and Jane M. (Colby) Oat and descendant of an old and honorable family. His father was a soldier of the Union during the War Between the States and a leading contractor of New London County.

Attending schools of New London and Norwich, William H. Oat entered the employ, in April, 1884, of the Norwich "Bulletin" in the capacity of mailing clerk. From that position he rose through the different departments and grades of service in the newspaper plant until he was given positions of outstanding responsibility in the organization. Proving himself among the most capable executives in the Bulletin Company, he has served for some years as its secretary and manager, so helping to carry forward one of the oldest newspapers in America. The "Bulletin" was founded in 1790. It is now one of the six morning newspapers published daily in the State. In its political allegiance it supports the Republican Party and its policies, and Mr. Oat's own partisan affiliation is with the same party.

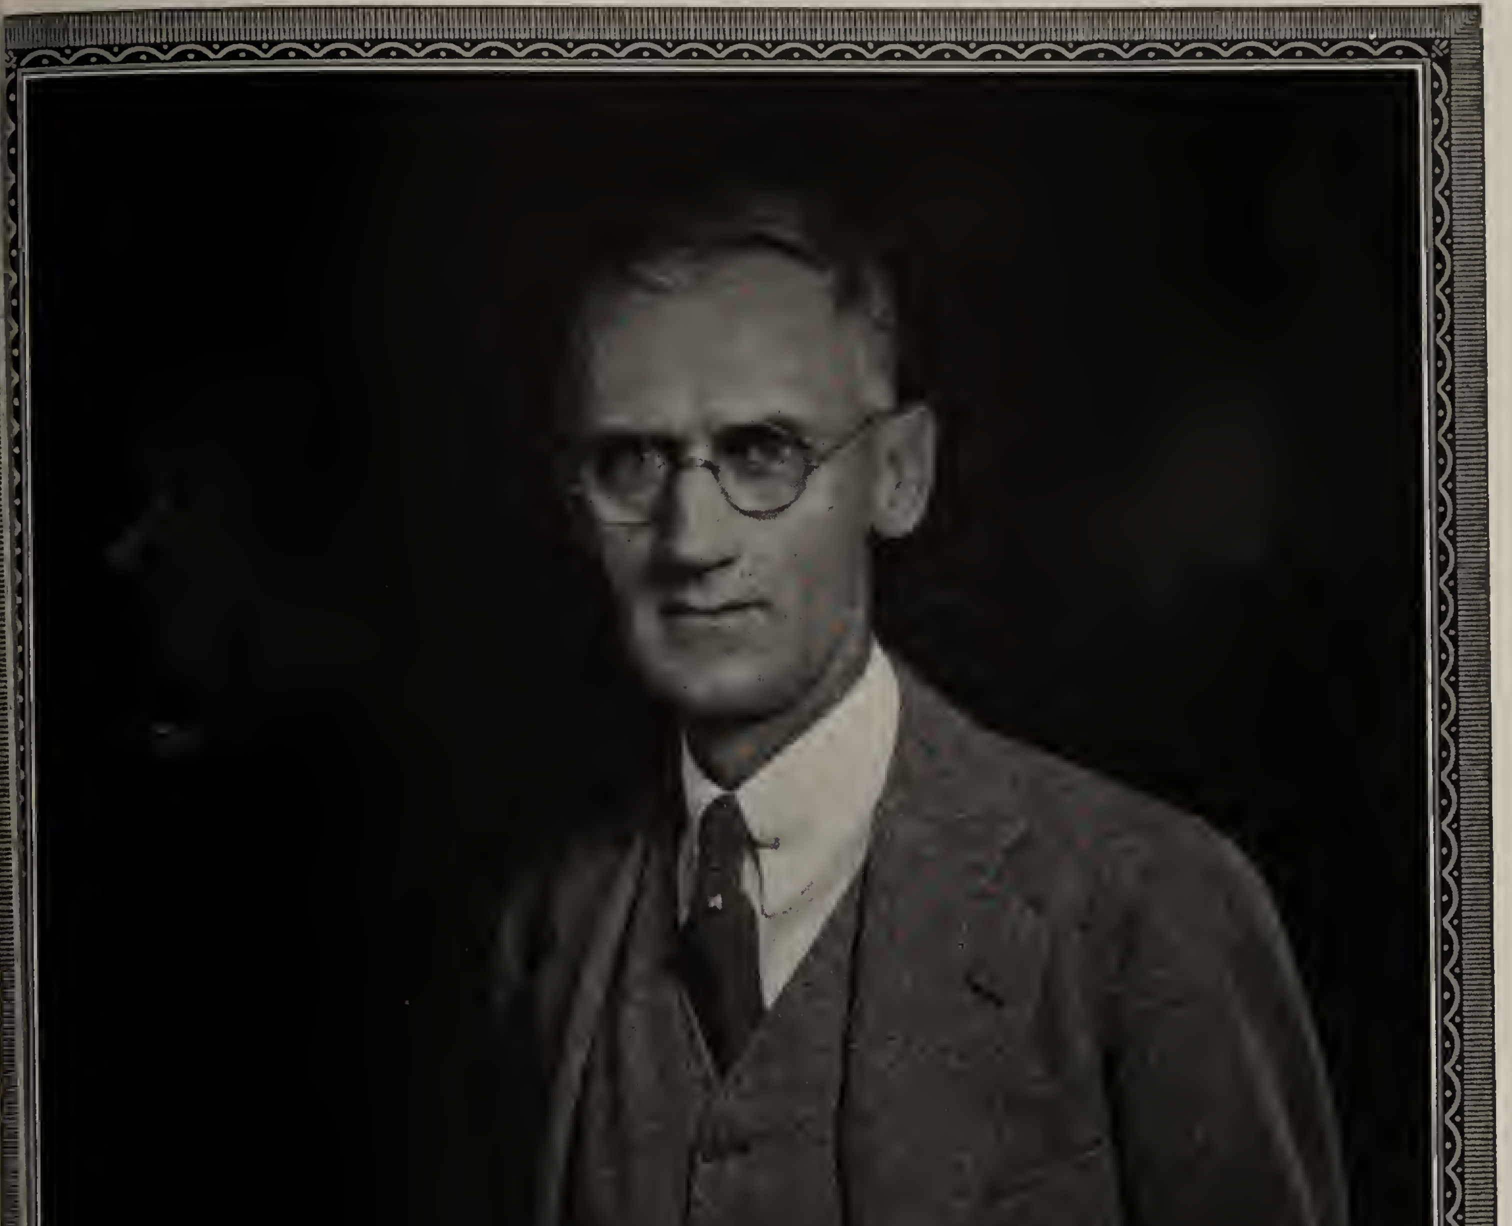
In addition to all his other activities, Mr. Oat is a member of the corporation of the Chelsea Savings Bank and a director of the Thames Bank and Trust Company. He is also active in many local civic groups. Fraternally, he is connected with the Free and Accepted Masons, holding the thirty-second degree of Scottish Rite Masonry; also is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in which he is a life member of Norwich Lodge. He is chiefly known and active as a newspaper man, however. In 1927 the Bulletin Company acquired the Norwich "Evening Record," which has shown a rapid growth under Mr. Oat's management.

THOMAS FRANCIS SCANLON, M.D., F.A.C.S.—Specializing in the treatment of eye and ear ailments, Dr. Thomas Francis Scanlon is one of Norwalk's respected and honored medical men.

Dr. Scanlon was born September 21, 1883, in Stamford, Connecticut, son of Michael and Mary (Toohey) Scanlon. His father was a native of Ireland, who died when Dr. Scanlon was only three years of age. He was a florist, and was for years in charge of the Leavitt estate in Stamford. He and Mary (Toohey) Scanlon were the parents of four children, two of whom lived to maturity—Thomas Francis and Celia Scanlon. Celia Scanlon became the wife of Dr. Francis A. Haughney, of New York City.

At the Stamford Grammar School, Thomas Francis Scanlon received his early education. He was graduated from high school in that city in 1903, and four years later took the degree of Doctor of Medicine at Yale Medical College. He spent the year 1907-08 at St. Vincent's Hospital, Bridgeport. Subsequently removing to Georgetown, he there carried on his professional practice for twelve years, spending the first eight of those years in general work. He then took up post-graduate studies at the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital, where for three years he was on the clinical staff. He next opened an office in Bridgeport, where he specialized in eye, ear, nose and throat, and 1919 he became a resident of Norwalk, here centering his medical work while continuing his office in Bridgeport. His success in his profession has been noteworthy and well merited, not only as a private practitioner, but as a hospital worker. He was a member of the staff of St. Vincent's Hospital, serving as assistant to Dr. Curran in nose and throat work, and was also assistant at the eye clinic with Dr. Dorlan Smith. Since 1920, he has been connected with the eye department of the Norwalk Hospital, acting most of this time as chief, his present office, and here he does all his surgical work in his speciality.

His affiliations with different organizations indicate Dr. Scanlon's position of leadership in his profession, as well as in civic and social life. He is a member of the Norwalk Medical Association and the Bridgeport Medical Society, and is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons and was a charter member of the Bridgeport Kiwanis Club. Outdoor sports, golf particularly, are his principal recreations and he is a member of the Westport Golf and



Thomas F. Scanlon M.D.

Country Club and has served as chairman of the Club's sports committee since 1927. He is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Woodmen of the World, his connections in these two fraternities being with the Georgetown branches. He is a fourth degree Knight of Columbus, Bishop Fenwick Assembly, and member of the Catholic Union Council, No. 46, of Norwalk. Every activity with which he has associated himself has in some way been eminently successful, and his labors have been productive of beneficial results on a vast scale.

Dr. Thomas Francis Scanlon married Josephine Reynolds, March, 1906, daughter of Stephen Reynolds, of New Haven, and a descendant of one of the early and prominent families of Connecticut. The grandfather of Mrs. Scanlon, on the paternal side of her house, was a veteran of the Civil War, and his name appears among those of the officers on the Soldiers' Monument in East Rock. Dr. and Mrs. Scanlon are the parents of three children, a daughter and two sons: 1. Constance Frances, born October 17, 1907. 2. Dr. Jack Scanlon, born May 30, 1910. 3. Thomas Francis, Jr., born July 7, 1914.

F. RUSSELL SMITH—Since 1922, F. Russell Smith has owned and operated the Troy Laundry, of Norwich, an institution serving the entire Norwich area and one of the largest enterprises of its kind in the State. Mr. Smith is well known in the business life of Norwich and for many years has been one of its most active civic leaders.

Born in this city on July 3, 1894, Mr. Smith is a son of the late Frank Hamilton and Maude (Richmond) Smith, who is still living. His father, who was born in Franklin, Connecticut, was the owner of J. P. Barstow and Company, in Norwich. He was prominent in the Republican Party, although he never aspired to any office, and was a thirty-second degree Mason.

F. Russell Smith received his preliminary education in the local public schools and at Norwich Free Academy. Upon his graduation from the latter institution in 1912, he went on to Brown University, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy in 1916. In the same year he began his active career with Benjamin Moore and Company, paint manufacturers, of Chicago. He remained in this connection for some six months, working in the various departments of the business, after which he enlisted in the American Ambulance Corps in 1917, went overseas in quick order and was attached to the French Army during the offensive at Verdun. Later, in 1917, he joined the American Expeditionary Forces in France, was gassed while at the front and was confined to a hospital from October, 1918, until November, 1919. He served at Soissons, in the Second Battle of the Marne, and in the Aisne Defensive, and after the period of his hospitalization was over, he was again assigned to active duty, serving in Germany until March, 1919. He was decorated with the French Croix de Guerre for exceptionally meritorious service, and received the American and French service medals. On April 15, 1919, he was honorably discharged at Camp Mills, New Jersey, and returned to the pursuits of civil life.

Resuming his interests in Norwich, Mr. Smith became a partner in J. B. Barstow and Company, continuing as such until September, 1922. At that time he purchased the Troy Laundry, which has since been under his ownership and control. The large business of this enterprise requires some sixty-five employes in its various branches and is a reflection both of the high standards characterizing its service and of the extent of the business. It has developed strongly under Mr. Smith's leadership.

Mr. Smith is also a director of the Thames Bank and Trust Company, of Norwich, and of the Gardner Hall, Jr., Company, of South Willington, in Tolland County. He has been conspicuous for many years in the Norwich Chamber of Commerce and was formerly its president. He has also been active in the Rotary Club, of which he is vice-president, and in other local organizations, including the Norwich Golf Club, of which he is past president. Mr. Smith is a member of the American Legion, the Norwich Lodge of Elks, and the Free and Accepted Masons. He is prominent in the latter order, being affiliated with Somerset Lodge, at Norwich, and all higher bodies of the Scottish Rite, up to and including the thirty-second degree of the Consistory. Mr. Smith is also affiliated with the Psi Upsilon fraternity at Brown University. He served for six years as a member of the Norwich City Council, to whose deliberations he brought sound standards of business judgment coupled with a progressive outlook. Both in public office and private life he has strongly supported the cause of civic progress and has given effective aid to many community movements in the public interest. Mr. Smith is a member of Park Congregational Church.

He married, on November 23, 1922, at South Willington, Clara Hall, daughter of the late Colonel William H. Hall, of that place, and Alice (Holman) Hall. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are the parents of three children, all born in Norwich: 1. Richmond Hall, born September 1, 1923. 2. Holman Hall, born August 14, 1925. 3. Robert Russell.

HENRY A. TIRRELL—As principal of Norwich Free Academy, Henry A. Tirrell has performed a work of importance and value in his community, and both the City of Norwich and the eastern district of Connecticut have been substantial gainers from his undertakings.

Mr. Tirrell was born August 7, 1873, at South Chatham, Massachusetts, son of the Rev. Eben and Julia (Harding) Tirrell. His father, a clergyman of the Methodist faith, served his Church long and faithfully, and was among the Union volunteers during the Civil War. Both of the parents of Henry A. Tirrell were natives of Massachusetts.

Obtaining his early education in the schools of the different towns where his father was pastor, Henry A. Tirrell was graduated from Norwich Free Academy, in Norwich, in 1890. He then attended Wesleyan University, which conferred upon him the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1894. In that same year he was appointed to the faculty of Pennington Seminary, at Pennington, New Jersey, there remaining for two years. In 1896, he came to the faculty of Norwich Free Academy, where he taught until 1899, when he went to the University of Chicago for a year of study. In 1903, he was elected principal of Norwich Free Academy, the position in which he continues to serve.

He is now recognized as one of the foremost educators of eastern Connecticut. He has been continuously connected with this one school, with the exception of one year, since 1896, and his guidance and influence have been dominant factors in the development of the institution. His strength of character, his broad understanding of the student mind, his tolerance of spirit and his other splendid qualities have contributed notably to his success in educational work, and his accomplishments have brought prestige to the school itself. He has also generously given of his time and thought to the general problems and aims of education, belonging to such organizations as the Headmasters' Association, and having served on the State Board of Education. In 1910, Trinity College, at Hartford, conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts in recognition of his many worth while attainments, and he has received numerous evidences of appreciation in the form of professional honors.

Mr. Tirrell says that nothing in his career has given him such satisfaction as the payment of the amount expended on his education by his father, who gladly bore the burden of this necessary financing. There were other sons in the family, and when Mr. Tirrel, who was the eldest, began teaching, he repaid this money in order to start another son on his course through college. In addition to his valuable educational work, Mr. Tirrell is active in the business life of his community as a director of the Norwich Savings Society and the Thames Bank and Trust Company. He is a corporator and trustee of Norwich Free Academy. Formerly he was a member of the Board of Park Commissioners here and a member of the State Public Library Commission. He is president of the board of managers of the William W. Backus Hospital, of Norwich; secretary of the Otis Library, of this city; and a member of the Arcanum Club, the Alpha Delta Phi college fraternity, and Park Congregational Church. He is a Republican in his political views.

In Chicago, Illinois, in 1899, Henry A. Tirrell married Agnes Helen Butler, of Chicago, Illinois, daughter of Jeremiah P. and Mary L. (Twohey) Butler. Mr. and Mrs. Tirrell became the parents of four children: 1. Mary Agnes. 2. Charles Henry. 3. Helen Butler. 4. William Harding.

CHARLES V. JAMES—Prominently identified with the legal fraternity of New London County for well over a quarter of a century, the activities of Charles V. James in connection with public life have been eminently constructive in their effects. He was Corporation Counsel for the city of Norwich from June, 1931, to June, 1938.

Mr. James was born in Norwich, May 18, 1884, son of Charles D. and Catherine (Kelley) James. His father, long engaged in mercantile pursuits, was a native of Voluntown, Connecticut, and died in Norwich, in 1903. The mother lived to the last day of January, 1936. The formal education of Charles V. James, begun in local schools, was completed in Norwich Free Academy. Entering the Yale University Law School, he was graduated in 1910 a Bachelor of Laws, and that same year he was admitted to the bar. He returned to Norwich from Yale to establish himself in a general practice of his profession and has so continued with marked success. From 1911 until 1915, Mr. James was a partner of the late Hon. Charles F. Thayer, and from 1915 to the present, 1938, has been a partner of the Hon. Arthur M. Brown.

Interested in civic affairs, Mr. James has always been to the fore in promoting or supporting movements that make for the general good of the city and its people. He became town counsel of Norwich, and, as indicated, has been Corporation Counsel for the city of Norwich since 1931, and has achieved results that have won him wide-spread reputation. Mr. James is a director of the Thomas Bank and Trust Company, a member of the corporation of the Dime Savings Bank, and also of the Chelsea Savings Bank, an incorporator of the William W. Backus Hospital, and a trustee of the Otis Library. His club, fraternity and other affiliations are numerous.

In Norwich, Connecticut, on April 27, 1916, Charles V. James married Ruth Jordan, daughter of Alexander and Louise (Enos) Jordan. Her father is city treasurer of Norwich. Mr. and Mrs. James are the parents of three children: 1. Charles Jordan, born May 9, 1917. 2. Clementine E., born March 15, 1919. 3. David Alexander, born January 25, 1921.

REV. ALEXANDER FRANCIS MITCHELL—In his identification with the Catholic Church, the Rev. Alexander Francis Mitchell is noteworthy for his thorough preparation for his work and the especially constructive character of his achievements. He was born at Salem, New York, August 11, 1879, son of Francis and Mary (McQuillan) Mitchell. His father was a particularly skilled agriculturalist who at one ime was in charge of the James Howe Estate in Salem, and later was active in a similar capacity in Ridgefield, Connecticut, where he died in 1892. His wife survived to 1924; they were the parents of seven children.

Father Mitchell acquired his elementary education in the public schools of Salem, New York, and Ridgefield, Connecticut. At the beginning of the present century he was graduated from Niagara University, and then spent the following four years at Eichstatt, Bavaria, where he not only completed his heological studies, but added a knowledge of German o his accomplishments and was ordained in 1904. Returning to America he was appointed assistant o the pastor of Milford, Connecticut, under Moneigneur P. L. McLean, now pastor of St. Augustine's Church, Bridgeport. From 1906 to 1907, Father Mitchell was assistant to the Rev. Charles McElroy, t Derby, and then went to St. John's Church in Middletown as assistant to the Rev. James P. Donovan, D.D. In 1912, he was assigned to the Church of the Holy Trinity, Wallingford, Connecicut, to serve with the Rev. John Carroll, where he emained until 1918, when he was appointed pastor f St. Bernard's Church, Sharon, Connecticut. Two years later he went to Burnside, where he organized the parish of St. Rose, and continued until 1929 in the difficult task of establishing it on a sound basis. In 1929, he was called to the Church of the Blessed Sacrament at Bridgeport, and pursued his work until July 12, 1936, since when he has been pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Norwich. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Knights of Columbus, and always he has entered into community activities with a helpful and progressive interest. As priest and good citizen he has the esteem of all with whom he has come in contact.

REV. GEORGE JOSEPH DONAHUE—The pastor of St. Mary's Catholic Church, of Norwich, is not only widely known for his clerical activities, but for his literary attainments. He was born December 10, 1882, son of Daniel and Ellen (Phelan) Donahue, both of whom came from their native Ireland to America in 1860 and settled in Meriden, Connecticut.

His preparation for the priesthood began after he had attended St. Rose's Parochial School and entered St. Thomas' Seminary, at Hartford. In 1902, he went to the Seminary at St. Sulpice, Paris, France, where he spent four years. In 1907, he was ordained in St. Joseph's Cathedral, Hartford, and that same year was assigned to Stafford Springs, Connecticut. He served also the East Hartford and Bridgeport Churches as curate, his first pastorate being at Pomfret, to which he was called, in 1924, and remained with splendid results until 1930. Since this year he has been in Norwich, at St. Mary's which is the second largest church of Norwich.

Quoting almost verbatim from the "History of Eastern Connecticut":

> The Reverend George Joseph Donahue is well known in literary circles and has ever found great delight in the study of literature, while his authorship entitles him to distinction. He is the author of "Poetry of Massachusetts," and of "Books and Their Spiritual Value," now in its second edition. He is also the author of "Damien and Reform," a work on Cardinal Newman, and a book entitled "Letters to David." He is likewise widely known as a lecturer on literary subjects and his activities in this field have brought him extensive acquaintance and merited honors.

JOHN DYER POTTER—There are few phases of the life of Norwich with which John D. (J. Dyer) Potter has not been actively identified, and his business and social interests extend to other sections of New London County. He was born in Brooklyn, Connecticut, December 15, 1886, son of John G. and Gertrude Cecelia (Wills) Potter, his father being connected with agriculture and merchandising, and in public affairs was a member of the Connecticut House of Representatives from Hartford.

Mr. Potter was educated in the elementary schools of his birthplace, the Killingly High School, of Danielson, Connecticut, and the American Institute of Banking, Providence, Rhode Island. His business career includes: partner in a grocery, meat and grain store, Norwich; paymaster of the Quinebaug Mill, Danielson; assistant treasurer of the Brooklyn Savings Bank; treasurer of the Cargill Trust Company, and the Putnam Trust Company, of Putnam; vice-president of the Thames Bank and Trust Company of Norwich; and town clerk and town treasurer of Norwich, Connecticut. Experience and ability have combined to make him outstanding in any activity in which he is engaged.

In civic affairs, Mr. Potter has been a member of the School Committee, of Brooklyn, the School Board, of Putnam, Connecticut; and he is fraternally affiliated with Moriah Lodge, No. 15, of Danielson, Free and Accepted Masons; the Order of the Eastern Star, and the Grange, Patrons of Husbandry. During the World War he served in the United States Navy, and is a member and Past State Vice-Commander of the American Legion. His favorite recreation is golf, which he plays as a member of the Norwich Golf Club. He is of the Protestant Episcopal faith, a member of Christ Church, Norwich.

At Norwich, on April 22, 1908, John Dyer Potter married Mazie Helene Draper, daughter of George Sterry and Ella (Brewster) Draper, and they are the parents of two children: 1. John Dyer, Jr., born January 15, 1909. 2. Alma Brewster, born March 17, 1912.

NATHANIEL J. SCOTT—For many years recognized as one of Hartford's leading business men, Nathaniel J. Scott is manager of the Connecticut Company, operator of street cars in this region of Connecticut.

Mr. Scott was born April 23, 1876, in Scottsmore, Province of Quebec, Canada, son of George L. and Julia L. (Scoville) Scott, natives of Vermont and Canada, respectively. The father devoted his early life to farming and afterward was associated with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Attending public schools in his native district in Canada, Nathaniel J. Scott completed his high school studies and passed the examinations for entrance to McGill University, Montreal. He did not, however, resume his studies, but instead went to a French settlement to acquaint himself with the French language. Later he removed to Boston. In 1896, he came to Hartford as a complete stranger in the city, but, seeking employment, became a shipping clerk in the wholesale twine and paper house of P. Garvan and Company. It was not long, however, before he entered the employ of the Connecticut Company in July, 1896, as a street car conductor. For five years he served in that capacity. Then, in 1901, when the Wethersfield car house was built, Mr. Scott was assigned to duty as car house foreman. Later he was transferred to the State Street office of the company, doing similar work and also taking charge of crew dispatching. In 1906, he was promoted to chief dispatcher, the post that he filled for several years. Afterward he was made assistant superintendent and still later superintendent of transportation. In April, 1921, he was appointed manager, a position in which he has eminently served the company down to the time of writing. From his many steps along the way he has thoroughly familiarized himself with every branch of the business, so that his grasp of it is both broad and detailed in character.

In August, 1901, Nathaniel J. Scott married Grace L. Gallivan, of Hartford, Connecticut. They have a daughter, Dorothy A. (Scott) Willson, who has two children: i. Meredith S. Willson. ii. Scott Hemingway Willson.

In addition to all his other activities, Mr. Scott is connected with many organizations prominent in the Hartford district. He is a director of the Industrial Bank, Asylum Street, Hartford; a member of the City Club, the Oasis Club, the Rotary Club, and on the Board of Governors of the Hartford Canoe Club. Fishing is his chief hobby or diversion. He is a Republican in politics. Loyally adhering to the principles of true fraternalism, Mr. Scott belongs to St. John's Lodge, No. 4, of the Free and Accepted Masons and is a Past Master of his lodge. He also holds the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry, and is affiliated with Sphinx Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of which he is Past Potentate. He is a Past Noble Grand of Hartford Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

AURIN E. PAYSON—One of Norwich's noted citizens is Aurin E. Payson, president of the American Thermos Bottle Company, whose career has been of decided value to the people of this region.

Mr. Payson was born at Malden, Massachusetts, son of Arthur E. Payson. His father was born in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, though later he lived in Boston, Massachusetts, where he became connected with the oil refining business, so continuing until his death in 1936. His wife, the mother of Aurin E. Payson, was Annie E. (Hardy) Payson, who died in 1929. Both parents were laid to rest in Mount Auburn Cemetery.

W. J. Scott

The public and high schools of Concord, Massachusetts, provided the early education of Aurin E. Payson, who afterward was a student at Boston University, taking there the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1915. He then studied at the Harvard School of Business Administration. His first formal business connection was with the silk industry in New York City, in which he continued active until his enlistment in the United States Army at Plattsburg, New York, where he was commissioned first lieutenant of the Ordnance Department. He was later promoted to a captaincy in the same branch of the service, and so served until he was honorably discharged in 1919. Returning to civilian life, Mr. Payson became associated with the J. P. Murphy investment banking house, in New York, remaining with them until 1923, when he was made vice-president of the production department of the American Thermos Bottle Company. In 1928, he rose to still greater heights in the Thermos Bottle Company, being elected to the presidency. In this capacity he still directs the company's work and co-ordinates its branches and departments.

In addition to his other activities, Mr. Payson was appointed by Governor Wilbur Cross to represent Connecticut, along with several others, on a commission to be sent to the World's Fair organization in New York, planning the 1939-1940 fair. Mr. Payson is also director of the New England Council and is ex-chairman of the Norwich School Board and an incorporator of the Norwich Free Academy, Incorporated, and of William Backus Hospital. He is also a trustee of the Young Men's Christian Association, and a member of St. James Lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons, of Norwich. He belongs to the Harvard Club, of New York, Cloud Club, of New York, and the Norwich Golf Club. He was a director of the Connecticut Manufacturers' Association from 1930 to 1934, also is a director of the Chelsea Savings Bank, of Norwich.

Aurin E. Payson married, in 1918, Lois E. Chickering, daughter of William H. Chickering, the ceremony taking place at Interhill, Massachusetts. The Paysons have two sons: 1. Eliot, born in 1921, in Scarsdale, New York, now a student at Exeter Academy, in New Hampshire. 2. Henry, born in 1925, at Norwich.

ELMER I. BROWNING, engaged in the dairy products business, was born November 29, 1904, in Montville, Connecticut. Elmer I. Browning is the son of Irving E. and Lulu (Cruthers) Browning. His father is a farmer in Norwichtown, and also held different town offices in Montville, where he was born, there spending his early life until his removal to Norwichtown.

The Norwich public schools and Norwich Free Academy provided the early education of Elmer I. Browning, who later became a student at Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, taking the degree of Bachelor of Science there in 1927. His first employment was with Gilbert Beaver, a dairyman, at Yorktown Heights, New York, from February, 1927, to April, 1928. In April, 1928, he established Browning's Dairy, which he still operates, handling dairy products, in Town Street, Norwich, and also selling milk at retail and wholesale.

Mr. Browning belongs to the Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity, which he joined in his student days, and he is a member of the First Congregational Church.

In New York, he married Elizabeth Huntington, daughter of John P. and Julia (Weld) Huntington, of Norwich. Her father is a lawyer. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Browning: 1. Ann, born in April, 1931, in Norwich. 2. John, born in January, 1933, also in Norwich.

HAROLD P. HULL—Born at Oneco, Connecticut, in June, 1897, Harold P. Hull was brought by his parents to Norwich while he was still small and with this city his career has since been identified. He is the son of Lewis H. and Emma J. Hull, his father being associated with Swift and Company, meat packers, prior to his retiring from business.

Harold P. Hull was educated in the grade schools of Norwich and the Norwich Free Academy. In 1916 he entered the employ of the Norwich Savings Society as a clerk. He has filled most of the various positions in the institution, and for some time has been assistant secretary and treasurer, and also is a trustee of the bank. During the World War he was stationed at Fortress Monroe. He is a member of the Norwich Golf Club and finds his favorite recreation in playing golf.

In Norwich, on October 14, 1922, Harold P. Hull married Lotta O. Tufts, daughter of Joseph and Melissa Tufts, of Norwich, and they are the parents of three sons: 1. Harold P., Jr. 2. Donald A. 3. Joseph W.

ROBERT ROBERTSON AGNEW, M.D.—The three decades that Dr. Robert Roberston Agnew has devoted to the practice of medicine in Norwich have been fruitful in values to his profession, to the city and to the State-at-large. Although his original training and youthful experience were along the lines of medicine, he specialized in surgery, as student and practitioner, and as a surgeon has won the widest recognition.

Dr. Agnew was born in New Haven, August 1, 1882, son of William Banker and Alice E. (Page) Agnew, and the grandson of Robert R. Agnew, Civil War veteran, originally from Connecticut, who removed to Albany, New York, in the late 1860's. His son, William Banker Agnew, was born in Albany, New York, but in 1880 came to New Haven, where he was employed by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, rising rapidly to the post of engineer. After leaving railroading he learned patent making and was identified with the Malleable Iron Fittings Company, of Branford. His wife, Alice E. Page, was the daughter of an English family which came from Lancashire, England, to settle in Branford, Connecticut. They were the parents of three children: 1. Dr. Robert Robertson, of whom further. 2. George A. 3. Edith May, who married Alvin P. Sanford, of New Haven.

Dr. Robert Robertson Agnew acquired his academic education in the New Haven grammar and high schools, and from the age of fourteen years was employed in a drug establishment. He studied pharmacy, and had not yet celebrated his twentieth birthday when he passed the State examinations and was licensed as a registered pharmacist. He had no idea, however, of remaining in his immediate calling, and from 1901 to 1904, while he was employed as a pharmacist, he pursued courses in the Booth Preparatory School. There followed four years' studies in the Yale University Medical School, from which he was graduated a Doctor of Medicine, with the Class of 1908. He had earned his way to splendid technical training, and this fact and condition probably added to his stature as a physician and surgeon. Since his work during this period was chiefly in connection with drugs, he certainly gained a by-knowledge of medicine which no institution could teach.

Dr. Agnew was ambitious to become a surgeon, and had specialized along these lines in the Yale Medical School, so far as was possible, and then as an interne and house physician, at the New Haven Hospital, and the William W. Backus Hospital, Norwich. In 1909 he established himself in a private practice in Norwich, but specializing in head and abdominal surgery. Always during the past thirty years he has been a student, not only of the cases that come to him in the course of a busy professional life, but in the class room, clinics and hospitals of New York City, and other great centers. He has continued since July 1, 1908, his connection with the William W. Backus Hospital, and has been a member of its surgical staff since 1914. In 1932 he organized the Cancer Clinic at the Backus Hospital, and he is a highly esteemed member of the Connecticut State Cancer Clinic. He is also a member of the State Association for the Prevention of Venereal Diseases, and of the Connecticut Society for the Aid of Crippled Children. Among other professional connections are those in the Norwich Medical Society, the New London County Medical Association, the Connecticut State Medical Association, and the American Medical Association. Fraternally, he is affiliated with Somerset Lodge, No. 34, Free and Accepted Masons, a popular figure in the Norwich Chamber of Commerce, and the Rotary Club. His keen interest in the rising generation is indicated by the fact that he has received the award of the "Silver Beaver" for his work in the Boy Scout movement of America. He is chairman of the Camps Committee, of the National organization, representing Eastern Connecticut. Of the Congregational faith, he is chairman of the board of trustees of the Greenville Church.

On February 9, 1910, in Ivoryton, Connecticut, Dr. Robert Robertson Agnew married Ellen Eliza Griswold, born in Ivoryton, daughter of Francis and Eliza (Jamieson) Griswold, her father born in Ivoryton, her mother in Middletown, Connecticut. Dr. and Mrs. Agnew are the parents of three children: 1. Marion Elizabeth. 2. William Griswold. 3. Robert Jamieson.

M. FRANK LEONARD—It was by no easy or direct road that M. Frank Leonard came to prominence as a business man, the proprietor for the past fifteen years of his own establishment in Norwich. A native of this city, he was variously employed up to the time of the World War, in which he served for almost two years. Upon his return to civilian life it was a year or so before he became associated with the shop of which he has been the sole owner since 1924, gradually expanding its scope until "Leonard's Photo and Art Shop" is one of the best known in the Norwich section of Connecticut.

Mr. Leonard was born in Norwich, January 13, 1894, son of Michael and Katherine (Hogan) Leonard. His father, now deceased, was a native of Ireland, who came to the United States in his youth and for some years worked on steamboats out of New York City. He was employed as a fireman before he came to Norwich, and continued this line of work in the city. M. Frank Leonard completed his general education in the local public schools and the Norwich Free Academy. His first business connection for any length of time was with the P. F. Bray drug store, located in the Greenville section of Norwich. This association continued from 1911 to 1915, when he entered the dyeing industry. When the United States entered the World War, he was assistant boss dyer in the United States Finishing Company in the large Norwich branch of the corporation.

Mr. Leonard enlisted in the United States Army in September, 1917, and started his military career as a private in Company A of a Machine Gun unit attached to the 96th Division, in training at Camp Devens, Massachusetts. Before going overseas with the American Expeditionary Forces, he had been promoted to sergeant, and as such was active with his group until the signing of the Armistice. He then was transferred to a camp hospital unit in France where he was identified with the ward caring for exchanged officers. His last active service was at Belfort, France, where he was sent to assist in the establishment of an infirmary. His honorable discharge from the Army came in July, 1919, at Camp Mills.

Back in Norwich once more, Mr. Leonard began to pick up the trend of his former life. For about a year he was with his former employer and staunch friend, P. F. Bray. Then he became associated with James Gordon in 1921, a connection which lasted until 1924, since which time Mr. Leonard has been the sole owner of Leonard's Photo and Art Shop, rated among the best of its type. His interest in local affairs has always been keen and as much of his time as was possible has been given to them. He is a popular Rotarian, and is affiliated with the Norwich Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is a Past Grand Knight of the Knights of Columbus. He is a member of St. Mary's Catholic Church.

On June 8, 1926, M. Frank Leonard married Mary Brennan, daughter of Patrick and Bridget (Murphy) Brennan, and they are the parents of twins: Mary Theresa and M. Frank, Jr., born in Norwich, on July 22, 1929.

LUCY (ABBOTT) POLLOCK—For more than a decade, Lucy (Abbott) Pollock has been superintendent of the William W. Backus Hospital, Norwich. She arrived at her present position well fortified with ample educational and technical qualifications and unusually broad experience. One has said: "Her keen enthusiasm for her work, her executive and administrative abilities are matched only by her unfailing tact and graciousness, hei unselfish service."

Mrs. Pollock was born Lucy Abbott, on May 11, 1887, daughter of James J. and Lucy (Blunt) Abbott, of Andover, Massachusetts. She was reared on her father's farm and is therefore familiar with the advantages and the drawbacks of rural life. After completing her studies in the public schools of Andover, including graduation from the high school, with the class of 1905, she decided upon nursing as a vocation. In 1910, she was graduated from the Massachusetts Memorial Hospital, Boston, School of Nursing. Later, during the scholastic year, 1925-26, she attended Teachers' College of Columbia University, New York City.

As already indicated, the experience of Mrs. Pollock has been of wide scope and variety. In addition to early hospital and private practice of her profession, she was with the Public Health Nursing Department in Andover from 1912 to 1918. Then the United States entered the World War, and she enlisted for any service she might be able to render, and was assigned to the nursing corps in the United States Army, which had originally been a Red Cross unit. That was in April, 1918, and in August of that same year she went overseas, where she served to June, 1919, attached to Hospital No. 44, in France. Upon her return to the United States, she took charge of the Phillips-Andover Academy Infirmary from 1919 to 1920; then was at the Pekin Medical School, Pekin College, from September, 1920, to November, 1923. She then was with the Massachusetts Memorial Hospital, Boston, from April, 1924, to September, 1925. Since June, 1926, she has been superintendent of the William W. Backus Hospital, Norwich, which institution is fortunate in having in an administrative post one of her exceptional qualifications. Mrs. Pollock is a member of the American, the New England, and the Connecticut State Hospital Associations; is a former president of the New England Hospital Association, and is president of the Connecticut Hospital Association. She is a Fellow of the American College of Hospital Administrators.

At Epping, New Hampshire, on May 1, 1936, the former Lucy Abbott married Dr. Henry M. Pollock, superintendent of the Massachusetts Memorial Hospital, of Boston. He is a graduate of the University of Minnesota, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine.

WALTER MELBOURNE SHEAHAN—As president of the New England Iron Company, Incorporated, at Hamden, Walter Melbourne Sheahan directs one of the major enterprises of its kind in this State. He has devoted his entire active career to its service, rising to his present position through the merits of his record.

Mr. Sheahan was born in New Haven on October 14, 1895, a son of William Lawrence and Catharine (Ennis) Sheahan, both now deceased. His father, a member of the firm of Sheahan and Groark, which was located for over forty years at 285 State Street, New Haven, was a well known steam heating and ventilating engineer. He was active in the civic life of the municipality and was a member of the delegation whose representations at Washington secured the new post office for the city.

Walter Melbourne Sheahan was educated in the public schools of his birthplace, including New Haven High School, at St. John's Preparatory School, Booth Preparatory School and Lafayette College, from which he was graduated in 1917. He thereupon enlisted in the naval aviation branch of the service for duty during the World War, studying for a time at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He spent six months in the service and received his honorable discharge after the Armistice. In August, 1919, he began his long connection with the New England Iron Company, Incorporated, manufacturers of structural steel for buildings and bridges and of miscellaneous and ornamental iron. They are also structural steel warehouse dealers. The business of the company extends throughout all New England and New York State and is based on the high standards and demonstrated capacity of the organization. Mr. Sheahan, who has had an active part in the development of the company, became its acting president in 1930 after serving for some years as secretary, and has since continued as its executive head. His broad experience in the technical details of operation and his administrative abilities have made his leadership very valuable to his company.

In addition to his business connections, Mr. Sheahan is affiliated with a number of other organizations in the New Haven area, including the Union League Club and the Lions Club, Race Brook Country Club and the New Haven Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also affiliated with the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity and is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. He is fond of all sports and finds his principal recreation in their pursuit.

On June 6, 1918, Mr. Sheahan married Juliet Poli, daughter of Sylvester and Rose (Leverone) Poli. Mr. Poli died May 31, 1937. They were the parents of three children: 1. Walter Poli, a member of the junior class at Taft School. 2. Sylvester Poli, a student in the Edgewood School. 3. Patricia Poli, also attending the Edgewood School.

MAURICE P. FLYNN—One of the leading citizens of Norwich and manager here for the Connecticut Light and Power Corporation, Maurice P. Flynn occupies a position of leadership and standing in his city.

Mr. Flynn was born October 5, 1898, in Preston, Connecticut, son of Patrick and Annie (Sheehan) Flynn. His father was a native of Ireland who at the age of eight years came to this country with his family, taking up his residence in Preston, Connecticut. In young manhood he worked on the steamboats running between Providence and Baltimore, where he learned his trade as an engineer. He later obtained employment as engineer with the Hall Brothers Mill, at Norwich, remaining with that organization from 1895 onward until 1923.

The schools of Preston, his birthplace, provided the early education of Maurice P. Flynn, who at the age of sixteen years began working on a farm and as clerk in a grocery store. During the World War he was employed by Marlin and Rockwell, manufacturers of Belgian rifles for the Belgian Government and also makers of the Browning machine gun. At the age of seventeen years Mr. Flynn became a motorman with the Shore Line Electric Railway, of Norwich, remaining with that line for about six months. In 1920, he entered the employ of the Eastern Connecticut Power Company, so beginning his labors in the realm of public utilities. His first employment was as a lineman, and from that position he moved steadily forward. Later, the Eastern Connecticut Power Company was taken over by the Connecticut Light and Power Company, whereupon, in 1922, Mr. Flynn became a district foreman with the Connecticut Light and Power Corporation, at Norwich. In 1927, he was promoted to the district managership of the Norwich district, continuing in that post until a new organization of the company took place in 1937. At that time he was made Norwich manager and assistant engineer. For a time he was chairman of the Board of Assessors for the town of Sprague, and during the Groton Centennial, served on the historical committee. Mr. Flynn is a member of the Norwich Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he belongs likewise to St. Patrick's Church. His favorite recreations are those of an outdoor nature, notably hunting, to which he has given much time and attention.

Walter M. Sheahan

Maurice P. Flynn married, at New London, Connecticut, on November 26, 1931, Delia Shea, and they became the parents of a daughter, Mary Carroll, who was born March 14, 1936.

JUDGE ANTHONY WAYNE O'CONNELL—In the relatively brief period which marks his active career, Judge Anthony Wayne O'Connell has risen to a position of recognized prominence in the public life of Norwich and the State. He has served on the Norwich city bench, in the Connecticut Senate and in other public offices with distinction and success.

Judge O'Connell was born in Norwich, on August 4, 1907, son of the late Thomas F. and Isabelle (Moore) O'Connell, and a great-grandson of Timothy O'Connell, who enlisted from Colchester in the Civil War and was killed in action while serving with the Union forces. Judge O'Connell's father, who was also a native of Norwich, was employed as a woolen spinner in local mills.

Anthony Wayne O'Connell was educated in the Greenville public school of Norwich, and in Norwich Free Academy. Having decided to adopt the profession of law, he next studied for four years in the office of Shields, Shields and Shields, local attorneys. In 1933, he discontinued the study of law to serve in the House of Representatives and from 1933 to 1935, was also probation officer for the Norwich City Court. In the State Legislature he established his reputation for devotion and industry, as well as ability, and in 1935, was advanced by his constituents to the State Senate. Here his service enhanced his reputation. In 1935, he was appointed judge of the Norwich City Court, an office he retained until the close of the year 1937. His previous experience in the court, his knowledge of the law and devotion to the public interest distinguished his tenure on the bench. In 1937, Judge O'Connell was also elected alderman of the City of Norwich. He is one of the city's most respected public servants, and his courage in overcoming many obstacles, including the physical disability resulting from an attack of infantile paralysis in childhood, have brought him the admiration of all who know him.

In addition to his many public responsibilities, Judge O'Connell carries on a real estate and insurance business. He is an independent Democrat in politics; a member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and the Fraternal Order of Eagles; an honorary member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; and a member of the Fratres Fidii, an organization of physically handicapped or disabled people. Judge O'Connell is also a member of St. Mary's Memorial Church. His favorite recreations are reading and travel. On June, 1938, Judge O'Connell was elected Mayor of the city of Norwich. He is believed to be the youngest Mayor the City has ever had.

On October 7, 1937, at Willimantic, Connecticut, he married Alice A. Jolie, daughter of William and Mary Jolie.

WALTER A. LUKOSKI, B.S., M.D.—One of the more recent additions to the professional coterie of Norwich, Dr. Walter A. Lukoski, B.S., M.D., has easily won standing as one of its able physicians and surgeons, and an exemplar of the best type of citizenship. He was born in Norwich, February 14, 1907, son of Joseph and Anna (Rozanski) Lukoski. Both parents came originally from Poland, his father, at the age of fourteen years and his mother when only three years old. Both quickly became lovers of their adopted country and absorbed American ideals and ways. The elder Mr. Lukoski is a paper maker by trade.

Dr. Lukoski received his elementary education in the grade schools of his birthplace and was graduated from the Norwich Free Academy. He matriculated at Georgetown University, from which he was graduated in 1930, a Bachelor of Science. Continuing at his alma mater, he was graduated from its Medical School in 1932, a Doctor of Medicine. After serving an interneship in the Lawrence Memorial Hospital, at New London, Connecticut, he established himself in practice in Norwich. He is a member of the staff of the William W. Backus Hospital, where he is pediatrician. He is both physician and surgeon and is favored by an increasingly large clientele. Dr. Lukoski was a member of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, while an under-graduate at Georgetown University. Among his professional identifications are those with the American Medical Association, the Connecticut State Medical Association and the New London County Medical Society. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and worships at St. Joseph's Church.

At Hartford, Connecticut, on April 5, 1937, Dr. Walter A. Lukoski married Rose Pieroni, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Pieroni.

REV. THEODORE MERRELL SHIPHERD, S.T.D.—As pastor of Park Church, Norwich, the Rev. Theodore Merrell Shipherd has performed a work of importance and value in this Connecticut community.

Dr. Shipherd was born August 30, 1875, in Elmhurst, Illinois, son of Jacob Rudd and Anna E. (Rowe) Shipherd. After completing his preliminary education, he became a student at Williams College, in Williamstown, Massachusetts, there taking his degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1899. He was graduated in 1902 from the Union Theological Seminary, New York City. There followed a period of special work at Columbia University, New York City, in 1901 and 1902, and, though he finished his formal studies at that time, he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology at Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio, in 1924.

Ordained to the ministry of the Reformed Dutch Church in 1902, Theodore Merrell Shipherd served until 1904 as pastor of the First Reformed Church, of Coxsackie, New York. He was then stationed at the Bellville Avenue Congregational Church, in Newark, New Jersey, from 1904 to 1909. From 1909 to 1914 he was at the First Congregational Church of Lincoln, Nebraska. Then, for ten years, until 1924, he was pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Until 1929 he was then pastor of the Scarsdale Congregational Church, Scarsdale, New York. Then he came to the Park Church, in Norwich, where he carries forward his professional work today.

Quite aside from serving his church here, he takes a deep interest in the general civic life of Norwich, as he has done in the different communities where he has lived and served in the ministry. He has served as a director of the Congregational Home Boards. He served as Moderator of the Congregational body of the State of Wisconsin; in New York City the Association of Congregational Churches; and lately he served as Moderator of the Connecticut Congregational Churches. He is highly esteemed in every circle in which he is known, and his contribution has been, indeed, a significant one for the life of his city.

On September 7, 1904, the Rev. Theodore Merrell Shipherd married Esther Lampman Howe, of Coxsackie, New York. Their children have been: 1. Theodore Merrell. 2. Henry Fayette. 3. Mary Esther. 4. Anna Elizabeth. 5. Jean Robinson. The family residence is situated at No. 9 Chelsea Park South, Norwich.

ROBERT H. MONTGOMERY—Since the early years of the present century, Robert H. Montgomery has owned and operated the Eldridge Hardware Company of Norwich, one of the oldest established business enterprises in New London County. He came to Norwich from the South and has been an important and familiar figure in its life over a long period.

Mr. Montgomery was born on his father's plantation near Charlotte, North Carolina, where the Montgomerys for several generations have been cotton growers. His father, Robert C. Montgomery, was also a mill operator and merchant and one of the most prominent Masons of the State. His mother was Catharine (Hutchinson) Montgomery.

Coming to Norwich about thirty-five years ago, Mr. Montgomery here became interested in the hardware business and purchased control of the Eldridge Hardware Company from the Eldridge Estate. In taking over one of the city's oldest business enterprises, he continued the fine traditions of the company, bringing to its management the sound judgment, integrity and progressive outlook which have made him an admired member of the business community. He has remained as owner and executive head of the company during the intervening years.

Mr. Montgomery is also a member of the board of the Dime Savings Bank. While he has never entered public life he has been interested in civic affairs and has always lent his support to the worthwhile institutions of the community. He is affiliated with Somerset Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, at Norwich; is a member of the Arcanum Club; and a member of the United Congregational Church.

Mr. Montgomery married, at Norwich, Grace Eldridge, daughter of T. H. and Elizabeth (McLean) Eldridge. They are the parents of one son, Theodore, who was born in Norwich, and was educated at Norwich Academy, William and Mary College, and New York University, from which he was graduated.

R. DAY FILLMORE—For many years closely associated with the business life of Norwich, R. Day Fillmore is manager of the Charles Osgood Company, of this city, wholesale and retail dealers in paints, painters' supplies, wallpaper, patent medicines and nany kinds of specialties that are widely consumed n this region of Connecticut.

Mr. Fillmore was born October 8, 1896, in Taftville, Township of Norwich, Connecticut, son of George D. and Grace (Albertson) Fillmore. His father was, or many years previous to his death, employed in the Thames National Bank, of Norwich. Both parents re now deceased.

The Norwich schools provided R. Day Fillmore's arly education. He also attended Norwich Free Academy. For a time he was employed in the old Merchants' National Bank, of Norwich, an institution hat is now obsolete. On September 26, 1913, he ntered the employ of the Charles Osgood Company, eferred to above, becoming a clerk and then a salesnan with this Norwich business house. Gradually he vas advanced through the different departments of he business, learning the operation of the enterprise n all its details and at length being appointed manger by the executives of the Osgood estate, in anuary, 1937. He continues in this capacity down o the present, and has performed a work of value nd distinction. This company occupies a position f particularly high standing in Norwich and this icinity, dating back about one hundred years and eing known to the people of this district for several enerations.

Mr. Fillmore himself is also deeply interested in ommunity affairs. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, belonging to Somerset Lodge, of Norwich; Franklin Chapter of Royal Arch Masons; Columbian Commandery of Knights Templar; and he Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite bodies, in which e has attained to the thirty-second degree. During he World War he served his country, becoming a ember of the Naval Reserve Corps.

R. Day Fillmore married, on October 25, 1931, at eominster, Massachusetts, Irene E. Chandler, daugher of Julius P. and Alice (Tilley) Chandler.

CLIFFORD WILLIAM COE—A native and life-long esident of Durham, Clifford William Coe has deoted his active career to farming pursuits on the omestead occupied by members of his family for any generations. The Coes have been associated ith Durham's history since the founding of the town nd their fine traditions have been continued down the present time.

Mr. Coe was born on the Coe farm at Durham, n May 5, 1870, son of William T. and Harriet A. Barnes) Coe. He is a direct descendant of Robert oe, born in Suffolk, England, in 1596, who sailed or the colonies from Ipswich, in the ship "Francis" on April 10, 1634, with his wife Anna (born in 1591) and their three sons. In June of that year they arrived in Boston and shortly afterward settled in nearby Watertown. Robert Coe was made a freeman there on September 3, 1634. Later, with several neighboring families, he moved to the banks of the Connecticut River, where the party settled at Windsor, Hartford and Pyqugg (now Wethersfield). Schisms having arisen in the church, Robert Coe and about twenty other planters purchased Rippowam (now Stamford) from the New Haven Colony for £33 and commenced a settlement. In the autumn of 1643, Robert Coe was sent to Long Island to examine the country, and in the spring of the following year he and Richard Denton, pastor of the church at Stamford, with others, founded at Hempstead the first English settlement on Long Island. In 1652, Robert Coe removed to a place called Mespat and aided in establishing a settlement which was named Middleburg (now Newton, Long Island), and became very prominent in its affairs. In May, 1664, he represented the town in the General Convention at Hartford, by which body he was appointed commissioner to Jamaica. He died some time after 1672. Of his three sons, John, Robert (2) and Benjamin, the present line is traced through the second, Robert (2), who was born in England in 1627, and accompanied his father to Watertown, Wethersfield and Stamford. He settled in Stratford, where he married Hannah, daughter of Matthew and Susan (Butterfield) Mitchell.

Captain John Coe, son of Robert (2) Coe, was born in 1658. He married, in 1682, Mary, daughter of Joseph Hawley. In maturity he became a prominent figure at Stratford and served in the French and Indian Wars, rising to the rank of captain. He was also deputy to the General Court and held other positions of trust. From him the line is traced through his son, John (2), born in 1693, whose brother, Lieutenant Joseph Coe, was one of the proprietors, or first settlers, of Durham; Simeon, son of John (2), born in 1721, who married Annie Morris, daughter of Adonijah Morris, from whom came some of the Durham lands which have since remained in possession of the Coe family; Timothy, born in 1746, who married Phebe Thomas; Timothy (2), born in 1781, known as "Squire Coe," a farmer, carding mill owner and smith, who represented Durham in the General Assembly; William Callender, son of Timothy (2) and Polly (Callender) Coe, who succeeded to his father's interests at Durham and married Caroline E. Allen, daughter of Ebenezer and Sally (Kimberly) Allen, of Wallingford; and William T. Coe, father of Clifford William, who was born on May 29, 1844, and married, on November 15, 1865, Harriet A. Barnes, of New Haven.

Clifford William Coe was educated in the public schools of Durham. As a boy he worked on his father's farm in Durham, continued there after the completion of his education and at length succeeded to ownership of the property which he has continued to operate. It consists of two hundred seventy-five acres, well located and well cared for. Mr. Coe is a general farmer. He has one hundred head of stock, which supply his dairy business, and large fruit orchards. His sons, who are associated with him in the management of the farm, now carry the chief responsibility for its operation, tilling the same soil which members of the family for generations past have called their own.

Clifford William Coe, as one of the substantial citizens of Durham, is active in local civic affairs and influential in local councils of the Republican party, to which he belongs. He has served in the office of assessor and on the Board of Relief, and his opinions have always carried weight in community matters. Mr. Coe is a member of the Grange and of the Durham Methodist Church.

He married, on November 16, 1892, at Middletown, Lula M. Daniels, daughter of Samuel B. and Lucy M. (Bailey) Daniels. Mr. and Mrs. Coe are the parents of four children: 1. William B., who married Margaret Habersang. 2. Robert S., who married Helen Jackson. 3. Alice M., who married Bertram Gastler. 4. Henry W., who married Nellie Stretchel.

Mr. Coe has five grandchildren: Robert S. Coe, Jr., William C. Coe, Henry Wilbur Coe, John Henry Gastler and Mabel Marie Gastler.

WEBSTER CHURCHILL CHAPMAN—As an expert dairyman, Webster Churchill Chapman, of Durham, has not only been successful in his own enterprise but his abilities, technical training and wide experience have been drafted by organizations in the same line of business. Mr. Chapman was born in Hartford, January 3, 1899, son of Bert Warren and Virginia (Churchill) Chapman, and is descended from Jeremiah Churchill, who settled in Wethersfield, Connecticut, prior to 1638. Chapman is also a name well established in Connecticut before the middle of the seventeenth century. Bert Warren Chapman is the president of the Bryant and Chapman Company, of Hartford.

Webster Churchill Chapman started his agricultural career shortly after he became of age. After attending the grammar and high schools of Hartford, he entered Connecticut State College, from which he was graduated with the class of 1921. While studying in this institution he was a member of the Students' Army Training Corps. He spent two years on the tobacco and dairy farm of J. W. Alsop, in Avon, Connecticut; then ran a farm at East Granby, for five years, this time specializing in poultry as well as tobacco and dairying. The following two years found him in the hardware business, in Bloomfield but, in 1930, he purchased his present two hundred and thirty-nine acre farm at Durham, and for the past nine years has been increasingly to the fore in the dairy and poultry business.

Although chickens and cows have been on New England farms since early times, the intensive use of them as a main feature of agriculture is a comparatively modern development which calls for the highest qualifications and the best scientific training for efficient practice. Mr. Chapman has been for five years director of the Connecticut Milk Producers' Association, and has served on its executive committee for two years. Civic and politically minded, he was elected a selectman in 1935, and has been first selectman, 1936 and 1937. He is a member of the Republican Town Committee, and fraternally is affiliated with the Masonic Order. He is of the Baptist faith.

In 1923, at Hartford, Connecticut, Webster Churchill Chapman married Ann Campbell, daughter of Kenneth and Isabelle (McDonald) Campbell, and they are the parents of four children: 1. Dorothy, born December 13, 1925. 2. Webster Churchill, Jr., born December 20, 1927. 3. Bert Warren, born September 15, 1931. 4. Virginia, born November 17, 1934.

CHARLES SABIN LOVELAND—It is an interesting matter of historic record that the first Lovelands to come to this country from their native England soon removed from Massachusetts, where they landed, to Connecticut, in the seventeenth century. They played their parts well in the development of the State down through many years, an unusual number of them as landowners and agriculturalists. Charles Sabin Loveland, born in Durham, September 12, 1852, has throughout his long life engaged in farming and operated a large lumber business.

He was the son of Sabin S. and Nancy (Roberts) Loveland, and the grandson of James Loveland, who married Martha Fox. It is worthy of more than passing note that there were five Lovelands of this generation who served in the War Between the States: one, Selden Loveland, lost a leg in battle; another, Marvin Loveland, was killed.

Charles Sabin Loveland, like his father, was honored with election as representative to the Connecticut General Assembly. This was in 1913-1915, and he served on the Women's Suffrage Committee, and he also was selectman for several terms in Durham, and served on the Board of Relief for a number of years. Fraternally, he affiliates with the Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, and he is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church and a liberal supporter of religious and philanthropic works.

In Durham, Charles Sabin Loveland married Martha Scranton, a descendant of Robert Francis, one of the first settlers of Wethersfield, Connecticut, 1651. Mr. and Mrs. Loveland are the parents of six children: 1. Charles Selden, Jr. (q. v.), who married Lilly Gastler; four children were born to them: i. Selden G., deceased. ii. Chester William, deceased. iii. Caroline. iv. Nancy Ann. 2. Harold, who married Alice Banta, and they have two children: i. Alvin. ii. Jeanette. 3. Lucy, who married Harold Hall, and they have four children: i. Eleanor. ii. Miriam. iii. Robert. iv. Forest. 4. Hattie, who married Luzerne Bristol, and they had three children: i. Luzerne, Jr. ii. Florence. iii. Walter, deceased. 5. Ruth, who married Frank Curtis, and they had four children: i. Richard. ii. Barbara, deceased. iii. Irene. iv. Marjorie. 6. Alice, who married Henry Tillety, and they have two children: i. Arline. ii. Irving.

CLIFFORD LIONEL CLARK—During the greater part of his active career, Clifford Lionel Clark has been a farmer at Durham, where he owns and operates more than a hundred acres of land originally in possession of his father. He is a substantial citizen of Durham and a member of one of Middlesex County's oldest families.

Mr. Clark was born in Durham on December 9, 1882, son of Charleton Russell and Isabelle Antoinette (Griffith) Clark, and grandson of Seth Clark, who was born in Haddam. He is a direct descendant of William Clark, one of the original proprietors of Haddam, and in his mother's line traces his ancestry to an equally early period in the country's history. His father was a wagon-maker and farmer at Durham.

Clifford Lionel Clark was educated in the Durham public schools, spending his boyhood and youth on his father's farm. After attaining his majority he worked for six months on a neighboring tobacco farm and then returned to the family home for one year as assistant to his father. At the end of that time he emigrated to the Pacific Coast, and for some three years was employed on various orange groves and dairy farms in California, traveling extensively throughout that State and elsewhere in the West. In 1907, he returned to Durham and purchased land from his father, which he farmed. Upon the death of the elder man in 1910, Mr. Clark took over the original Clark farm and combined it with his own. He has since devoted himself to dairying and general farming on this property, wholesaling his milk locally. At the present time he has over a hundred acres of land and twenty-five head of stock.

Mr. Clark's industrious application in meeting his responsibilities and his success as a farmer have won him the respect of his community and a considerable influence in its life. As an independent Democrat, he was elected and served for three years as a selectman and on other occasions has been active in civic causes and various community institutions. To the performance of his duties as a citizen he has brought the fidelity and balanced judgment which distinguish him. During the World War, he served for two years in the Durham Home Guard. Mr. Clark is a member of the Methodist Church.

Mr. Clark married, in 1911, at Meriden, Lilla M. Eick, who died in 1929, a daughter of Albert and Elsie (Reed) Eick. Mr. and Mrs. Clark became the parents of five children: 1. Hazel Edith. 2. Raymond A. 3. Cynthia. 4. Doris. 5. Charleton Clifford.

JOHN BURTON MARLIN—An interesting feature of modern agriculture is the number of young men of noteworthy family background and college education who are turning to the land for a career. John Burton Marlin is one of this group. The son of the former head of the widely-known Marlin Fire Arms Company, and the present head and board man of equally important corporations, instead of entering industry he studied science in Yale University, acquired practical experience on a farm in Massachusetts, and on another in Branford, Connecticut, before purchasing acreage for himself in Durham, Connecticut. Thoroughly modern in his views and education, Mr. Marlin is specializing in the breeding and raising of thoroughbred, prize-winning cattle. A number of buildings for regular and special purposes have been built and few agricultural enterprises are better equipped or promise a larger success.

Mr. Marlin was born in New Haven, October 16, 1910, son of John Howard and Bertha E. (Dickey) Marlin. His father's family became established in Bloomfield, this State, at a very early date. John Howard Marlin is the well-known Connecticut industrialist who was president of the Marlin Fire Arms Company, founded by his father, John M. Marlin, until it was sold in 1916. He now is the president of the Driscoll Wire Company, of Sheldon, Connecticut, and a director of the First National Bank, of New Haven; and a director of the Connecticut Jersey Cattle Club. He is a Mason and clubman, a member of such organizations as the Quinnipiack Club, of New Haven, the New York Yacht Club, the New Haven Country Club, the Pine Orchard Club, and the Surf Club, of Miami Beach, Florida.

John Burton Marlin acquired the preliminaries of his education in the public and private schools of New York, California, and New Haven, Connecticut. He prepared for college at the Taft School, Watertown, Connecticut, and entered the Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University, where he completed three years' work by 1933.

At Waterbury, Connecticut, on September 29, 1934, John Burton Marlin married Carra Clark, a descendant of Henry Ward Beecher, and a member of the Clark family which has been identified with Connecticut life and affairs since its first settlement. Mr. and Mrs. Marlin are the parents of two children: 1. Carra Georgiana, born August, 1935. 2. Pretria Wales, born March 8, 1937.

HON. FRANK THOMAS STACK—As mayor of Norwalk and in other public capacities, Frank Thomas Stack has effectively served this city. He has had a broad business experience in several different industries, and he has let this background serve to good advantage in his public work.

Mr. Stack was born August 26, 1891, in New York City, son of Frank Thomas and Theresa (Hewson) Stack. His father, born in the old Seventh Ward of New York City, died April 21, 1915. He was for many years engaged in the women's millinery business. The mother died September 2, 1925. She was also a native of the old Seventh Ward of New York City, and she assisted her husband in the millinery trade.

After completing his work in the graded schools and at the Boys' High School, in Brooklyn, New York, where he was graduated in 1909, Frank Thomas Stack, Jr., became associated with his father in the millinery trade. He was engaged in business in New York City, and in that period of his life was agent for a number of different enterprises. For three years he traveled with his father. Then, in 1912, he came to Norwalk, entering the employ of the hat manufacturing house of Crofut and Knapp. Beginning in the humble capacity of "floor boy," he made it his business to go through all the departments of the company. He continues his work with Crofut and Knapp, whom he has served since 1932 as front shop superintendent. He has been eminently successful in all his business activities, occupying a prominent executive position in what is one of the largest hat manufacturing companies in existence.

From early life Mr. Stack has enjoyed boxing and hunting as hobbies. Out of one of these hobbies developed his first public service to Connecticut. It was in 1933 that he was appointed a member of the State Boxing Commission, of which he is still a member. He was also for eight months a fire commissioner of Norwalk, but resigned from that post. On October 7, 1935, he was elected mayor of the city on the Democratic ticket, receiving a majority of five hundred votes in the election despite the fact that there were five tickets in the field.

The city of Norwalk has benefited materially from his knowledge of business life and his ability to establish a sound and businesslike administration. At the same time he has been active in a number of local organizations, notably those of a fraternal nature, such as the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Loyal Order of Moose, the Knights of Columbus and the Eagles.

Frank Thomas Stack married, on November 9, 1912, in Brooklyn, New York, Mathilda Amundsen, daughter of Hans Amundsen, a native of Norway, who has lived in Norwalk since about the turn of the century. Mrs. Stack herself was a native of Norwalk. The following children were born to the Stacks: 1. Rosemary, wife of Donald McMahon, of Norwalk; they are the parents of one son, Timothy McMahon. 2. Dorothea Irene, living at home with her family. 3. Thomas Francis, attending the public schools in Norwalk.

KENNETH POMEROY APPLEGATE—As general manager of the Hartford Electric Light Company, Kenneth Pomeroy Applegate is in responsible charge of the operations of one of the principal utilities of the State. A trained engineer, he has spent more than a quarter of a century in the service of the company and has risen to his present position on the merits of his record.

Mr. Applegate was born in Englishtown, New

Frank T. Slack

Jersey, on December 25, 1890, son of Dr. Asher T. Applegate, a physician in Englishtown, and Jennie C. (Wilson) Applegate, both now deceased.

Kenneth P. Applegate received his preliminary education in the public schools of his birthplace and at Troy Academy, Troy, New York. He prepared for his professional career at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, from which he was graduated in 1912 with the degree of Electrical Engineer. In the same year he entered the employ of the Hartford Electric Light Company, with which he has since been associated. From 1912 to 1914 he served in the engineering department of the company and in 1914 joined the sales department, spending the following three years as a power salesman. In 1917 he was appointed purchasing agent. After the entry of the United States into the World War, however, he enlisted in the navy and in December, 1917, was commissioned lieutenant, junior grade, and was called to active duty. In February, 1918, he was assigned as engineering officer on the U. S. S. "Pennsylvania" and served there until February, 1919, when he received his honorable discharge. After the war he continued as a reserve officer until 1921.

Meanwhile, in 1919, Mr. Applegate returned to his duties as purchasing agent of the Hartford Electric Light Company. He held this office until 1929, when he assumed his present position as general manager. His thorough technical training and long experience in the various departments of the company fully qualified him for his executive responsibilities and he has administered them successfully during the past decade.

Mr. Applegate is also vice-president and director of the Hartford Electric Steel Corporation. He is well known both in the business and civic life of Hartford and has been active in a number of the city's public and semi-public institutions. He is past president and a director of the Hartford Rotary Club, and at the present time is vice-president and a director of the Hartford Chamber of Commerce and a director of the Hartford Young Men's Christian Association. Mr. Applegate is independent in politics and is a member of the Presbyterian Church. He is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons and is prominent in the Order, being a member of all higher bodies of the Scottish Rite, including the thirty-second degree of the Consistory, and a member of Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. Mr. Applegate is also a member of the University Club of Hartford and the Farmington Country Club. His hobby is fishing.

He married, at Englishtown, New Jersey, on April 15, 1919, Marion Mount, daughter of William E. and Alida (Hoffman) Mount. Mr. and Mrs. Applegate are the parents of three children: 1. Kenneth P., Jr., who is attending Lehigh University. 2. Asher T. 3. William E.

CURTIS HUNT ALVORD—As sales and general manager of the Hart Manufacturing Company, of West Hartford, Curtis Hunt Alvord not only takes an active part in securing for his corporation an important position in the business world, but contributes also to the reputation which Connecticut has as a center of industry.

Mr. Alvord is a native of Winsted, Connecticut, born November 19, 1899, son of George Stevens and Grace (Hunt) Alvord. His father, previous to retirement from business, was a well-known figure in manufacturing circles, long vice-president of the Empire Knife Company, of Winsted, this State, makers of pocket cutlery, an establishment founded by his father, and carried on by Charles L. Alvord and S. Landon Alvord, his brother, until it was sold in 1920.

Mr. Alvord is a descendant of Alexander Alvord, progenitor of the family of that name in America, the name, originally spelled Alford, being of great antiquity in English history. To quote from the Alford Genealogy, compiled by Samuel Morgan Alvord, > Alde was an ancient form of old, as in alderman. Aldeford was the old ford across a river, and Robertus Dominous de Aldford was master, lord or governor of a military station (Aldford Castle), commanding the old ford across the Dee above Chester. The changes then followed: Richard Dom. de Aldford, Radulf de Aldford, Henry de Aldford Robert de Aldford, a descendant of "Bigot" who came over with William the Conqueror. He was miles (Knight) in 1160. (The above is not to be taken as a direct line of ancestry.) This comes from the earliest pedigree of the name and the connection of the Somerset family with the Aldford Castle in Cheshire is early but distinct. The Somerset Alfords became landowners about 1560.

The entire Alvord family (spelled with the "v") of this country are descended from Alexander Alvord. He was an early settler in Windsor, Connecticut, with his brother, Benedict, and sister, Joanna, who married Ambrose Fowler in 1644. From Benedict, who retained the original spelling of the name, are descended, it is estimated, nearly threefourths of the Alfords (spelled with the "f") in America. The exact date of the arrival of these founders of the family in America is not recorded. The earliest mention is made in 1637, with indication that their actual arrival was somewhat earlier.

Members of the Alvord family, descendants of Alexander Alvord, have been, through succeeding generations, prominently identified with the development and affairs of the communities in which they lived. They have given valuable service in widely varying fields in the life of the colony and the State, and many of them served as soldiers in the early Indian wars, the War of the Revolution, the War of 1812, the Civil War, and later descendants have served in the wars that have followed. In later generations the family has spread to many states.

James Richard Alvord, grandfather of the subject of this biography, was born at Winchester, Connecticut, October 7, 1823, his death occurring at Winsted, February 17, 1890. He founded, as previously stated, the pocket cutlery business, which was later conducted by the firm of Beardsley and Alvord. In 1856 a factory was built at the Lake outlet and the business was enlarged, the Empire Knife Company succeeding the original partnership title. Mr. Alvord resided on Meadow Street in a house built in 1851, and later remodelled. He was one of the organizers of the Second Congregational Church of Winsted in 1853.

Curtis Hunt Alvord attended the Gilbert School and the Taft School, at Watertown, Connecticut, before he left to join the United States Naval Reserve Corps. In 1918, he matriculated at the Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University, while still a member of the Naval unit, and was graduated in 1923, a Bachelor of Science. That same year he initiated his industrial career with the Automatic Refrigerating Company, but in 1924, became associated with the Hart Manufacturing Company. Starting in the production department of the corporation, he ran the gamut of various positions, being successively production manager, purchasing agent, sales manager and general manager, his present executive office.

Mr. Alvord is a Republican in politics and constructively interested in movements and organizations which promote the progress of the Hartfords and the welfare of their people. He is a member of the Hartford Club, the Hartford Golf Club, the Farmington Valley Polo Club, and the Yale Club, of New York. His college fraternity is Theta Zi, and he worships at the Asylum Hill Congregational Church.

On October 25, 1924, Curtis Hunt Alvord married Katharine Fuller Gaylord, daughter of Edward B. and Belle (Robinson) Gaylord, the former of whom is a native of Winsted. Mr. and Mrs. Alvord are the parents of three children: 1. Sylvia Whiting, born March 8, 1926. 2. Curtis Hunt, Jr., born September 26, 1927. 3. Nancy, born May 1, 1931.

THEODORE ANDREW PALMER—One of Connecticut's foremost citizens, Theodore Andrew Palmer has made a notable contribution to the life of his times, carrying on farming operations at Ellington and serving as a justice of the peace since 1928. His was the distinction of being this community's first fire chief, and he is still a member of the department. His interest in varied social problems has won for him the warm affection of his fellow citizens, and he is respected and honored in every circle in which he is known.

Mr. Palmer was born December 17, 1893, in Hopkinton, Rhode Island, son of Everett P., a Rhode Island farmer, and Annie (Jackson) Palmer.

Receiving his early education in the public schools, Theodore Andrew Palmer later attended Hope Valley High School and Rhode Island State College, class of 1916, also taking a special summer course at Columbia University, New York City, in mathematics and athletics.

Leaving school, he worked first in the employ of H. A. Kirby in the capacity of farm manager. Leaving Mr. Kirby, he attached himself to the Riggs School for Boys, at Lakeville, Connecticut, as an instructor, for a few months. Then he spent a year as a teacher of animal husbandry at Rhode Island State College. Returning to the Riggs School, he stayed there for seven years, teaching several different subjects and serving as athletic instructor. During the later period of his stay there, the Riggs School for Boys was known as the Indian Mountain School. At length he left Lakeville to become associated with the Shawmet Company, of Boston, Massachusetts, where he remained a short time before coming to Ellington. In Ellington he bought a farm, on which he has remained down to the time of writing.

In 1928, he was made a justice of peace in Ellington. He is a member of the local Fire Department, which he formerly headed as Ellington's first fire chief. One of his major interests is in child welfare work, which he has promoted along many lines. In 1918, after the United States entered the World War, Mr. Palmer was assigned to Camp Devens and given the rank of sergeant, which he held for a short time. Then he was sent to Officers' Training School at Camp Grant, Illinois, being honorably discharged from the army on December 4, 1918. He is a member of the Ellington Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry and of the Beta Phi fraternity, which he joined at Rhode Island State College. He worships in the faith of the Congregational Church.

At Fall River, Massachusetts, on February 28, 1919, Theodore Andrew Palmer married Ruth Townly, daughter of John R. and Mary (Borden) Townly. The children of this marriage were the following: 1. Theodore T., born October 25, 1920, enrolled as a student at Connecticut State College in the autumn of 1938. 2. Ruth E., born March 13, 1922, a student at Rockville High School. 3. Lois C., born August 29, 1928, attending the public schools of Ellington.

HERBERT HODGES READ, JR.—Throughout his business life Herbert Hodges Read, Jr., has been connected with the textile industry in Massachusetts and Connecticut. He was born in Fall River, Massachusetts, June 16, 1891, son of H. H. and Susan E. (Fenno) Read. The Read name is as old as New England history, and one John Fenno came from Lancashire, England, to settle at Milton, Massachusetts, as early as 1660.

Mr. Read, Sr., was notable for his identification with street railways from about the time of their electrification. He was treasurer of the old Globe Street Railroad of Fall River, and later was with the Old Colony Street Railroad, the Bay Street Railroad, and, at the time of his death, September 12, 1929, was auditor for the Eastern Massachusetts Street Railways, at Boston. He was a native of Fall River, Massachusetts, and a member of prominent old families in the State.

Mr. Read, Jr., after completing his education in the public schools of Fall River and the Durfee High School, entered the Durfee Textile Institute, from which he was graduated. He entered the employ of the Davis Mills, Fall River, and remained in its carding department from 1911 to 1915. He then was with the Durfee Mills until the outbreak of the World War, at least so far as the United States was concerned, when he enlisted for army service. After attending the Officers' Training Camp, at Plattsburg, New York, he received a commission and was assigned to the Coast Artillery. He went overseas with Battery E, of the 45th Coast Artillery Corps, and was on active duty abroad for eight months. Upon his return to civilian life, Mr. Read became overseer of carding operations in the Durfee Mills from 1919 to 1921, and then, for the following two years, was connected with the Davis Mills as overseer of its carding department, and also assistant superintendent. From 1923 to 1934, he was superintendent of carding and spinning at the American Print Mills, Fall River. Since 1934, he has been with the Grosvenor Dale Company, at North Grosvenor Dale, Connecticut, as overseer of carding, and more recently has been one of the superintendents of two immense plants of the corporation which manufacture fine cotton goods. Mr. Read was an incorporator of the Fall River Savings Bank, and is a member of the Narragansett Club, of Tiverton, Rhode Island. He is fraternally affiliated with King Philip's Lodge (Fall River), Free and Accepted Masons. His favorite recreation is the sailing of salt water craft.

M. J. DIXON VAN ZANDT—Clerk, sailor, explorer and railroad engineer, M. J. Dixon Van Zandt, after traveling the world around and spending years in the Arctic wastes, is now established in Willimantic as a partner in the firm of Avery and Van Zandt, funeral directors and embalmers.

M. J. Dixon Van Zandt was born in New Baltimore, New York, March 21, 1872, son of Gillette J. and Jennie L. (Chapman) Van Zandt. Mrs. Jennie L. (Chapman) Van Zandt, a native of Coxsackie, New York, is now living in Florence, Massachusetts, in her eighty-seventh year. Gillette J. Van Zandt, a native of New Baltimore, New York, was a traveling representative of the Lorillard Tobacco Company and established his family in Willimantic about 1885, some fifteen years before his death in 1900.

M. J. Dixon Van Zandt, after passing through the public schools in the vicinity of Willimantic, found employment as a clerk in the music store of A. C. Andrews, in Willimantic, in 1881, remaining there until 1891, when he went to sea, shipping on the "S. B. Hitchcock," a sailing ship owned by the I. F. Chapman Company, of New York. The "Hitchcock" rounded Cape Horn, an experience now all but impossible in a sailing ship, and, after a hundred and forty-four days, arrived at San Francisco, loading there a cargo of wheat and barley for Liverpool, England, and returning to New York with a half-cargo of salt in the spring of 1892. For the next two years, Mr. Van Zandt moved about through various occupations, including a place as a spinner in the Leonard Silk Mills in Northampton, Massachusetts, where he spent six months, and clerk for another half-year in a music store in Kingston, New York. Then the sea called again, and Mr. Van Zandt shipped out on the "Hitchcock" once more, leaving her, however, in San Francisco, in the autumn of 1894, to join the United States Coast Guard Cutter "Bear," the most famous ship in the revenue service of the nation. On June 14, 1894, while on the "Bear," he assisted in the rescue of the captain and his nine-man crew of the bark "James Allen," which was wrecked in April of that year on Umnak Island, one of the Aleutian Group. The party was starving, and men reported that one member had died June seventh and they had eaten him. The rest of the party were returned to civilization on the "Bear." The "Bear," after a lifetime of glorious adventure in the waters north of Alaska, fighting seal pirates and bringing medical aid and justice and food to the Eskimos and whalers of the Arctic icelands, served Admiral Byrd on his expedition to the South Pole recently. Mr. Van Zandt served from April, 1894, to November, 1895, on the "Bear," making two voyages to the Arctic. During these voyages he was concerned in the Federal government's experiment in providing food for the Eskimos along the Alaskan Coast—obtaining reindeer from the Russian government and bringing them across to the station at Point Clarence, Alaska. In 1895, Mr. Van Zandt, turning his back finally upon the lure of the sea, returned to Northampton, Massachusetts, where he worked for two years, and then, in 1898, he came home to Willimantic, taking his first job of all in the music store of A. C. Andrews. However, after his life of adventure, this was too uneventful an existence and, in 1901, he went with the Central Vermont Railroad as a fireman, leaving that road shortly to take a similar job at Providence with the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad. In February, 1907, Mr. Van Zandt was promoted to engineer and he drove locomotives for the New Haven until 1923, when he resigned to return to Willimantic and to become associated with Fred L. Avery (q. v.) in their funeral establishment. Mr. Van Zandt entered this partnership after obtaining his diploma from the Renouard Training School of Embalming, of New York. Mr. Van Zandt is deeply interested in several fraternal organizations, particularly the Masonic bodies, being a member of Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, Free and Accepted Masons, of Willimantic; Trinity Chapter, No. 9, Royal Arch Masons; Olive Branch Council, No. 10, Royal and Select Masters; St. John's Commandery, No. 11, Knights Templar; Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Hartford, and the National League of Masonic Clubs. Mr. Van Zandt is also a member and Past Grand Chancellor of the Knights of Pythias and belongs to the Willimantic Country Club, the Exchange Club, of Willimantic, being a past president and past district governor of the organization, and the Arctic Club, of New York City, a society which, in 1913, became affiliated with the Explorers' Club, of New York City. Mr. Van Zandt is also a member of the Willimantic Congregational Church.

M. J. Dixon Van Zandt married, in Willimantic, June 14, 1906, Mary A. Terry, daughter of Daniel Terry, of Middletown. Mr. and Mrs. Van Zandt are the parents of a daughter: Barbara, a graduate of Windham High School, Bates College, and Bryant College, of Providence, Rhode Island.

ST. AUGUSTINE'S CHURCH, BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT—The Catholic history of Bridgeport embraces a long period of years. In 1830, the Rev. James Fitton, a missionary, celebrated Mass at the home of James McCullough, in Middle Street, for a congregation consisting of seventeen or eighteen souls of different ages. From 1832 to 1837 the Rev. James McDermott visited this community, saying Mass in Mr. Farrell's residence in the same street. At the time of his first visitation there were ninety Catholics in Bridgeport. The Rev. James Smyth, of New Haven, followed Father McDermott, coming once a month for several years. He erected the old brick church at Arch Street and Washington Avenue, the first in Connecticut. It was dedicated on July 24, 1843, as St. James' Church, and boasted two hundred and fifty souls in its membership. The building measured sixty by forty feet and had a sacristy and a choir gallery. On November 18, 1844, the Rev. Michael Lynch succeeded Father Smyth, and two years later the membership of the church had grown to three hundred souls. He remained in charge until August 12, 1852. During that same period the Rev. Patrick Lamb, one of the Church's noted followers, was attached to St. James'. In August, 1852, the Rev. Thomas J. Synott began his pastorate, continuing his good work for thirty-two years. He was an active laborer for the Christian cause and an acceptable and successful pastor. His accomplishments attest his splendid energy. In the first three years of his ministry he enlarged the church edifice, built St. Mary's Church, at Crescent Avenue and Church Street, Bridgeport, and also erected St. Thomas' Church, in Fairfield.

Old St. James' Church carried on its work until 1865. At that time Father Synott purchased a fine t at Washington Avenue and Poquonock Street, ridgeport, and erected a new building, the cornertone of which was laid on August 28, 1865. The hurch was opened for public worship on March 17, 869, and was dedicated even earlier (in June, 1868), y Bishop McFarland, as St. Augustine's Church. e also erected St. Agnes' Convent, bought forty cres of land in the northern part of the city, and urchased the Billings property, now used as the arochial residence.

Father Synott died on Wednesday, April 30, 1884, ged sixty-six years, at the old parochial residence Poquonock Street, and the Rev. Augustine ewitt, C.S.P., preached the funeral eulogy. As a tizen he had distinguished himself by his upright, onest and sincere conduct, and as a priest he was upholder of the doctrine of the Church. He as for several years a member of the Board of ducation. He was succeeded by the Rev. Michael Kelly, who took up his residence on the Billings tate and opened the new convent for a select ademy. He also purchased St. Michael's Cemery. The parish also has two other cemeteries, St. mes's and St. Augustine's. Father Kelly died in ptember, 1887, and was succeeded by the Very ev. Denis Cremin on November 1. Father Cremin, a cost of $3,000, renovated the rectory, which, January 18, 1888, was partially destroyed by fire. ter it was rebuilt. The parochial school opened d the church spire was built in 1894, the year in ich the Very Rev. Father Cremin was elevated to e rank of Monsignor.

At his death, Monsignor Cremin was succeeded the Rev. Charles E. McElory, who came from rby to be permanent pastor of St. Augustine's. died on May 20, 1914, and was succeeded by Rev. James B. Nihill, of St. Patrick's Church. ther Nihill acquired additional land and erected a w and commodious convent for the teachers of parochial school. He remodeled the school, and entire pastorate here was marked by untiring ergy. He died August 26, 1924. On September 1924, the Right Rev. Peter Hugh McClean came m Milford, Connecticut, to be pastor.

Born in Stamford, Connecticut, November 29, 2, Father McClean was the son of Hugh and ia (Ryle) McClean, natives of Ireland. Hugh Clean came to this country in 1850, and married, St. John's Church, Stamford, Connecticut. He s a contractor and builder, and also operated a ge dairy. At his death in 1897 he left an estate ued at a half million dollars. His wife died in 9. They were the parents of ten children, and seven survive: 1. Nellie A. 2. Peter Hugh, of this sketch. 3-4. James F., and Minnie L. (twins), the latter now the widow of Thomas Stark. 5. Margaret L., who is Mrs. Phineas Taylor Vize. 6. Julia Ryan. 7. Hugh V. McClean, of Portland, Oregon.

After being graduated from Stamford High School, Father McClean first taught in the public schools of Stamford, then prepared for the priesthood, spending five years at St. Charles' College, in Ellicott City, Maryland, and later attending St. John's Seminary, in Brighton, Massachusetts. He took a post-graduate course at the Catholic University, Washington, D. C., and his first assignment in the priesthood was at St. Andrew's, Colchester. Still later he was assigned to Hartford Cathedral. There he was named head of the diocesan missionary board and appointed, 1898, pastor in Milford. During his pastorate in Milford he founded Lauralton Hall after purchasing the property of Henry A. Taylor, and also built three summer chapels: St. Agnes', at Woodmont, St. Anne's, at Devon and St. Gabriel's at Walnut Beach; and also rebuilt St. Mary's Church, Milford, Connecticut, and purchased the rectory on Broad Street, where the priests still reside. Continuing his missionary work until 1924, he was named, in that year, pastor of St. Augustine's Church, at Bridgeport, by Bishop Nilan, being elevated to the rank of Monsignor on March 11, 1932, by Pope Pius XI. Father McClean served on the Board of Synodal Examiners of the Clergy, and is now connected with the Board of Bishop's Consultors. He is a member of the Knights of Columbus, Holy Name Society, Rotary Club and Travel Club of America. He has achieved distinction as a public speaker and lecturer, and has preached at more church dedications than any other priest in the diocese. He was lecturer in Holy Cross Academy at Washington, D. C., and Lauralton Hall at Milford and the public schools at Bridgeport. He is loved by his parishioners and draws his friends from all walks of life.

Father McClean, S.T.L., P.R., has carried on his work as rector of St. Augustine's down to the present, making a valuable contribution to the parish and to the people of the Bridgeport community. He has come to be widely and favorably known, and his work has brought him friends in all walks of life. On January 25, 1897, he preached at the dedication of the basement of St. Bridget's Church, Manchester, Connecticut, and on January 16, 1898, he delivered the dedicatory address at All Saints' Mission, Somersville.

St. Augustine's Church, dating back to the sixties of the last century, is of gray granite structure, the granite being taken from the quarries of North Bridgeport and costing $100,000. The Sisters' Home was completed in 1881 from granite at a cost of $100,000, the granite coming from Plymouth, Connecticut. An important part of the work of the parish has been that performed in connection with the parish school. The first Catholic School in Bridgeport was opened in the house of Mr. Coyle, being taught by Mary Quigley and attended by twenty-five pupils. In 1874 Father Synott began erection of the present school building.

In November 2, 1937, at a special ceremony, an impressive white marble altar in the center of St. Michael's Cemetery was blessed by the Most Rev. Maurice F. McAuliffe, Bishop of Hartford, as a memorial to the entire cemetery. The structure, erected at a cost of about $20,000, replaced a large wooden cross that had to be removed from the cemetery some years ago. Catholic Church law requires that a large cross be placed in each consecrated cemetery. The altar, protected by a semicircular granite rail, has five bronze statues, which were made in Italy, with a crucifixion in the center, about sixteen feet above the altar. On the left is the Blessed Virgin; on the right, St. John; at the foot of the cross, Mary Magdalene. At each end of the memorial, resting on granite pedestals, are two angels with trumpets, facing right and left. At the base of the altar are two vaults, one containing the remains of the Very Rev. Monsignor Cremin. The circle, with stone curbing about the memorial, is eighty feet in diameter, and graves of priests are set from a pivot all around the edge, each with proper headstones. Sufficient room has been set aside for a second row of graves in a circle. The approach to the altar is a flag-stone walk.

Active in the planning of this memorial and of many other improvements at St. Augustine's Church, Father McClean has earned the warm satisfaction and support of the members of his parish and the people of the community. He is widely known and honored, and beloved by his parishioners.

AIME J. MARTINEAU—Throughout his career in the City of Willimantic, which spans over thirty-eight years, Aime J. Martineau, mortician and founder of the Martineau-Bacon Company, Incorporated, has occupied a prominent place in the social, civic and business life of the community.

Mr. Martineau was born in Quebec, Canada, February 22, 1880, the son of Tellesphore J. and Julia (Lamontagne) Martineau, both natives of his birthplace. After a general education in the public schools of Quebec he matriculated at Levis College, Point Levis, Canada, and won a scholarship for excellence in his studies which enabled him to take a six-month business course. He began his career with the greenhouse and florist department of the Canadian Government, and four years later, in 1900, came to Willimantic and entered the store of H. E. Remington as a clerk. During his association with this firm, which was one of the largest clothing houses in the city, he acquired valuable experience and contributed substantially to the management of the concern. In 1905, he severed his connections with the Remington Company and secured employment in a local grocery store, where he worked until 1909. In the meantime he had conserved sufficient funds to enable him to pursue his own ambitions. Thus we find him enrolling at the Barnes School of Embalming and Science of Anatomy College in New York City, from which he was graduated in 1910. The same year he passed the required examinations in New York State and this State and established a mortuary and also was a clerk with the J. C. Lincoln Furniture Company, where he remained five years, when he established his own furniture business, the A. J. Martineau Furniture Company.

He prospered and eventually removed to his present location, which he purchased. Here he opened a furniture store, which he has conducted since in conjunction with his other work. The establishment is one of the largest and most modern household furnishings emporiums in the county and enjoys a wide patronage. In a professional capacity Mr. Martineau is a member of the Emergency Squadron of Morticians.

Along with his business accomplishments Mr. Martineau has also been an influential and active figure in the social and civic affairs of his surroundings. He is a former president, secretary and brigadier general of the Franco-American Brigade of the New England States, an organization of over three thousand members. He also belongs to and is a former captain of the Guard Florimond, of Willimantic, a local department of the Franco-American Brigade; belongs to the Willimantic Rotary Club, the local chamber of commerce and fraternizes with the Knights of Columbus, San Jose Council, fourth degree, and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in which he has served as a member of the local board of governors for the past ten years. He is a member of the Loyal Order of Moose, Lodge

No. 1440, Willimantic, the Chamber of Commerce, St. Jean de Baptiste Society, Union St. Jean de Baptiste Society, and the Civic and Social Club. Though an independent in his political views and one who has never actively sought public office, Mr. Martineau has been persuaded on occasions to occupy positions of trust. Thus, in 1924, he was elected a member of the Willimantic Board of Aldermen and was reelected in 1926, indicating the confidence and esteem he was held in by his constituents. He is a devout adherent of the Roman Catholic faith and is now chairman of the reorganization committee of St. Mary's Church of this denomination in Willimantic. A sportsman, who is both fond of bowling and fishing, Mr. Martineau indulges these hobbies both in his home community and in Florida, where he has been spending the winter seasons in more recent years.

On June 2, 1902, Mr. Martineau married Alphonsine Bacon, daughter of Napoleon and Simerez (Routhier) Bacon, who were among the foremost French-Canadian residents of Willimantic during this generation. She was born in this city on February 26, 1884.

FRED L. AVERY—Partner of the firm Avery and Van Zandt, funeral directors and embalmers, of Willimantic, Fred L. Avery is both a descendant of one of the Colonial families of Connecticut and an active civic leader of modern Windham County.

Fred L. Avery was born in Lebanon, July 9, 1882, son of Elisha Benjamin and Angelina (Loring) Avery. Mrs. Avery was, at the time of her death, one of five of the last actual Daughters of the American Revolution in the United States. Elisha Benjamin Avery, a native of North Stonington, and a farmer in Lebanon, was a direct descendant of Captain James Avery, a pioneer settler of Groton, where the Avery Homestead still stands.

Fred L. Avery, after passing through the public chools of Lebanon and the Windham High School, ntered the Massachusetts College of Embalming in Boston, graduating in 1903. Mr. Avery, while a tudent, entered the service of Hiram L. Fenn, of Villimantic, when but sixteen years of age, aiding Mr. Fenn in his dual business as a picture framer nd an undertaker. Mr. Avery continued this association all through his school days and for a year fter graduating from the College of Embalming. n 1904, however, Mr. Avery went to New Britain o work for B. C. Porter and Sons, undertakers, nd then, after three years there, went to New Haven nd spent a year with the firm of Graham and Hayes. Then, in 1908, he returned to Willimantic and worked with Hiram L. Fenn until 1912, when he entered the employ of the firm of Jay M. Sheppard, continuing until March 1, 1923, when Mr. Avery and Mr. M. J. Dixon Van Zandt (q. v.) purchased the interest of the estate of Jay M. Sheppard and formed the present partnership of Avery and Van Zandt. Always interested in civic concerns during the past thirty years, Mr. Avery has devoted considerable time and energy to advancing the welfare of Windham County in general and Willimantic in particular, being a director of the Willimantic Young Men's Christian Association since 1923, a director of the Willimantic Welfare Board for the past five years, a director of the Boy Scouts of America Committee for the Second Connecticut District, past president of the Willimantic Rotary Club and a member of the Willimantic Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Avery is also deeply interested in fraternal organizations, being a member of Willimantic Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; Past Patron of Radiant Chapter, No. 11, Order of the Eastern Star; a member of Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44, Free and Accepted Masons, of Willimantic; Trinity Chapter No. 9, Royal Arch Masons; Olive Branch Council, No. 10, Royal and Select Masters; treasurer of St. John's Commandery, No. 11, Knights Templar; the Hartford Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; Past Grand of Obinebetuck Lodge, No. 16, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Windham Encampment, No. 16; and Grand Patriarch of the Grand Encampment of the State of Connecticut. Mr. Avery is also a member of the Willimantic Congregational Church.

Fred L. Avery married in Willimantic, April 3, 1912, Lois E. Burnham, daughter of Amos and Martha (Billings) Burnham, of Scotland, Connecticut. Mrs. Avery is a member of the Willimantic Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, the Willimantic Women's Club and the Rebekahs.

SYDNEY SALISBURY BREESE—A native mechanical genius has served to establish Sydney Salisbury Breese, of Brooklyn, Connecticut, among the prominent American inventors of this generation. He is a pioneer automotive engineer and manufacturer and is listed among the early developers of the modern hydroplane. In his work Mr. Breese has been associated with some of the outstanding men of science, among them Alexander Graham Bell, with whom he worked a few years prior to the latter's death. More recently he has devoted himself to farming on part of the old Putnam homestead in Brooklyn, which he purchased during the summer of 1936.

Mr. Breese was born in New York City, March 15, 1884, the son of James Lawrence and Frances Tileton (Potter) Breese. He completed his general education at the Groton School in 1901, and then matriculated at Harvard University from which he was graduated with the class of 1905. From boyhood he demonstrated a keen interest and aptitude for mechanics, a talent which found expression before leaving Groton. At the time he became associated with Charles L. Lawrance, a classmate, and together they designed and built what is said to have been the first automobile sliding transmission gear. Upon finishing his studies at Harvard he and Mr. Lawrance organized Breese, Lawrance and Moulton, and built the first Breese-Lawrance-Moulton cars for commercial trade. During the years that followed he became interested in aviation and built one of the first successful hydroplanes. His ability in this field was to be widely sought during this time. In the early days of the World War he was retained to design and build training planes. Later, he joined the United States Navy and was commissioned a lieutenant in the Bureau of Construction. After the war he worked with Alexander Graham Bell and took out a joint patent on the development of a hydrofoil boat, which Mr. Breese still holds in conjunction with the Bell estate.

In more recent years he has been experimenting with yeast with the view of using it as a fertilizer. In this connection he now holds an interest in a yeast plant in Nova Scotia.

In August, 1936, Mr. Breese and his family came to Brooklyn and settled on the one hundred and forty acre Putnam homestead, which was built about 1756, and is located near the Pomfret line. On this property, formerly owned by General Israel Putnam of Revolutionary War fame, Mr. Breese is now growing potatoes and raising pigs and poultry. In addition to these activities he continues to conduct engineering experimental work, which at one time in his life he was compelled to give up for a period of five years due to the condition of his eyes.

Mr. Breese and his wife are prominent in Pomfret and New York society. He is a member of several clubs, among them the Cruising Club of America, in which he is one of the four original founders, and the Harvard Club of New York City. As an undergraduate he belonged to the Institute of 1770, at Harvard.

In May, 1921, Mr. Breese married Paula Adams Matsner, daughter of William N. and Augusta O. (Basseches) Matsner, and sister of Dr. Eric M. Matsner, who is a famous gynecologist in New York City. Her mother was a highly successful and prominent rubber dealer during her active career and is now living retired. Mr. and Mrs. Breese are the parents of two sons: 1. Sydney Salisbury, Jr., who was born in New York City, in April, 1922, and is now a student at Phillips Academy in Andover, Massachusetts. 2. James L., who was born in New York City, in April, 1923.

MILTON H. FRIEDBERG—As one of the younger business men of Bridgeport, Milton H. Friedberg has won a reputation for professional abilities, public service and progressive citizenship. He is a native of New York City, born there May 17, 1900, the son of Samuel and Ethel (Schweidle) Friedberg, both of whom came from Russia at an early age and quickly absorbed American ideas and ideals. Samuel Friedberg, now retired, was active in the automobile accessory business in Bridgeport, where he now resides.

Milton H. Friedberg was educated in the grammar and high schools of Bridgeport, and New York University, graduating from the School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance. After completing his college education he passed the required examinations as a certified public accountant and since 1922, he has been the senior partner of the firm of Milton H. Friedberg and Company, one of the largest concerns in Connecticut engaged in accounting. It serves a large clientele throughout New England and New York.

In 1931, Mr. Friedberg was appointed city auditor of Bridgeport, an office he has filled with noteworthy efficiency since. He is a past president of the Bridgeport Chapter of the National Association of Cost Accountants; vice-president of the Connecticut Society of Certified Public Accountants; member of the American Institute of Accountants, and of the Municipal Finance Officers' Association. Fraternally, Mr. Friedberg is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and is also a member of the Mill River Country Club. He is treasurer of the American Hotels Corporation, and also of B'Nai Israel Temple. He is especially interested and active in welfare work and organizations.

At Bridgeport, Connecticut, October 28, 1922, Milton H. Friedberg married Isabelle Victoria Lansdowne, daughter of Robert and Katherine (Miller) Lansdowne, of Bridgeport, and they are the parents of three children: 1. Millicent. 2. Carol Ann. 3. Clayton Friedberg.

CHARLES G. SCHELL—Willimantic numbers among its enterprising business men Charles G. Schell, who, after activities in a variety of fields, made this city his headquarters and home. His record is one of deserved success, of good citizenship, and of readiness to serve the public at large.

Mr. Schell was born at West Hartford, June 17, 1898, son of Charles H. and Annie M. (Barnes) Schell. His father, who died in 1930, was a native of Boston, who later moved to West Hartford. He is credited with being the first to sell milk in the now familiar glass bottle, in the Fitchburg, Massachusetts, section, and the first dairyman to pasteurize milk in the Hartford area. In 1909, he removed to Collinsville, Connecticut, where he leased the W. E. Simonds farm and operated a business dealing in ice and coal, which he continued for a number of years. He also had the first bus franchise between Collinsville and Unionville. In later years he lived in North Coventry, where he farmed up to the time of his death.

The parents of Charles G. Schell moved to Collinsville when he was eleven years old and he was reared on the farm and early learned the good and bad features of agriculture. He worked on the farm while going to school and during vacations, and his academic education ended when he left the Rockville High School to start earning a livelihood. His first important employment away from home was with his brother-in-law, A. J. Vinton, of Coventry, who owned a public garage and sold automobiles. Charles G. Schell was in charge of the repairs department for about three years, when he quit to spend a couple of years in the woods in north Windham County, lumbering. Then he came to Willimantic, and for seven years was with the American Thread Company, of this city.

When he left this large corporation it was to try selling oil burners in the Willimantic and contiguous sections. It was a comparatively new method of heating, and Mr. Schell found it no easy work to promote his "Silent Glow Oil Burner." Keeping everlastingly at it, it paid revenues, however, and his first small office on Church Street, Willimantic, was soon outgrown, and he moved his headquarters to No. 363 Main Street, where he set up a relatively small shop. Later, he occupied space in the Capitol Theatre Building, but after three months, went in March, 1936, to his present establishment at No. 810 Main Street. At that time he added the famous Westinghouse appliances and equipment, and more recently has been selling Bendix machines and several noted makes of ranges and heating devices. Heating and plumbing remain the important part of his business. Mr. Schell is interested in any movement or organization that makes for the progress of Willimantic and the happiness of its people. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Willimantic Chamber of Commerce. He and his family are identified with the Congregational Church of North Windham.

At North Windham, on April 27, 1921, Charles G. Schell married Bernice Tucker, daughter of Charles and Anne (Freeman) Tucker, both natives of Connecticut. Mrs. Schell is a graduate of the Willimantic High School and of Danbury Normal School, and is now engaged as a teacher of mathematics at Nautchaug, Connecticut. Mr. and Mrs. Schell are the parents of a daughter, Shirley Carolyn, born November 12, 1922, at North Windham. She is a senior at the Windham High School, of Willimantic, and is an accomplished pianist.

BENJAMIN STEWART—As president and treasurer of the Bridgeport Deoxidized Bronze and Metal Company, Benjamin Stewart has earned the admiration and confidence of all whose privilege it has been to know him or be in any way associated with him. His interest in Bridgeport and Connecticut affairs has been extensive, and his activities have been wholly constructive.

Mr. Stewart was born February 16, 1876, in Glasgow, Scotland, son of Craig and Janet (Livingston) Stewart. His grandfather, Benjamin Stewart, was born under a tent while his parents were with the British Army in India; for in those days the Army men who went out to India took their wives with them. Grandfather Benjamin Stewart became a shipbuilder on the River Clyde. On the mother's side of the house Benjamin Stewart traces his ancestry to David Livingston, an African explorer and missionary, through Deborah Knox, who was a member of the famous Scottish clan of that name. She achieved fame for fighting narcotics for many years all over the world. She became the wife of Rev. Ben Livingston and lived in Boston, Massachusetts. Many of the Livingstons and the Stewarts were textile workers in Great Britain. Craig Stewart, Benjamin Stewart's father, was a moulder by trade.

Benjamin Stewart was seven years of age when he was brought by his family from his native land of Scotland to Warren, Massachusetts, to live. He attended the schools of Warren, there remaining until his family removed to Stamford, Connecticut. He was sixteen years old when he entered the employ of the noted Yale and Towne Lock Company as an apprentice and proceeded to learn the lock manufacturing business in all its details. When he was nineteen years of age he went to Brooklyn, New York, with the Ligerwood Hoisting Engine Company, remaining for five months. Afterward he secured employment successively in the Arnolds Foundry and Norwalk Iron Works at Norwalk, Connecticut. For about a year he remained with each organization, then proceeded to Bridgeport to be associated with the Eaton Cole and Burnham Company. The company, during his period of employment there, was taken over by the Crane Company, of Chicago, but Mr. Stewart stayed for ten years with the organization despite this change in management.

It was in 1916 that he joined forces with the Bridgeport Deoxidized Bronze and Metal Company, starting his work here as foreman. When R. D. Whipple retired from the presidency of the organization, in 1935, Mr. Stewart was made president and treasurer, and in these positions he still continues (1938). The company operates the largest jobbing foundry of bronze and brass in New England, employing about seventy-five hands. His contribution to the business life of Bridgeport has been a valuable one, and his city, his State and his times have benefitted from his many-sided and constructive labors.

During the Spanish-American War, Mr. Stewart enlisted in the United States Volunteer Army and was stationed at Steelton, Pennsylvania, and Summerville, South Carolina, and then at Savannah, Georgia. Holding the rank of sergeant he was honorably discharged from the service in 1899. He had enlisted in the National Guard of Connecticut, at Stamford, where he joined Company C, as a private and won advancement to first lieutenant. He entered the service in 1894 and served until 1902. In 1915, he was made Department Commander, United Spanish War Veterans of Connecticut. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons; is a Past Noble Grand of Arcanum Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows; is treasurer of the Masonic Club, of Bridgeport, and a member of the First Baptist Church here.

At Stamford, Connecticut, in 1900, Benjamin Stewart married Evangeline LeJune Demarest, daughter of William N. and Evangeline (Thoms) Demarest. Born at Stamford, Connecticut, her ancestors were of French Huguenot Revolutionary stock, residents for generations in New Jersey. Members of her family served in the War Between the States. Mrs. Stewart is a life member of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and a member of Orient Chapter, Order of Eastern Star, in which she was an organist for many years. She is a member of the First Baptist Church here. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart are the parents of three children: 1. Douglas Craig, associated with D. M. Read Company. He married, and is the father of a son, Douglas Craig, Jr., and a daughter, Joan Demarest. 2. Livingston Nelson, a moulder by trade. 3. Grace Evangeline.

T. MORRIS MURRAY, M.D.—The beautiful town of Pomfret has attracted many notable personages who have made their home here. Not the least of these was the late Dr. T. Morris Murray, famous ear, nose and throat specialist, of Washington, D. C.

Dr. Murray was born July 5, 1851, in Baltimore, Maryland, and was descended on the maternal side from Lord Baltimore. His great-grandmother was the Baroness D'Artselaer, of Belgium, her father coming to America after Napoleon's victory in Belgium. Another ancestor was George Calvert, of Maryland. Dr. Murray prepared for his formal education at the Bishop Doane School, Burlington, New Jersey, and then entered St. John's College, Annapolis, Maryland. His medical studies were taken at the University of Virginia. After an interneship in the American Hospital, at Baltimore, he then inaugurated a general practice in this city.

In 1884, Dr. Murray went abroad to study in Europe, and matriculated at universities and hospitals in Vienna, Berlin, and other great medical centers. One of the men under whom he studied at this time was the famous Sir Morrell McKenzie, of London, England, physician to the Emperor Frederick. When Dr. McKenzie went to Berlin to attend the Emperor in his last illness, Dr. Murray was appointed to fill his place at the hospital in London. He returned to the United States a thoroughly well trained otolaryngologist, at a time when such specialists were rare. He won a national repute for the diagnosis and treatment of the diseases of the ear, nose, throat and associated strictures. At one time he was the Professor of Rhinology and Laryngology in Georgetown University, and served on the staffs of the Garfield and Emergency Hospitals at Washington, D. C. His favorite professional organization was the Laryngological Society of America, although he affiliated with a number of scientific, medical and surgical associations, including the American Medical Association. Very much of a clubman, he was a member of the Metropolitan, Chevy Chase, Grasslands Country, of Washington; the Somerset and others of Boston; and the Light House Club, of Currituck, North Carolina. Dr. Murray retired from active practice in 1910, and soon after made his home at Pomfret, Connecticut, where he died on December 16, 1934.

In Pomfret, on July 11, 1910, Dr. T. Morris Murray, married Eleanor Vinton Clark, daughter of the late Randolph Clark, a prominent banker, of Boston. Mrs. T. Morris Murray traces her lineage to passengers on the "Mayflower" along nine different lines. One of her ancestors is John White, a founder of Hartford.

JOHN R. ALLEN—Proprietor of the John R. Allen Insurance Agency, a general insurance establishment of Willimantic, John R. Allen is one of the leading insurance men of his city, conducting a large and successful business.

John R. Allen was born in North Rochester, New Hampshire, December 18, 1910, son of John M. and Sarah (Shackford) Allen. John M. Allen, a native of Ireland, learned the trade of paper-maker in the old country and came to North Rochester, New Hampshire, when eighteen years of age. There, after being superintendent of the Spaulding Manufacturing Company, he established himself and later became superintendent of the Amesbury Paper Manufacturing Company, leaving that organization after four years to become the general manager of the Case Fiberboard Company at Andover, Connecticut, where he remained for twelve years, until 1930. That year he established his own plant in the village of Eagleville, in Mansfield, where he manufactures shoe findings, innersoles, counters and electrical boards.

John R. Allen, after passing through the public schools of Andover, attended the Windham High School, and then studied at the Manchester Trade School, where he studied mechanical drawing and carpentry. After graduation, he was employed for three years at the Case Fiberboard Company at Andover, leaving the firm to work for a short time for Hubert Collins, a contractor and former County Commissioner of Columbia County. Then, in 1934, he established the John R. Allen Insurance Agency, an enterprise which has prospered greatly. Mr. Allen is a member of Uriel Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, the Order of the Eastern Star, the Connecticut Grange, the Willimantic Country Club and the Willimantic Young Men's Christian Association. He also belongs to the South Coventry Congregational Church.

John R. Allen married at Coventry, May 25, 1935, Ruth G. Latimer, daughter of the Hon. Eugene W. Latimer, of Coventry.

MICHAEL DAVITT RIORDAN, M.D.—During his professional career in the city of Willimantic, which spans over twenty years, Dr. Michael Davitt Riordan has come to be recognized as one of the most able and successful physicians and surgeons in Windham County. Today he is identified with several of the leading medical institutions of this part of the State and is active in a social and civic capacity.

Dr. Riordan was born in Norwich, April 2, 1883, the son of Jeremiah and Ellen (Bircerce) Riordan, both deceased, the former in 1910 and the latter in 1934. His father, a native of Ireland, came to the United States during his youth and originally settled in the city of Boston, Massachusetts, where he learned the machinist's trade. Later, he removed to Norwich and became associated with the United States Printing Company, which he served as master mechanic for over thirty years. Dr. Riordan received the early part of his general education in the public schools of Norwich and completed this part of his studies at the Cushing Academy at Ashburnham, Massachusetts, in 1908. He then matriculated at the Vermont University College of Medicine from which he was graduated with the degree of Doctor of Medicine in the Class of 1912. Following completion of his training, he became an interne at the Waterbury General Hospital and served in the same capacity for the St. Mary's Hospital. In 1914 he established himself in a general practice at Waterbury and continued here until 1918, when he removed to Willimantic, where he has since continued with outstanding distinction and success as a physician and surgeon. He is one of the outstanding medical men of the community and enjoys an enviable reputation among his professional colleagues. Dr. Riordan is a member of the staff of the Windham Community Memorial Hospital of Willimantic, serves as health officer for the town of Windham and belongs to the American Medical Association and the Windham County Medical Society.

Throughout his residence in this section he has been active in a social and civic capacity, holding membership in several of the leading clubs and societies, among them the local lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the local council of the Knights of Columbus, the Willimantic Country Club, and the Willimantic Rotary Club. In his religious convictions he adheres to the Roman Catholic faith and worships at St. Joseph's Church of this denomination at Willimantic. He is fond of outdoor sports of all types and finds his principal diversions in the game of golf and shooting.

On September 19, 1919, at Waterbury, Dr. Riordan married Margaret Tobin, daughter of John Tobin, and they are the parents of two children: 1. Margaret English. 2. Michael Davitt, Jr.

IRWIN I. KRUG—Justice of the peace in the Town of Windham and one of the town's active attorneys, Irwin I. Krug is one of the three brothers who are all members of the legal profession—one brother, William Martin Krug, is prosecuting attorney and town counsel of Stafford Springs; the other brother, J. Henry Krug, is an attorney in the United States Department of Labor, in Washington, D. C.

Irwin I. Krug was born in Willimantic, September 19, 1909, son of Abraham and Mollie (Gluck) Krug. Abraham Krug, a native of Poland, came to Willimantic as a young man, probably one of the earliest Jewish residents of the city, and has engaged in business activities for the past thirty years.

After passing through the public schools of Willimantic, and graduating from the Windham High School in 1926, Irwin I. Krug entered New York University, graduating with the degree of Bachelor of Science in 1930. While at New York University, he was a member of the United States Reserve Officers' Training Corps. Selecting the legal profession for his career, Mr. Krug entered the Law School of Harvard University and received his degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1933. In June of the same year, he passed his bar examinations in both Massachusetts and Connecticut, and, that August, he established himself in private practice in Willimantic, being elected a justice of the peace in Windham, where he resides, in January, 1934. A member of the B'nai B'rith, Mr. Krug is a past president of the organization and also belongs to the Willimantic Chamber of Commerce.

JAMES P. MUSTARD—For thirty-five years James P. Mustard has been one of the most prominent and popular figures of the City of Willimantic and vicinity. Throughout this period he has been associated with several business and mercantile ventures here, and since 1913, has engaged in the insurance business, first, independently, later, as a partner of D. A. Lyman and Company, and more recently as the sole owner of the aforementioned firm, which is one of the largest general insurance agencies in this part of the State. He is also an officer in several other concerns, is active in public affairs and keenly interested in a number of social organizations, particularly the Masonic Order, in which he has held high office.

Mr. Mustard was born in Milton, Delaware, November 15, 1877, the son of John Hammon and Martha (Hickman) Mustard, both members of old and distinguished Delaware families. His father died in 1898, and his mother in 1925. Mr. Mustard attended public school in Milton, and Wilmington, Delaware, and after completing this part of his studies entered business college, from which he was graduated in 1896. He then began to read law in the offices of the Hon. Willard Saulsbury, United States Senator from Delaware, and about a year later discontinued this work to join the American Sugar Refining Company. From here he went with the Potter, Parlin Company, tea and coffee importers, and then removed to Pittsburgh to become secretary to the traffic manager of the National Tube Company. Later, he removed to New York City where he was secretary of the tea and coffee importing firm known as The W. C. Prather Company, and, in 1903, came to Willimantic to establish himself in a tea and coffee business which he was to conduct successfully for ten years. It was at the expiration of this period that he began his career in the insurance business, representing the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company. His success led to the partnership with Dwight A. Lyman on June 1, 1914, in a firm that has since operated under the style of D. A. Lyman and Company. Mr. Lyman died in March, 1930, and on April first, of that year, Mr. Mustard purchased the insurance business from the Lyman estate. Since that time he has continued to direct the activities of this venture, which is one of the largest general insurance agencies in Eastern Connecticut, and represents a number of large companies. Mr. Mustard is universally respected for his business achievements and is frequently sought for advice and counsel by both firms and individuals. In this connection he has served as secretary of the Willimantic Building and Loan Association for the past twenty-two years.

Throughout his residence in this section Mr. Mustard has been a popular and highly esteemed citizen, contributing substantially and usefully to the general welfare of his surroundings. For ten years he was town assessor of Windham where he also served as a member of the board of selectmen. At present he is a member of the Finance Board of the City of Willimantic. He is a member and former president of the Willimantic Rotary Club, the Willimantic Country Club, and is a former secretary of the Willimantic Chamber of Commerce.

Wm M. Stockwell M.D.

Fraternally, he is probably one of the most active and prominent members of the Masonic Order. He was raised in Ancient Lodge, No. 724, in New York City, and is now a member and Past Master of Eastern Star Lodge, No. 44. On March 14, 1907, he was exalted in Trinity Chapter, No. 9, Royal Arch Masons; was received into the Olive Branch Council, No. 10, Royal and Select Masters; on April 23, 1907, served as Thrice Illustrious Master for several terms; was Knighted May 10, 1909, in St. John's Commandery, No. 11, Knights Templar, elected Eminent Commander in 1918 and 1919; passed through the degrees of the Scottish Rite to the Connecticut Consistory, Valley of Norwich; is a Noble of Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, of Hartford; and serves as vice-president of the Masonic Charity and Educational Association, of Willimantic. He was elected Right Eminent Grand Commander at the one hundredth annual conclave of the Grand Commandery of the State of Connecticut, at New Haven, May 3, 1927, a choice that drew the following comment:

> It was a well-deserved honor that James P. Mustard should have received this high office, for he has always been an outstanding example of the high ideals of Templarism, with a background of exceptional good fellowship and wide experience. . . . Looking back in retrospect through the past years of association, seeking the "why" this man has won such high esteem, we find the secret—Sincerity, Service, Character. Always a true friend where friendship was deserved; always ready to serve where service was needed; always the exemplar of true manhood, winning respect and friendships among all those with whom he has associated.

In addition to this affiliation Mr. Mustard is also a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. In politics he is a Democrat.

On December 26, 1912, Mr. Mustard married (first) Ida Wilhelmina Potter, who died in 1931. They were the parents of two sons: 1. William Niles, who was graduated from Amherst College in the class of 1937, and is now taking post-graduate work in business administration. He is a former golf champion of the Willimantic Country Club and was a member of the golf team at Amherst. 2. Robert Hammon, who attended Williston Academy and is now a student at the Clark School in Hanover, New Hampshire. He also is a former and present golf champion of the Willimantic Country Club. Mr. Mustard married (second), in June, 1933, Mary Abbe Dorr, of Malden, Massachusetts, and they reside at No. 77 Windham Road, Willimantic.

WILLIAM MYRON STOCKWELL, M.D.—During the greater part of his professional career, which spans some thirty-five years, Dr. William Myron Stockwell has devoted his principal attention to the treatment and cure of tuberculosis and the progress of the campaign against this disease. He is a well-known specialist in his field and is now superintendent and medical director of the Cedarcrest Sanitorium at Newington, with which he has been associated since 1916.

Dr. Stockwell was born at New Britain, Connecticut, on November 21, 1880, a son of Myron David and Myra (Smith) Stockwell. He is a member of an old New England family originally established at Salem, Massachusetts, in 1635. Apparently the first in his line in the United States was Quenton Stockwell — brothers, Abel, John, Eleazer and Samuel — originally from Salem, Massachusetts. Dedham records of the family appear there in 1635. Quenton moved from Dedham to Deerfield in 1677, captured in the massacre of Deerfield and taken to Canada. When released, he moved to Branford, Connecticut, 1679, where his two sons, John and Eleazer, were born. The family later moved to Suffield in 1683. Quenton died January 22, 1714. He had two sons, John and Eleazer. John's descendants moved to Springfield, Massachusetts, and one son, Abel, was the first settler of Marlboro, Vermont. Eleazer and son, Eleazer, moved to Sheffield, Massachusetts, April 18, 1738. Levi Stockwell, son of the younger Eleazer, moved to Whitehall, New York, where he was supervisor of the town (1778-1780) and the largest landowner. He was lieutenant in the Revolutionary War, first lieutenant in the Sixth Company, Third Battalion of New York Forces, Colonel Peter Ganesvoort, Commandant, at Fort Schuyler. He was commissioned November 21, 1776, and omitted May, 1778. He was also commissioned captain in Harper's New York Regiment, May 11, 1780. He was scout for Colonel Willett and Colonel Willett called him "Major."

Three of his sons, David, Eleazer and Andrew, settled the Town of Ira, New York, about 1800. Levi moved to Ira and died there in 1812. David, in 1807, married Lucy Mills Merritt, the daughter of Colonel Amasa and Lucy Curtis Mills, of Canton, Connecticut. David and Lucy Merritt moved to Canton, Connecticut, where they died in 1841. Their eldest son was Amasa Mills Stockwell, born in Ira, New York, March 1, 1808, their son was Myron David Stockwell, who was born at New Hartford on June 8, 1851, died in New Britain, Connecticut, on March 2, 1931. He was engaged in the real estate business at New Britain and became a prominent figure there, serving as alderman and as president of the Council. Myra (Smith) Stockwell, Myron David Stockwell's wife, was born at Ellenburg, New York, on January 12, 1849. She died April 8, 1931, at New Britain.

Dr. William M. Stockwell received his preliminary education in the public schools of New Britain and after completing the high school course, entered the University of Pennsylvania, where he prepared for his professional career. He was graduated from the medical school of this institution in June, 1904, taking the degree of Doctor of Medicine, and subsequently entered general practice at Suffield, Connecticut, where he remained until 1910. In that year, having become very much interested in tuberculosis and made a thorough study of the disease and its treatment, he went to the Shelton State Sanitorium, which he organized for the State. It remained under his supervision until 1916, when he resigned to take over the Cedarcrest Sanitorium at Newington. During the World War, he was commissioned major in the Army Medical Corps and was assigned as commanding officer of the R. S. Base Hospital group, located at Camp Greenleaf, Georgia. Upon the termination of the war, he returned to his duties at Cedarcrest Sanitorium, where he is now superintendent and medical director. A tireless worker, he has used his tremendous energies and intense power of concentration entirely in the interests of his many patients, achieving a notable record for the institution with which he is associated. He is known as one of the best qualified tuberculosis specialists in the East and enjoys the highest professional standing.

Dr. Stockwell is a member of the Hartford City and County Medical Associations, the Connecticut State Medical Association and the American Medical Association. He is also a member of the American Public Health Association, the College of Chest Physicians, the American Sanitorium Association, the National Tuberculosis Association and the International Union Against Tuberculosis, all of whose activities are related to special aspects of his own work. In addition to his professional connections, he is affiliated fraternally with the Free and Accepted Masons, and is a member of the Hartford Rotary Club, in which city he is well known.

Dr. Stockwell married, on June 8, 1909, Clara Simon Phelps, daughter of Gilbert and Alice (Simon) Phelps, and a descendant of George Phelps, who settled in Windsor, Connecticut, about 1630. Dr. and Mrs. Stockwell have two children: 1. Beatrice, born October 2, 1910. 2. David Phelps, born November 29, 1912; married Leota Simonde, June 15, 1935, and their daughter Patricia was born April 9, 1936.

WILLIAM B. SWEENEY—Few citizens have contributed more substantially and usefully to the progress of Willimantic and Windham County than William B. Sweeney, superintendent of the Windham Community Memorial Hospital. For years he was one of the business leaders of the aforementioned community and throughout his career has served on a number of important local and State bodies. The nature of his accomplishments establishes him as one of the most highly esteemed and influential figures in this section of the State.

Mr. Sweeney was born in Willimantic, June 27, 1888, the son of William J. and Honora (McDonough) Sweeney. His father, a native of Bloomfield, who was educated in the district schools of the town of Windham, worked for the old Willimantic Linen Company during his youth and later established the first pony express delivery of newspapers between Norwich and New London. Eventually, he came to Willimantic and became associated with the late Daniel P. Dunn, in a newspaper and stationery business, which was one of the first of its type in this region. They operated this venture together for a number of years and when Mr. Dunn died, the elder Sweeney became sole owner. He expanded his interests through the purchase of the John Walden Insurance Company and the introduction of a travel agency, features of which were merged with the establishment which he actively headed until 1923, when he retired from business life.

William B. Sweeney attended the public schools of his native community and after completing his studies began his career with the American Thread Company here, working in the clerical department for one year. He then joined his father and became manager of the stationery department of the concern. Shortly thereafter he was made a partner in the firm which operated as William J. and William B. Sweeney until 1923, when the senior member retired. Mr. Sweeney continued, devoting most of his efforts to the insurance and stationery departments. In 1931, the style of the firm was changed to William J. Sweeney and Son, Incorporated, and a year later Mr. Sweeney retired from the business which is now being conducted by his brother, Vincent Sweeney, and his sister, Alice Sweeney. During the latter year, in 1932, he was appointed to his present post as superintendent of the Windham Community Memorial Hospital. Prior to this he had been secretary of the board of directors of St. Joseph's Hospital, which preceded the present institution. He occupied the latter office from 1925 to 1932.

One begins to appreciate the important place Mr. Sweeney has come to occupy in the life of this community and county when his record of public service is reviewed. He has been a member of the Willimantic Finance Board since its inception and has served as a member of the Board of Education of the town of Windham for over twelve years, heading this body as chairman in 1934. The excellent work he accomplished with the latter body caused him to be appointed to the State Board of Education by Governor Cross in 1935, for a six-year term. He is a member of the American College of Hospital Administration, a marked distinction in view of the fact that there are only seven hundred members in the entire country. Socially, he is affiliated and a Past Exalted Ruler of the Willimantic Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in which he has also been a member of the board of governors of the Elks Home since its inception. In religion he worships at St. Joseph's Church.

On June 1, 1915, at Willimantic, Mr. Sweeney married Aldea P. Moreau, daughter of Mrs. Pierre Moreau. Her father died when she was quite young. Mr. and Mrs. Sweeney are the parents of two children: 1. John, born May 23, 1916, now taking a special course in precision tool making. 2. Marion, born March 27, 1921, a graduate of the Windham High School, and now attending the Russell Sage College at Troy, New York.

LESTER BOONHOWER WILLIAMS—To agriculture Lester Boonhower Williams, of Brooklyn, Connecticut, has devoted his best attention since boyhood, and is eminently successful in this basic industry of our country. He not only has kept pace with the modern changes and advances in farming, but is looked up to by others for counsel and leadership. Public service has been a part of his tradition and heritage, and he neglects none of the duties of good citizenship and cooperation in local affairs.

Mr. Williams was born February 13, 1894, on the Williams' homestead of some three hundred acres near the center of Brooklyn, son of John C. and Clara (Boonhower) Williams. His father, a native of Brooklyn, engaged throughout his life in the cultivation of the soil, but found time to enter into many phases of local life, at one time being a selectman of the town, and represented the district at the Connecticut State Legislature. The mother lived until 1935, but the elder Mr. Williams died in 1906, when his son, of this record, was only twelve years old. Another son, Charles Gardner Williams, died while a member of a freshman class at the Storrs Agricultural College, Connecticut. He was twenty-one years of age at that time.

It thus came about that it was upon the very young shoulders of Lester Boonhower Williams that the responsibilities of the family homestead rested. He could not find time to carry his education beyond high school, and was graduated from Killingly High School in 1912. Farming continues to be his vocation and in this he has won a high reputation. A shrewd observer and thinker, blessed with the gift for accurate analysis, and thoroughgoing in all his undertakings, his success has been substantial both as agriculturalist, business man and private citizen.

Mr. Williams is first selectman of the town of Brooklyn, elected in October, 1935, his present term in office ending in October, 1937. He has served on the board of directors of the Woodstock Agricultural Society, and is a former president of the Windham County Agricultural Society, of which he is now a director. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Brooklyn Patrons of Husbandry, of which he is a Past Master. Interested in boys' welfare, he is treasurer of the Brooklyn Boy Scouts Committee. He attends the Congregational Church.

At Pomfret, Connecticut, Lester Boonhower Williams married Viola May Russell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Russell, of Mahopac Falls, New York, and they are the parents of a daughter, M. Frances Williams, graduate of the Killingly High School, and the Connecticut State Normal College, at Willimantic, who is now a member of the faculty of the Brooklyn Central School.

WILLIAM HENRY GREGORY HERKLOTS—President and general manager of the "Windham County Transcript," a newspaper established almost a century ago, William Henry Gregory Herklots, of Brooklyn, after spending many years of his life in the far corners of the world, has become a leading citizen of Windham County, adding to his newspaper interests an active participation in civic concerns and general endeavor in business and agriculture.

William Henry Gregory Herklots was born in Batavia, Java, Dutch East Indies, December 20, 1889, son of William H. G. and Adriana Beatrix Wilhelmina (Van Deun) Herklots. His father, who died in 1931, and is buried with his wife at The Hague in Holland, was a descendant of Michael Herklots (1641) and Gregorius Herklots (1700-1760), two notable citizens of the Netherlands. A native of Java, William H. G. Herklots, Sr., was an agent of the Rotterdam Lloyd Line and also of the Royal Steamship Company of the Netherlands.

William Henry Gregory Herklots, after receiving his early training in Java, completed his education in Holland, in Hamburg, Germany, and in London, England. Then, returning home to the Dutch East Indies, he worked for a period in The Java Bank, leaving that work to become an executive for the Dutch Oil Company. This employment was succeeded by wide travels in Europe, following which Mr. Herklots resided for some time in Canada and then worked in New York City for a few years as an accountant. Finally, with all this cosmopolitan background—an experience with the world which taught him to speak five languages fluently—Mr. Herklots established his home in Danielson, where he was associated with the Williamsville Buff Company for about three years. Then, in 1924, he purchased the controlling interest in the "Windham County Transcript," one of the oldest newspapers in Eastern Connecticut, and, becoming its president and general manager, has remained the paper's executive through the present time, with Gordon J. Gale as editor. Receiving his final citizenship papers in 1932, Mr. Herklots immediately took an active part in civic responsibilities, serving as a member of the Board of Finance of the Town of Brooklyn, a member and chairman of the Brooklyn Board of Education, and a member and chairman of the Danielson Chamber of Commerce. He is also interested in Red Cross activities, enlisting during the World War with the Red Cross in Australia but was not called upon for active service. With his newspaper interests represented by his membership in the National Editors' Association, Mr. Herklots shows his interest in agriculture not merely by operating his farm in Brooklyn but by being active as a member of the Windham County Farmers' Association and of the Brooklyn Grange. He is also a member of several Masonic bodies, including Moriah Lodge, No. 15, Free and Accepted Masons; Warren Chapter, No. 12, Royal Arch Masons, of Danielson; Montgomery Council, No. 2, Royal and Select Masters, of Danielson; and Columbian Commandery, No. 4, Knights Templar, of Norwich.

William Henry Gregory Herklots married, in New York, New York, Frances Patricia O'Connor, of Providence, Rhode Island, daughter of Patrick F. and Bridget (Gormley) O'Connor, natives of Ireland, who came to America when young. Mr. and Mrs. Herklots are the parents of three children: 1. Adriaan Richard Joseph, born at Providence, December 12, 1926. 2. Robert Carey, born at Providence, March 16, 1928. 3. Beatrix Van Deun, born at Brooklyn, June 22, 1934.

ERNEST G. LAKE—The background of Ernest G. Lake, superintendent of schools, Town of Griswold, New London County, is both interesting and important. He was born in London, England, son of Ernest and Sybil (Peachmont) Lake, both natives of Great Britain. The family came to the United States in 1907, and settled at Kalispell, a county seat in northwest Montana, where the father developed large lumber interests.

Ernest G. Lake grew up in the Western town, and prepared there for higher education. He was graduated from the University of Montana, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and spent the scholastic year, 1932-33, in Yale University, and he also has pursued work in Harvard University, leading to a degree in Education. He came to Griswold, in 1934, as the head of the township schools and has shown himself a capable educator and school administrator. His headquarters are in the Griswold High School. He is a member of the Jewett City Men's Club; worships in the faith of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and figures actively in many local affairs.

At Cambridge, Massachusetts, on December 22, 1934, Ernest G. Lake married Jeanette Stein, daughter of Dr. August Stein, of Oakfield, New York.

EDWARD HANSEN—Having served as an apprentice under the watchful and encouraging guidance of his father, a mason contractor of repute, Edward Hansen learned the details of the business that was to become his life's work by intimate, first-hand experience. Greatly benefited by the wise counsel and effective leadership of his father, together with his own personal ambitions, he gradually assumed increased responsibilities until, at an early age, he established himself as one of New Milford's substantial citizens.

Christian Hansen, father of the subject of this review, was born in Denmark, on July 12, 1854, a son of Hans Peter and Elsie Niels (Ditter) Hansen. In 1881, as a young man, Christian Hansen came over to America, settling at New Milford, where he purchased considerable land. A man of vision and foresight, he determined early in life the thing he believed he could do best and proceeded to make a career of it. Through his own efforts and ability, he learned the builders' trade and, as well, became a successful mason contractor and business man. He built most of the homes on Housatonic Avenue and n 1902, following the disastrous village fire, he supervised much of the laying of new foundations and new walks. Mr. Hansen identified himself with the nterests of his local community and made valuable contributions in time and effort to its civic and social development. Although he was sternly industrious and frugal, he was always a warm friend, cordial host and never-failing in charitable movements.

In 1877, Christian Hansen united in marriage with Anna Thompson, a native of Denmark, and they beame the parents of: 1. John. 2. Peter. 3. Edward, of whom further. 4. Fred William. 5. Margaret, now Mrs. Monroe. Mr. Hansen's religious affiliations were with the Episcopalian Church; he was an active Mason and member of the Crusader Commandery, No. 10, Knights Templar. His death, which occurred on May 20, 1923, came as a distinct shock to all who ad been privileged to call him, "friend." His widow oined him in eternal rest five years later.

Edward Hansen, a son of Christian and Anna Thompson) Hansen, was born in Danbury, on March 4, 1882. He was educated in the public schools of New Milford, and at fourteen years of age, a bright, lert and promising young lad, he began the active nd serious business of life. He worked for a time with his father, acquiring a thorough knowledge of he masons' trade and then established himself as a mason contractor. In 1918, he formed a partnership with J. H. Adams, known as the Adams and Hansen Building Contractors, handling all kinds of building ontracts and a complete line of builders' materials. In addition to his business activities, Mr. Hansen has contributed much toward the social and religious ircles of his community, being an active communicant f St. John's Episcopal Church, a member of St. Peter's Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, the Housatonic Chapter Thirty-three, Royal Arch Masons, f which he is High Priest, Wooster Council and ever willing to lend a helping hand to a worthy use.

On April 11, 1901, Edward Hansen and May C. Hill were united in marriage and became the parents f the following children: 1. Niels Edward, who married Elizabeth Andrews. 2. Enoch H., who mared Mina Andrews, a sister of Elizabeth, and has ne daughter, Geraldine May. 3. Addie, who mared Robert Tiers and has one daughter, Nancy. 4. Clarence Millard. 5. Everett, who married Ethel Beatty.

HUGH LINDSAY THOMPSON—Since 1897, Hugh Lindsay Thompson has been engaged in practice as a consulting engineer in Waterbury. He has had a long and distinguished professional career, featured by many large responsibilities and numerous contributions to New England industry.

Mr. Thompson was born at Thistle, Baltimore County, Maryland, on December 8, 1863, a son of Robert Hughes and Margaret Helen (Bone) Thompson; and a descendant of William Thomson (as he spelled his name), son of John and Isobel Thomson, of Cumberland, Lesmahagow, Scotland, born November 18, 1778, married Mary Bryce, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth (Kirkland) Bryce, of the Holm, Strathavon, Lanarkshire, Scotland. He was educated in the First District Public School, No. 8, of Baltimore County, Miss Thompson's private school, at Ellicott City, Maryland, and Knapp's Academy in Baltimore, which he attended from 1877 to 1880. He began his engineering career as a mechanical draftsman's apprentice with Robert Poole and Son Company in 1880, and thereafter served successively with that company as draftsman, engineer and designer of machine tools, turbine water wheels, engines, boilers, machinery and other engineering equipment until 1893. In the latter year he came to Waterbury as assistant superintendent of the Waterbury Farrel Foundry and Machine Company, and after three years of service in that capacity, entered consulting practice in Waterbury. He has had important clients both in America and Europe, and by his notable professional service has established an international reputation. In addition to his other connections, Mr. Thompson has served since 1900 as consulting and administrative engineer of the Scovill Manufacturing Company, of Waterbury. He has designed and installed various brass and copper rolling mills in New England and the Middle West and has invented various improvements in the design and arrangement of rolling mills and annealing furnaces.

Mr. Thompson is a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers; is a member of the power and waterways committee of the Connecticut Manufacturers' Association, in which he has been active; and a member of the executive committee of the Waterbury Committee on Additional Water Supply from the Shepaug River. He has also assumed important civic responsibilities as a member of the City Planning Commission of Waterbury, and is a director of the Citizens and Manufacturers National Bank, of Waterbury. In addition to his other connections, he is a trustee of St. Margaret's School; a member of the Council of the Mattatuck Historical Society, and a member of a number of clubs, including the Engineers' Club, of New York City, and the University, Home, Waterbury and Waterbury Country Clubs, all of Waterbury. Mr. Thompson is a Republican in politics, and a member of the Congregational Church.

He married, at Waterbury, on October 17, 1900, Caroline Goss, daughter of Chauncey Porter and Amelia (Ketcham) Goss, of Waterbury. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson are the parents of two daughters: 1. Caroline Goss. 2. Helen Lindsay, who married the Rev. Arthur F. McKenny, Rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, New Haven.

ROGER SHERMAN BALDWIN—Carrying on a practice of law in New York City, Roger Sherman Baldwin is a member of the law firm of Baldwin, Todd and Young.

Mr. Baldwin was born November 26, 1873, in New York City, son of Simeon and Mary Sarah (Marvin) Baldwin. His father was a banker and broker in New York City.

After completing his preliminary education, Roger Sherman Baldwin became a student at Yale University, where he took the Bachelor of Arts degree in 1895 and that of Bachelor of Laws in 1897. He received the degree of Master of Laws at New York University in 1900. Admitted to the bar of New York State in 1897, he began his professional practice in New York City in that same year. He is now a member of the firm of Baldwin, Todd and Young, of No. 120 Broadway, New York, as noted above. In 1919 he was admitted to the Connecticut bar.

Also taking part in business affairs, Mr. Baldwin is a director of William R. Warner and Company, Incorporated. In his political views he is a staunch Democrat, and he is a member of the Board of Estimate and Taxation of Greenwich, where he makes his home, and was a member of the Special Tax Commission of the State of Connecticut, to which post he was appointed in 1933. He is a member of the Greenwich Bar Association, the New York City Bar Association, the New York State Bar Association and the American Bar Association. Along with his other activities, he is a member of the University Club, the Bankers' Club, the Century Club, the Down Town Club, the Yale Club, the Round Hill Club (Greenwich), the Manursing Island Club (Rye, New York) and the Woodstock Country Club (Woodstock, Vermont). He belongs to the Psi Upsilon fraternity.

The Baldwin family is an old and distinguished one, whose traditions Mr. Baldwin has maintained in his own life, adding to them, of course, the fruits of his own special personality. He is descended from John Baldwin, who was the original ancestor in America, coming from a family of Baldwins who lived in Aylesbury, County of Buckinghamshire, England. He settled in New Haven, Connecticut, arriving there in the ship "Martin" in 1638. He joined the Milford Church in 1648. In 1661 he settled in Norwich, this State. John Baldwin died in 1681. Roger Sherman Baldwin's great-grandfather, Simeon Baldwin, was a graduate of Yale University, Class of 1781; he was a member of the Supreme Court of Errors in Connecticut. He was twice married: (first) to Rebecca Sherman and (second) to Elizabeth Sherman, both daughters of Roger Sherman and from Simeon and Elizabeth (Sherman) Baldwin was descended Roger Sherman Baldwin.

Roger Sherman Baldwin married, on August 23, 1904, at Woodstock, Vermont, Mary Catherine Vail, daughter of Henry Hobart and Minerva Elizabeth (Hewitt) Vail. One daughter was born of this marriage: Catherine Vail, on August 27, 1906; she became the wife of Roger B. Keeney.

JUDGE FRANCIS T. O'LOUGHLIN—Business, teaching and public service have been among the undertakings of Francis T. O'Loughlin, who since 1936 has been Judge of the Probate Court at Rockville.

Judge O'Loughlin was born November 17, 1909, in Rockville, Connecticut, son of Dr. Thomas F. and Irene Sterling O'Loughlin. His father has been a physician and surgeon in Rockville for more than forty years, and has served as health officer of the Town of Vernon, as well as medical examiner for the Towns of Ellington and Vernon for the same length of time. His father served many years on the School Board for the Town of Vernon, and was the sponsor and first Exalted Ruler of the Rockville Lodge of Elks. He has been active in Elks circles for years, serving as district deputy for the State of Connecticut, and is at the present time the only honorary life member of the Rockville Lodge.

St. Bernard's School, at Rockville, provided Judge Francis T. O'Loughlin with his primary education, and after completing his studies at the Rockville High School, he became a student at Yale College, where he graduated in the class of 1931. He next received his Bachelor of Laws degree at the Hartford College of Law, and is now serving as secretary of the Hartford College of Law Alumni Association. After leaving college, he pursued the investment business with the firm of Minsch Monell and Company, New York City, investment bankers. Next he taught school for four years at the Rockville High School. He was elected Judge of the Probate Court for the District of Ellington in November, 1936, and is still serving in this capacity at the time of this writing.

Judge O'Loughlin is a member of the Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity, and is at the present time Esteemed Loyal Knight of the Rockville Lodge of Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He belongs to the Manchester Country Club and is a member of St. Bernard's Church.

JUDGE RICHARD TIMOTHY STEELE—One of the leading attorneys of Hartford County, Richard Timothy Steele, of Hartford, is also an outstanding public servant, having held and holding several offices of responsibility and importance in his community and county.

Richard Timothy Steele was born in Hartford, June 13, 1899, son of Edward Lee and Julia (Simonds) Steele. Edward Lee Steele, who died in 1926, was a prominent lawyer and judge during his lifetime.

After passing through the public schools of Hartford, graduating from the Hartford High School in 1917, Richard Timothy Steele entered Wesleyan University, at Middletown, graduating with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1921, and then selecting the legal profession for his career, attended the Law School of Yale University, from which institution he received his Bachelor of Laws degree in 1925. Admitted to the Connecticut bar the same year, Judge Steele established himself in Hartford, where he has maintained a general practice through the present time. Keenly interested in all civic and political matters, as a member of the Republican Party, Judge Steele has given generously of his time and talents to the public welfare, serving as a member of the Hartford Board of Aldermen from 1925 through 1927, being prosecuting attorney for the Town of South Windsor for two years beginning in 1929, giving another two years, beginning in 1931, as Judge of the Hartford Police Court, and serving Hartford County as deputy coroner since 1935. Supporting his profession by membership in the American Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association, and the Hartford County Bar Association, Judge Steele, who belongs to the Asylum Hill Congregational Church, is also a member of Phi Beta Kappa fraternity and of Beta Theta Pi fraternity, serving this latter organization as one of its national officers since 1928. For recreation from his professional duties and public responsibilities, Judge Steele devotes himself to tennis and golf, finding opportunity for such recreation through his membership in the Hartford Golf Club.

Richard Timothy Steele married, in York, Maine, August 17, 1929, Helen N. Banks, daughter of Willard G. and Lillie (McLean) Banks, of York, Maine. Judge and Mrs. Steele are the parents of a daughter: Nancy Lee.

ARTHUR LEROY ULRICH—For more than half a century, Arthur Leroy Ulrich has been actively associated with the Colt's Patent Fire Arms Manufacturing Company, and since 1903 he has served as secretary of this nationally-known Hartford industrial concern.

Mr. Ulrich was born in East Hartford, November 1, 1858, the son of William Henry and Olive (Barnard) Ulrich, both deceased. William Henry Ulrich was also a native of East Hartford, being born there in 1831. He spent his entire lifetime in this locality, where he was engaged in the farming industry. He was the son of William Ulrich, a native of Germantown, Pennsylvania, and grandson of Peter Ulrich, a native of Germany, and the pioneer of his family in America.

Arthur Leroy Ulrich received his early education in the local public schools, and was graduated from Hartford High School in 1878. He also received private instruction in stenographic work. From 1878 to 1881, he taught public school in the surrounding district, and then he went to Texas to become a stenographer for the Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe Railroad. He next went to Buffalo, New York, to serve in the same capacity for the Erie Railroad, and he remained there until 1886, when he returned to Hartford, Connecticut, to become associated with the Colt Company. For the next seventeen years he was employed there as a stenographer, and then, in 1903, he was elected secretary of this company, in which capacity he has served to the present day. Due to his long years of service with this organization, he is well versed in the various phases of this business, and his advice on various matters is considered of the highest merit.

He is past president and a member of the Board of Trustees of the Unitarian Meeting House, and in political allegiance, is a follower of the Republican Party. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine and the Grotto.

He was married, in Essex, Connecticut, October 25, 1883, to Flora Louise Bartlett, of Cummington, Massachusetts, a daughter of Ephrahim and Salome (Tower) Bartlett, and they became the parents of two children: 1. William Leroy. 2. Olive Ermina. Both children are deceased.

ADA LOUISE (RICHARDS) CHASE—The striking feature of the life of Mrs. Ada Louise (Richards) Chase is her making a career of what was started as a hobby. Keenly interested in the folk of New England, especially those engaged in some of the earlier vocations, she has branched out as a professional genealogist and research worker on almost forgotten craftsmen of the past. She is also one of those women who have proven that being a wife and home-maker is not incompatible with business, club and social activities.

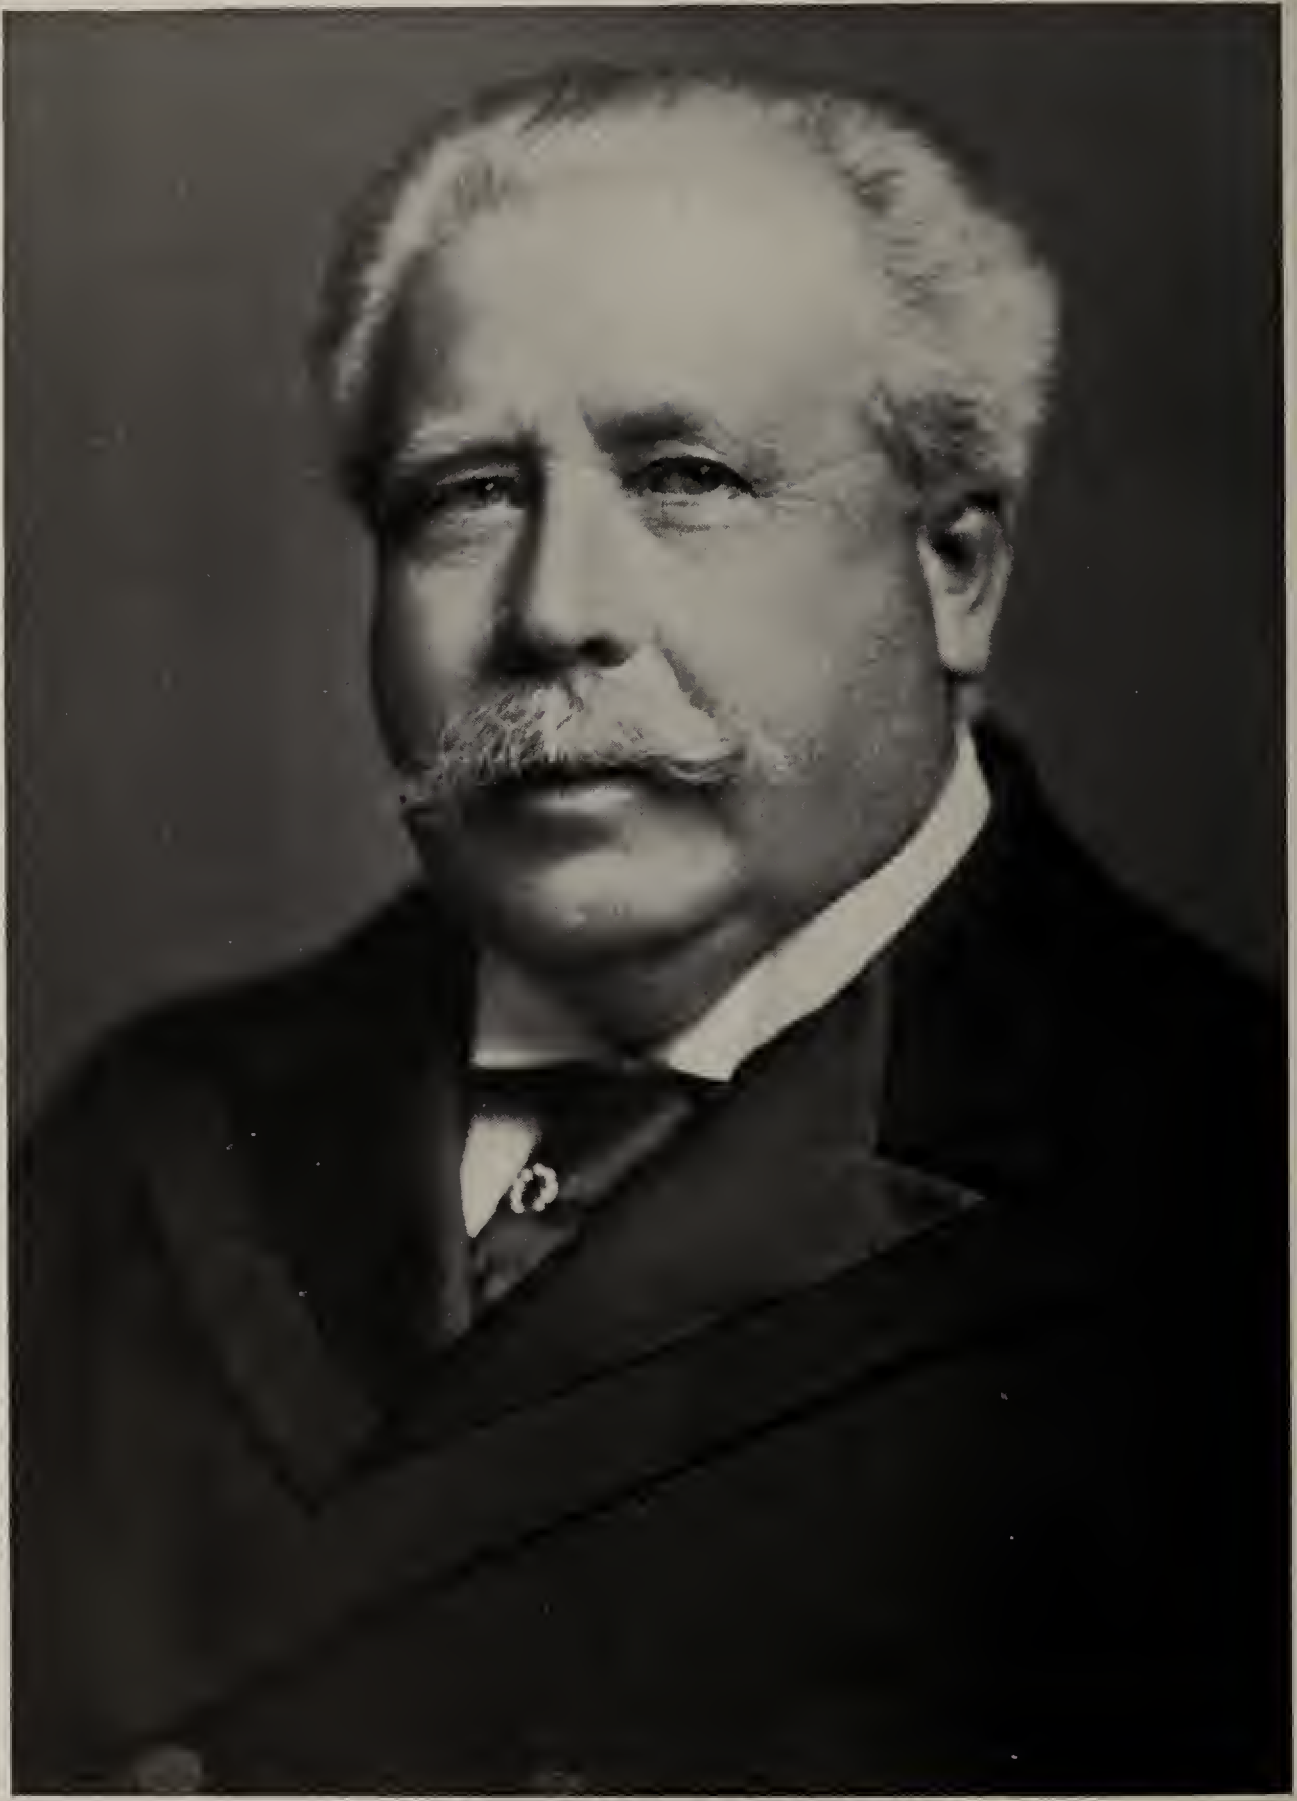
Mrs. Chase was born in Norwich, Connecticut, June 29, 1877, one of a family of four brothers and two sisters, children of Charles Lewis and Ada Louise (Pollard) Richards. On the paternal side she is the granddaughter of Charles and Emily Jarvis (Jerome) Richards, both natives of New London, Connecticut. Her father, Charles Lewis Richards, a ship chandler, maintained his establishment at Honolulu, Hawaii, for many years. Born in New London, he first went to the South Seas in 1852, as a cabin boy. Ultimately he ended his wandering around the islands as a ship chandler, by setting himself up in business in the Pacific metropolis. When he married, he sold his interest to his partner and returned to spend the remaining years of his life in Norwich, Connecticut.

Miss Richards attended local public schools; was graduated from the Norwich Free Academy with the class of 1894, and later studied in the Norwich School of Art, and then spent two years in the Arts and Crafts School in Boston, Massachusetts. Her primary interest until recent years was with the public health movement and organizations. She served for some time as secretary of the Norwich School Nursing Committee; was a former chairman of the Public Health Nursing Department and of the Neuropsychiatric Department of the United Workers, of which organization she is a past president. She is a Republican in political views, and was a member of the Norwich Board of Education. Indications of the breadth of her interests may be found in her identification with these organizations and such further ones as: member and president of the Wednesday Afternoon Club, of Norwich; Registrar of the Founders of Norwich; member of the Connecticut Mayflower Society; member of the Society of the Founders of Hartford, Connecticut; member of the New London County Historical Society, and member of the John Mason Monument Association. She is the author of a number of historical articles. As already indicated, her major interest has been, for several years, genealogy, and "to set before those interested some of the forgotten craftsmen and men who have contributed something valuable to their day and generation, but who have been overlooked until now." Among them are clock and chair makers, sea captains and local artisans.

At Christ Church, Norwich, Connecticut, on April 25, 1914, Ada Louise Richards married Albert Hunt Chase, and they are the parents of a daughter, Virginia, born August 30, 1915, in Norwich, now Mrs. Frederick Palmer Albertine. By a former marriage to Anna E. Prentice, Mr. Chase is the father of three daughters and a son, all of whom are married.

REV. JOHN HENRY QUINN—As pastor of St. Mary's Church, in Jewett City, the Rev. John Henry Quinn has performed a work of importance and value to the people of this community and to the Roman Catholic faith. Doing everything in his power to upbuild the spiritual life of Jewett City and of the different communities where he has carried on his work, he has earned the admiration and the warm affection of his parishioners.

Father Quinn was born March 14, 1887, in Versailles, Connecticut, son of John and Julia (Peloquin) Quinn. His father was a native of Moosup, Connecticut, long engaged in merchandising operations, but now retired from his active endeavors in that connection. He has been prominent in political and civic affairs, and his work has included twenty years of service as postmaster of Versailles, Connecticut. He also served for three years as a selectman, and was a member of the Board of Relief of his community and for two years of the State Legislature. A staunch Republican, he was for two years chairman of the town committee of his party. His wife, the mother of Father Quinn, was a native Canadian.



James McArthur Thomson

The schools of Versailles, Father Quinn's birthplace, provided the early education of St. Mary's pastor, and he also attended Norwich Free Academy and St. Thomas Seminary, at Hartford. Later he was a student at the Grand Seminary, at St. Brieux, Paris, France, there taking the Bachelor of Arts degree in 1910. He also studied at the American College of the University of Louvain, Belgium. Ordained to the priesthood at Louvain, Father Quinn became a priest there on July 14, 1912. Returning to the United States, he became assistant pastor at the Sacred Heart Church, Waterbury, Connecticut, where he remained for six months. Transferred next to St. Joseph's Church, at North Grosvenor Dale, Connecticut, he acted there as assistant pastor from 1912 until June, 1927. Then he was sent to Wauregan as pastor of the Sacred Heart Church of that town, there remaining until February, 1932. At that time he was appointed pastor of St. Mary's Church, at Jewett City, where he carries forward his work today.

In addition to his other occupations, Father Quinn acts as a member of the building committee of Griswold High School. He belongs also to the Knights of Columbus, the Society of St. John the Baptist and other church groups.

Father Quinn's brothers are also widely known and successful men of New England. Virtume P. A. Quinn, one of these brothers, is a lawyer in Norwich. Another, William T. Quinn, is engaged in real estate work and insurance activities there. And a third, Dr. James B. Quinn, lives in Quincy, Massachusetts. The Jewett City community has richly benefited from the contribution made to the city by Father John H. Quinn, who is honored and loved, not only among his parishioners, but in every quarter in which he is known.

JAMES McARTHUR THOMSON—Prominent among the leading business figures of the City of Hartford during the latter part of the nineteenth century is the name of James McArthur Thomson, a founder and for many years partner of the Brown, Thomson and McWhirter department store, later becoming Brown, Thomson and Company, the largest establishment of its type in the city. He also was an official in several other large business and financial enterprises here and during his life took a keen and active interest in the social and civic affairs of his surroundings.

A native of Scotland, Mr. Thomson was born at Doune, November 28, 1838, the son of William and Annie (McArthur) Thomson, and attended the public schools of his native community until he was fourteen. At that time he embarked upon his career with the drygoods firm of Arthur and Fraser in Glasgow, which he was associated with for six years. While there he met a Mr. Brown, member of the firm of Hogg, Brown and Taylor in Boston, Massachusetts, who induced him to come to this country. He came here and worked with the aforementioned firm until 1866 when he came to Hartford to become a partner of Frank S. Brown, nephew of his sponsor, and also a member of the Boston concern. The young men founded Brown, Thomson and Company, nucleus of the present department store, and were later joined by a Mr. McWhirter, the company then assuming the title of Brown, Thomson and McWhirter. During the seventy-two years it has been in existence, the firm has occupied two sites; the present one has been enlarged several times until today it occupies a full city block. Much of the growth and development of this venture can be attributed to the foresight and ability of Mr. Thomson, who retired from the active management in 1896. Among his contemporaries he had already achieved distinction and was ranked among the most able business men of his generation. This is further evidenced by the fact that he was invited to serve in an official advisory capacity for a number of the larger business and financial organizations of the city. In this connection he was a member of the board of directors of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, the Phoenix National Bank, the Terry Steam Turbine Company, and was a trustee for the Society for Savings.

In his social activities he was largely influenced by his background, holding membership in numerous Scottish organizations, among them the St. Andrews Society of New York City. He also was interested, though not a member, of the Clan Gordon, and aside from these affiliations belonged to the Hartford Club, the Hartford Golf Club and the Farmington Country Club. He was interested in social welfare work and supported all worthy public projects. In his religious convictions he worshipped at the Asylum Congregational Church. Throughout his life he was an outdoor enthusiast and found his main diversion and recreation in motoring, sailing and the game of golf.

On June 10, 1874, Mr. Thomson married Cornelia Catherine Hotchkiss, daughter of Ashbel C. and Leontine (Lewis) Hotchkiss, whose family was of old Colonial New England stock. Mr. and Mrs. Thomson were the parents of the following children: 1. James Lewis, of whom further. 2. Leontine, now Mrs. James Terry. 3. Douglas H., deceased.

James McArthur Thomson died at his home in Hartford, January 15, 1913, in his seventy-fifth year. His death marked the passing of another outstanding figure in the business and commercial life of the community. To all he was known as a man of keen foresight and a good judge of men. He was kindly and affable by nature and never lost his interest and affection in his adopted city, which he aided so notably as a merchant, business and civic leader.

JAMES LEWIS THOMSON—As chairman of the finance committee of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company and director of a number of other large industrial and financial concerns, James Lewis Thomson is ranked as one of the prominent business leaders of the City of Hartford, where he is also active in a social and civic capacity.

Mr. Thomson was born in Hartford in 1877, the son of James McArthur and Cornelia Catherine (Hotchkiss) Thomson. The life of his father, who was a native of Scotland and came to this country as a young man, is reviewed on the preceding page.

After a general education Mr. Thomson matriculated at the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University, from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Philosophy degree in the class of 1898. The same year he began his career with the firm of Forbes and Wallace in Springfield, Massachusetts, but, in 1914, returned to Hartford to found and become senior member of Thomson, Ferin and Company. Eventually he disposed of his interest in this venture and joined the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, one of the oldest insurance companies in the country, which was organized and chartered under a perpetual charter in 1810. The company was originally capitalized at $150,000, fifteen thousand of which was paid in cash. The balance was secured by shareholders' notes. Today this organization is represented throughout the nation by 20,000 agents. As a member of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company Mr. Thomson became chairman of the finance committee, he was named a member of the board of directors in 1931, and on February 10, 1938, was elected vice-president. In addition to this he is also a director and chairman of the finance committee of the Hartford Accident and Indemnity Company, which was organized in 1913 by special State charter and was qualified to transact all types of liability, casualty, surety, and fidelity insurance. He is vice-president of the New York Underwriters Insurance Company, the Citizens Insurance Company, of New Jersey, and the Terry Turbine Company, of Hartford. As a director he is a member of the board of the Standard Screw Company, of Hartford, the Hartford Steam Boiler Inspection and Insurance Company, the Hartford National Bank and Trust Company, the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, and the Twin City Fire Insurance Company.

Mr. Thomson is also contributing to the civic welfare of the city as a director and former president of the Hartford Social Settlement, and a director of the Newington Home for Crippled Children, the Hartford Hospital, and the Hartford branch of the Young Women's Christian Association. Socially he belongs to the Hartford Club, the Hartford Golf Club, the Twentieth Century Club, the Yale Alumni Association, of Hartford, the Ausable Club, the St. Hubert Club, the Yale Club, and the Bankers Club, of New York City.

In 1914, Mr. Thomson married Adelaide Lindsay, daughter of Alexander Miller and Adelaide (Hatch) Lindsay, of Rochester, New York. Mrs. Thomson is prominent socially, holding memberships in the Connecticut Valley Garden Club, the Town and Country Club, and the Hartford Golf Club. Mr. and Mrs. Thomson are the parents of two children: 1. M. A. Lindsay, who is a student at Williams College. 2. Jean, attending the Ethel Walker School.

ALEXANDER McNICOL—Prominent among the leading textile executives of Southeastern Connecticut is the name of Alexander McNicol, who for nearly thirty-five years has been associated with the Jewett City Textile Company, of Jewett City, which was founded by his father and in which he is now treasurer. He has been associated with this business throughout his career, starting in a modest capacity and working his way through various departments, despite the fact his father was the owner and founder of this organization.

Mr. McNicol was born in Norwich, Connecticut, January 21, 1890, the second son of Archibald and Mary (Montgomery) McNicol, both natives of Scotland and also the parents of the following children: 1. Archibald (2), who died in Jewett City at the age of twenty-one years. 2. Jessie, who married Andrew Cossar, and is now residing in Glasgow, Scotland. 3. Mary, widow of William Perry of Norwich, Connecticut, who died at Camp Lee, Virginia, during the World War. 4. William, who is married to Carol Bliss, of Jewett City. 5. Andrew, who resides in

James Lewis Thomson

Jewett City. Mr. McNicol's father, who was born in Glasgow, Scotland, in 1840, and died at Jewett City, in May, 1914, at the age of seventy-four years, came to this country in 1866, to install textile printing machinery manufactured by a Scotch firm. He engaged in this work for five years and in 1871, joined the Arnold Print Works, later serving various other mills. In 1889, he removed to Greenville, where he was to be associated with the Norwich Bleachery, and four years later was appointed agent and manager of the Aspinock Mills, in Jewett City. Between 1899 and 1902, he and his family visited Scotland, toured Europe and then returned to Jewett City, where during the latter year he founded the Jewett City Textile Novelty Company which he headed until his passing. His wife, who was born in Scotland in 1865, died in Jewett City, in January, 1919.

Alexander McNicol received a general education in the Norwich public schools, later attended the free academy here and then took a course at business college, which he finished in 1904. The same year he joined his father in the Jewett City Textile Novelty Company and initiated a business career that has since been marked for its distinction and success. With true Scotch thoroughness his father had him begin at the bottom and work his way to the top. In this manner he secured an invaluable experience that was well rounded and practical. The value of this training is evident in the success he has since enjoyed as one of the most able and prominent textile executives of this section of the State.

Aside from his business activities, which have been centered in the management of the aforementioned organization, Mr. McNicol has found time to devote to the social and civic affairs of his surroundings. He is a member of the Norwich Chamber of Commerce, the Connecticut Manufacturers' Association, the Norwich Rotary Club, and Reliance Lodge, No. 29, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. Through his military service in the United States Army during the World War he also belongs to the Orville La Flamme Post of the American Legion. During the conflict he enlisted, became a corporal and was waiting for embarkation orders when the armistice was signed. He was then sent to Camp Mills, Long Island, with his company and was placed in charge of the sanitary department of the camp, serving in this capacity until he was honorably discharged, January 26, 1919. Mr. McNicol is a Republican in politics; and in his religious convictions worships at the Jewett City Congregational Church in which he has been clerk for a number of years.

On August 5, 1917, Mr. McNicol married Bernice Reed, daughter of Alva B. and Mary (James) Reed. Mr. and Mrs. McNicol reside in Jewett City.

WILLIAM H. KAUFMANN—The Kaufmann reputation in business has extended over a wide territory in Connecticut and Massachusetts, for both William H. Kaufmann and his father, John Kaufmann, were experts before they came to Voluntown a number of years ago and set up an establishment which serves a large trade.

William H. Kaufmann is a native of Long Island, New York, born October 14, 1890, son of John and Lillie (Mason) Kaufmann, both of whom make their home with their son. The elder Mr. Kaufmann was born in Brooklyn, New York, where he was in business from 1885 to 1919. William H. Kaufmann was given a substantial education in the grammar and high schools of Brooklyn, after which he became an apprentice in the carriage and wagon painting trade. He also learned sign painting and other features of his profession, so that when he became associated permanently with his father he was thoroughly skilled and experienced. As indicated, in 1919, the family moved to Voluntown, New London County, where they have since carried on their business with marked success.

At one time it seemed that carriage painting was to pass out with the constantly reduced use of horse-drawn vehicles, especially those of the lighter type. But when the automobile became popular, the Kaufmanns turned their attention to the painting of these, and their business revived and increased. To an extent Mr. Kaufmann specializes in motor truck painting, particularly those of the fire equipment type, but all commercial vehicles receive skilled attention. Their customers come from Connecticut and Massachusetts, and even more distant points, for the Kaufmann name is well known and their work rated very highly.

William H. Kaufmann has entered actively into town affairs in Voluntown. He was elected town clerk, first in 1922, serving to 1926, and was again returned to this office in 1932, and has since continued to hold this post. He has been a member of the local board for fourteen years, and always has been to the fore in movements and organizations undertaken for the best interests of the community.

On October 14, 1915, William H. Kaufmann married Mabel Phillips, of Hempstead, Long Island, New York, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Phillips, and they are the parents of a daughter, June, born at Valley Stream, Long Island, in 1919. She is now assistant town clerk of Voluntown.

ELIJAH ROGERS—The Rogers' Orchards in Southington, one of the largest fruit farms in the State and one of the first five in New England to successfully cultivate peaches, owes its present commanding position to the efforts of its founder, Elijah Rogers, and his son, Harold Merriman Rogers.

Elijah Rogers was born in Simsbury, February 22, 1861, son of James and Mary (Horsford) Rogers, natives of England who came to this country in 1857, settling in Connecticut at that time. Elijah Rogers has devoted practically his entire life to farming, purchasing his present estate in the Flanders district of Southington in 1888. He began by cultivating general crops, later specialized in the breeding of registered Jersey and Holstein cattle, and finally turned to horticultural pursuits in the planting of orchards, which now cover four hundred and twenty-five of the five hundred and sixty acre holdings. This tract is devoted to peach, apple and pear trees. He began to operate this venture in conjunction with other activities, but it soon had grown to such an extent by 1921 that he was compelled to give fruit culture his entire attention. In the years that have followed he has installed modern equipment and facilities that have greatly increased efficiency, among them a cold storage plant which has a capacity of fifty thousand bushels. Elijah Rogers has met his civic obligations in a public-spirited and useful manner. In his agricultural affiliations he is a member and former president of the Connecticut Pomological Society, is chairman of board of trustees of the Connecticut Agricultural Experiment Station and holds the distinction of being one of the first three men to win honorary recognition from the Connecticut Agricultural College. He has represented his district in the State Senate and is a former member of the State Assembly. Socially, he belongs to the Rotary International, the Exchange Club, and worships at the Congregational Church in Southington, in which he is a deacon.

HAROLD MERRIMAN ROGERS—Mr. Rogers was born in Southington, March 7, 1894. He completed his general education at the Lewis High School in Southington, and then matriculated at the Massachusetts State College, from which he was graduated in 1915 with a Bachelor of Science degree. Directly thereafter he became associated with his father in the management of the orchards which, as mentioned heretofore, have become the largest of their type in the State.

Mr. Rogers' career has closely paralleled that of his father in many instances. He has been a very active figure in this region, where he is listed as an incorporator of the Southington Savings Bank, the Southington Hospital, and the Southington Young Men's Christian Association for which he served as first president. He is also a director of the Hartford County Young Men's Christian Association and a member and former president of the Connecticut Pomological Society and the Southington Exchange Club. He belongs to the Southington Grange, fraternizes with the Free and Accepted Masons, and worships at the Congregational Church, of Southington, in which he is a deacon. This cursory review of his activities indicates the position he has assumed among his fellow citizens.

On June 20, 1917, at Southington, Harold Merriman Rogers married Caroline Noble, daughter of Frank and Elizabeth (Haddock) Noble. Mr. and Mrs. Rogers are the parents of three children: 1. Carol, born February 22, 1920. 2. Frank Elijah, born January 5, 1925. 3. Ruth Janet, born October 12, 1927.

HENRY CLARENCE DEMING—Like his distinguished father, Henry Clarence Deming has become one of the prominent citizens and financiers of the community of Berlin, where he has been associated with the Berlin Savings Bank for over two decades and served as secretary and treasurer of the institution for the past twelve years.

Mr. Deming was born in Berlin, August 12, 1889, the son of Francis and Jennie B. (Hill) Deming, both of his birthplace. His father, who died in 1925, was treasurer of the Berlin Savings Bank which he was associated with for twenty years. Mr. Deming received the early part of his general education in the public schools of his native community and later completed his studies at the New Britain High School from which he was graduated in 1906. For a time he engaged in the grocery business, but in 1907, discontinued this work to become associated with the New Britain firm of Landers, Frary and Clark, which he served until 1916, occupying the post of assistant superintendent. During the latter year he returned to Berlin to begin his career with the Berlin Savings Bank which he has since been associated with. The extent of his success is evidenced by the fact that in 1926 he was elected secretary and treasurer of the institution, a post he richly merited on the basis of experience and accomplishment. As a banker he is highly esteemed and respected by the business community of this section.

Howard Churchill Thrall

In conjunction with his business duties he has also been actively identified with the social and civic progress of his surroundings. For fifteen years he was chairman of the Republican Town Committee and for a number of years he has been treasurer of the Worthington Ecclesiastical Society. He belongs to the Edgeworth Country Club, fraternizes with the Order of Free and Accepted Masons and worships at the Berlin Congregational Church.

On September 16, 1915, at Berlin, Mr. Deming married Marjorie Brandegee, daughter of William S. and Elizabeth (Reed) Brandegee, and they are the parents of two sons: Francis B., and Henry H., twins, born June 20, 1923.

JAMES LESTER GOODWIN—As president of the Whitlock Coil Pipe Company, James Lester Goodwin, directs one of the important industrial organizations of the Hartford area. He has been associated with this enterprise for more than thirty years and in rising to his present office he has firmly established his position in Hartford life.

Mr. Goodwin was born in Hartford on January 12, 1880, a son of Lester H. and Esther (Campbell) Goodwin. His father was a well known druggist at Hartford until his death in May, 1904. James Lester Goodwin received his preliminary education in Hartford schools and subsequently entered Yale University, from which he was graduated in 1902, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He went directly into business life from Yale and was first employed as a salesman with the Waterbury Brass Company, now a part of the American Brass Company, in the branch office at Providence, Rhode Island. Here he remained for several years. Upon the death of his father he returned to Hartford and took over the family drug business. He incorporated the Goodwin Drug Company, and continued in this business until 1906. In the latter year he relinquished this connection and formed his first association with the Whitlock Coil Pipe Company. Working at first in the automobile department, which has since been discontinued, he rose gradually through various positions in other divisions. As he demonstrated his capacity he was entrusted with larger responsibilities and at length became an executive of the company, participating actively in its management. In January, 1925, after almost twenty years of service, he was elected president of the company and has since continued as its chief executive. In its large and modern plant at Elmwood, just outside the City of Hartford, the Whitlock Coil Pipe Company manufactures the extensive and varied line of heat exchangers which has given it a position of substantial leadership in its field. In addition to this connection, he has other business interests, serving as a director of the Phoenix State Bank and Trust Company, a trustee of the Mechanics Savings Bank, and a director of the Southern New England Telephone Company and the Standard Fire Insurance Company.

Mr. Goodwin has been a leading figure for many years in the Manufacturers Association of Hartford County, serving as its president from 1924 to 1926, inclusive. He is a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. He has been active in many civic and benevolent enterprises. He is a director and chairman of the executive committee of the Hartford Hospital. He is also a director of the American School for the Deaf in Hartford and for eight years was president of the Newington Home for Crippled Children. Mr. Goodwin is a Republican in politics and a member of the Hartford Club, the Hartford Golf Club, the University Club of New York City, the University Club of Hartford, the Quinnipiack Club of New Haven and others. He is fond of outdoor life and sports and his principal recreations are hunting, fishing and golf.

HOWARD CHURCHILL THRALL—A descendant of an old and distinguished Connecticut family, whose members have had their home in Windsor since the early days of the Colony, Howard Churchill Thrall, recognized as an important figure in the agricultural development of his native State, continues the family interests there and the traditions of community leadership long associated with the family name.

Mr. Thrall was born in the Town of Windsor on June 13, 1881, a son of Willard Ainsworth and Mary Helen (Churchill) Thrall. He is a descendant of William Thrall, born 1605-06, probably in England, who came to America on the ship "Mary and John" in 1630. He settled in Windsor, Connecticut, before the Pequot War, in which he took an active part. In 1640, it is recorded that he had a grant of land in the town. In 1646, he joined with Robert Winslow in the purchase of Hoyte's Meadow, where he established himself and his family. This land has always been the home of his descendants, and the title thereto has been recorded without exception in the name of Thrall. In 1676, William Thrall contributed 2s. 6d. to the Connecticut Relief Fund for the poor of other colonies. His wife, whose maiden name was Goode, died on July 30th of that year, and he survived her three years, passing away on October 3, 1679.

Timothy Thrall, son of William, was born at Windsor, and was baptized there on February 25, 1641. He married, November 10, 1659, Deborah Gunn, who was baptized February 27, 1641, died January 7, 1694, the second daughter of Thomas Gunn, who was early in Windsor and moved elsewhere, leaving to Timothy Thrall his property in this community. Timothy (2) Thrall, son of Timothy (1), was born on December 7, 1662, in Windsor, and died there on January 31, 1724. He married, December 31, 1699, Sarah Allyn, daughter of Thomas and Abigail (Warham) Allyn, and granddaughter of the Hon. Matthew Allyn, a pioneer of Hartford. Four children of this marriage are recorded in Windsor. There were undoubtedly others, among them, David, born at Windsor, in 1709-10, died March 22, 1772. He married Jane Barber, daughter of John and Jane (Alford) Barber, and their eldest son was David Thrall, born September 23, 1749. He was a farmer on the ancestral acres throughout his life and married, on March 13, 1774, Zulima Denslow, daughter of Benoni and Sarah (Griswold) Denslow.

Their son, the Hon. Horace Thrall, was born on July 26, 1795, and died on January 31, 1865. He was a successful farmer at Windsor and one of its most influential citizens, serving in numerous offices of responsibility and trust locally and representing his town in the State Legislature. He was one of the leading figures in the Democratic Party of the county and always enjoyed the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens. Two days before his death, while in apparently perfect health, he predicted the hour at which he would pass away and took to his bed. As the hour approached, although he had shown no earlier signs of dissolution, he lapsed into unconsciousness and died within a few minutes. Hon. Horace Thrall married Eliza J. Wilson, who was born on August 16, 1806, in the Town of Windsor, daughter of Calvin and Submit (Denslow) Wilson. Her father, who was born in Stafford, Connecticut, in 1758-59, and died on May 20, 1809, was a soldier of the Revolution, serving as a member of Captain Steven Potter's company, Colonel Herman Swift's regiment, the second regiment of the Connecticut line, appearing in the roster of February 1, 1783, credited to the Town of Windham. After the Revolution, he settled in the Town of Windsor. His wife, Submit (Denslow) Wilson, born in 1766, died on December 10, 1840, at the age of seventy-four years. They were the parents of nine children, the youngest of whom was Willard Ainsworth Thrall, father of Howard Churchill Thrall.

Born on August 24, 1842, in the Town of Windsor, Willard Ainsworth Thrall was educated in local public schools, in Windsor Academy and in a private school at Poquonock. He assisted in the duties connected with the family farm during his boyhood and subsequently continued its management for a number of years with four of his brothers, meanwhile joining them in the purchase of other large tracts of land in the vicinity. Eventually, all these properties were divided and Mr. Thrall devoted himself to the cultivation of his own farms. He adopted scientific methods of agriculture, whose results were exemplified in the continued success which attended his efforts, and like most of his brothers was engaged extensively in the production of shade-grown tobacco. He was also a pioneer grower of peaches in this vicinity and the largest producer of this crop. In politics, Mr. Thrall followed the traditional allegiance to the Democratic Party which has distinguished his family and, like his father, was active in public affairs. For a period of twelve years he served as assessor and for three terms was a member of the board of relief, meeting the duties of these offices with characteristic fidelity and efficiency. Before the schools of the town were consolidated, he was also chairman of the school committee of Poquonock. He was a member of the Spiritualist Church. Willard Ainsworth Thrall died in August, 1920, after a long and useful life, which brought him success in his endeavors and, in full measure, the respect and regard of those who knew him. He married, on December 3, 1872, Mary Helen Churchill, of Little Falls, New York, daughter of Isaac and Mary (Bellinger) Churchill. Through her mother she was the great-granddaughter of Adam Bellinger, who was a second lieutenant in the First Company of the Fourth New York Battalion during the Revolution, under General Nicholas Herkimer. He participated in the Battle of Oriskany and his name is inscribed on the monument erected there. Mrs. Thrall died on October 23, 1914. Four children were born of this marriage: 1. Oliver J., who died in infancy. 2. Henry W., of Poquonock. 3. Howard Churchill, of this record. 4. Laura Helen, who married Arthur A. Clark (q. v.), of Windsor.

Howard Churchill Thrall was educated in the public schools of Windsor, including the high school, and at Morse Business College, where he completed a commercial course. At the age of twenty-one he egan to raise tobacco on land which he now owns, nd has continued in this project without interrupion. His interests have also developed in other irections with passing years, and he now operates dairy farm in partnership with his brother, Henry V. Thrall. Their herd of pure-bred Jerseys is elebrated in the dairy industry, holding the national ecord for herd production with the highest average roduction ever made in the United States. Mr. hrall is also a turkey farmer, but his principal usiness interest is raising shade tobacco. He culvates about 100 acres, which he first planted to obacco in 1917, and employs approximately 125 ands during the harvest season.

Mr. Thrall is a prominent figure among the armers of the county and has been active in pronoting the larger interests of agriculture. In uly, 1938, in conjunction with the Farm and Home Veek program at Connecticut State College, Mr. hrall was awarded by the board of trustees of that ollege and on the recommendation of its faculty, a "honorary recognition" scroll, signed by Governor ross and President Albert N. Jorgensen of the ollege. This prized award is "in recognition of ninent service to agriculture and rural life in the tate of Connecticut." He is a director of the artford County Farm Bureau and the Connecticut ersey Cattle Club, and was formerly president of e Connecticut Turkey Producers Association. Mr. hrall is president of Connecticut Valley Shade armers Association, which represents about one-ird of the shade tobacco grown in Connecticut alley; also vice-president and director of The indsor Shade Tobacco Company, which is organed to warehouse and market the tobacco grown its members. He is also active and influential the general life of Windsor, supporting all worthy ovements in the public interest, and is a member d past president of the Windsor Club, a civic and cial organization. He is affiliated fraternally with ashington Lodge, No. 70, Free and Accepted asons, with Palisade Lodge, Independent Order of ld Fellows, and is a member of Plymouth Meadow olf Club, of Windsor, and the Poquonock Comnity Church, in whose work both he and his fe are prominent.

On May 2, 1908, in Granville, Massachusetts, oward Churchill Thrall married Ella Whiting ark, daughter of Benjamin Warner and Mary Vinchell) Clark, who later settled in Windsor, ere the father was engaged in the tobacco busiss. Mrs. Thrall is a member of the Daughters the Revolution, to which she is eligible through her descent from John Whiting, who served for three consecutive years in the Coast Guard during the Revolution under Lieutenant James Davidson. From him and his wife, Nancy Welch, the line is traced through their son, John Whiting, who married Mary Warner, of Hamden, Connecticut; their daughter, Betsey Whiting, who married Benjamin Clark; and their son, Benjamin Warner Clark, who was Mrs. Thrall's father. A fuller account of her family will be found in the sketch of her brother, Arthur A. Clark. Mrs. Thrall is also a member of Eureka Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, of which she was Matron in 1922, and is a member of Charity Court of the Amaranth, No. 17.

Mr. and Mrs. Thrall are the parents of three children: 1. Mary Helen, born July 25, 1911, married Francis J. Milliken. 2. Howard Clark, born August 13, 1915, at home. 3. Warren Edward, born September 4, 1922.

HENRY JAMES FREEMAN—Corporation counsel of the city of Naugatuck, a former probate judge here and prominent leader of the local Democratic organization, Henry James Freeman has been one of the outstanding leaders of the community throughout his career in this section of the State, which spans over twenty years.

Mr. Freeman was born in Naugatuck, May 30, 1884, the son of James and Susan (Riley) Freeman, both of this vicinity where his father engaged in the restaurant business. Of Irish origin, the family traces its American ancestry to John and Margaret (Dooley) Freeman, Mr. Freeman's grandparents, who came to this country from Ireland in 1845, and settled in Naugatuck, then known as Salem. Here his grandfather engaged in his trade as a blacksmith. After completing a general education in the public schools of his native community Mr. Freeman attended, 1902-03, the University of Michigan, and in 1903 enrolled at the Yale Law School, from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Laws degree in 1906. Instead of taking up the practice of law immediately, he went to New York City where for the next eight years he was to be associated with the Travelers Insurance Company as a claims agent. In 1914, he was admitted to the Connecticut State bar and established himself in a general practice at Waterbury which he has since conducted with success. As an attorney he is a member of the Waterbury Bar Association and the New Haven County Bar Association.

During this period he has made his home at his birthplace in Naugatuck, where he has been actively identified with social and civic affairs. From 1917 to 1918, he was clerk of the City of Naugatuck, was judge of the Probate Court here between 1922 and 1924, and served as secretary of the local board of education from 1918 to 1936. During the latter year he was appointed corporation counsel for the city for a two-year term, was recently reappointed for a second term, the office he now occupies. As one of the influential leaders of the local Democratic organization he occupied the office of chairman for the town committee of that party between 1918 and 1928, and during the World War was a member of the draft board here. Aside from these activities, Mr. Freeman fraternizes with the local council of the Knights of Columbus, the local Aerie of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and in his religious convictions worships at the Roman Catholic Church.

JOHN DANIEL FRENEY, M.D.—As an outstanding citizen of Waterbury, Dr. John D. Freney devotes himself to many interests. Within his profession he is a general practitioner, but specializes in the work of ear, nose and throat treatment. Public life has claimed him to fill several offices and he is also interested in many civic organizations. His chief avocation is the study of Irish history, on which subject he is an authority, and he is in wide demand as a lecturer and as a speaker over the radio networks.

Dr. John D. Freney was born in Waterbury, Connecticut, on October 29, 1870, a son of James and Mary (Allman) Freney, who came to Waterbury in 1850, from Greenfield, Massachusetts. The elder Mr. Freney was a well known grocer in Waterbury for many years. Dr. Freney's grandfather, also named James Freney, was a native of Ireland, and came from the Old World to Massachusetts about 1822.

Educated in the public schools of Waterbury and the Waterbury High School, Dr. Freney attended Niagara University and was graduated from that institution in 1890, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Selecting the medical profession for his career, he studied at Long Island College, receiving his Doctor's degree in Medicine in 1893. He did postgraduate work at New York City Hospital. Establishing himself in Waterbury in 1893, Dr. Freney followed a general practice until 1901, at which time he began to specialize in the treatment of the eye, ear, nose, and throat, work which he has followed through to the present. Dr. Freney is a member of the staff of St. Mary's Hospital, connected with eye, ear, nose and throat department, and he was president of the staff for several years. He is also a past president of the Waterbury Medical Association. Dr. Freney's interest in civic matters has led him, as a member of the Democratic party, to be active in local politics. He was a member of the Board of Education for four years and, for part of that time was superintendent of schools. For eight years he was president of the Waterbury Board of Health. In his young manhood, Dr. Freney was actively interested in sports and dramatics. He is at present the president of the Exchange Club of Waterbury and belongs to the Roman Catholic Church. Dr. Freney has been honored by a Doctor of Laws degree from his alma mater, Niagara University. He is a member of the Irish-American Club of Waterbury. In New York City, on November 17, 1909, Dr. John D. Freney married Margaret Barry, a daughter of John and Elizabeth (Keefe) Barry, of that city. Dr. and Mrs. Freney have had seven children, four of whom survive, as follows: 1. John. 2. Thomas. 3. Mary Elizabeth. 4. Margaret.

HENRY LITTLE GRIGGS—As vice-president and general sales director of the Bristol Company, Henry L. Griggs performs a work of value and distinction in Waterbury and the contiguous part of Connecticut. His accomplishments have been numerous and worthwhile, and his executive ability is universally recognized in the industrial circles in which he moves.

Mr. Griggs was born June 19, 1881, in Terryville, Connecticut, son of the Rev. Leveret S. and Cornelia (Little) Griggs.

The public schools at Essex, Connecticut, supplied Henry L. Griggs's earliest formal education, and he spent a year at the New Haven High School before enrolling at Hotchkiss School, Lakeville, Connecticut. At Hotchkiss he also spent one year. Matriculating at Yale University, in New Haven, he was graduated in 1904, from the academic department, then spent a summer in pursuit of scientific knowledge at Harvard University, Cambridge, Massachusetts. Afterward he was made an instructor in mathematics and physics at the Hotchkiss School. On October 1, 1906, he became connected with W. H. Bristol, for whom he undertook to introduce the pyrometer beginning in Colorado. This instrument was a special recording device being made and distributed by the Bristol firm from its New York office. Afterward he traveled throughout the United States, introducing this same instrument, which was the first practical electrical pyrometer for shop use. It measured and recorded temperatures above 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit in the industries. For two years Mr. Griggs was so engaged. In 1908, the enterprise was combined with the business of the Bristol Company, at Waterbury, and Mr. Griggs was called to this city as sales manager for the Bristol Company. He was placed in charge of sales, advertising, order work and shipping as time went on, being given ever more weighty responsibilities and fulfilling his duties with characteristic devotion and understanding. He is now vice-president, director and general sales manager of the company, as already noted. He is also vice-president and a director of the Canadian subsidiary of the Bristol Company, at Toronto. His special work with the corporations has been the building up of the field organization of sales and service engineers with the eleven branches located in the principal cities of the United States, nine of which he personally established. He also assisted in the establishment of service laboratories in San Francisco, California, Chicago, Illinois, and Akron, Ohio, and also one in Toronto which later was expanded into the present Canadian factory.

Along many lines of endeavor Mr. Griggs has ccomplished much that has been of value. Devoted to his home and family, he is a Republican in his olitical views and interested in public affairs; and is a member of several clubs in Waterbury and New York. His religious affiliation is with the First Congregational Church of Waterbury.

On June 23, 1923, Henry L. Griggs married Harriet Aiken, of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, daughter f Herman Louis and Lulu (Connell) Aiken, and they re the parents of three children: 1. Henry Little, Jr., orn August 31, 1925. 2. Edward Aiken, born July 8, 1928. 3. Thomas Stearns, born April 19, 1936.

EVAN HUDSON JONES—Having entered the emloy of the Apothecaries Hall Company, in 1898, Evan Hudson Jones, of Waterbury, has served continually n various capacities for this well known concern, nd at present is treasurer of the organization. He was born in Norwich, March 28, 1881, the son of Edward and Elizabeth (Hamer) Jones, of Welsh escent, who came to Connecticut in 1866. Edward ones, who was engaged in the manufacture of woolen roducts, died at Norwich, in March, 1925.

Evan Hudson Jones was educated in the public chools of Norwich, graduating from school there n 1898. He then entered the employ of the Apothearies Hall Company as a junior clerk, and was ected assistant secretary in 1906, and later, a director. He remained in this capacity until 1934, hen he was elected to his present post of treasurer. He is a member of All Souls Episcopal Church, a Republican, and is affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons. He is also a member of the Grange, Waterbury Club and the Watertown Golf Club. He is identified with numerous farming organizations, being a member of the Massachusetts, Illinois, New Hampshire and Rhode Island Horticultural Societies, the Connecticut Pomological Society, and the New Haven County Farm Bureau. He is a director of the National Fertilizer Association, and was a member of the Code Authority for the Fertilizer Industry under NRA.

He was married, April 11, 1908, to Sophia Reid of Waterbury, and they are the parents of two children: 1. Edward Reid, associated with his father in the employ of the Apothecaries Hall Company. 2. Elizabeth Hamer, a student at Vassar College. Mr. and Mrs. Jones have one grandson.

THOMAS PARSONS KELLOGG—As assistant secretary and a director of the Apothecaries Hall Company, of Waterbury, Thomas Parsons Kellogg has performed a work of importance and value. This company is widely known in the chemical trade, being one of the largest organizations of its kind in the country.

Mr. Kellogg was born August 5, 1906, in Waterbury, Connecticut, son of Isaac P. and Sarah Rice (Munson) Kellogg. His paternal grandparents were J. Dwight and Caroline (Parsons) Kellogg, and his maternal grandparents were Lucerne I. and Mary B. (Rice) Munson. J. Dwight Kellogg was a widely known merchant, engaged in the dry goods trade until his death.

Thomas Parsons Kellogg attended the public schools of Waterbury, his Connecticut birthplace, and the Choate School, at Wallingford, Connecticut. Becoming a student at Princeton University, he was graduated from that institution in 1928, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and in 1929, he attended Harvard Business School. In that same year he associated himself with the Apothecaries Hall Company, of which he became assistant secretary and a director in 1934. This company, founded in 1849, has been in continuous operation since that time, and many different individuals have notably contributed to its success. Associated with this company also is Mr. Kellogg's brother, Frederick Rice Kellogg, assistant treasurer of the organization, of record elsewhere in this volume.

In addition to his work with the Apothecaries Hall Company, Thomas Parsons Kellogg is a director of the Colonial Trust Company, of Waterbury. He is a Republican in his political views, a director of the Young Men's Christian Association and a member of the Waterbury Club, the Waterbury Country Club, the New Haven Lawn Club, the Princeton Club of New York and the Princeton Charter Club, as well as a member of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church.

Mr. Kellogg married, at Elizabeth, New Jersey, on September 22, 1934, Margaret Allen, daughter of Joseph Warner and Ruth (Tomlinson) Allen, of that place. Two children were born to them: 1. Thomas Parsons, Jr. 2. Sara. The family residence is situated at No. 31 Randolph Avenue, Waterbury.

RALPH HORATIO WALKER—Fortified with thirty-six years of experience gained in his activities in various institutions of correction, Ralph Horatio Walker is well equipped to perform his present duties as Warden of the Connecticut State Prison at Wethersfield, where he is highly regarded for his deep humanitarian spirit manifested toward those under his charge. He was born at North Hudson, New York, August 20, 1880, the son of John S. and Sarah A. (Laverty) Walker. The elder Mr. Walker was for many years engaged in the milling business and in the manufacture of farm machinery.

After graduating from the local public schools, Ralph Horatio Walker enrolled at the Elizabethtown, New York, High School, but at the age of seventeen years, the family moved to Vergennes, Vermont, where they purchased a farm. After two years of farm work, Mr. Walker decided that this type of work was not too appealing to him, and he went to Winchendon, Massachusetts, to accept a position in a private sanitarium. He remained here for approximately nineteen months, and then deciding to make institution work his future career, he entered the Industrial School at Vergennes, Vermont, where he spent the next six and one-half years, the latter four and one-half years of which period he served as assistant superintendent. He then became superintendent of the Stetson Home for Boys, in Massachusetts, but after five years there he was summoned back to Vermont, and appointed Warden of the State Prison. He held this post from April, 1914, to January, 1931, and during his administration, the House of Correction for Men, at Rutland, Vermont, was consolidated with the State Prison. In February, 1931, he was appointed Warden and Jailer of the Rhode Island State Prison, which duties included management of the County Jail and the Reformatory for Men, continuing until January 1, 1936. In April, 1930, he was appointed Warden of the Connecticut State Prison. Realizing that his chief interests include the rehabilitation of those in his custody, and the preparing of them for their return to society, Warden Walker has always insisted on fair and humane treatment for all. Nevertheless, he has proved himself a stern disciplinarian whenever the occasion would arise, but his determination to treat all cases with consideration and justice has earned for him the respect and good will of all entrusted to his charge.

Warden Walker is a director of the American Prison Association, and a member of the Business Men and Civic Association, of Wethersfield. He holds membership in the Congregational Church, is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of Palestine Temple, of Providence, Rhode Island, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and belongs to the local Rotary Club.

He was married, March 8, 1909, to Carrie M. Roscoe, daughter of Rubin S. and Emmaline (Paul) Roscoe, of Marblehead, Massachusetts. Mr. and Mrs. Walker are the parents of three children: 1. Ruth S., born December 20, 1909. 2. Ralph R., born February 28, 1911. 3. Arlan R., born May 12, 1915.

JAMES FROST ACKERMAN—After twenty years of faithful service with the American Brass Company, James Frost Ackerman is now stationed at the Waterbury branch of this organization in the capacity of plant superintendent.

Mr. Ackerman was born at Yorktown, New York, on August 16, 1892, the son of Oscar W. and Sarah Augusta (Fowler) Ackerman. During his lifetime Oscar W. Ackerman was superintendent of the James McCreery Department Store in New York City.

Receiving his early education in the Yorktown public schools, James Frost Ackerman later enrolled at the Peekskill Military Academy. Upon departure from school, he was employed by a wholesale dry-goods company in New York City, and later by a stove manufacturing concern in Peekskill, New York. On October 1, 1913, he entered the employ of the American Brass Company at its Torrington branch, and was identified with the production department of this concern. He adapted himself to this new work quite satisfactorily, and in 1928, was promoted to a position with the Ansonia branch of the business. Again, on May 1, 1937, he received another promotion and was appointed superintendent of the branch located in Waterbury. During the late war, he enlisted in the Officers Training Corps at Plattsburg, New York, from August to November of 1917, being commissioned Captain of Infantry. He was then stationed at Camp Upton, New York, serving as instructor to the large number of recruits sent to this base to familiarize themselves with the duties and discipline of military life. He received his honorable discharge on February 1, 1919.

In religious belief he is a Congregationalist, and politically, a member of the Republican Party. At Torrington and Ansonia he interested himself in civic affairs, and is fast becoming a participant in the community life of Waterbury.

He was married in New Haven, on October 11, 1919, to Joyce Miller, daughter of Max E. and Susan (Drew) Miller. Mr. and Mrs. Ackerman are the parents of three children: 1. Susan Miller, born May 7, 1924. 2. Sara Fowler, born November 26, 1927. 3. James Frost, Jr., born December 7, 1930.

EARLE WILLIAM HARTLEY—The Hartley name has been prominent in the industrial, civic and social life of Waterbury for three generations. George Hartley founded the Hartley Wire Die Company, in 1850, and his son, William Mortimer Hartley, born in Waterbury, March 26, 1874, and a life-long resident of the city, was head and the directing force of the concern from almost the beginning of the present century to his death, in 1937, since when Earle William Hartley has been president.

William Mortimer Hartley held a place of leadership in his native city. He was a popular figure in the Chamber of Commerce and active in many of the movements undertaken for the benefit of the community. Fraternally, he was a thirty-second degree Mason, affiliated with Continental Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons; Eureka Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Clark Commandery, Knights Templar; Lafayette Consistory, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite; and also with Comstock Lodge of the Knights of Pythias. He married Bertha Pearce, and they were the parents of one son, Earle W.

Earle William Hartley, son of William Mortimer and Bertha (Pearce) Hartley, was born in Waterbury, December 10, 1899. After being prepared for college in the local grade and high schools, he entered New York University, from which he was graduated in 1920. That same year he became associated with the Hartley Wire Die Company, of which, in 1933, he was elected treasurer, and upon the death of his father, June 9, 1937, he became president. He is also president and treasurer of the Drawn Metal Specialty Company, of Waterbury.

Earle William Hartley is also a thirty-second degree Mason, a Past Master of Continental Lodge, No. 76, Free and Accepted Masons. He is a Republican in his political allegiance, active in the affairs of his party. He is a member of St. John's Episcopal Church.

In New York City, on November 9, 1920, Earle William Hartley married Gladys Bidwell Thomaston, daughter of Harold E. and Wilhelmina (Kaufman) Thomaston, and they are the parents of a son, Earle William, Jr., born December 27, 1921.

LEVI WILCOX—Four decades of distinguished service mark the career of Levi Wilcox with the Apothecaries Hall Company, of Waterbury, in which he has served as secretary for the past forty-three years. He is the third generation of his family to be associated with this business venture, his father and grandfather having been identified with it before him. As a native and resident of Waterbury he not only has enjoyed a respected place in the business circles of the community but is also known for the contributions he has made to civic and religious affairs here.

Mr. Wilcox was born in Waterbury, January 19, 1876, the son of Frederic and Lucy (Hodges) Wilcox. His father, who was born in Portland in 1844, came to Waterbury in 1857, and joined the Apothecaries Hall Company which he was to be associated with until his passing in 1897. Horace B. Wilcox, grandfather of Levi Wilcox, engaged in farming at Portland, and was one of the original stockholders of the aforementioned concern. The family traces its ancestry to one John Wilcox, who was among the early settlers of the Connecticut Valley.

After completing a general education at the Waterbury High School in 1894, Mr. Wilcox matriculated at Yale University where he attended the Sheffield Scientific School from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Philosophy degree in chemistry in the class of 1897. The same year he returned to Waterbury and began his long and distinguished career with the Apothecaries Hall Company. His ability and aptitude paved the way to rapid promotion and in 1903, he was elected secretary, a post in which he has since served. This organization, which is one of the largest of its type in the country, markets chemicals, plating supplies, paints, drugs, laundry supplies and oils, on a wholesale basis. In east Windsor it operates one of the largest fertilizer factories in the State. It was founded in 1849, and has been in continuous operation since. Much credit for its success in recent years can be attributed to the efforts and efficiency of Mr. Wilcox.

Aside from business most of his interests have been devoted to welfare agencies and fraternal and religious organizations. In this connection he has served as a member of the board of directors of the Young Men's Christian Association in Waterbury since 1907, and headed the institution as president from 1931 to 1933. He fraternizes with the local lodge of the Masonic Order, is a Republican in politics and belongs to the Waterbury Club, and the Country Club of Waterbury. In his religious convictions he worships at the Second Congregational Church in which he is a deacon and a member of the Societies Committee. In 1901, Mr. Wilcox enlisted in Company "A," 2nd Infantry of the Connecticut National Guard and was honorably discharged eight years later with a commission of first lieutenant. In 1917, shortly after the United States entered the World War he volunteered and served as captain of Company H, of the 5th Infantry of the Connecticut State Guard. He was honorably discharged in 1920. Through his ancestry he qualified for membership in the Society of Colonial Wars, to which he now belongs. His hobbies are gardening and golf, and he is a member of the Yale Club and the Drug and Chemical Club of New York, also the Graduates Club of New Haven, and the American Pharmaceutical Association.

On December 14, 1911, at Albany, New York, Mr. Wilcox married Eleanor Margaret Bennett, daughter of Daniel C. and Eleanor (Sisson) Bennett, and they are the parents of one daughter, Eleanor Sisson, now Mrs. Edward R. Jones of Waterbury, and the mother of one son, David Reid Jones.

ZENAS POTTER CANDEE—Among the citizens outstanding in the civic and industrial life of Waterbury, Connecticut, can be numbered Zenas Potter Candee, vice-president and chief engineer of the Press Department of the Waterbury Farrel Foundry and Machine Company.

Zenas Potter Candee was born in Bethlehem, Connecticut, July 12, 1875, the son of Frederick and Ellen (Potter) Candee. Frederick Candee was a blacksmith and as the automobile had not yet become a part of our existence, he enjoyed success in this occupation.

Zenas Potter Candee received his elementary education in the public schools of Bethlehem and later attended the Waterbury High School. To complete his education, he enrolled at Sheffield Scientific School, Yale University, and was graduated in 1896 with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy.

Embarking upon a business career, he entered the employ of the Waterbury Button Company and was identified with this firm for a period of three years. In 1901, he made his only change in positions, transferring his allegiance to the Waterbury Farrel Foundry and Machine Company. That Mr. Candee made a most satisfactory change is evidenced by the fact that he has been a vital factor in the success of this company and due to his hard work and perseverance he was advanced to the position of vice-president and chief engineer of the Press Department in 1917. He has retained this responsible position for the past twenty-one years and has won for himself high esteem among his co-workers and respect throughout the community.

On May 31, 1899, Mr. Candee married Gertrude Emma Thompson, daughter of Jarvis and Emma (Judson) Thompson, of Bethlehem, Connecticut. Mr. and Mrs. Candee are the parents of two children: 1. Ellsworth Thompson, married Dorothy Blakeley, and they have one child, Betty L. 2. Esther Miriam, married Russell J. Beach. The Candee family maintain their home in Watertown.

VINCENT ALOYSIUS SCULLY—Son of one of Waterbury's leading citizens of the preceding generation, Vincent Aloysius Scully, of 100 Grand Street, Waterbury, has chosen to continue in public service as a member of the legal profession.

Vincent Aloysius Scully was born June 19, 1896, in Waterbury, Connecticut, son of Martin and Margaret (O'Reilly) Scully. Mr. Scully's father came to Waterbury from his native land, Ireland, about 1875. For more than forty years he was connected with the Waterbury "Democrat," being the newspaper's editor for many years. From 1913 to 1917, Martin Scully was Mayor of Waterbury also. He died January 10, 1935, being one of the leading Democrats of Connecticut.

After passing through the Waterbury grade schools and the Crosby High School, from which he graduated in 1915, Mr. Scully attended Holy Cross College, in Worcester, Massachusetts, receiving his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1919. Graduate study at Yale University School of Law followed, with the Bachelor of Laws degree being won in 1922. Vincent Aloysius Scully's education was, however, broken into by his service with the armed forces of the United States during the World War. Mr. Scully enlisted in the Navy in April, 1918, and served until discharged after peace had been declared. Returning home, Mr. Scully established himself in the general practice of his profession, an activity in which he has continued through the present. He has been claims attorney for the City of Waterbury since 1930.

He has also interested himself in organizations both within and outside of his profession. A member of the Connecticut State Bar Association and the Waterbury Bar Association, he also belongs to the Knights of Columbus, the Waterbury Lodge of Elks, of which he is a past exalted ruler, the Waterbury Post of the American Legion, the United States Naval Veterans and the Irish War Veterans. He makes his home at 148 Chestnut Street, Waterbury.

On June 4, 1928, in Waterbury, Connecticut, Vincent Aloysius Scully married Mary G. Deely, daughter of Denis W. and Elizabeth (Phelan) Deely, of Waterbury. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Scully: 1. Mary Gertrude, born August 7, 1929. 2. Anne Elizabeth, born October 13, 1937.

LEE JAY WHITTLES, M.D.—Equal prominence has been achieved by Dr. Lee Jay Whittles as a physician and civic leader in the town of Glastonbury. During the fourteen years he has practiced in this community he has been ranked as one of the most able members of the medical profession in this vicinity, enjoying a large clientele and being associated with a number of the larger medical institutions of this section. In a civic capacity he has contributed generously and usefully to the welfare of his surroundings, serving in several important and responsible official positions.

Dr. Whittles was born in Portland, October 19, 1897, the son of James Edward and Jennie (Stein) Whittles. His father, who is listed as a descendant of Jonathan Edwards, according to family records, died in 1899, while his mother still resides in Portland. After a general education in the public schools of his native community, Dr. Whittles attended Wesleyan University for three years and then completed this part of his studies at Columbia University, New York City, from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree in the class of 1919. He then matriculated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia University and was awarded a Doctor of Medicine degree from this institution in 1921. The same year he served as an interne at St. Luke's Hospital, New York City, and in 1922 acted in the same capacity at the Hartford Hospital.

He came to Glastonbury in 1923 and established himself in a general practice of medicine and surgery which he has conducted since with outstanding distinction and success. In conjunction with this work he has specialized in industrial medicine and in diagnosis. He is a member of the courtesy staffs of the Hartford Hospital, the St. Francis Hospital, the Manchester Memorial Hospital and the Middlesex Hospital. Dr. Whittles has also employed his professional talents officially. He has been medical examiner of the towns of Glastonbury and Marlboro since 1923, and has served as health officer for Glastonbury and school physician since 1934. In his professional affiliations he belongs to the Hartford Medical Society, the Hartford County Medical Association, the Connecticut State Medical Society, the American Public Health Association, the American Association of Industrial Physicians and Surgeons, the Association of Medical Examiners of Connecticut, and is a Fellow of the American Medical Association.

Despite the burden of business and professional duties, Dr. Whittles has found time to devote to the social and civic affairs of this community. Since 1928 he has been vice-president of the Williams Memorial Building Association, is a member of the Troop Committee of the Boy Scouts of America No. 34, and since 1929 has been supervisor of Camp Goodwill, the local Boy Scout Camp for which he raised the building fund. He served as chairman of the Town Plan Commission from 1929 to 1934 and for several years has been a member of the board of trustees of the East Glastonbury Fish and Game Club. In addition he was one of the organizers of The Historical Society of Glastonbury, serving as its first president from 1936 to 1938, and is a member of the Archeological Society of Connecticut and of the Connecticut Historical Society. An authority on Connecticut River Indian tribes, their history and lore, he has accumulated a collection of three thousand relics of the local tribes. As vice-president of the Chamber of Commerce since 1935, he has been particularly interested in recreational facilities for young people and in town beautification. He secured the landscaping of the town entrances, organized the annual Clean-up Week, aided in securing the Federal Post Office building erected in 1936 and has organized baseball, basketball and hockey leagues for the young people of the community.

During his student days at Wesleyan University he was elected a member of the Phi Nu Theta fraternity and since that time has also become identified with the Phi Rho Sigma and Alpha Omega fraternities. He belongs to Warren Lodge, No. 51, Free and Accepted Masons, Portland; member of the Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; and holds memberships in the University Club of Hartford, the Wampanoag Country Club of West Hartford, the Manchester Country Club, and the Service Club of Glastonbury, in which he is a former president. During the World War, he was a member of the Reserve Officers' Training Camp (Wesleyan University), 1916-1917, and of the Reserve Officers' Marine Corps, 1917-1919.

Dr. Whittles married (first), on June 1, 1921, Marion Kinkead, of Greenwich, daughter of F. H. Kinkead, who died in 1923. There was one child by this marriage: Lee Kinkead, born in 1922. He married (second), June, 1929, at Glastonbury, Helen M. Hurlburt, daughter of Everett B. and Annie (Carroll) Hurlburt of Glastonbury. There are twin sons by this marriage: Douglas Paine and Bruce Merwin, born in 1932.

WILLIAM WILLIAMS GAGER—Descendant of the first settlers of Connecticut and son of one of the State's most distinguished jurists, William Williams Gager, of 57 North Main Street, Waterbury, is continuing in his generation the family traditions.

He was born March 20, 1892, in Derby, Connecticut, son of Edwin Baker and Nellie (Cotter) Gager. Mr. Gager's father was born in Scotland, Connecticut, and moved to Derby about 1890. A graduate of Yale—Bachelor of Arts, 1877, and Honorary Master of Arts, 1907—Edwin Baker Gager devoted himself to the practice of law and became very prominent in his profession. In 1892, he was appointed to the faculty of the School of Law of Yale University and, as professor of general jurisprudence, taught through 1922. And, so distinguished did he become that in 1901, Mr. Gager was made a judge of the Superior Court and, in 1918, an associate justice of the Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut. In this capacity, he served his State through 1922. Thus, as a general practitioner, as a judge and as a teacher, Edwin Baker Gager became one of the most widely-known lawyers in Connecticut and, as well, through his pupils at Yale, one of the determinate influences in the development of American jurisprudence.

While Edwin Baker Gager was the first member of the family to become prominent widely, the family has been active in Connecticut for nearly three hundred years. The first Gager came to the American Colonies very soon after the Puritans established Boston. Records show that this first American Gager came to Connecticut with John Winthrop, son of Boston's John Winthrop, in 1649, when Great Britain began the settlement of Connecticut as a means of preventing the Dutch, established at New York City, from extending their territory to the northeast. On his paternal side, Mr. Gager's grandfather was Lewis Gager and his grandmother, Harriet (Jennings) Gager. On his maternal side, Mr. Gager's grandfather was Samuel Andrew Cotter and his grandmother, Harriet (Andrews) Cotter.

After passing through the public schools of Derby, graduating from the high school in 1909, William Williams Gager entered Yale. He received his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1913 and, from the Yale Law School, his degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1916. In December of that same year, Mr. Gager started the general practice of the law in New Haven with the firm of Watrous and Day. In May, 1917, Mr. Gager removed to Waterbury to become associated with Robert S. Walker, the firm being known as Walker and Gager. Two years later, Mr. Gager established his own office and he has practiced independently ever since. He makes his home at 20 Euclid Avenue, Waterbury.

The professional organizations to which Mr. Gager belongs include the American Bar Association, the Connecticut Bar Association, the New Haven Bar Association and the Waterbury Bar Association. He has long been a member of the Masonic fraternity and belongs to the Waterbury Club, the Pootatuck Yacht Club, and is a member of the first Congregational Church, of Waterbury. Mr. Gager holds two public offices. Since 1922, he has been Public Defender at Waterbury for the New Haven County Superior Court. Also, since 1923, he has been a member of the Connecticut State Bar Examining Committee. For years he has been a member of the Republican Party.

On June 27, 1918, at Norwich, Connecticut, William Williams Gager married Dorothy Hall, daughter of Stephen W. and Elizabeth (Swift) Hall. Mr. and Mrs. Gager have one son, William Williams, Jr., born February 18, 1926.

EDWARD FRANCIS SWEENEY—As an attorney Edward Francis Sweeney has enjoyed unusual success in the city of Waterbury where he has conducted a general practice for over twenty-seven years. In his accomplishments he has emulated the career of his distinguished father, for years one of the most successful and highly respected attorneys in this community.

Mr. Sweeney was born in Naugatuck August 8, 1885, the son of John Martin and Maria (Jones) Sweeney, both natives of his birthplace. His father, who was graduated from the Yale Law School in 1879, established himself in practice in Naugatuck shortly thereafter and continued until his passing on November 10, 1928. After completing a general education at the public high school in Naugatuck in 1903, Mr. Sweeney matriculated at Yale University from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1907, and received his Bachelor of Laws degree in 1910. The same year he was admitted to the Connecticut State bar and established himself in a general practice at Waterbury, which he has since conducted with distinction and success. Professionally he is a member of the Waterbury Bar Association, is a Republican in politics and in his religious convictions adheres to the Roman Catholic faith.

On October 16, 1907, at Jersey City, New Jersey, Mr. Sweeney married (first) Sarah Havey, who died December 12, 1934. She was the daughter of Michael Havey of New Haven. By this marriage there was one son, Edward Francis, Jr. On August 10, 1935, at Brewster, New York, Mr. Sweeney married (second) Victoria B. Belser, daughter of Joseph and Ethel W. Belser, of St. Johnsbury, Vermont. They reside at No. 111 Madison Street, Waterbury.

WALTER HENRY HART—After a varied and colorful early career, which took him to the far west and Alaska as a prospector and later brought him back to Waterbury to enlist in the United States Army for World War service, Walter Henry Hart established himself in a real estate and appraisal business which his father had founded and conducted for nearly forty years. Since that time he has continued in this work and become one of the most widely known and successful realtors in this part of New Haven County.

A native of Waterbury, Mr. Hart was born here June 3, 1883, the son of Charles H. and Charlotte (Lang) Hart, both of Scotch ancestry and members of old and distinguished Waterbury families. He received a general education in the Taft School at Watertown, and after completing this part of his studies matriculated at Yale University from which he was graduated in 1908. The following year he struck out for the west and Alaska as a prospector and continued in this work until he returned to this city to enlist in the Army for World War service. He became a member of the 43rd Pioneer Engineers and served with this unit in France. The early summer of 1919 he returned to the United States and was honorably discharged. Upon resuming civilian life he entered the real estate business in Waterbury, establishing Walter H. Hart, Incorporated, largely devoted to appraising and the management of bank properties and large estates. In addition to this activity he has been interested in social and civic affairs and holds membership in the local post of the American Legion.

In 1923, at Waterbury, Mr. Hart married Margaret Perry, daughter of Charles and Susan (Aiken) Perry, native of Vermont. She died in October, 1928. Mr. and Mrs. Hart were the parents of three children: 1. Walter Henry, Jr. 2. Suzanne. 3. Lois L.

JOSEPH CLEMENT GUILFOILE—During a quarter of a century of outstanding achievement Joseph Clement Guilfoile has aided in maintaining the record of public service and accomplishment the family has enjoyed in Waterbury for a number of years, and today is recognized as one of the most able and successful attorneys of the community.

Mr. Guilfoile was born in Waterbury November 22, 1885, the son of Michael and Catherine (Lawlor) Guilfoile, both natives of Queens County, Ireland. His father, who came to this country as a youth of twenty in 1862, first settled in Norwalk, later went to Hartford and finally established himself in Waterbury where he was to conduct a wholesale meat business for thirty years and become a prominent business leader as a founder and secretary of the West Side Savings Bank of Waterbury, which was later merged with the Waterbury Savings Bank.

After completing a general education at the Waterbury High School, Mr. Guilfoile attended the St. Louis College in Montreal, Canada, from which he was graduated in the Class of 1907. Determined to pursue a legal career he then matriculated at the law school of Georgetown University and was awarded a Bachelor of Laws degree from this institution. He was admitted to the bar of the District of Columbia in 1910 and the following year was admitted to the Connecticut bar. At that time he returned to Waterbury and established himself in a general practice which he has since conducted with distinction and success.

In addition to his membership in the Waterbury Bar Association, Mr. Guilfoile fraternizes with the local Aerie of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, the local lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose and worships at the Roman Catholic Church. Throughout his career he has been active in civic affairs and contributed substantially to the general welfare of his surroundings.

On April 15, 1915, in New York City, Mr. Guilfoile married Louise Peloso, native of that city, born August 5, 1892, the daughter of Dominick and Mary (Leroy) Peloso, both natives of Italy. Her father was a prominent New York contractor. Mr. and Mrs. Guilfoile are the parents of one son, Joseph Clement, Jr.

CHARLES ALBERT ROOT—By dint of self-effort and perseverance Charles Albert Root has risen to his present position as City Engineer of Waterbury. He came to this community as a boy, worked his way through high school and entered the aforementioned department over forty years ago. Since that time he has served the engineer's office in various capacities and at present is at the head of this department.

Mr. Root was born in Middlebury, Connecticut, January 7, 1877, the son of Charles A. and Lizzie E. (Mallory) Root. His father came here from Pennsylvania, and died about two years after the birth of his son.

Mr. Root started his first years of school in Middlebury, but when his mother remarried they came to Waterbury and he enrolled in the schools here. By the time he was ready for High School, he had to support himself and pay his way. To do this he got work caring for horses. He arose at four A. M. to feed and water several horses of a large flour and grain company. Then nights after school and Saturdays he took care of several special driving horses, keeping them groomed, harness and carriages clean. Saturday evenings (the stores kept open then) he worked as an extra clerk in a local clothing store. In this arduous fashion he earned his board, clothes and school necessities, for there were no free text books in those days.

After graduating from High School, and interested in science and mathematics, he managed to secure private tutoring in these subjects and thereby equipped himself for the work he was to pursue later in life.

His career with the City Engineer's Office dates back to 1897, when he entered as draftsman. Alert and ambitious he made steady progress and earned the recognition of his superiors.

In 1912, he was appointed acting assistant engineer, but from 1900 to 1918, he found time to do considerable private engineering work for other towns and industrial concerns.

In 1927, he was officially appointed assistant city engineer, which position he maintained with distinction and success, until the death of city engineer Robert A. Cairns, November 22, 1937, when Mr. Root was appointed city engineer to succeed Mr. Cairns, with whom he had been so closely associated for over forty years.

Mr. Root received much of his early training for this work under the expert tutelage of Mr. Robert A. Cairns, whose life is reviewed elsewhere in this work.

Mr. Root is a member of the Connecticut Society of Civil Engineers and fraternizes with the local lodges of the Masonic Order, and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In his religious convictions he worships at the Second Congregational Church.

On August 15, 1901, at New Bedford, Massachusetts, Mr. Root married Lula M. Pike, daughter of the late Rev. Cornelius and Laura (Barker) Pike, of that city.

Mr. and Mrs. Root are the parents of two sons, but only one of whom is living, viz: Charles Bertrand, who is married and father of two daughters, Nancy and Judith.

ALBERT PHILIP WALSH—In a variety of ways Albert Philip Walsh has served his native community of Danbury and the State of Connecticut. His participation in business affairs has been of special value to his contemporaries, and as Danbury's postmaster he has performed a work of signal distinction.

Mr. Walsh was born October 31, 1887, in Danbury, Connecticut, son of John P. and Mary (Hardick) Walsh and grandson of John P. Walsh, who came from Ireland and settled in Bethel, Connecticut, in very early boyhood. Becoming a hatter by trade, John P. Walsh worked for most of the hatmakers in this vicinity. Albert P. Walsh's grandmother was Catharine Ward. The father, John P. Walsh, followed in the footsteps of his sire, becoming a hatter and acting as distributor at a later period for the Jacob Ruppert Brewing Company for the Danbury district. For a quarter of a century he served the Ruppert organization here. He was born in Bethel in 1858, and died in 1921. His wife, Albert Walsh's mother, was born in Danbury.

The public schools of Danbury, his birthplace, provided Albert Philip Walsh his early education, and after completing his high school studies he spent two years as a student at Niagara University. While a student at Niagara he played with their varsity baseball team, being the pitcher, and he had been pitcher on the high school team previously. He then took a position as an accountant, so continuing until the World War interrupted his career. Enlisting in the Fifty-sixth Regiment, he served overseas in France, participating in practically every major battle and engagement and holding the rank of corporal. He was honorably discharged from the Army on January 29, 1919, when his unit was demobilized at Fort Schuyler, New York.

Taking employment as a deputy collector of internal revenue in Connecticut in 1919, he remained here until 1921, in this capacity, serving about three years in all. On January 1, 1922, he went into business for himself as an accountant, with offices in Bridgeport, forming the firm of Walsh, Griffin and Company, experts in taxes and accounting. This firm operated for years as consultants, until, in 1933, Mr. Walsh began turning his attention to other matters. On January 22, that year, he was made first selectman in Danbury, though he resigned from that office on April 23, 1935, upon receiving an appointment as postmaster of the city.

His services to his community and State have been many, and the influence that he has everywhere shed about him has been for the best. He served as general chairman of the committee which handled arrangements for President Franklin D. Roosevelt's birthday balls on January 30, 1935, 1936, 1937, and has been appointed chairman for 1938. His work for these balls won for him wide acclaim and particularly the praise of Thomas J. Bowen. The drive in connection with these balls was, as is nationally known, for the purpose of aiding infantile paralysis sufferers, and it netted $1,262 in Danbury, an amount from which $883.40 went to Danbury Hospital and $378.60 to the national committee in charge of arrangements for its expenses, and like amounts during the other occasions. In 1920 Mr. Walsh was a candidate for State comptroller on the Connecticut ticket. Mr. Walsh is a member of the Lions' Club, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Columbus (in which he holds the Fourth degree), and the Danbury Club. He is a member of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church. Every organization with which he has been affiliated has in some measure benefited from his constructive efforts in its behalf, and, as a result, he is honored and respected in a wide circle of acquaintance.

Mr. Walsh is unmarried.

ANDREW DANIEL DAWSON—The profession of law and the life of the City of Waterbury have been enriched by the work of Andrew Daniel Dawson, who has been a constant contributor to the general betterment.

Mr. Dawson was born July 2, 1886, in Waterbury, Connecticut, son of John J. and Katherine (Riley) Dawson. His father, who was born in Ireland, came to Waterbury in the early sixties of the last century and was a merchant in the furniture trade until his death in 1917. The mother is now also deceased.

The public schools provided the early education of Andrew Daniel Dawson, who later attended high school and spent two years at Georgetown College. He took the degree of Bachelor of Laws at Georgetown Law College, and was formally admitted to the bar of the State of Connecticut, on June 29, 1909. His practice of his profession has been rich in its values to Waterbury and this region of Connecticut, where his work has been uninterrupted except for the period of the World War. He is today one of the active members of the New Haven County Bar Association.

In 1912 and 1913, Mr. Dawson added important civic service to his legal activities, acting as a member of the Waterbury School Board. In countless other ways he has also contributed to the life of his times, being interested in politics from the Democratic side and concerning himself with every matter of civic and cultural importance. He is a member of the Roman Catholic Church. During the World War period he was stationed in the Medical Corps at Base Hospital No. 98. He returned from the service after the conclusion of hostilities, and resumed his practice in June, 1919, in association with Arthur Cook. They have offices at No. 33 West Main Street, Waterbury.

In Waterbury, Connecticut, in 1918, Andrew Daniel Dawson married Marietta Bradley, daughter of Robert Bradley, of New York State. The home of the Dawsons is situated at No. 37 Chapman Avenue, in the City of Waterbury.

HON. HENRY WHITMORE GREGORY—For many years one of Connecticut's leading citizens and public servants, Judge Henry Whitmore Gregory has shown himself to be one of Norwalk's outstanding lawyers and professional men.

Judge Gregory was born November 24, 1867, in New Haven, Connecticut, son of George and Sarah Jane (Whitlock) Gregory. He attended the grammar schools of New Haven and prepared for college at Stamford High School, then in 1891 was graduated from the Sheffield Scientific School with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy. Subsequently he read law under the preceptorship of J. Belden Hurlburt, of Norwalk, and in 1893, was admitted to the bar of this State. Under the firm name of Hurlburt and Gregory he practiced law until March, 1900, at which time he was elected Judge of Probate, an office that he has held continuously down to the present.

He has been repeatedly re-elected to this position by the voters of both parties, who have appreciated his contribution to the general advancement of his community and district. His keenness as a lawyer and his special ability in probate work have grown out of the logical nature of his mind and his strong sense of fairness. He is held in the highest esteem by his fellow citizens, and his service to many of their institutions has brought him even wider respect and affection. He is president of the Fairfield County Savings Bank, for a number of years president of the Merchants Bank and Trust Company, of Norwalk, and a leader in many organizations. In the Free and Accepted Masons he belongs to St. John's Lodge, No. 6, Washington Chapter, No. 24, Royal Arch Masons, and the Royal and Select Masters' council. He is active in the work of the Norwalk Club and the Norwalk Country Club.

On June 26, 1895, Judge Gregory married Eleanor Ida Miller, daughter of Christian Miller, of Stamford. Judge Gregory and Mrs. Gregory are both attendants at Grace Protestant Episcopal Church, of Norwalk, and are active in its affairs.

ERNEST SAMUEL CLARK, JR.—In his civic, social and business accomplishments, Ernest Samuel Clark, Jr., has won wide recognition for the contributions he has made to the welfare and progress of the community of Windsor and vicinity, where he has resided for nearly two decades.

Mr. Clark was born at New Boston, Massachusetts, December 22, 1892, the son of Ernest Samuel and Sarah (Callender) Clark, both residents of Tolland, Massachusetts, where his father engages in farming. He received a general education in the public schools of Tolland, attended the Windsor High School at Windsor, Connecticut, for two years, and then completed this part of his studies at the Mount Hermon Preparatory School in Massachusetts. The following fall he matriculated at the Massachusetts State College from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree in the Class of 1914. Directly after receiving his degree he secured a teaching position at the Vocational Agricultural High School in Sutton, Massachusetts, continued here for two years and then became associated with the Worcester County Farm Bureau, where he remained until the United States entered the World War. On October 5, 1917, he enlisted in the United States Army, was stationed at Camp Devens, became a member of the 3rd Officers' Training Camp and later transferred to Camp Lee at Petersburg, Virginia, where on June 1, 1918, he was commissioned a second lieutenant. The following winter, on December 7, 1918, he was honorably discharged from the service with the rank of first lieutenant.

Upon resuming civilian life he returned to Windsor, where he became a partner of Charles A. Huntington, in a firm which operates under the name of Huntington Brothers, and is devoted to the growing and marketing of shade tobacco. In conjunction with this activity Mr. Clark has also become widely known as a horticulturist, specializing in the cultivation of gladioli. As a resident of the community of Windsor he has been active in the affairs of his surroundings and contributed usefully to the general welfare, serving in several official capacities, including that of town assessor and as a member of the Board of Appeals of the Zoning Commission. At present he is secretary of the Town Planning Committee. For three years Mr. Clark was president of the Connecticut Valley Shade Farmers Association and also has been secretary, treasurer, vice-president and president of the Connecticut Gladiolus Society in which he is still a member. Mr. Clark fraternizes with the Washington Lodge, No. 70, of the Free and Accepted Masons and devotes his hobbies to hunting and fishing.

On July 19, 1918, at Windsor, Mr. Clark married Madeline Huntington, daughter of Charles A. and Ruth (Wilson) Huntington, and they are the parents of two children: 1. Barbara Huntington, born January 2, 1920, graduated in the Class of 1937 at the Chaffee School in Windsor, matriculated at Wellesley College, Wellesley, Massachusetts, Class of 1941. 2. Richard Callender, born July 18, 1922, a sophomore at the Loomis School in Windsor, Class of 1940.

HAYDEN WILLIAM BROWN—As president and treasurer of the R. K. Brown Company, Incorporated, of Waterbury, Hayden William Brown has undertaken the responsibility of managing an estate in and about this city, which has been owned by the family for over a century. The nature of his successful administration in this capacity is graphically evident in the erection of the Brown Building at the junction of East Main and South Main Streets, which was opened in 1931, and today remains one of the most modern and handsome structures of its type in this section of the State. It is a credit to the city and a credit to a family who for generations have played such a vital part in the affairs of this community. Through experience, training and education, Mr. Brown is perfectly equipped for his present position. Prior to assuming this office he had been associated with several large manufacturing companies in an executive capacity and aside from his business interests was and still is, actively identified with the social and civic life here.

The Brown family history is a proud history. Its American ancestry is rooted in seventeenth century New England. It was in the year 1638 that Sir Francis Brown, member of the distinguished English family bearing that name, came to Connecticut as a founder of New Haven. In the generations that have followed his descendants have proved worthy of their ancestry. Of principal interest to this review is Deacon James Brown who came to Waterbury. He was the son of Stephen and the father of William, who in turn begat Robert K. and Frederick James, the latter being the father of Hayden William Brown of this review. Deacon James Brown was born in Windsor, December 2, 1776, the son of Stephen and Eunice (Loomis) Brown. He was apprenticed as a blacksmith, under his father, and continued in this capacity until he reached his majority, when he removed to Canton. A year later he established himself in Waterbury, where he formed a business partnership with Ard Welton in the manufacture of firearms, a trade which he followed until his passing on July 24, 1848. In 1801 Deacon James Brown married Lavinia Welton of Wolcott and they were the parents of four sons, among them William Brown, who was born June 15, 1804, married (first) Sarah Kingsbury December 17, 1828 (she died May 25, 1841) and (second) Rachel Vienna Fenn, March 25, 1844 (she died March 3, 1881). With his brothers, William acquired the Brown block in 1848, after having engaged in the mercantile business and as a partner of the Brown and Brothers manufacturing firm. Eventually he purchased his brother Augustus' interest and became sole owner of the property which forms the present site of the Brown Building. He was the father of six children, among them Robert K., who together with his brother and sister, was deeded the estate. The former, through purchase, acquired the majority of his father's holdings and continued to expand them until his passing in 1916. He was the uncle of Hayden William Brown.

Hayden William Brown was born in the city of Waterbury, December 16, 1883, the son of Frederick James and Lena M. (Hayden) Brown. For a number of years his father conducted a large and successful insurance business in this city and during the early part of his career had been a prominent figure in political circles, having served as a member of the State Legislature. Hayden William Brown received the early part of his general education at Miss Lawton's private school in Waterbury and graduated from the Taft School in Watertown in 1903. In the autumn of the same year he entered the Sheffield Scientific School at Yale University as a member of the class of 1906, and after leaving college entered the firm of Randolph and Clowes, formerly Brown Brothers, at Waterbury. He left this firm to become general manager of the Risdon Tool Company, and later was associated with the Waterbury Brass Goods Corporation. He was with this organization in 1928, when the R. K. Brown Company, Incorporated, was formed to manage the properties left by his uncle, R. K. Brown, who had died on November 21, 1916. This organization, of which Mr. Brown is president and treasurer, built the Brown Building to replace several old buildings which the company owned in Exchange Place. Other executives are members of the Brown or allied families and include Buckingham P. Merriman, who is vice-president and assistant treasurer, and Samuel P. Williams (husband of Leonie M. Brown, sister of Hayden W. Brown), who is secretary. In addition to this position Mr. Brown is also vice-president of the Waterbury insurance firm of Williams and Brown, Incorporated.

In commenting on the erection of the R. K. Brown Building a local newspaper dispatch says:

> This splendid, new half million dollar structure, being opened this week is a monument to the vision of its creators; the officers of the R. K. Brown Co. Posterity will benefit as much, if not more than its founders, and hence, in a way, it might be considered in part an altruistic effort. . . . While many have admired the new Brown Building from across the street, or even along its 200-foot length on both East and South Main Streets, it is not given to the public at large to inspect its architectural beauty in detail—especially the interior. . . . The new building is 200 feet long on either side. It is three stories high, with a capacious basement which makes it really four stories high. It is so built that it can be raised to eight stories high. As stated, its cost approximates $500,000. Concrete and steel and brick are its principal constituents, making it safe, strong and fireproof. Even the floors are basically concrete. Probably there is no building in Waterbury with more daylight to the square foot. Fire escapes and stairways are plentiful and wide. The interior decoration is in pastel, with harmonizing woodwork. All metal is in silver finish, a pleasing harmony with the gray and green tints.

Here we have a brief, though detailed description, of the contribution the R. K. Brown Company has made to the progress and welfare of the city of Waterbury. Much credit for the success this firm has enjoyed and continues to enjoy can be attributed to the efforts of Mr. Brown.

Mr. Brown has been prominent socially. He is a former member of the Waterbury Club, a charter member of the Waterbury Country Club, belongs to the New Haven Country Club, the Mattatuck Historical Society and through his colonial lineage is a member of the Order of the Founders and Patriots of America, the Society of Colonial Wars and the Sons of the American Revolution. He worships at the St. Thomas Episcopal Church of New Haven and is a member of the fraternity of Delta Psi, Sigma Chapter, at Yale University.

Mr. Brown was married on January 16, 1907, at All Saints Church, in Worcester, Massachusetts, to Frances Mae Hogg, daughter of William James and Frances (Happold) Hogg. Mr. and Mrs. Brown, who reside in New Haven, are the parents of two children: 1. Frances, born March 10, 1908; married, May 16, 1931, Donald Case Townley, son of Calvert Townley. 2. William Weston, born September 5, 1910; married Alice D. Pratt, of Toledo, daughter of John S. Pratt; they have a son, Hayden William, 2nd. William Weston Brown is associated with Walter H. Hart in the real estate business at Waterbury.

EDWARD THOMAS CARMODY—Emulating his distinguished father who for over forty years has been one of the most prominent members of the Connecticut State bar and a leader in the social civic and business life of the City of Waterbury, Edward Thomas Carmody, member of the firm of Carmody and Thoms, is ranked among the most able and successful young attorneys in this community.

Mr. Carmody was born in Waterbury, October 24, 1904, the son of Terence F. and Lauretta (Ryan) Carmody. His father, born in Watkins, New York, July 1, 1871, came to Waterbury after being graduated from the Yale Law School in 1895, and established himself in a general practice as a partner of the firm of Burpee and Carmody, which he has been associated with since. He is a former State's attorney, belongs to the American and State bar associations and is an officer in several civic, financial and educational institutions, including the Colonial Trust Company, the Watertown Trust Company and the Morris Plan Bank, in all of which he is a director. He also serves as a member of the board of trustees of the Taft School Corporation, Waterbury Hospital, St. Mary's Hospital, and is a member of the Waterbury Club. Politically he is a Democrat and in his religious convictions adheres to the Roman Catholic faith.

Edward Thomas Carmody received the early part of his general education in the public schools of Waterbury, later completed this part of his studies at Canterbury School in New Milford and then matriculated at Yale University from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in the class of 1927. The following fall he entered the Yale Law School and was awarded a Bachelor of Laws degree from this institution in 1930. In 1931, he was admitted to the Connecticut State bar and since that time has practiced with the firm of Carmody and Thoms, in which he was elected a member on January 1, 1937. He is a member of the American Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association and the Waterbury Bar Association.

Like his distinguished father, Mr. Carmody has also become an active figure in the business life of the community where he is secretary of the Waterbury Clock Company and secretary of the Ingersoll Waterbury Company. Despite the pressure of professional and business affairs he has not neglected his civic and social obligations. He is a member of the board of directors of the Corner House Association, the Lincoln House Association, the Connecticut Society of Mental Hygiene and the Waterbury Society for Mental Hygiene. Socially he is treasurer and a member of the board of governors of the Watertown Hunt Club, belongs to the Watertown Riding and Country Club and the Waterbury Club. He is a trustee of the St. Thomas More Corporation, a Republican in politics and worships at the Roman Catholic Church.

On May 29, 1931, in Waterbury, Mr. Carmody married Dorothy Mather Chase, daughter of Irving Hall Chase, and they are the parents of two children: 1. Deirdre Starkweather, born June 14, 1934. 2. Basil Terence, born March 23, 1937. The family resides in Middlebury.

JOHN FRANCIS McLINDEN—John Francis McLinden of Waterbury has been engaged in the general practice of law in his native city since 1932. He was born August 4, 1904, the son of Dr. James

J. McLinden. He received his early education in St. Thomas Parochial School and Crosby High School, and was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree from Niagara University in 1926. He then enrolled at Yale University Law School, and received his Bachelor of Laws degree in 1929. He entered the employ of Bradstreet and Company as manager of their Waterbury office, and was later transferred to the Bridgeport office. After a short time there, he secured a position in the legal department at the New York City office, but when this firm merged with R. G. Dun Company in 1932, he returned to Waterbury to begin the private practice of law, and he has been a prominent member of the local legal profession ever since.

He is a parishioner of St. Margaret's Roman Catholic Church, and a member of the Waterbury and New Haven Bar Associations. He is also affiliated with Delta Theta Phi fraternity, and is active in the Bridgeport Rotary Club and the Waterbury Exchange Club.

He was married August 12, 1936, to Grace Daly, daughter of Edmund J. and Catherine (Guilfoyle) Daly, of Waterbury.

CHAUNCEY PORTER GOSS—Chauncey Porter Goss, one of the early leaders in the development of Waterbury, Connecticut, as an internationally famous manufacturing center, was typical of the men who, by their rugged character, keen foresight and indefatigable industry, laid the foundation for this great industrial community. He became identified with the Scovill Manufacturing Company as an assistant bookkeeper in 1862 and at the time of his death, July 19, 1918, in his eightieth year, he was president of the company, and during the time that had intervened the business had grown from comparative unimportance to one of the foremost industries of its sort in the world.

Mr. Goss was born in Rochester, New York, August 5, 1838, the son of Ephraim and Margaret (Porter) Goss. His educational advantages were the limited ones of his time and his first business experience was as a clerk in a country store in Pittsford, New York. He also worked on the canal and while only a youth he successfully bought and sold produce in competition with men of much greater maturity and experience. Thus he early developed the keen business acumen which stood him in such good stead in later years.

His advancement following his first connection with the Scovill Manufacturing Company was steady, being promoted from assistant bookkeeper to bookkeeper in his first year and becoming secretary of the company in 1864, with the office of treasurer added in 1866, two years later. He was made a director of the company in 1877, general manager in 1893 and president in 1900. During his service in these offices he evidenced great executive ability and his character was such as to inspire the confidence and wholehearted co-operation of his associates. In addition to being an exceptionally good business man he possessed an inventive ability and a mechanical knowledge which was of inestimable assistance to him in the conduct of the great business under his guidance.

An indication of his ability as an executive is found in the fact that when he entered the employment of the company its capital stock was $300,000, divided into 12,000 shares of $25 each and the total assets engaged in carrying on the business were about equal to the capital. At the time of his death, the capital stock was $5,000,000 divided into 50,000 shares of $100 each and the total investment employed in the company's business amounted to over $35,000,000. His confidence in a successful future for the company was evidenced by his own extensive investments in it and he continued to purchase its stock up to the time of his death.

Personally, Mr. Goss was a fine example of the old New England stock from which he came. Devoted to his home and family, he gave tender care and consideration to Mrs. Goss, an invalid for many years, and reared his large family of sons and daughters with care and wise forethought, fitting his sons to follow in the management of the business he had so successfully conducted. His charities were many and large and he held the warm esteem and confidence of his fellow townsmen.

Mr. Goss was married, in 1864, to Caroline Amelia Ketcham, of Bushnells Basin, New York, her death occurring in 1916. Children born of the union were: 1. Edward Otis, late president and general manager of the Scovill Manufacturing Company (q. v.). 2. Margaret Porter, who died at the age of three. 3. Caroline Ryan, wife of Hugh L. Thompson, of Waterbury, Connecticut. 4. Mary Ellen, wife of the late Captain William Kelley-Patterson. 5. John Henry, president and general manager of the Scovill Manufacturing Company (q. v.). 6. Chauncey Porter, superintendent of the Mills Department of the company. 7. George Augustus, vice-president and director of the company.

Mr. Goss was a member of the First Congregational Church and long active in its affairs. He gave its work substantial aid, a work which his family has continued. Mr. Goss was one of Waterbury's most valued citizens, active in community affairs and particularly interested in the advancement of the city's educational advantages, serving for a time as president of the board of directors of the Hillside Avenue School and being one of the incorporators of the English and Classical School and a member of the executive board. The acquisition of a substantial fortune in no way changed his simple manner of life, which was devoid of the slightest ostentation, and he was, throughout his lifetime, a striking example of the old New England character which has done so much to make his locality sturdy, strong and prosperous.

EDWARD OTIS GOSS—For many years president and general manager of the Scovill Manufacturing Company, of Waterbury, one of the oldest and largest brass manufacturing companies in the United States, Edward Otis Goss earned the warm esteem and admiration of all who associated themselves with him or knew him. Following in the steps of his father in this office, he was for a half a century connected with the organization, whose president he was from 1920 to 1938. His acquaintance with all the departments and details of his business was of inestimable value to him in his work, and, as one editorial writer commented at the time of his death, "In the annals of New England manufacturing Edward Otis Goss will be recorded as a leader of remarkable ability."

Mr. Goss was born September 29, 1865, in Waterbury, Connecticut, son of Chauncey Porter and Caroline Amelia (Ketcham) Goss. His father was one of the outstanding figures in the industrial development of Waterbury, being elected secretary and later president of the Scovill company. There were seven children in the family, and when Edward Otis Goss was born the father was secretary of the organization, being elected president in 1900 and so serving until his death in 1918 in his eightieth year, rounding out a career of fifty-six years with this one company, in the course of which he worked his way upward from bookkeeper to president. John Henry Goss, a brother of Edward Otis Goss, became vice-president and general superintendent. This company was incorporated in 1850, with James M. L. Scovill as president, after having already gone through a long period of growth. Mr. Scovill himself had already been with it for forty years. With one exception the subsequent presidents likewise had long periods of training, this period for each president averaging thirty-seven years with the company. It has been frequently said, therefore, that Scovill's presidents "grow and are not made." Edward Otis Goss was no exception to the tradition, his period as president being characterized by widening and varying of markets, evolving of new technical methods, expansion and amalgamation of control of related industries, and careful consolidation of capital structure. So open to new ways and methods was he that he was said to have stood as "a refutation of the charge that America has 'frozen up' and its industrial life become solidified."

The Waterbury English and Classical School provided Edward Otis Goss's early education. His father was one of that institution's incorporators. Later he was a special student at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in Boston, with the class of 1887. His first work was with the Waterbury Farrel Foundry and Machine Company, with which he became associated soon after leaving college. He continued with that organization until the early part of 1888, when he came to the Scovill Manufacturing Company as a draftsman. Through different departments he rose until he was elected in 1898 to the board of directors. In 1900, he became assistant treasurer; in 1911, general manager; in 1918, vice-president and treasurer; and in 1920, president. He continued as president for the rest of his life, displaying unusual talents and abilities as an administrator and executive, particularly just after the trying days of the World War.

At that time the company was confronted by the necessity of meeting greatly changed conditions, and under Mr. Goss's direction it met its difficulties nobly. During the war days much of its production took place under Government contract; and when this situation suddenly ended, the company had to develop new commercial outlets. The officials decided that, rather than try to expand as business grew, the company should buy into existing industries which could supply the demand that came in. The first step in this direction was made when, in 1923, the American Pin Company and the Oakville Company, two Waterbury pin companies, were acquired. In the same year the Hamilton Beach Company, of Racine, Wisconsin, manufacturers of electrical household appliances, was purchased, and a small New Jersey firm, making a similar line, was added and, subsequently, absorbed into the Hamilton Beach branch of the organization. Two years later, in 1925, the Morency-Van Buren Manufacturing Company, of Sturgis, Michigan, was bought to supplement the tubular plumbing business that the American Pin Company had been doing. In 1930, the Scovill company acquired the business of A. Schrader's Sons, of Brooklyn, New York. As these changes occurred, there were concomitant changes in technological and administrative methods.

When Mr. Goss first came to the Scovill plant, in 1888, the company had a capital of $390,000. This figure has grown to $23,000,000. When he succeeded the late Mark L. Sperry as president in 1920, the capitalization was $5,000,000 and the surplus was more than $24,000,000. In his administration the capital assets underwent changes toward a larger growth. A fund of $10,000,000 was transferred from surplus and the nominal par value of the shares was cut from $100 to $25. Stock became available then to employes and other smaller investors. During Mr. Goss's presidency a stock dividend of 25 per cent. was declared. Since 1920, when Mr. Goss took over the presidency, the company has grown along many lines, its main plant buildings now numbering more than 200. The plant area is sixty acres. New machinery, both semi-automatic and automatic, was installed, and laboratory control was established to a degree not before known. New methods of fabrication and processing were introduced, and the number of employes was greatly increased, their co-operation being encouraged by intelligent policies of industrial relations.

In addition to his work with the Scovill Manufacturing Company, about which his career was centered, Mr. Goss concerned himself with other business enterprises. He was a director of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad and was active in the refinancing program undertaken by that company after the World War. He was president and a member of the board of directors of the Citizens' and Manufacturers' National Bank, of Waterbury, over a period of many years, a director of the Waterbury Savings Bank, and Landers, Frary and Clark Company, of New Britain, Connecticut, also serving as a director of the Connecticut Company. He was a director of the Waterbury Gas Light Company, which later was consolidated with the Connecticut Light and Power Company.

Some years ago Mr. Goss also took the liveliest interest in civic affairs. He was a Republican in his political alignment, and contributed generously to community activities. At one time he served on the Waterbury Board of Education. He was also on the Board of Public Works and was at one time president of the Board of Aldermen. He helped with the work of the Young Men's Christian Association and of different hospitals. Many honors came to him in the course of his busy career, including a fellowship in the Royal Society of Arts, of London, England. He was a member of the New England Council, representing Connecticut and being one of the first twelve charter members. He was also chairman of the power committee of the New England Conference. He belonged to the American Society of Mechanical Engineers and the Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers. He was a member of the Waterbury Club, the Metropolitan Club of New York, India House of New York, the Bankers' Club of New York, the Laurentian Club and the Shawinigan Club of Quebec, and other social groups. He worshipped in the faith of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, of Waterbury. In spare time he was particularly fond of outdoor life and healthful recreations, having been an ardent angler and hunter.

On September 15, 1891, at Waterbury, Connecticut, Edward Otis Goss married Harriet Wheeler, daughter of Moses H. and Harriet Nash (Middlebrook) Wheeler. They became the parents of three sons: 1. Edward Wheeler, formerly Congressman from his Connecticut district at Washington, D. C., now a resident of the capital city. 2. William Middlebrook, who became secretary and later vice-president of the Scovill Manufacturing Company. 3. Eliot Porter, also associated with the company.

The death of Edward Otis Goss occurred July 4, 1938, at his home, No. 117 Pine Street, Waterbury, Connecticut, and was an occasion of wide sorrow. Many glowing tributes were paid him by leading figures in public life and by editorial commentators. Howard A. Palmer, president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, referred to him as "a mighty fine man and one of our ablest directors." Judge Arthur F. Ells, of Litchfield, formerly of Waterbury, said in part:

> He had one of the keenest intellects of any man I have ever known. I was always interested not only in his extraordinary ability in the manufacturing field but also in his great love for the outdoors. I have had many interesting conversations with him on his trips into the wilderness of remote sections of Canada. I think he had about the clearest brain of any man it has been my pleasure to know.

The Hon. Charles A. Templeton, former Governor of Connecticut, said in part:

> The City of Waterbury, State of Connecticut and nation have lost a valuable citizen. He was a kindly man of great intellect, a very thorough and capable business executive, a genuine Christian gentleman and a valuable friend of mine.

> The industries will miss him, also St. Margaret's School, of which he was a trustee for many years. At the last commencement it was his privilege to present his own granddaughter with her diploma.
>
> He was a very modest man and his advice was always sound and his influence far-reaching.

Another former Governor, the Hon. John H. Trumbull, spoke of him as follows:

> I knew Mr. Goss for many years, and always appreciated the great contributions he made to industry and public affairs. He was considered an authority on both industry and public affairs. He was a leader in industrial activity in Connecticut and made valuable contributions to government and public affairs. The community and the State have sustained a great loss.

Governor Trumbull, of course, worked with Mr. Goss to help form the New England Council and the two men were long closely associated together. The president of that council, James W. Hook, of New Haven, also spoke of Mr. Goss:

> We will all miss him tremendously. His counsel was always sound and always looked to. He was one of the founders of the council and contributed much to it. He took a lively and sympathetic interest in anything that was for the good of New England.

The Waterbury "Republican," in its leading editorial of July 5, 1938, wrote in part:

> His strength was marked not alone by mental capacity, brought to his life's work combined with the best of scientific training that produced outstanding results at the Scovill Manufacturing Company's plant. Mr. Goss was a hard worker a man of character, upright integrity, and a conscientious purpose at all times to hold before him responsibility for the welfare of the great industrial group constituting the workers for the organization that he headed as president. Thus he won respect not alone for his ability but devotion in recognition of good leadership. His death stuns all with an overwhelming sense of loss that comes when a giant has fallen.
> Respectfully the workers addressed him as "Mr. Goss," but among themselves he was affectionately known as "E. O." The spirit of "E. O." found expression recently when he had completed fifty years of service with the Scovill company. Celebration of that rounding of a half century of never tiring good work was done simply in his own home, where he and Mrs. Goss entertained other workers who also had completed fifty years of service in more humble capacities in the manufacturing plant. Strong leader that he was, he recognized the importance of the assistance of others and was always ready to give them due appreciation and credit . . .
> Whether at work or at play, Mr. Goss had a keen sense of humor. He needed it in the serious business of the day. It was one of his assets. Nor will his friends forget how his face would light up in enthusiasm at the idea of hunting or fishing. He was a keen sportsman and a good fellow with all his more serious good qualities. Scovill's, Waterbury, New England and the world beyond will miss him. The best traditions of the Goss family and the Scovill organization were held high by E. O. Goss.

JOHN H. GOSS—John Henry Goss, president, a member of the board of directors, and general manager of the Scovill Manufacturing Company, of Waterbury, entered the employ of the company September 12, 1894, as a toolmaker apprentice. Three years later he became assistant in the office of John Lines, superintendent of what was then known as the burner department. Owing to Mr. Lines' ill health for the two years preceding his death, Mr. Goss was in charge of the department.

Mr. Goss perfected and co-ordinated the systems of ordering and receiving supplies, of entering orders and following up work through the plant, and of keeping costs. He was made a director of the company in 1906. Upon the death of Mr. Lines, Mr. Goss was made superintendent of the department. At that time the button department, the company's oldest line, was a separate department from the rest of the plant and two years after Mr. Goss's appointment as superintendent of the burner Department, the directors decided that the two departments should be united in one general manufacturing department and to Mr. Goss was assigned the task of effecting the consolidation. The new department successfully established, Mr. Goss was made its superintendent. Soon he was appointed general superintendent of works, including the supervision of mills, production, and service departments. This office also gave him charge of personnel and the relations of management to employes, and it is in this latter field that his service to the company has been outstanding in the years that have followed—important, even in comparison with the other activities connected with his position. Under his direction there has developed a confidence between the employes and the company which has resulted in a whole-hearted co-operation between men and management and has won for him a reputation extending far beyond his own company.

During the war period, while his father, Chauncey Porter Goss, was president, John H. Goss, as general superintendent, had charge of production and also of the arrangement of plant and designing of new buildings, equipment, and new machinery to fill the heavy orders received during that time. The plant, enlarged far beyond its previous size, became practically commandeered by the Government. Time fuzes and brass artillery cases were the principal products. During the time of this tremendous activity and stress the Company made an excellent record in both quality and quantity of production, with no strikes and a fine esprit de corps manifested by the employes. Great quantities of dangerous explosives were handled with no explosions and no serious accidents.

With Armistice Day came a cessation of war orders. The employment situation which had to be faced was critical. In August, 1914, preceding the war activities, the company had 4,200 employes; on Armistice Day it had 16,000 located in what is now its main plant. To turn a great proportion of these 16,000 employes on the street in winter at short notice would have created a distressing and perhaps a dangerous situation. The executives of the Scovill Company proved equal to the emergency by arranging with the Government to taper off on the contracts in hand, rather than to cut them off immediately. This relieved the situation and the company's officials set to work to build up a commercial business to replace as far as possible the vanished war time production. By April, 1919, they had succeeded in bringing in considerable new work and the employes had been reduced by degrees to 8,500. The manner in which accession of other enterprises successfully substituted new commercial business, from that time on, is described in the biography of Edward O. Goss, under whose direction as the company's president the result was achieved.

In spite of the great demand made upon his time by the responsibilities of his office at the Scovill plant, Mr. Goss has rendered signal service to his State and home community. His interest in local institutions has always been great and he has given particular attention to the Young Men's Christian Association, having served as its president for a number of years. He instituted and organized the drive to finance a new building and equipment for the Association—a drive halted by the war and later successfully completed under the leadership of John A. Coe. He served actively on the State Committee of the Red Cross during the war. A member of Waterbury's Board of Education for eight years, he greatly assisted the Board in building the Wilby High School and the addition to the Crosby High School. Standards of construction advocated by him at that time are still maintained in Waterbury. When, following the war, St. Mary's Hospital had to develop increased capacity, Mr. Goss was made a member of the Building Committee, where his experience and advice proved of great value. Mr. Goss served on the Board of Education of Waterbury for eight years under both Republican and Democratic administrations and during that time advocated and helped secure passage of legislation decidedly beneficial to the city's educational system, including a measure providing for the allocation of a percentage of the general tax to be devoted toward school buildings and maintenance. Under this law funds for the proper expansion of grade schools were made available without increasing the funded debt of the city. He also effected the adoption of a standard design for school buildings which provides safety and sanitation for the pupils and so minimizes fire risk that the city saves large sums in insurance.

As a member of the Board of Finance, to which Mr. Goss was appointed by Mayor Francis Guilfoile and of which he is still a member, he was instrumental in having established a surplus resource sinking fund to secure and protect funds for the payment of city debts. This action followed an exhaustive survey of a situation which was leading to the rapid pyramiding of the city debt. Later the State legislature by city charter amendment made the fund valid by statute and prevented the possibility of Aldermanic repeal.

Among other services to city and State are Mr. Goss' aid to the Waterbury Health Department during the grip epidemic of 1918, when, appointed emergency health officer by the Mayor, he organized and put into operation auxiliary medical, nursing and hospital aid which Dr. Black, then State Health Officer, stated, in an official report, had saved from 800 to 1,000 lives, in Waterbury.

During the World War Mr. Goss served as a member of the State Council of Defense and was in a position to give valuable assistance through his office as vice-president of the Manufacturers Association, of Connecticut. He was elected to this latter office in 1914 and has held it ever since.

In 1917, the Connecticut State Farm for Women was established by the State legislature. Mr. Goss, then appointed, is still one of the Board of that institution, now one of the finest of its sort in the country. Its buildings, of which he had charge of the design and erection, are considered models for their purposes. He is also a member of the State Jail Commission, which made a thorough survey resulting in its recommending the establishment of a jail farm for jail prisoners committed for the longer terms—a project now in formative development.

Mr. Goss, especially fitted for the position by reason of his own long experience in industry as an employer of men, is a member of the State Board of Mediation and Arbitration for labor disputes, which is rendering valuable service in bringing about agreements between employers and employes.

He is a director of the Manufacturers Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Providence, R. I.; the National Industrial Conference Board; the Nazareth Cement Company; the White Rock Mineral Springs Company; the Citizens and Manufacturers National Bank of Waterbury; and the Waterbury Savings Bank; and is a member of the Board of St. Mary's Hospital and a corporator of the Waterbury Hospital.

A Republican in politics, Mr. Goss is not interested in political office but is interested in the business success of administrations. He is philosophical in his attitude towards problems and would be classed as a "liberal conservative."

Born in Waterbury, June 5, 1872, Mr. Goss is the son of Chauncey Porter and Caroline Amelia (Ketcham) Goss. He was educated in private schools and the Holbrook Military Academy, at Sing Sing, New York, was privately tutored for college, and received his Bachelor of Arts degree from Yale University with the class of 1894.

His clubs include the Waterbury Country Club, the Waterbury Club, the Pine Orchard Country Club, the Yale Club of New York, and the Graduates Club of New Haven. He is a member of the First Congregational Church.

Mr. Goss' first marriage was at Pine Orchard, Connecticut, in 1902, to Ella Shepardson Young, who died October 15, 1933. She was the daughter of Alden M. and Ellen (Shepardson) Young. His second marriage was at Guilford, Connecticut, May 11, 1935, to Margaret M. Goodwin, daughter of Jeremiah J. and Jennie (Marden) Goodwin, of Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

Mr. Goss' children are: 1. Elizabeth Alden, who married Henry W. Wild, of the Island of Guernsey, on June 13, 1925; their children are Mary Galpin and Ann Van der Goes Wild. 2. John Brockway, who married Emily Marlin, of Pine Orchard, Connecticut, on June 20, 1928; their children are Donald and Estelle Dickey Goss. 3. Milton Warner, who married Nancy Barnes, of New Haven, Connecticut, on June 17, 1933; they have one daughter, Natica Young Goss.

FRANCIS JAMES FAHEY—Engaged in the practice of law and in a variety of public work in Thompsonville, Francis James Fahey is one of the respected and honored residents of his community.

Mr. Fahey was born December 4, 1899, in Thompsonville, Connecticut, son of Thomas and Margaret (Holien) Fahey, both natives of Ireland, who came to the United States in 1870, before their marriage. They were married in Thompsonville, where the father, who was employed by the Hartford Carpet Company, died in 1919.

Attending St. Joseph's Parochial School, Francis James Fahey later became a student at the Enfield High School, and at the Law School of Boston University. He took his degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1925 at Boston University. He also attended Fordham University, in New York, from 1919 to 1922. After completing his law school studies, he commenced the practice of his profession, being admitted to the bar in January, 1926. For about a year he carried on his work in Thompsonville. Then he attached himself to Judge Kirkham's office, in New Britain, remaining there until January, 1929. Returning to Thompsonville, he has continued his practice of law here since that time.

He has also participated extensively in community life. In 1932 and 1933, he was appointed Town Counsel of Thompsonville, and, in 1934, he served on the Board of Fire Commissioners, having been duly elected to that post by the people. He is a member of the American Legion and of the Hartford County Bar Association.

FRANCIS AUGUSTINE BURKE—A variety of business and civic endeavor has filled the career of Francis Augustine Burke, of Thompsonville, who has served for a number of years as tax collector of his community.

Mr. Burke was born November 10, 1898, in Thompsonville, son of Patrick F. and Bridget (Sullivan) Burke, the father a native of Ireland who came to the United States as a boy, now living retired, and the mother a Nova Scotian by birth, who came to this country when only four years of age. Both parents settled in Thompsonville, Connecticut, and here they were married.

St. Joseph's Parochial School furnished Francis Augustine Burke his early education, and he also attended Enfield High School and spent a year at Holy Cross College. His year at Holy Cross was the academic season of 1917-1918. There followed two years at the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University, in New Haven, from 1919 to 1921. He then entered the employ of the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, serving as a clerk in the factory and finally being promoted to the headship of the planning department for the entire mill. For six years, between 1921 and 1927, he remained there, then spent a year as an automobile salesman.

In October, 1928, he was elected tax collector of Thompsonville, being re-elected thereafter in 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932. Though out of office in 1933, he was again re-elected in 1934 and 1935. In 1935, he was elected for a two-year term as tax collector of the Town of Enfield, being appointed also as tax collector for Thompsonville. On June 10, 1918, after the United States had become involved in the World War, he enlisted for service in the Marine Corps, being the only Marine born in the Town of Enfield. He was with the 300th Machine Gun Battalion during the period of hostilities, stationed in Cuba, Haiti, San Domingo and other places, and serving with the rank of private for sixteen months until he was honorably discharged on September 10, 1919.

Always fond of outdoor life and healthful recreations, Mr. Burke played football at Holy Cross College, was on the varsity basketball team at Yale, played freshman baseball at both institutions, participated in many other sports in high school, and often served as captain of teams, and organized the Thompsonville Greys as a semi-professional football team. He still coaches football as occasion arises. The teams with which he has been connected have had the distinction of losing only nineteen games in eleven years, so proficient is he in his own playing and in the management of other sports organizations. He served for two years as financial secretary of the Grey's Athletic Association. Politically he is a staunch Democrat, and he is a member of St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church.

On September 15, 1926, at Thompsonville, Connecticut, Francis Augustine Burke married Hilda Shaughnessy, daughter of John and Mary (Smith) Shaughnessy, of Thompsonville, both now dead. Three sons were born to Mr. and Mrs. Burke: 1. Terrance Francis, born July 5, 1927. 2. John Patrick, born November 13, 1932. 3. Francis A., Jr., born December 14, 1934.

JOHN MILAN PEASE—In his life John Milan Pease represented the finest characteristics and attributes of his distinguished forebears, listed among the oldest families in New England, which counts among its representatives men who won distinction in the social, civic, military and business affairs of their surroundings. He surmounted the handicaps that confronted him during his youth.

Mr. Pease was born in East Windsor, November 20, 1832, the son of Frederick and Huldah (Lord) Pease, both of his native State, where his mother was born on July 26, 1804, and died in 1860. He was educated in the common schools and at the age of ten was bound out to Luman Allen of East Windsor, with whom he was to reside until he reached his majority. It was agreed that when he became twenty-one years old he was to be given a new suit of clothes and one hundred dollars. That he did not fare so well is revealed by the fact that he went barefooted until Thanksgiving every year and when he finally reached his majority, was still clad in overalls. For a period he worked in Portland and late in the 1850's came to Melrose, then known as Irish Row, where he purchased the sixty-acre Potwin farm. He worked this property, which is still owned by his son, Allen, until his retirement, which took place some years prior to his passing.

On March 19, 1861, at Weymouth, town of Enfield, John Milan Pease married Laura Lucinda Phelps, daughter of Horace and Laura A. (Allen) Phelps, both members of old and honorable New England families. Mr. and Mrs. Pease were the parents of ten children: 1. Laura Maria, born August 27, 1862, a retired practical nurse. 2. Horace Frederick, born February 9, 1864, died May 8, 1864. 3. Willie Adelbert, born June 19, 1865, died July 7, 1865. 4. John Burdett, born December 2, 1866, married May A. Thrall on October 30, 1889, and they had the following children: (i) John Raymond, born June 23, 1892, married Mildred E. Sikes on December 31, 1914, and they are the parents of: (a) June Isabelle, born December 6, 1915. (b) Esther May, born January 21, 1917. (c) Elisabeth, born March 12, 1918. (d) John David, born September 27, 1919. (e) Foster Sikes, born June 4, 1921. (f) Ruth Margaret, born August 9, 1923. (g) William Kenneth, born September 27, 1924. (h) Catherine, born October 29, 1925. (i) Mary Jeanette, born February 8, 1927. (j) Carolyn Ann, born October 9, 1930. (k) Raymond, born August 25, 1936. (ii) Justina May, born April 11, 1894, married Howard T. Spencer, March 4, 1914, and their children are: (a) Norman Burdett, born March 4, 1915. (b) Gerald Maurice, born December 4, 1917. (c) Howard Pease, born April 1, 1920. (iii) Edwin Thrall, born June 1, 1904. 5-6. Anna Gertrude and Allen Gilbert, twins, born December 18, 1868. (5) Anna Gertrude married Henry Smith Pomeroy on October 3, 1887, and their children are: (i) Laura E., born September, 1889. (ii) Ralph Henry, born November 6, 1896, married Anna Navaroli, May 3, 1935, and they have one child, Ruth Stoughton. (iii) Allen Burdett, born October 23, 1900. (iv) Doris Gertrude, born November 17, 1902, married Lehmann Bushnell, March 21, 1929, and they have one child, Donald Stevens, born December 29, 1929. (6) Allen Gilbert, married Adelaide Weir, June 25, 1902, and they are the parents of: (i) Donald Weir, born September 18, 1903, married Antoinette DalPian, May 14, 1930, and they have three children: (a) Donald Robert, born February 11, 1931. (b) Dolores Ann, born August 27, 1932. (c) James Allen, born March 5, 1935. (ii) Anna Estella, born January 12, 1906, married Edward Frey, June 23, 1933, and they have one daughter, Doris Adelaide, born November 23, 1934. (iii) Horace Allen, born November 24, 1907, married Eugenia Nash, March 31, 1934. (iv) Mahlon Harold, born November 15, 1914. (v) Roger Warren, born April 23, 1925. 7. Luella May, born May 1, 1872, died September 19, 1874. 8. Frederick Ephraim, born July 21, 1874, married Alice C. Warren, February 5, 1896, and they became the parents of the following children: (i) Frederick Warren, born June 9, 1900, married Hazel Namany, August 25, 1926, and they have one son, Frederick August, born April 15, 1936. (ii) Gertrude Mae, born April 29, 1903, married James Miller, September 21, 1929, and they have one child, Jean Alice, born November 14, 1931. 9. Emily Adella, born December 9, 1879, married Willard H. Gowdy, October 18, 1905, and their children are: (i) Eleanor Josephine, born June 23, 1906, married James H. Billings, October 13, 1928, and they have one child, Charles Orin, born October 21, 1930. (ii) Allen, born May 2, 1909. (iii) Henry Willard, born July 14, 1911. (iv) Laura L., born March 4, 1915. (v) Louis Roger, born August 31, 1919. 10. Seba Eleanor, born February 5, 1882, who taught school for thirty-five years, the last nineteen of which she served as a member of the faculty of the Northeast School in Hartford. She was educated at the Rockville High School and is now residing in Melrose.

John Milan Pease died at his home in Melrose on April 23, 1891, at the age of fifty-eight years. He was a man of the highest integrity and lived his life in accordance with the highest Christian ideals.

(The Pease Line.)

(I) Robert Pease, born in England in 1607, the son of Robert and Margaret Pease of Great Baddow, near Ipswich, Essex County, and brother of Elizabeth and John, was the first member of this family to come to America, arriving here on the ship "Francis" in April, 1634, and settling in Salem, Massachusetts, where he died in 1644. (The Lord Record.)

Frederick Pease, father of John Milan Pease, married Huldah Lord, daughter of Huldah Abby Allen and George Lord, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary War.

(The Phelps Line.)

Earliest record of this family is traced back to the eleventh century in northern Italy, where it was known under the name of Welfs and boasted representatives prominent in court and political activities. It is next found in Germany where its representatives were known as the Guelphs, and finally in Scotland, where the present name Phelps was adopted.

(I) George Phelps, born at Tewksbury, Gloucestershire, England, in 1605, the son of William and the grandson of James Phelps, who is said to have resided in the aforementioned community about 1520, was the first member of this family to come to America. He came to this country on the ship "Mary and John" with his brother William, and landed at Hull, Massachusetts, on May 30, 1630. Later he settled in Dorchester, Massachusetts, with other members of the Reverend Warham's Church and in the fall of 1635, removed to Windsor, Connecticut, during the founding of this community, locating at the junction of the Farmington and Connecticut rivers. In 1670 he established himself in Westfield, Massachusetts. He married Frances Dewey.

(II) Jacob Phelps, son of George and Frances (Dewey) Phelps, was born in Windsor, February 7, 1649, or '50, and married Dorothy Ingersoll, May 2, 1672. They removed to Westfield, Massachusetts, and became the parents of the following children: 1. Dorothy. 2. Dorothy (again). 3. Hannah. 4. Israel, of whom further. 5. Benjamin. 6. Joseph. 7. Jedediah.

(III) Israel Phelps, born April 3, 1681, married twice and by his first wife had four children. He married (second) January 26, 1714, Rachael Jones and they were the parents of: 1. John. 2. David, of whom further. 3. John. 4. Noah.

(IV) David Phelps, born August 25, 1716, resided in Enfield; on March 29, 1737, married Margaret Colton of Springfield, and they were the parents of the following children: 1. Eldad. 2. Margaret. 3. Rachael. 4. David. 5. Mary. 6. Martha. 7. David, of whom further. 8. John. 9. Beulah. 10. Christiana.

(V) David Phelps, born May 23, 1753, and died November 2, 1834. He served with the Continental forces during the Revolutionary War, enlisting twice, once for a term of three months and later for a term of three years, during which time he saw action in many historic engagements, including the Lexington Alarm. He married Anna Pease, daughter of Ephraim and Tabitha (Abbe) Pease, and they were the parents of the following children: 1. David, born October 22, 1781, married Polly Bromley. 2. Gaius, born December 22, 1783, married Susan Carrow. 3. Jabez, born August 22, 1785, narried Polly Allen. 4. Mary, born November, 1786, married Samuel Crane. 5. Roswell, born May 9, 1789, married Sally Allen. 6. Ozias, born August 24, 1791, died May 13, 1799. 7. Sylvester, born July 4, 1793, married three times. 8. Horace, died November 19, 1794. 9. Anna, born February 25, 1795, married (first) Pascoe. Married (second) Levi Lord. 10. Horace, of whom further. 11. Osee, born March 9, 1799, married Clarissa Pease. 12. Abigail, born March 2, 1801, married Horace Hawkins. 13. Nelson, born September 14, 1804, married Parsons (first name unknown). All of this family were natives of Enfield, measured over six feet in height and weighed over two hundred pounds each.

(VI) Horace Phelps, born in Enfield, April 23, 1797, married at East Windsor, May 10, 1827, Laura A. Allen, who was born in this community on July 16, 1804, and died on September 17, 1870. He died in Enfield March 19, 1862. They were the parents of the following children: 1. Horace, born July 3, 1828, married Susan Clock. 2. An infant born and died July 18, 1829. 3. Samuel, born December 24, 1834, married Mary Parmelee. 7. Albert, born August 18, 1836, died July 7, 1837. 8. Albert, born April 19, 1838, married Ellen Eastman. 9. Laura Lucinda, born March 17, 1840, married John M. Pease, whose name heads this review. 10. Gilbert, the seventh son of the seventh son, born February 13, 1842, married (first) Marietta Morris; (second) Alice Simons. 11. George, born May 25, 1843, died February 7, 1915. 12. Emily, born September 18, 1847, married Walter Newberry.

(The Allen Line.)

(I) Samuel Allen, born in Braintree, Essex County, England, about 1588, during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, was the first member of this family to come to America. He settled in Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1632 and three years later removed to Windsor, Connecticut, where he died April 28, 1648, leaving a widow and six children, among them, John, of whom further.

(II) John Allen, third child of Samuel Allen, was killed by Indians at the Battle of Bloody Brook, Deerfield, Massachusetts, September 18, 1675. He married Mary Hannum and they had three children, among them, Samuel, of whom further.

(III) Samuel Allen, second child of John Allen, was born at Northampton, Massachusetts, February 5, 1673, removed to King Street, Enfield, about 1700 to escape from the Indians. He married Hannah Burrough in 1700, engaged in farming and was the father of four children, all born in Enfield, among them Joseph, of whom further.

(IV) Joseph Allen, second son of Samuel, was born July 30, 1704, and died June 11, 1777. He farmed and manufactured tar and pitch with his brother Samuel. In 1723, Joseph Allen married Mary Hewlitt, who died at their home in East Windsor, June 28, 1782. According to family record she was the daughter of an Indian chief and inherited a section of the Scantic meadow from Hazardville to Windsor Hill. They had eight children, among them Samuel, of whom further.

(V) Samuel Allen, fifth child of Joseph Allen, was born in East Windsor, June 8, 1736, and died October 10, 1816. He fought in the Revolutionary War and, according to an old manuscript, was one of the heroes who escaped in the battle of Fort Edward. During his flight he was seized by the back of the neck by an Indian, whom he managed to overcome by kicking him in the stomach and he killed him by jumping with both feet on the Indian's breast. He carried the marks of the Indian's nails on his neck until his passing. Samuel Allen married (first) Elizabeth Wells, daughter of Hezekiah Wells, who was born at East Windsor on June 5, 1740, and died May 11, 1778. They had six children. He married (second) Sarah Booth of Enfield, who died July 27, 1800, after bearing him four children. He married (third) Lucy Alden Markham, widow of Darius Markham and the daughter of the Reverend Noah Alden. She was born in Longmeadow and died February 3, 1837.

(VI) Samuel Allen, second child of Samuel Allen, was born June 16, 1764, engaged in farming and died October 11, 1841. He married (first) June 5, 1786, Mary Allen, who died at East Windsor, May 21, 1823. He married (second) January 12, 1824, Mrs. Azubah Moody, who died November 27, 1840. He married (third) Mrs. Hannah Belknap Gleason. By his first wife he was the father of seven children, among them Laura Alden, of whom further.

Laura Alden Allen, seventh child of Samuel Allen, was born July 16, 1804, and on May 10, 1827, at East Windsor, was married to Horace Phelps, son of David and Anna Pease Phelps. They became the parents of twelve children, among them, Laura Lucinda, who married John Milan Pease.

B. FLOYD TURNER—As treasurer and director of the Glastonbury Bank and Trust Company, B. Floyd Turner has assumed a position of prominence among the leading financiers of Hartford County, where he has engaged in the banking business for over a quarter of a century. He has maintained his present office for over seventeen years and during this period has also been an active and influential citizen in the civic and social affairs of his surroundings.

Mr. Turner, member of an old and distinguished New England family, was born in Glastonbury, August 31, 1889, the son of Benjamin Franklin and Ida (Smith) Turner. His father, who died in 1905, operated an extensive tobacco farm in this section. Prior to managing this property he had been associated with the Meriden Britannia Company and worked for this concern until the outbreak of the Civil War, when he enlisted with the Union forces and was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Twenty-fifth Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers. After the war he joined a Boston drug firm and worked here for several years, eventually returning to Glastonbury to assume management of the family farm, which he operated until his passing. The elder Turner was active in community affairs and held several public offices, among them that of selectman, a member of the local school board and a member of the board of relief.

On his paternal side Mr. Turner traces his American ancestry to his great grandfather, William H. Turner, who was brought to this country from England by his mother, who settled in Boston. As a young boy he was brought to Glastonbury by a merchant. He married and was the father of Chauncey Turner, who was born in 1793 or '94, and married Hopestill Risley.

Maternally, Mr. Turner is a descendant of Richard Risley, a native of England, who came to this country aboard the good ship "Griffin," and settled in Newtown, Massachusetts, now known as Cambridge. In 1636, he removed to Connecticut with the Hooker Party and settled in Hartford. The lineage from this point is traced through his son Richard, Jr., born in Hartford in 1648; through his son Samuel; through his son Job; and through his son Samuel, who was born in Glastonbury and was the father of Hopestill Risley, who married Chauncey Turner.

Mr. B. Floyd Turner received a general education in the public schools of his native community and after completing this part of his studies, matriculated at Trinity College, from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in the class of 1910. The same year he became associated with the Hartford Trust Company, now the Hartford, Connecticut, Trust Company, and was associated with that institution until 1920, when he came to Glastonbury as treasurer and director of the Glastonbury Bank and Trust Company, offices he has since maintained with distinction.

Throughout his residence in this community, he has been active in community affairs, serving as chairman of the Board of Finances for the Town of Glastonbury from 1923 to 1935, and holding membership in the Manchester Country Club.

On August 24, 1915, at Glastonbury, Mr. Turner married Emily Welles Lambert, daughter of the late Rev. John R. and Helen (Kellogg) Lambert. Mr. and Mrs. Turner are the parents of two daughters: 1. Elizabeth, born January 2, 1917, a graduate of the Oxford School at Hartford, and now a student at the Katharine Gibbs School in Boston. 2. Emily L., born on June 2, 1919, who graduated from the Oxford School in the class of 1937.

EDWARD JOSEPH O'DONNELL—As chairman of the Police Commission, first selectman and former tax collector of the City of Enfield, Edward Joseph O'Donnell has become one of the most influential and popular civic leaders in this community during recent years.

Mr. O'Donnell was born in Enfield, April 10, 1887, the son of Patrick and Ellen (Malia) O'Donnell, both natives of Ireland, who came to this country as young people and settled in Thompsonville, where they met and married. His father was a dyer in the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company. Mr. O'Donnell received a general education in the public schools of Enfield and after completing his studies in the local high school, began his career. At the age of twenty-one he secured a position as conductor for the street car company here and continued in this capacity for seventeen years. At the expiration of this period he became manager of a bus line between Hartford and New London, with offices in the former city and maintained this office until 1933, when he was elected tax collector of Enfield for one term. Later he secured a position with the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company and was associated with this concern until October 5, 1936, when he was elected first selectman of the Town of Enfield, an office he has since occupied with distinction and success. The notable success he has enjoyed as a legislator has led to his appointment to other important and responsible official positions, among them the chairmanship of the Police Commission. On the basis of past accomplishments and the confidence he is held in by the electorate, Mr. O'Donnell is destined to enjoy further honor and distinction in public life. In conjunction with his official duties, he is also widely known in social and sporting circles, and holds a fourth degree in the local council of the Knights of Columbus.

On January 3, 1916, Mr. O'Donnell married Pearl Hodges, daughter of George and Nettie (Kibbe) Hodges, and they are the parents of two children: 1. Aileen Florence, born October 23, 1916. 2. Francis Edward, born April 11, 1918.

HENRY EDWARD SMITH—For over a decade Henry Edward Smith, second selectman, has been one of the most able and prominent figures in the municipal government of Thompsonville, which has jurisdiction over the community of Hazardville, where he resides and engages in farming. As a public official he has won the confidence and esteem of his constituents who have seen fit to re-elect him for the important and responsible position he now holds, on numerous occasions.

Mr. Smith was born in Hazardville, January 28, 1878, the son of William and Mary (Marony) Smith, the former a native of England, and the latter, of Ireland. His parents, who came to this country during their youth, were married in New York City and then settled in Hazardville, where his father was originally a powder maker and later engaged in farming and tobacco raising.

Mr. Smith attended the "Little Red School House," until he was fourteen, when he went to work on the family farm, continuing in this occupation until he was seventeen. At that time he entered the blacksmith trade in Hazardville, which he was to follow for eighteen years and at the expiration of this period, became associated with Amos Bridge and Sons, contractors, who were doing road construction work. Three years later he resigned to enter a career in farming, which he has since pursued with success.

His official career dates back to 1926, when he was elected second selectman. He was re-elected to this office in 1928, and again in 1930, and 1932. He was chosen third selectman in 1934 and '35, and in 1936 was again named second selectman. His long tenure of office graphically indicates the success he has enjoyed as a legislator and the confidence he is held in by his constituents. He is popular socially, holding membership in the Doric Lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Men's Club of Hazardville, and the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On April 18, 1905, Mr. Smith married Caroline Rutherford, daughter of James and Mary (MacLeash) Rutherford, and they are the parents of four children: 1. Dorothea, born April 8, 1908. 2. Ruth, born December 31, 1910. 3. Donald Robert, born December, 1912. 4. Howard William, born in 1919.

ALLAN T. SPEIRS—In Old Lyme, to which place his father came years ago, Allan T. Speirs was held in respect and admiration as an active business man and a most useful citizen. His advance to his high position was over a long and hard road, for as a boy he began making a livelihood and, only after broad experience did he set himself up in business for himself. In the meanwhile he gave of his time and energies to help the progress and welfare of the community, and he felt honored to serve it in public capacities, as well as a private individual. He was universally liked by the townspeople.

Mr. Speirs was born at New Britain, Connecticut, January 18, 1888, son of Allan and Mary (Jameison) Speirs. His father, a native of Scotland, came to New Britain in his youth, and throughout the major part of his life engaged in farming, first near New Britain, then at South Lyme, and eventually in Old Lyme. Allan T. Speirs, the son, attended the schools of New Britain, South Lyme and Old Lyme in his endeavor to gain an elementary education. When he was fourteen years old he began serving an apprenticeship with Newman and Cronin, in New London, to learn the plumber's and steam-fitter's trades. He had a background of both knowledge and experience in his vocation when he returned to Old Lyme. Here he was in the employ of George Babcock, for about three years, before establishing his own place and headquarters. In 1932, Mr. Speirs built a store and a large workshop on Main Street, and both in the equipment of his place and plant, and in the work he did as a contracting plumber, he used only the most modern and best in his line. His reputation for integrity, faithful carrying out of agreements, and for sound advice of prospective customers increased with the years.

Mr. Speirs was a former town treasurer of Old Lyme, and he served continuously upon the school board for a dozen years and more. His own difficulty in obtaining schooling was one of the reasons for his keen interest in having education made easily available by the youth of today. Fraternally he was affiliated with Pythagoras Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was a member of the Saybrook Rotary Club and of the Congregational Church.

In Old Lyme, on April 9, 1914, Allan T. Speirs married Dorothy Elizabeth Marvin, daughter of Elbert and Hattie (Maynard) Marvin, and they were the parents of three children: 1. Winifred, a graduate of Chapman Tech., of New London, and Connecticut State College, who taught for a year prior to her marriage to John Eliot. The latter named was employed as herdsman at the State Farm for Women, at Niantic, later being transferred to the State Training School and Hospital, at Mansfield, as farm manager. 2. Malcolm, graduate of Chapman Tech., 1938, who has entered the Rensselaer Institute of Technology, New York. 3. Barbara, aged twelve, a student in the public schools. Mr. Speirs was taken suddenly ill in October, 1938, and passed away January 25, 1939.

JOHN CHRISTENSEN—For many years John Christensen has been engaged in valuable market gardening operations in Wilson, Town of Windsor, here earning the warm esteem and respect of his contemporaries as a result of his manifold accomplishments. Quite aside from his own business undertakings, he has taken part in a most helpful way in the general civic and social life of his community and State, establishing himself as one of Connecticut's public-spirited and well-beloved citizens.

Mr. Christensen was born July 25, 1890, in Hartford, Connecticut, son of Niels and Lena (Arens) Christensen, both born in Denmark. His parents came to the United States in 1884, settling in Hartford, where the father took up market gardening. He is now living retired. The mother passed from this life in 1922.

The public schools of Hartford, his Connecticut birthplace, provided the early education of John Christensen, who, after he completed his high school studies, became a student at a business college in his native city. His first employment was as a market gardener with his father, and at the time of his father's retirement he took over complete management of the business. He now cultivates about 150 acres at Wilson, and his community and the town of Windsor are, indeed, fortunate in the fact that such a man as he is connected with the business and civic life of the district.

John Christensen

He has served twenty-five years as constable of the town of Windsor. He is a member of the State Legislature, representing the town of Windsor; was first elected in 1933, re-elected in 1935 and again re-elected in 1937, for a two-year term, and again in 1939 for two years. In his first term he was a member of the agricultural committee. In the second term he was a member of the committee on humane institutions, and in his third term he was made a member of the appropriations committee, serving as its clerk. He is also chairman of the legislative expense committee.

His extensive participation in farming affairs and in the fraternal and social life of his times has brought him the warm admiration of his associates and acquaintances. He is a director of the Connecticut Agricultural Council, also a director of the Hartford Market Gardeners' Association and the Connecticut Vegetable Growers' Association, and has served in the past as president of the State group. He is now president of the Vegetable Growers of America and the Hartford Market Gardeners, Incorporated, and a director of the Northeastern Agricultural Council. He is Treasurer of the Wilson Finance Company. He is connected with the Windsor Chamber of Commerce and the City Club of Hartford. Politically he has always lent his allegiance to the Republican Party, whose policies and principles he supports, and he has had the distinction of being the only Republican elected in his town and of being elected at the same time by a solid majority. He is a member of the Board of Selectmen of Windsor. A leader in the ranks of fraternalism, Mr. Christensen is a member of Palisado Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Hartford Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and he is connected with Midian Encampment of Hartford, is a member of the Rebekahs, and of Eureka Chapter, No. 56, Order of Eastern Star, of Windsor, Connecticut. He is a thirty-second degree Mason, Connecticut Consistory, holding membership in Washington Lodge, No. 70, Free and Accepted Masons, of Windsor; Washington Commandery, Knights Templar, of Hartford; Wolcott Council, Royal and Select Masters; Pythagoras Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; and Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

John Christensen married (first), in 1911, Mathelthe Lassen, daughter of Mrs. Christine Lassen. She died in 1918, leaving two children: 1. Nelson, who was graduated from Massachusetts State College, Class of 1936, and now associated with his father. 2. Dorothy, graduated from the MacDuffie School, of Springfield, Massachusetts, married Willard B. Carr, of Providence; they have one daughter, Gail. Mr. Christensen married (second), November 4, 1922, Gladys Lawson, daughter of John and Jane Crawford (Hunter) Lawson. They are the parents of one daughter, Anna Marie Christensen, who is a student at the Chaffee School, in Windsor.

PHILIP KEENEY WILLIAMS—Philip Keeney Williams was born in Hartford, August 21, 1870, the son of Charles Stuart and Emma F. (Keeney) Williams, who were married in 1868, and were also the parents of the following other children: 1. Marion W., of Hartford. 2. Samuel P., of Hartford. 3. George M., who died in infancy.

Mr. Williams' father, Charles Stuart Williams, was president of the former Williams and Carleton Company. This business was founded by George W. Williams, the father of Charles Stuart, who came to Hartford from Manchester in 1854, and took over the drug business at the corner of State and Front Streets in this city, which he continued to operate until about 1885, when he retired. During that year the firm was incorporated under the name of The Williams and Carleton Company, and Charles Stuart Williams assumed management, continuing in this capacity until his death, in March, 1926. George W., Charles S., and Samuel P., have all held the office of deacon in the Asylum Hill Congregational Church of Hartford.

After a general education in the public schools of Hartford, Philip Keeney Williams matriculated at the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy in 1892. He began his career with the Merrow Machine Company, of Hartford, and about a year later became associated with the Hartford Steam Boiler Insurance Company. In 1896, he came to Glastonbury and joined the J. B. Williams Company, a business founded over ninety years ago by his great uncle. He has been identified with this company since then, and is now secretary and a member of the board of directors.

As a resident of Glastonbury, Mr. Williams has taken a live interest in all phases of community life. He is a director of the Glastonbury Bank and Trust Company, and for a number of years served as a town auditor. He is a deacon of the First Church of Christ in Glastonbury, a member of the University Club of Hartford, and of the Jeremiah Wadsworth Branch of the Connecticut Society, Sons of the American Revolution.

On April 5, 1904, Mr. Williams married Isabel Douglas Seelye, the daughter of Ezra N. and Henrietta (Douglas) Seelye, of Glastonbury. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have had five children: 1. Charles Stuart, 2d. 2. Philip Northrop, who died in 1929 at the age of twenty-three. 3. John Douglas. 4. Virginia Welles, who is married to Russell D. Reddig, and is the mother of one child, Edith Denison. 5. Isabel Seelye.

FRANK ABBE SIMMONS—Distinction is attached to the name of Frank Abbe Simmons as one of the outstanding figures in the insurance business of Hartford County and one of the prominent civic and political leaders of the community of Enfield and vicinity, where he is now serving his fourth term as chairman of the Republican Town Committee and is a former public official.

Mr. Simmons was born December 18, 1898, the son of Benjamin and Lizzie (Parsons) Simmons, both deceased. He received a general education in the public schools of Enfield and after completing this part of his studies attended Brown University in Providence, Rhode Island. He began his career in the insurance business in Hartford and has since continued in this work, serving as special agent for the Scottish Union Insurance Company and the National Insurance Company until May 1, 1937, at which time he joined the Pearl Assurance Company, Limited, of New York, as special agent, with offices at 805 Main Street, Enfield. The prominence he has assumed in this business is readily appreciated when we learn of the important positions he has been chosen to fill in several of the largest insurance organizations in the country. In this connection he served as a member of the executive committee of the New England Insurance Exchange and on the governing board of the Fire Insurance Association of New England. He resigned this position when assuming his new duties with the Pearl Assurance Company, Limited, on May 1, 1937.

Throughout his life in Hartford County, Mr. Simmons has been very active in the civic and political affairs of his surroundings. His official life dates back to 1927 when he was elected tax collector of the Town of Enfield and re-elected for office during the succeeding term, in 1928. Among the younger men he has been recognized as one of the most capable political figures of this section and as a consequence is now serving his fourth term as chairman of the Republican Town Committee of Enfield, having first been chosen for the post in 1930. Socially, Mr. Simmons belongs to the Connecticut Field Club and the local post of the American Legion, being entitled to membership in the latter organization through his service with the Student Army Training Corps during the World War. In his religious convictions he worships at the Congregational Church.

On July 30, 1928, at Agawam, Massachusetts, Mr. Simmons married Olga Ackermann, daughter of August and Annie (Borchardt) Ackermann, both natives of Germany who came to this country during their childhood. They married here, originally settled in Springfield, Massachusetts, later removed to Pittsfield, from there went to Augusta, Maine, and then came to Agawam. Mrs. Simmons' father, who died on April 13, 1928, was a baker. Like her distinguished husband, Mrs. Simmons is active in social and political affairs and belongs to the Women's Club of Enfield. Mr. and Mrs. Simmons are the parents of one son: Theodore Parsons, born December 25, 1933.

SAMUEL HUBBARD WILLIAMS—As chairman of the board of directors of the J. B. Williams Company of Glastonbury, Samuel Hubbard Williams is perpetuating the fame of a family which has been prominent in the social, civic and business life of this State for generations, counting among its representatives men who played an influential and dominant role in the colonial and revolutionary history of the nation.

Mr. Williams was born in Glastonbury, September 28, 1864, the son of James Baker and Jerusha M. (Hubbard) Williams. James Baker Williams was born February 2, 1818, at Lebanon, Connecticut, in the house which had been the home of his ancestors for generations, son of Solomon and Martha (Baker) Williams, both of Lebanon. James Baker Williams died in 1907. Paternal ancestry of the family is traced back to Robert Williams, who came to this country from Norwich, England, and settled in Roxbury, Massachusetts, about 1634. Descendants of the progenitor in America include some of the most distinguished Revolutionary and Colonial characters in the history of the nation, among them Governor Willis of Connecticut, Colonel Ephraim Williams, founder of Williams College, the Rev. Elisha Williams, third president of Yale University, the Rev. Solomon Williams, his brother, William Williams, who according to family record was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and Thomas S. Williams, former Chief Justice of the State of Connecticut. Mr. Williams of this review, is a descendant of Dr. Joseph Baker, his father's grandfather, who served as a surgeon with the Continental troops under command of General Putnam.

James Baker Williams was the founder of the J. B. Williams Company. He began his business career at the age of seventeen, when he entered the employ of a druggist firm in Manchester. In 1838 he was made a partner of the establishment, which operated under the title of Keeney and Williams, and two years later assumed full control. At the time he took his brother in partnership and the concern was conducted under the name of Williams Brothers for seven years, during which time they perfected a formula for the manufacture of the first real American shaving soap, a product which gained them nation-wide fame and was known under the trade name of "Williams Genuine Yankee Shaving Soap." In 1847 the business was divided, his brother, George W. Williams, taking over the drug department, and James Baker Williams the manufacturing branch. Soon thereafter, William S. Williams, another brother, became a partner of the J. B. Williams Company, whose operating site had been removed to a rented building in Glastonbury that offered the advantages of water power. The aforementioned association was maintained until 1885, when the concern was incorporated and the following officers were named: president, James Baker Williams; vice-president, William S. Williams; treasurer, George G. Williams; secretary, Bernard T. Williams; and superintendent, David W. Williams. James Baker Williams continued as head of the firm until his retirement, which took place a few years prior to his death.

Samuel Hubbard Williams received a general education in the public schools of Glastonbury and after completing this part of his studies matriculated at Amherst College, from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in the class of 1885. The following year he took a post graduate course at the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University and after finishing his training, entered his father's plant during the latter part of 1886 as a chemist. During the ensuing years he worked his way through the various departments of the organization and gained a comprehensive and practical knowledge that has eminently equipped him for the important and responsible positions he has been called upon to fill in the management of the firm. These include the office of secretary, that of president, which he assumed in 1920, and chairman of the board of directors, to which he was elected in 1934 and has since occupied with characteristic distinction and success. The present executive staff includes: Everett B. Hurlburt, president and treasurer; Charles S. Campbell, vice-president; and Philip K. Williams, secretary.

Commensurate with his business prominence Mr. Williams has been an active and influential figure in the social and civic affairs of his surroundings throughout his life. Deeply interested in educational matters he has served as a member of the Town School Committee and the Board of Education of Glastonbury and is trustee of the Hartford Seminary Foundation. He has also served as treasurer and assessor of the town and in 1901 was elected to represent it in the State Legislature. Socially he is a member of the Amherst Club of New York City, the University Club of Hartford and fraternizes with the Masonic Order, in which he holds a thirty-second degree. In his religious convictions he worships at the Congregational Church, where he is a deacon and served as Sunday School Superintendent for thirty years. He is a director of the State Conference of Congregational Churches.

In 1889, Samuel Hubbard Williams married India Frances Scudder, whose father was a missionary. Mr. and Mrs. Williams are the parents of four children: 1. Carol, who is married to the Rev. Douglas Horton, D.D., pastor of the Federated Church of Chicago, Illinois. 2. Frances, who is married to the Rev. Hugh C. Burr, D.D., pastor of the First Baptist Church of Detroit. 3. Martha, an educator and graduate of Wellesley College. 4. James B., who is treasurer of the Cheney-Bigelow Wire Works, of Springfield, Massachusetts.

EDWARD KELLEY—There are parts of Connecticut, such as the New Canaan section, which enjoy an almost national reputation as nursery centers, where ornamentals, trees, and nursery stock grow to perfection. Edward Kelley spent practically all his life from boyhood as a nurseryman, and was a familiar figure wherever these specialists gathered. He was a native of New Canaan, born July 13, 1859, son of John and Mary (Gannon) Kelley, both deceased, his birthplace being a house on the Hoyt Estate, not far from the home in which he died seventy-seven years later.

Edward Kelley was educated in the New Canaan schools, and at an early age worked during his spare time with what is now The Hoyt Nursery Company.

When he left school it was to continue with this concern, which he never left. Over a long period, and to his passing, he was superintendent, and a well-recognized expert on floriculture and horticulture, a man who, strangely enough, when considered in connection with his great stature, could make the most tender plants thrive, and perform delicate operations with the touch of a skilled surgeon.

As a good citizen, Mr. Kelley served well his community, and was honored for his public spirit and civic accomplishments. When the Town Board of Finance was first organized, a quarter of a century ago, he was named a member and carried on his share of its activities in an efficient, conservative, yet enterprising, manner until his death. He had also been a member of the Town Board of Assessors and the Board of Relief. Fraternally, he was affiliated with New Canaan Grange, and was a charter member of the Norwalk Council of the Knights of Columbus, of the Poinsettia Club, the New Canaan Fire Company, and was a member of the Connecticut Nurserymen. He was of the Catholic faith, a member of St. Aloysius Church.

Edward Kelley married Elizabeth Murray, who survives with two daughters, Miss Elizabeth Kelley, a supervisor of physical education in New York City, and Miss Mary Kelley, a teacher in the New York public school system; two sons, attorney Henry E. Kelley, of Searsdale, New York, who married Susanna Graham, and they have two children, Susanna and William; and Charles F. Kelley, a nurseryman, of West Haven, Connecticut.

Mr. Kelley died of a heart attack on July 26, 1936, and his passing brought many expressions of sympathy to his family, and numerous statements regarding his fine character and exemplary life. He was "Big Ed" Kelley from his youth, a cognomen that came to mean not so much stature as greatness of heart and spirit. Always a man to fight for what he believed to be right, yet he was always kindly, generous, slow in his condemnation of others, and quick to lend a hand to those who needed help.

HENRY BENEDICT—The Connecticut family of this name, whose members have been active in Danbury life for several generations, was founded here by Henry Benedict, who came from Norwalk with his wife, a member of the Moorehouse family, and lived on Main Street, Danbury, for many years, where the Hotel Green now stands. Henry Benedict was the founder and president of The Danbury Light Company, which developed under his leadership into a strong and useful organization, which later became the Danbury and Bethel Gas and Electric Company. He was also president and a director of the Danbury Cemetery and a figure of prominence in the general life of the city. He had three sons, Henry (2), Daniel and Edgar, all born in the old Main Street home of the family.

Of these sons, Daniel entered the shoe business and followed it successfully until the time of his death. He was a substantial businessman of the city and continued the fine traditions of citizenship long associated here with the Benedict name. His own sons, after the termination of his career, took over the Benedict shoe business and carried it on until it was sold to outside interests.

Daniel Benedict built the Division Street house which has since been the family home. He married Mary J. Wilcox, of Norwalk, and they became the parents of eight children: 1. Elizabeth M. 2. Henry. 3. Mary Jane, who married Dr. Selleck. 4. Nellie, deceased. 5. Josephine, now Mrs. Baker. 6. Daniel, deceased. 7. Isabelle, deceased. 8. Edgar.

HARRIS FENTON BROWNLEE, M.D.—Widely known in the medical profession for his specialized work in urology and gynecology, Dr. Harris Fenton Brownlee, for forty years a physician in Danbury, earned distinction for his attainments and broad knowledge. He had the remarkable privilege of studying under the direction of the famous Professor Adolf Lorenz, Austrian orthopedic surgeon. His practice in Danbury covered the years from 1890 to 1934, ending only with his retirement because of the state of his health, and in the course of those years he gained a large clientele and a host of friends. His qualities were of a kind to bring him honor and recognition and at the same time to enhance his usefulness through making his personality helpful in the sickroom.

Dr. Brownlee was born at Lawyersville, Schoharie County, New York, on September 14, 1866, son of James and Mary J. (Stryker) Brownlee. The family background of the man was a significant one, and he became a worthy scion of his race. Better known in the South than in the North, members of the family attained marked prominence by their support of the anti-slavery movement, which was, needless to say, very unpopular in that part of the country. Robert Brownlee, grandfather of Harris Fenton Brownlee, was born in Scotland, and with his wife and son James migrated to the United States, where his other children, Robert, John and Eliza, were born. James Brownlee was an agriculturalist until, at the age of twenty, he enlisted, in August, 1862, in Company G, 134th Regiment, New York Volunteers. In the Battle of Gettysburg he was so severely wounded as to end his capacity for active military service, but remained with the Union Army until honorably discharged in June, 1865. He won the lieutenant's rank for conspicuous bravery in the Gettysburg campaign. Upon returning to civilian life, he became a merchant at Cobleskill, New York. He married Mary J. Stryker, a native of Middleburg, New York, and they became the parents of four sons: 1. Harris Fenton, of further mention. 2. Clarence. 3. Eugene. 4. John Clayton.

According to the family records, Mrs. Mary J. (Stryker) Brownlee is a lineal descendant of the Bouck and Vrooman families of New York State. The Boucks are of German origin, one branch having a little village and castle on the Moselle River, seventeen miles north of Metz. The spelling of the name has varied, according to the countries in which its bearers have lived. During the last five centuries the family has furnished both warriors and scholars to Germany, France, Holland and Belgium. The tombs of the early families of the Boucks are in Strassburg Cathedral, and a monument also rises there in honor of Conrad Bouck, eminent citizen who died in 1480. Valentine Bouck was one of the counsellors to Charles V, Emperor of Germany and The Netherlands. Nicholas Bouck, author of several historical and philosophical works, was a lieutenant marshal of France. He died in Metz in 1772. Jacob Bouck is spoken of in history as an author; Jerome Bouck, as a noted botanist; Samuel and Nathaniel Bouck, as distinguished engravers; and Dr. Adam Bouck, who was born in 1832, at Aix-la-Chappelle, as a member of the German Parliament. The different branches of the family scattered through Germany, France, Holland and Belgium, all coming from the same source and all having the same coat-of-arms that was granted to members of the family during the wars of the Crusaders on a field of battle against the Moslems for the recovery of the Holy Land.

William Bouck and his wife left their native land on the Rhine on New Year's Day, 1710, landing in America and settling in the Schoharie Valley in 1711. The early histories of Schoharie County record their experiences with Indians and other hazardous adventures. They had three sons. William, the eldest, was the first white child born in the county. The others were John Frederick and Christian. They purchased large tracts of land from the British Crown in 1727 and 1755. Bouck's Island, in Fulton, near Middleburg, the old home of Governor William C. Bouck, of New York, later the home of his son, the Hon. Charles Bouck, is part of the patent granted to William Bouck by George II in 1755. The original deed on parchment, bearing the seal of Great Britain, is still in possession of the family. William C. Bouck was elected Governor of New York in 1842.

The Vrooman family came from Holland. Hendrick Mees Vrooman was born there in 1649, and came to the United States as a young man. His son, Adam, was a wealthy citizen of Schenectady in 1714. He took up a patent of land lying between Fulton and Middleburg, which became known as Vroom's Land. His son, Colonel Peter Vrooman, was one of the chief leaders of patriots during Revolutionary times, especially during Indian warfare in Schoharie County. Much interesting history concerning the family may be found in J. R. Sims' "Frontiersmen of New York," published in 1883.

Dr. Brownlee received his elementary education in the schools of Lawyersville, Schoharie County, New York, afterward attending schools in Warnersville and Cobleskill, in that State. Ambitious to become a physician, he found to his dismay that he was too young to be admitted to that profession, even if technically qualified. He continued to study medicine, however, and at the time of these studies was also employed for three years in a hat factory in Danbury, Connecticut. During the later part of that period, Dr. E. E. Snow, of Danbury, was his preceptor. In 1885, Harris Fenton Brownlee matriculated at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York City, from which he was graduated with the class of 1888, a Doctor of Medicine. For two years he was resident physician at St. John's Hospital, New York, and, in 1890, he settled at Danbury, where he established a general practice.

In general, there are two types of physicians, the family doctor and the specialist. There is the scholarly type of research expert who is constantly learning and extending the field of his knowledge, and there is the one who is interested only in applying what he knows to the needs of the ill. Dr. Brownlee was happily blessed with both these classes of medical activity, and combined both tendencies in his own well-rounded nature. He studied abroad in Berlin, Prague and Vienna, carrying on extensive gynecological, orthopedic and urological researches, and was associated for a time with Professor Lorenz, as already noted. Like the famous Austrian, he manipulated the bones of club-footed and distorted-limbed children. In 1918, he established a clinic for children and performed brilliantly the work that he did in this connection. Urology was the specialty of his later years, however, and he met with remarkable success in this realm. He was a member of the New England branch of the Urological Society, and his inventive genius led him to perfect several devices of great value to his profession. A room in Danbury Hospital was fitted at his expense for the extension of his services to humanity. He was throughout his career a friend and helper to those in need of his skill and knowledge, and he was honored in his profession and among all who knew him. During the war he was first lieutenant, assistant surgeon, in the Fourth Regiment, Connecticut National Guard, on the staff of Colonel Sheridan. He also served on the Governor's staff and on the Medical Advisory Board.

Dr. Brownlee was a Fellow of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, a member of the State and County Medical Societies, the American Urological Association, the New York Academy of Medicine, and held certificates to practice medicine in the States of New York and New Jersey, as well as Connecticut. He wrote many articles, among which were: "Colossal Dermoid Cyst of Ovary of Over Fifty Years' Growth," printed in "Annals of Surgery"; "Congenital Club Foot," printed in "International Journal of Surgery."

A Republican in politics, Dr. Brownlee fraternized with the Free and Accepted Masons, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Knights of Pythias.

In 1900, Harris Fenton Brownlee married Adelaide Dennis, of Newark, New Jersey, daughter of Martin and Carrie Couper (Rose) Dennis. Dr. and Mrs. Brownlee were the parents of three daughters: 1. Barbara Rose, who became the wife of Charles Edward Grafmueller, of Scarsdale, New York, and the mother of their daughter, Joan Grafmueller. 2. Janet Dennis, who died at the age of six years. 3. Adelaide.

The death of Dr. Harris Fenton Brownlee occurred February 24, 1937, at his home in Danbury, at the age of seventy years. His contribution to the life of his time had been a truly remarkable one, earning for him the acclaim of all who knew him and causing him to be known and widely honored. The influence of his valuable career will continue to be felt through future years as a permanent force for good.

ARTHUR SHERMAN LANE—During his long connection with The Lane Construction Corporation and John S. Lane & Son, of Meriden, enterprises established originally by his father, Arthur Sherman Lane bore a major part in their development. He served as an officer of these companies since they were incorporated and with passing years also extended his interests largely in other fields, notably in civic affairs and the world of finance.

Mr. Lane was born at Kent, Connecticut, on October 27, 1864, a son of John Sherman and Emma Shepard (Plumb) Lane, and died at Meriden, Connecticut, on July 17, 1938. Mr. Lane's father, John Sherman Lane, who served in the Civil War from 1861 to 1864, retired from the Union Army with the rank of first lieutenant upon the termination of his enlistment, and in later life entered the construction business. At the time of his death on September 28, 1913, he was president of The Lane Construction Corporation and of John S. Lane & Son, Incorporated.

Arthur Sherman Lane was educated at Hurlburt's Academy, Lime Rock, Connecticut. He began his active career in 1880, at the age of sixteen, when he was appointed agent of the Housatonic Railroad at West Stockbridge, Massachusetts, and later in the same year served successively as ticket agent for the Housatonic Railroad at Canaan, Connecticut, and as freight clerk at Bridgeport. In March, 1881, he became freight cashier of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, at Harlem River, New York, and served in this position during the following decade. In March, 1891, he returned to Connecticut to become a partner in his father's company, John S. Lane & Son, at Meriden, and devoted himself to executive duties in connection with its management. In March, 1904, he was elected treasurer of the corporation and held this office without interruption during the intervening years until May 1, 1937, when Mr. Lane retired, after almost fifty-seven years of service, retaining his interest, however, as vice-president. In 1902, Mr. Lane became treasurer of the Connecticut Quarries, Incorporated, of New Haven, and of The Lane Construction Corporation of Meriden. He continued in the former position until Connecticut Quarries, Incorporated, was sold in 1926 and retained his office as treasurer of The Lane Construction Corporation until May 1, 1937, when he retired as treasurer and became vice-president, which office he held until his death. Mr. Lane was also chairman of the board of The Home National Bank of Meriden, to which post he was elected in 1934; a director of the Meriden Trust & Safe Deposit Company of Meriden; president and director of The Meriden Cemetery Association of Meriden; and director of the Gardner-Kirby Corporation of Meriden. His executive ability was reflected in the progress of the companies under his control and highly valued by his business associates.

In addition to his business connections, Mr. Lane was active in the civic life of Meriden and was a member of the Board of Taxation and Apportionment of the city. He lent effective support to many community enterprises and constantly sought to further the cause of civic progress. Mr. Lane was a member of the First Congregational Church of Meriden, and was a Republican in politics. He was also a member of the Home Club of Meriden, the Pine Orchard Country Club of Pine Orchard, Connecticut, and the Quinnipiack Club of New Haven. Mr. Lane's favorite recreation was golf.

On March 15, 1884, at Tremont, New York City, Arthur Sherman Lane married (first) Carrie E. Shove. She died April 1, 1917. They were the parents of three children: 1-2. Gertrude E. and Grace L., twins, born March 13, 1889, both deceased. 3. Sam V., born November 20, 1897, now assistant cashier of The Home National Bank of Meriden. On January 31, 1920, at Meriden, Mr. Lane married (second) Claire L. Scofield, daughter of Marcus E. and Lydia M. Scofield.

HON. ROGER AVERILL—The Hon. Roger Averill, eminent member of the bar, late lieutenant-governor of Connecticut and a distinguished figure in its life for half a century, was born at Salisbury on August 3, 1809. He was a son of Nathaniel Perry and Mary Beale (Whittlesey) Averill and a descendant of the early settlers of the colony. His father, born at Washington, Connecticut, on July 25, 1770, spent his youthful years and early manhood in the community of his birth and was a farmer there until 1804-5, when he removed to Salisbury. Here he continued his agricultural interests and became a respected land holder. He married, on September 25, 1792, at Salisbury, Mary Beale Whittlesey, daughter of John and Mary (Beale) Whittlesey and, like himself, a member of the class of colonial farmer proprietors who laid the foundations of the New England commonwealths. Mr. Averill died on October 8, 1856, and his wife on August third of the same year. They were the parents of the following children: 1. Harriet. 2. Garra. 3. John. 4. Sarah. 5. Chester. 6. Mary Beale. 7. Roger, of whom further. 8. Matilda, who died in infancy. 9. Matilda 2d.

Roger Averill spent his boyhood on his father's farm, which was located on the banks of the Housatonic River, about three miles from the old Whittlesey homestead at Salisbury. He was educated in the public schools, supplementing his formal instruction by wide reading, and for a time taught school in the winters while farming in the summers. Under the guidance of his brother, Chester, a professor at Union College, he prepared for college and entered Union, from which he was graduated with honors in 1832. He now began the study of law with Judge (later Chief Justice) Church at Salisbury and in 1837 was admitted to the Connecticut bar. For a brief period he taught in the academy, but soon began the practice of his profession and in 1849 removed to Danbury, where he established a notable reputation at the bar. His broad legal scholarship, alert intelligence and impressive bearing made him a formidable antagonist before court or jury and the demands on his services grew to large proportions. Throughout these years he administered his professional duties with conspicuous success, winning the profound respect of his associates and the well merited esteem of the public at large.

Meanwhile, however, he became active in public life. He served, variously, as trustee of the State Normal School and member of the State Board of Education, responsibilities which he assumed in token of his life-long interest in education; was elected to the State Legislature and served there for several terms as presiding officer of the Senate. During the administration of Governor Buckingham, from 1862 to 1866, he was lieutenant governor of Connecticut, exercising an important influence on the deliberations of the Legislature and on the conduct of affairs of state. Mr. Averill was a leader of the political faction which opposed the election of Lincoln for President in 1860, but with the outbreak of the Civil War, he rallied immediately to the national administration and strongly supported its war measures. Although beyond the age for military service himself, he encouraged the recruiting of Federal troops and the Danbury company, serving under Captain George M. Southmayd, was called the "Averill Rifles" in his honor. After the war, Mr. Averill continued active in public affairs, and these duties, with the pressure of private interests, prevented him from his former active pursuits at the bar. His profession, however, always held a warm place in his affections and the advancement of its interests was one of his dearest aims. He sought constantly to elevate the standards of the bar and was one of the founders of the American Bar Association, in whose proceedings he took a prominent part until his death. Mr. Averill was conservative in his judgments, but nevertheless a man of broad perspicacity, and his advice was much valued by important personages and business concerns. He was received as an equal in the highest company and his punctilious courtesy and consideration for others won him their warm regard.

On October 16, 1844, at Danbury, Connecticut, Roger Averill married, first, Maria D. White, daughter of Roswell and Mary (Wildman) White, of New York City, who died on February 14, 1860. Her great-grandfather, Ebenezer White, was pastor of the Danbury Congregational Church for a quarter of a century prior to the Revolution, and she was herself a woman of the greatest Christian charity, whose kindness and warm human sympathies greatly endeared her to those about her. The following children were born of this marriage: 1. Arthur Hoyt. 2. Mary White. 3. John Chester. 4. Roswell White. 5. Harriet Evaline. 6. Maria White.

Mr, Averill married, second, on September 18, 1861, at Southport, Connecticut, Mary Perry, daughter of Austin and Emily (Milne) Perry, who died on November 23, 1902.

Roger Averill died at Danbury on December 9, 1883, in his seventy-fifth year. Until the last he was active in his various interests, meeting with characteristic fidelity every obligation which life brought him. He deserved well of his State, and the honors paid him in his generation have been echoed by the respect accorded his memory by later citizens of the commonwealth he helped to build.

JOHN LEANDER BILLARD—For ninety years three successive generations of the Billard family have been outstanding in the industrial, financial, civic and social life of Meriden. John Denton Billard, while still a young man, came to the relatively undeveloped town in 1847, and with George W. Lyon, established the firm of Lyon and Billard. This concern ultimately became one of the most important in Connecticut and erected many of the outstanding buildings of its time. The company was incorporated in 1878 as The Lyon and Billard Company, with Mr. Billard as president and, under his able direction, became recognized as one of the larger business interests of the city. John Denton Billard throughout his years, was a substantial and progressive citizen of Meriden, honored in life and memory. He died on February 1, 1902.

John Leander Billard was born in Saybrook, Connecticut, July 18, 1842, son of John Denton and Emeline E. (Spencer) Billard and on his maternal side was the great-great-grandson of Samuel Spencer, of Westbrook, Connecticut, who enlisted on July 16, 1778, in the Saybrook Company, commanded by Captain Hart, and served through three years of the American Revolution. After completing his academic education at Williston Seminary, Easthampton, Massachusetts, John Leander Billard inaugurated his business career on March 18, 1859, as an employee of Lyon and Billard. Since he did not dispose of the company until 1923, his identification with Meriden industrial affairs was continued over a period of sixty-four years, a record seldom equalled. Mr. Billard succeeded to the presidency of The Lyon and Billard Company after the death of his father, in 1902, an office he filled efficiently until he sold his holdings in May, 1923.

Mr. Billard was a director of The Edward Miller Company for many years, also of the Meriden Cutlery Company, and was a director of the Second National Bank of New Haven and was president of the Meriden Savings Bank from December, 1903, to July, 1914, being also identified with numerous other interests. At the time of his death he was a director of the Meriden National Bank, Meriden Savings Bank, Meriden Trust and Safe Deposit Company, Meriden Gas Light Company, Meriden Electric Light Company, Meriden City Hospital and Meriden Cemetery Association. He was a member of the Home Club of Meriden, and the Union League Club of New York, and of the First Congregational Church of Meriden.

On May 26, 1868, at Meriden, John Leander Billard married Harriet Yale Merriman, who died August 22, 1919. They were the parents of the following children: 1. Herbert Merriman, died October 13, 1902. 2. Walter Spencer, died October 6, 1906. 3. Annie, died in infancy. 4. Frederick Howell.

The death of John Leander Billard occurred on December 18, 1924. He was, wrote a biographer: "One of Meriden's foremost citizens, progressive, successful, and a leader in industry and finance, actively associated with the growth of the city of Meriden for two-thirds of a century."

FREDERICK HOWELL BILLARD—In the fields of finance and industry in Meriden, Frederick Howell Billard has been a prominent figure since shortly prior to the World War. The scion of notable Connecticut families, he has carried on a tradition for leadership which long has been associated with his family, paternal and maternal.

Mr. Billard is a native of Meriden, born October

18, 1873, son of John Leander and Harriet Yale (Merriman) Billard. His mother was the daughter of Howell Merriman, and on his father's side he is the grandson of John Denton and Emeline E. (Spencer) Billard and a descendant of Samuel Spencer, of Revolutionary War note. A biography of his father preceding this, contains further facts concerning his ancestral background, and of the important parts his father and grandfather played in the development of Meriden.

Frederick Howell Billard was educated at St. Paul's School, Concord, New Hampshire, preparatory to his entrance into Yale University. After leaving college, Mr. Billard spent five years in business in Chicago, Illinois, and in 1901, he returned to Meriden and entered his father's business. In 1909 when he graduated from the Yale School of Forestry, he engaged in forestry work in various parts of the country until 1915 when he again associated himself with The Lyon and Billard Company, remaining there until the business was sold in 1923, when he became president of the City Savings Bank of Meriden, which post he still holds. He is also a director of the Hartford, Connecticut, Trust Company of Hartford, Meriden Trust and Safe Deposit Company, Manning, Bowman and Company, The Lyon and Billard Company, Meriden Lumber Company, Meriden City Hospital, Gaylord Farm Sanatorium, Meriden Cemetery Association, Meriden Chamber of Commerce of which he is a past president, Meriden Boy's Club and a director of Connecticut Forest and Park Association. He is commissioner of the Public Park Board of the City of Meriden and ex-member of the Meriden School Board. Fraternally he is affiliated with St. Elmo Commandery No. 9, Knights Templar, and Hamilton Council, No. 22, Royal and Select Masters, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. Numbered among his clubs are the Home, Highland Country, and the Metabetchouan Fish and Game Club of Quebec.

In Meriden, Connecticut, on February 28, 1917, Frederick Howell Billard married Elizabeth Elverson, daughter of Edward Elverson, of Newark, New Jersey.

DANIEL HOWARD—For many years prior to his retirement in 1934, Daniel Howard served as superintendent of the public schools of Windsor. He is well known in educational circles not only in this State but beyond its borders, and although his entire active career has been given to education, he has also achieved prominence as a historian and author.

Mr. Howard was born in Foster, Rhode Island, on December 15, 1864, a son of Pardon Tillinghast and Ann Louisa (Stone) Howard. He is descended from an old and distinguished Rhode Island family, founded in this country by Isaac Howard, who came from England to Rhode Island about 1730. Isaac Howard settled in the western part of the State, where many of his descendants still reside. Through successive generations they have played a prominent part in public affairs, holding both State and local offices. Daniel Howard, a son of the American progenitor, served under General Washington in the Revolutionary War. A man of influence and leadership in his community, he filled the office of town clerk for almost twenty-five years, was representative of the town in the General Assembly, and for a time served as judge of the Rhode Island Court of Common Pleas. He was the father of a second Daniel Howard, who was also a conspicuous figure in public affairs and, like his father, served his town for twenty-five years as town clerk, was a member of the Rhode Island Legislature and a judge of the Court of Common Pleas. Horace Howard, son of Daniel (2d), was one of the framers of the Rhode Island Constitution of 1842. He was the grandfather of Daniel Howard, of whom this is primarily a record. Pardon Tillinghast Howard, the father, was born at Foster Center, Rhode Island, August 2, 1839, and died at the home of his son in Windsor, Connecticut, December 24, 1925. He was a farmer, teacher and land surveyor during the course of his active career. His wife, Ann Louisa (Stone) Howard, who was born in Cranston, Rhode Island, March 2, 1846, and died at Windsor, Connecticut, October 14, 1928, came from a long line of English ancestry.

Daniel Howard, whose name heads this review, received his early education in the public schools of Foster, Rhode Island, and later graduated from the Academy in East Greenwich, Rhode Island. He became a teacher in the public schools of his birthplace and in adjoining towns, serving in these connections while he prepared himself for college. Soon after he attained his majority, he was elected town clerk of Foster, following in the footsteps of his distinguished great-grandfather, but after serving for one year, 1888-89, he refused re-election in order to enter college. During the years from 1886 to 1889, when the question of constitutional prohibition was before the Rhode Island electorate, he entered actively into the campaign for the adoption of this amendment, and in 1889, although the Prohibition Party had no hope of winning the election, he became its candidate for secretary of state.

In the fall of 1889, Mr. Howard entered Brown University, and after completing the four-year course, was graduated in 1893 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Subsequently he received the degree of Master of Arts for graduate work in history, political economy and sociology, carried on in absentia. After his graduation from college, Mr. Howard came to Connecticut to pursue his professional career, devoting himself without interruption to his duties as an educator until his retirement in 1934. For one year he was principal of the high school of Wallingford and, in 1894, was appointed head of the Union School at Windsor Locks. His notable record in that position led to his appointment as superintendent of the joint supervision district composed of Windsor Locks and Suffield, which was formed in 1904 and of which he was administrative head until 1910. During the following six years, he was superintendent of the newly formed supervision district of Windsor Locks and Windsor, but, in 1916, this district was reorganized and thereafter he devoted his entire time to the supervision of the Windsor public school system. Under his leadership it developed rapidly, attaining a high level of educational excellence. He continued as its head until June, 1934, when he retired with the honorary title of superintendent emeritus, conferred upon him in recognition of his devoted efforts through the years and his lasting contributions to the schools of the town.

Since his retirement, Mr. Howard has devoted much of his time to writing on historical subjects, to the study of social and economic questions and to speaking on educational and social problems. He has been deeply interested in these fields for many years and, having early acquired the habit of self-education, has read widely in the literatures of the subjects involved, which he has thoroughly mastered. He has also kept in touch with all developments in modern education, studying the various theories advanced closely and devoting much time and thought to a consideration of the problems posed. His own published writings, which have met a ready response indicating their value, include many articles and monographs in addition to the following volumes: "Isaac Howard and His Descendants"; "American History, Government and Institutions"; "Connecticut History Stories"; "The United States, Its History, Government and Institutions," written in collaboration with Samuel J. Brown; "A Study of the Paris Pact"; "A Brief History of the Hartford County Teachers' Association"; "Glimpses of Ancient Windsor"; and "A New History of Old Windsor." Mr. Howard has traveled extensively in the interests of education and has been very active in the associations and other organizations of his profession, local, State and national. He has served for several years as a member of the committee on foreign relations of the National Education Association, and was a delegate representing the Association to the international conventions of the World Federation of Education Associations at Geneva in 1929, and at Denver in 1931. The study of foreign affairs and relations has been one of his particular leisure interests and his authority in the field is well recognized by his professional associates.

In addition to his other connections, Mr. Howard is a member of the honorary scholarship fraternities, Phi Beta Kappa and Pi Gamma Mu; was for many years a member of the University Club of Hartford; is a member of Euclid Lodge, No. 109, Free and Accepted Masons, at Windsor Locks; and a life member and one of the board of managers of the Windsor Historical Society, which he previously served as president. Both he and his wife were among the group that organized this society. Both are also charter members of the Windsor Grange; members of the Eastern Star Chapter of Windsor Locks, and of the First Church of Christ, Congregational, of Windsor. In politics, Mr. Howard is an independent Republican.

He married, on November 6, 1887, in Foster, Rhode Island, Sarah Wilbur Randall, daughter of the Hon. Job and Alzada E. (Howard) Randall, who was born at Foster on June 12, 1863. Like her husband, she has been a familiar figure in the life of Windsor since their home was first established in this community.

REV. ARTHUR LINCOLN GILLETT, D.D.—Carlyle says, "Universal history, the history of what man has accomplished in this world, is at bottom the history of the great men who have worked here." Similarly, the life of an institution is compassed in the lives of those who have served it, and through it have served their fellows. The Hartford Theological Seminary, one of Connecticut's historic and influential institutions, represents the brilliant and devoted work of a noteworthy succession of ministers and scholars from the original company who at East Windsor Hill in 1834 organized the Pastoral Union of Connecticut, which in turn established the Seminary, down to the present Faculty and Board of Trustees. Arthur Lincoln Gillett, D.D., holds a high place in the list of great men who have made a great institution.

Arthur L. Gillett

Born in Westfield, Massachusetts, January 5, 1859, the subject of this sketch was heir to a noble tradition of piety, culture, and ability. He was the son of Edward Bates Gillett and Lucy Douglas Fowler of that town. His father, by reason of his broad human sympathies, was held in high esteem by all who knew him throughout the commonwealth. He was the first President of the Westfield Young Men's Christian Association, for many years District Attorney of Hampden County, and was one of the original Trustees of Smith College under the will of Sophia Smith. Another son of this distinguished father, Frederick Huntington Gillett, was sent from a successful law practice in Springfield to Congress, where he served with high honor for thirty-eight years—thirty-two years in the House of Representatives, being Speaker for six years, and six years in the Senate. A daughter, Miss Lucy Gillett, has been a life-long resident of Westfield.

Arthur Lincoln Gillett prepared for college at Williston Academy, Easthampton, Massachusetts. He attended Amherst College, from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1880, winning also the degree of Master of Arts in 1884. He took the regular course at the Hartford Theological Seminary, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Divinity in 1883. He later took advanced studies at the Universities of Berlin and Tübingen.

Ordained to the Congregational ministry, he served for a year as assistant in the Plymouth Church of Milwaukee, and then for three years was pastor of the Plymouth Church in Grand Forks, North Dakota. In 1888, he was called back to Hartford, where he found his major life work in the Theological Seminary as instructor, associate professor, and then professor. He died at Ogunquit, Maine, on September 9, 1938.

In 1887, Dr. Gillett married Mary Bradford Swift of Hartford, who died in 1901. Their children were: 1. Edward Bates, who died at the age of ten. 2. Robert Swift, who was killed in 1918, in an airplane accident while serving as First Lieutenant in the United States Army Air Corps. 3. Frederick Webster, now of Washington, D. C. In 1911, he married Sara Phillips Colton of Brooklyn, New York, who survives him.

Dr. Gillett's life was an active one, with many interests and deserved recognitions. He was always a genial and stimulating companion, whether in a game of golf or a theological discussion. Generous with his means, he was nevertheless simple in his ways, and the home on Marshall Street was frequented by students and a host of other friends who enjoyed the comradeship and advice of a brilliant yet always sympathetic friend.

Dr. Gillett was given the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity by Amherst College in 1901, and served for twenty-two years as a member of the Board of Trustees of his Alma Mater. He was also for twenty-one years a Trustee of Smith College. He was a member of the American Philosophical Association, The Oriental Society of America, and for many years was a corporate member and served on the Prudential Committee of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, where his counsel and encouragement was always eagerly sought. One of his associates in this responsibility wrote concerning him:

> He will be remembered by those who worked with him in Mission Board administration as a man of traditional New England sturdiness and reliability, keen penetrative mind, balanced judgment, broad Christian views and loyal devotion to duty. Very few men of his day made a more substantial contribution to the business of administering missions—and his day was the "Golden Age" of the enterprise.

But of course his major interest was his teaching. Beginning as a junior instructor in Apologetics, which department was later changed to the Philosophy of Religion, he early took a place of leadership among distinguished colleagues, which he maintained until his retirement with the title of Professor-Emeritus in 1928. He had worked with President Hartranft and President Mackenzie and Dean Jacobus—three great scholars and administrators. He was also the teacher and esteemed friend and adviser of Dr. Robbins W. Barstow, who came to the presidency of the Foundation in 1930. He watched and helped to guide the development of the institution, as the Hartford School of Religious Education and the Kennedy School of Missions were included in its life. The incorporation of the Hartford Seminary Foundation reflected his wise counsel, and he was active in planning for the new campus and buildings, which were occupied only one year before his retirement.

With a lively and penetrating mind and a radiant personal charm, he was an unusually effective teacher. One who sat in his lecture room wrote:

> As a scholar he was exact and thorough; as a teacher, illuminating and therefore inspiring. Who that heard him lecture can ever forget the broad foundations he laid for the truth of Christianity, or the stress he laid on the central Christian doctrine that "God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself."

Another student of his wrote:

> He wrestled successfully with all the great problems of philosophy and theology; yet he knew how to "put first things first." His standard of scholarship and his genuine humility prevented him from doing much publishing. But his friends and students knew how vast was his knowledge and how competent his scholarship.

Rev. Dr. Rockwell Harmon Potter, for twenty-eight years Dr. Gillett's minister in Thomas Hooker's First Church of Christ in Hartford, and later Dean of the Seminary, spoke not for himself alone but for many friends when he said:

> Professor Gillett was one of God's noblemen—my ideal of a Christian gentleman. I had respect for his talents and abilities, gratitude for his unfailing kindness and support, and love for his Christ-like character. He has entered upon the life of the blessed, as one coming into his own land.

Speaking for his community, an editorial in the "Hartford Courant" said:

> A gentle, gracious and companionable man was Professor Gillett, but a man nevertheless of positive convictions for which he was willing to contend when occasion seemed to warrant. Even his illness of the past few years did not lessen his spirit nor diminish his deep interest in the absorbing questions of the day. Having lived nine years beyond the allotted three-score and ten, he passes on leaving nothing but pleasant memories to a wide circle of friends and acquaintances.

And the "Hartford Times," after reviewing his career at length, added:

> He was interested broadly in all civic and public questions, as a liberal thinker and a supporter of sound progress and human advancement. . . . It is given to few men to live better rounded lives, or to enjoy in so great a degree the respect and regard of their fellows.

Thus were blended in Arthur Lincoln Gillett the wisdom of a true philosopher and the wit of a well-loved sage; the erudition of a scholar and the broad public interests of a man of the world; the ardent convictions of a devout Christian and the tolerant not to say whimsical humanity of a cultured gentleman. Surely, "There is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel."

CLARA L. NEWELL—The career of Mrs. Clara L. Newell, of Wallingford, suggests the dictum of Carrie Jacobs Bond: "Every day should be a full one; each life an abundant one." Journalist, editor, author, leader in club activities, a prominent figure in civic, cultural and humanitarian movements, Mrs. Newell is all of these, and more. She was born in New Haven, August 2, 1881, daughter of William Austin and Laurilla (Goodrich) Booth. Her father was a former member of Company K, of New Haven, and a deputy sheriff in the city. Later he was a constable of Wallingford. She came to Wallingford when three years of age.

Educated in local schools, Clara L. Booth married early in life, and raised a family of four children. When the opportunity came, and necessity required, she gave scope to her creative and business powers, choosing the field of writing and journalism, although she has achieved notably in a wide variety of interests. She was at one time feature writer for the "Meriden Record," and is a past manager of the "Meriden Journal," in Wallingford. She has contributed historical feature stories to the "New Haven Register," and is the author of several historical series of Wallingford, including two brief histories of the town, of several town productions, author and producer of the "Wallingford Tercentenary Pageant," 1935, and of many other works that have found their way into print. For five years she was the editor and publisher of the "Connecticut Club Courier," the official publication of the Connecticut State Federation of Women's Clubs.

Mrs. Newell is the historian of the Wallingford Woman's Club, an organization in which she has held practically every office. She is engaged in writing the forty years' history of the club, which is to be published shortly. She is a past president of the Wallingford League of Women Voters and a county officer; vice-president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and served as president of the local Parent-Teachers' Association for five years. Secretary of the Wallingford Chapter of the Red Cross, she also represented that body in the Society in Washington, D. C. She is a charter member of the Wallingford Historical Society; one of the founders of Wallingford Day Nursery Association and its secretary; chairman of the George Washington Bi-Centennial in 1932; chairman of the Founders' Day and originator of the Founders' Memorial Stone, erected in Wallingford in 1935. Her religious affiliations are with the Congregational Church. Every legitimate phase of woman's interest has received her hearty support, and her rare qualities of vision, enterprise, courage and devotion have won deserved recognition. Her reverent, yet common-sense affection for the past, its history, influence and bearing upon the present, is especially admirable when considered in relation to her modernism and attitude toward the future. Town officials recognize her as town historian and visitors from all over the United States call upon her for family data.

The former Clara Lavinia Booth married twice: (first), at Wallingford, in 1903, Eugene A. Post, and they were the parents of four children: 1. Mildred L., Nohrdell B., Robert W., and Olive E. She married (second), in 1917, Ernest W. Newell, of this town.

MABEL SPENCER HURLBURT—There has been unusual scope to the activities of Mabel (Spencer) Hurlburt, of Farmington. Wifehood and the rearing and education of two boys did not interfere with writing, service in public office, cultural affairs, and long membership in ancestral and patriotic societies.

As Mabel Spencer she was born on April 5, 1886, at Bristol, Connecticut, daughter of Edwin Wilson and Lucy C. (Conzelman) Spencer. Her father, a clockmaker, died August 16, 1908; her mother's death occurred on September 23, 1897. It is noteworthy that all family names are familiar to students of the early annals of New England. Spencer is derived from Norman French, and the common ancestor of the English family assumed the name LeDespenser, because he was the steward of the household of William the Conqueror. In the Massachusetts Bay Colony the largest and outstanding group of the family was the brothers, Jared, (or Gerard, named from this family which had intermarried with the Spencer family in England), John, Michael, Thomas and William, all of whom arrived in the 1630's. William was one of the early settlers of Hartford and one of the signers of the Fundamental Orders. Jared was born at the family seat. Stratford, England, in 1576, and was one of the original proprietors of Haddam, Connecticut. "Sergeant" Thomas and William removed to Hartford, in 1636, and Michael located permanently in Massachusetts. Mabel (Spencer) Hurlburt is also a descendant from Roger Newton, first pastor of First Church of Christ, Congregational, at Farmington, Connecticut, who came to Hartford in 1636. He married Mary Hooker, daughter of the religious leader and pioneer, Thomas Hooker. Mrs. Hurlburt is also descended from Sarah Hooker, who married John Wilson.

Mabel Spencer attended Bristol schools in her girlhood; studied under private tutors and was greatly interested in music. On December 16, 1911, at Stamford, Connecticut, she married Frederick Fuller Hurlburt, son of Lyman and Caroline (Gillette) Hurlburt. Mrs. Hurlburt has two sons by a former marriage: 1. Charles William, born December 29, 1902. 2. Wilson Spencer, born March 8, 1905. From 1921 to 1926, Mrs. Hurlburt wrote for the "Hartford Times," resigning to accept the position of town clerk of Farmington, a post she has ably filled since 1926. An outstanding interest of Mrs. Hurlburt continues to be ancestral and patriotic societies. She is a member of the Ruth Wyllys Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution; the Connecticut Chapter of the National Society Daughters of the Founders and Patriots of Connecticut; the Descendants of the Founders of Patriots; and the Historical Society Friends of Hartford, Incorporated. Her connections with these organizations have had a vital influence in keeping alive the traditions of the past, and in invoking the spirit of their forefathers for the inspiration of present day Americans. She is a member and secretary of the Town Clerks' Association of Connecticut and the First Church of Christ, Congregational.

RICHARD BRAINARD LEWIS—As president of the Harvey & Lewis Company, opticians, of Hartford, Richard Brainard Lewis carries on a business which was founded originally by his father and with which he himself has been associated throughout his active career. He is well known both in his profession and in the general business life of this city.

Mr. Lewis was born in Hartford in 1893, son of Robert Harris Lewis, who died in 1928, and Lillian (Brainard) Lewis, who died in 1913. His father established the business of the Harvey & Lewis Company on Asylum Street, Hartford, in 1890, and although without college training he developed it successfully through his own initiative and enterprise. It was moved to its present location on Main Street, Hartford, in 1927, and has since continued in operation there.

Richard Brainard Lewis received his preliminary education in the public schools of this city and after the completion of the high school course entered Columbia University, in New York City, where he prepared for his professional career. He is a graduate of the Columbia School of Optometry, and immediately upon taking his degree joined the Harvey & Lewis Company. He succeeded to the presidency in 1928, following his father's death, and has successfully continued the business, maintaining its best traditions and its established place in the business life of Hartford. In addition to this connection, he is a director of the West Hartford Trust Company and the Industrial Bank of Hartford, participating in the management of these leading financial institutions.

Mr. Lewis is affiliated fraternally with Wyllys Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, and is a member of Trinity Church, Hartford. Although he has never entered public life, he has met the duties of good citizenship, lending his support to worthy community institutions and all movements in the public interest.

He married, on October 11, 1915, in New Britain, Dorothy Raymond White, daughter of Charles J. and Mary (Andrews) White. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis have two children: 1. Richard Brainard, Jr., born July 4, 1918. 2. Mary Andrews, born March 22, 1923.

HENRY CLARK WHITMAN—The constructive career of Henry Clark Whitman has been identified with West Hartford over a period of many years. His public services have extended into the field of municipal offices, and as a private citizen he has been interested in the movements and organizations endeavoring to promote the best interests of the town.

He was born in West Hartford (Elmwood), on February 13, 1864, son of Samuel and Cynthia Lucelia (Talcott) Whitman. His mother, who died March 7, 1876, bore one of the oldest names in the Hartford section of Connecticut, for her ancestor John Talcott, of Essex, England, came to Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1632 and removed to Hartford, Connecticut, in 1636. The father, Samuel Whitman, who lived until February 8, 1908, after teaching for a time, engaged in agriculture the most of his life and in addition to being active in educational affairs as a member of the board of education, was also town treasurer of West Hartford and represented the town in the Legislature. Henry C. Whitman is a descendant of the Rev. Thomas Hooker, founder of Hartford in 1636, and the great-great-grandson of Sarah Whitman Hooker, after whom a chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution is named. One of his forebears was the Rev. Samuel Whitman, third pastor of the Congregational Church of Farmington, serving for forty-five years from 1706 to 1751.

Henry C. Whitman was educated in the grammar and high schools of West Hartford and after a brief period with a publishing house in Boston, was for a time a school teacher in this locality. In October, 1890, he became town treasurer of West Hartford, an office once held by his father. In January, 1895, he began his regime as town clerk. He held these posts continuously until his voluntary retirement, from the treasurership, in March, 1928; and from the town clerkship, in January, 1929, thereby completing records that few can equal. When he resigned it was said, "Henry Whitman is not simply a capable and devoted official—he is an institution that we cannot spare."

While acting as town clerk he became interested in title searching and has followed this profession after his retirement. At one time Mr. Whitman was a member of the National Guard, and during the World War period was one of the State Guards, organized to take the place in Connecticut vacated by the boys who had entered the United States military and naval forces. He is a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, and by right of heritage is a member of the Society of the Descendants of the Founders of Hartford, having at least seven founders among his ancestors. He long has been a member of the West Hartford Congregational Church, with which his family has been connected for nearly two hundred years.

On May 3, 1899, Henry Clark Whitman married Lila F. Alford, daughter of Franklin Mills and Lucy Ruth Alford, and they are the parents of two children: 1. A daughter, Ruth, born October 27, 1901, married G. Harold Smith; parents of Whitman Harlow, Brewster Hooker and Demaris Melvin. 2. A son, John Talcott, born September 18, 1903, married Louise M. Hegeman; parents of Jean.

WILLIAM FRANCIS RUDDOCK—Members of the Ruddock family have been builders of water craft for generations, having created a name of distinction in this industry, first in England, then in Canada and finally in the United States.

The earliest progenitor of the Ruddock family came over from England about 1670, locating on Canadian shores at St. John, New Brunswick, where he established a boat yard. He soon became a worthy competitor of the Yankee ship builders whose vessels were among the finest afloat. This business passed successively from father to son and it was Francis and Joseph Ruddock, during the early part of the nineteenth century, who were still building ships at St. John in their Strait Shore yard. In 1853 they built the Australian packet, "Morning Star," as well as many others. They were the builders in 1861 of the "Oneiza," a craft of 1,403 tons and two years later they built the 1,294 ton, "Prince Alexander." In 1864 they built the "Bernice," 1,455 tons, and in 1865 the "De Courcey."

In 1880 the first New England William Ruddock removed to Boston, Massachusetts, becoming an American citizen five years later. He built boats of many sorts, but won fame with the racing shells he turned out for Harvard and Yale, displacing the

William R. Pitkin

English craft hitherto used. He also made single sculls for individual champions and smaller boats of many kinds, but the paper-thin, feather-weight, delicate but strong racing shell that seated eight big men, was his specialty. He invented the sliding seat, an improved oarlock, and perfected a number of other devices used on such craft. After many years in Boston, he located in New York City, about 1893, and conducted his business on an expanded scale. He married Mary Russell, of Fredericton, New Brunswick, and their son, was William Francis Ruddock, with whom this record is primarily interested.

William Francis Ruddock, was born at the foot of Bunker Hill, March 25, 1881, and received his preliminary education in the public and high schools of Boston. He attended the College of the City of New York, leaving before graduation to succeed his late father as a builder of boats. He literally grew up in the yards and plant of the older man, and was well qualified to please the exacting customers of his father. His racing sculls and shells proved their worth in speed tests, and the word went round to amateurs and professional oarsmen, that the new incumbent was turning out the equals or superior of "Old Ruddock" boats. It was not many years before "Young" Ruddock erected a new and larger plant to construct pleasure craft of all descriptions—sailing, power and oar. At the time of the World War he built submarine chasers for the Government, which indicates somewhat the capacity of his yards even twenty years ago. The original works were in the New York City area, with offices at 215th Street and Harlem River. In 1925 he removed to Greenwich, Connecticut, and created an establishment at No. 648 Greenwich Avenue. Of the business, both in New York and Greenwich, for nearly a third of a century, he was president of the W. F. Ruddock Boat and Yacht Works.

Mr. Ruddock was a director of the First National Bank, of Greenwich, and was financially interested in other enterprises. He was a member of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club, the North American Yacht Racing Association, the Rotary and the Horse Neck clubs, and the Greenwich Young Men's Christian Association. He had been in charge of the Motor Boat School of the New York City Young Men's Christian Association. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On June 15, 1921, William Francis Ruddock married Hilda Simon, daughter of Aloysius and Louise (Baermann) Simon, of Brooklyn, New York, and they were the parents of three children: 1. William Francis, Jr., born June 2, 1922. 2. Mary Josephine, born May 14, 1924. 3. Mary Lou, born July 18, 1927. All the children were born in New York.

The death of Mr. Ruddock, on January 18, 1936, marked the passing of another in a long line of boat builders which it is claimed extended back in England to the days of William the Conqueror. He had been that rare combination of artist and artisan, the creative genius and expert workman, and the executive who could do almost anything he expected his employees to do. He personally was popular in the circles he entered; was a man of many friends, a sportsman skilled in recreations of both land and water. The world would be the better for more of his kind.

WILLIAM ROGER PITKIN—For many years William Roger Pitkin was a prominent figure at the New Haven bar and in the civic life of the city. A recognized authority on tax and probate law, he carried on an important practice with distinguished success and notably broadened the scope of his constructive influence through his many interests in the sphere of public service.

Mr. Pitkin was born in New Haven on March 30, 1877, a son of James S. and Louisa (Sherman) Pitkin and a descendant of old and distinguished Connecticut families. Among his ancestors was William Pitkin, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Connecticut, (1713-1714). Mr. Pitkin received his early education in the public schools of Boston and afterward entered Yale University, where he was graduated from law school in 1900. Upon his admission to the Connecticut bar, he entered practice with the law firm of Bristol, Stoddard, Beach and Fisher, and was later associated with Henry H. Townshend. He quickly established his professional reputation and early began to specialize in tax and probate law. As he demonstrated his capacities, the demands upon his services grew to large proportions. He served as counsel in the settlement of many estates in probate and was frequently consulted in tax matters, both by individual clients and corporations. His authority in these fields was widely recognized, and his broad legal scholarship was at the service of a judgment at once penetrating and sound.

Despite the pressure of his professional duties, Mr. Pitkin was always interested in public affairs and was active for some years in the local Republican organization. In 1916 he was the Republican nominee for State Senator in the Eighth Senatorial District, running against Stephen Whitney, Democrat. In February, 1922, he became a member of the Board of Finance for the City of New Haven, serving until February 19, 1935. For several years he was also chairman of the City Board of Zoning Appeals, and in October, 1935, the city again availed itself of his services through his appointment by Mayor John W. Murphy to the Board of Charities and Corrections. He continued as a member of this body until February 1, 1937. To the performance of his public duties he brought the fidelity which always distinguished him, and the public business gained materially through his wise counsel and administrative capacities.

Mr. Pitkin was a member of the American Bar Association, the Connecticut Bar Association and several non-professional organizations, including the Society of Colonial Wars, the Graduates Club, the New Haven Lawn Club and the New Haven Country Club. Although he was a man of conservative principles and tastes, his sympathies were broad and he was not only active in charitable work but extended a helping hand individually to many people in need. Few knew of these benefactions, since he was never at pains to reveal them. His principal diversion was sailing, a sport of which he was very fond, and he always kept a sail boat for use in leisure hours.

On January 14, 1911, William Roger Pitkin married, at Waterbury, Pauline M. Hayden, daughter of Edward Simeon Hayden, a well known inventor, and Elizabeth (Gilder) Hayden. They became the parents of three children: 1. William Roger, Jr. 2. Pauline Hayden. 3. Edward Hayden.

Mr. Pitkin died at New Haven on April 5, 1938. His professional attainments, exemplary character and useful citizenship won him the profound respect of the city, and the termination of his distinguished career was a source of wide regret.

EDMOND C. SMITH FAMILY—A long and distinctive record of achievement is attached to the Smith family in the history of Connecticut. Its first representatives settled here about the middle of the seventeenth century, and since that time have been prominent in the social, civic, military, business and industrial life of their surroundings.

(I) Nicholas Sever Smith is the first member of this family to come to America. He came here from Holland and settled in Milford about 1660, where he was granted a home lot on October 28, 1662, and later married Mary Tibbals, native of this community. They were the parents of the following children: 1. Sam. 2. Martha. 3. Andrew, of whom further. 4. Sarah. 5. John. 6. Cornelius. 7. Hannah.

(II) Andrew Smith is recorded to have settled in Derby about 1696, and married Sarah Tomlinson. They had eight children: 1. Nathan. 2. Jonah, of whom further. 3. Mary. 4. Rachel. 5. Andrew. 6. Joseph. 7. Hannah. 8. Joseph.

(III) Jonah Smith married Grace Riggs, and they had the following children: 1. Isaac, of whom further. 2. Sarah. 3. Esther. 4. Hannah. 5. Edward.

(IV) Isaac Smith, according to family record, was a captain in the militia and served on the committee which had charge of the purchase of clothing for the soldiers in 1779. He married Lucy Clark and became the father of four children: 1. Lucy. 2. Esther. 3. Charity. 4. William Clark, of whom further.

(V) William Clark Smith served with the Continental Army during the Revolutionary War, enlisting as a member of Captain Jabez Thompson's company on May 15, 1775, with which he saw action at the siege of Boston. William Clark Smith, who died on September 19, 1813, married Rebecca Washburn, and they were the parents of the following children: 1. Grace. 2. William, of whom further. 3. Sheldon. 4. Curtis. 5. Sarah. 6. Edmond. 7. Isaac. 8. Nancy.

(VI) William Smith married (first) Experience Hawkins, who died on March 3, 1821. There were three children by this marriage: 1. Albert. 2. Charles. 3. Sarah. He married (second) Sarah Lum and they were the parents of the following children: 1. James, who was born in Derby, where he operated a retail butcher shop, as well as an establishment in Bristol. He married Martha Upson and they had six children: i. Alice, who married Albert Chatfield, and became the mother of three children: Frank, Benjamin and Gerard. ii. Richard Harrison, who married Florence Rice. iii. Sarah Frances, who married W. S. Rogers, and they had two children: Grace and Sherwood. iv. Hattie, who married William Goodspeed, and was the mother of two children: William and Louise. v. Rosanna, who married (first) Marcus Sperry, and married (second) George Benedict. vi. Albert Upson Smith, who was born in Bristol, December 18, 1859, and received a general education in the public schools of his native community. After completing this part of his studies, he learned the mechanic's trade and worked for various concerns in this State until 1875, when he came to Westport. Two years later he went to Seymour as a mechanic for Humphrey and Company, and during his association with this concern invented the computing scale. He returned to Westport in 1895, and took over the factory of his uncle, Edmond C. Smith, who became a partner with him in the manufacture of the computing scale. Albert Upson Smith sold most of his interest in this business to the Computing Scale Company, of Dayton, Ohio, for whom he designed and manufactured until 1916, when he retired from active business. Since that time he has devoted his time to the hobby of collecting and repairing old clocks. In 1882, he married Elizabeth Pritchard, and they had two children: (a) Martha Louise, who married Frank B. Dayton. (b) Alice Esther, soprano soloist in Dr. Emerson Fosdick's Riverside Church, in New York City. She married Gilbert Perkins, who died in 1935.

The other children of William and Sarah (Lum) Smith were: 2. Benjamin. 3. David. 4. Charlotte. 5. Catharine. 6. Edmond C., who was born March 26, 1848, at Derby, and died June 15, 1928. He was educated in the common schools and began his career with his brother-in-law, installing clocks in churches and public buildings. Later, he designed and patented a leather cutting machine for the shoe industry, known under the trade name of "Skibor," and manufactured by the firm of Dancel and Smith. He also was a partner in the Smith-Mead Company, manufacturers of couplings for the sanitary trade, and was associated with his nephew, Albert Upson Smith, in the manufacture of the computing scale. He retired from active business in 1898. In October, 1892, Edmond C. Smith married Mary A. Grindrod, and they had three children: (a) Katharine, born in 1894, and now the wife of Philip M. Punzelt, a building contractor. They have three children: Philip M., Jr., Jane Ann, and David Smith. (b) Edmond Curtis, Jr., born in 1896, a secretary and accountant, who is now associated with Philip M. Punzelt. He is married to Ethel Tovey, and they have three children: Barbara, Edmond and Susan Day. (c) Sheldon, born in 1900, now the owner of the Southern Wire Cloth Company, of Miami Beach, Florida. He married Barbara Ethel Yeagle. They have three children: Richard Herbert, David Yeagle, and Sheldon, Jr.

CHARLES GIDEON SHERWOOD—For a number of years Charles Gideon Sherwood was widely known as a farmer in Greens Farms, and florist and produce buyer in the community of Stratford and vicinity. In his career he emulated his distinguished father, ranked as one of the most successful farmers of his generation in Fairfield County, who, during the latter part of his career, removed to De Land, Florida, where he acquired large orange grove interests.

Mr. Sherwood was born at Greens Farms, September 15, 1866, the son of Charles Burr and Mary (Jennings) Sherwood, and grandson of Walter and Alethea (Jennings) Sherwood. His grandfather, who was a carpenter and later an innkeeper at Greens Farms, was the son of Ralph Sherwood. After a general education at Dr. Fitch's School, in Norwalk, Mr. Sherwood entered a career in farming, which he was to follow until he established himself in the retail florist business in Bridgeport. He continued in the latter occupation for several years and then became a produce buyer for a large public market.

On October 14, 1891, Mr. Sherwood married Martha A. Meeker, daughter of Burr and Sarah Jane (Fairchild) Meeker, residents of Westport, where her father was a school teacher, farmer, fruit grower, specializing in peaches, and town official. The Meeker family trace among their ancestors, Benjamin Meeker, a Revolutionary War soldier, who was captured by the British during the conflict, taken to Danbury, later released in Norwalk, and then became one of the twenty-four guards at the flour mill in Danbury. Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood were the parents of five children: 1. Mary Ellen, who died in March, 1931. She married Charles R. Griffen, of White Plains, New York, and was the mother of two children: Marilyn R., and Charles Sherwood. 2. Ralph Meeker, who is associated with the General Electric Company, and married to Grace Elliott. They have two sons, Elliott Burr and Murton Elliott. 3. Alice Jennings, who resides at home. 4. Lucy Sunshine, now Mrs. Clarence M. Wakely, of Stratford, and the mother of four children: Charles S., Mary Jane, Donald Robert, and George Davy. 5. Charles Burr, who is married to Constance Doar, and they have one child, Alice May.

Charles Gideon Sherwood died September 15, 1908, the result of an accident. His passing came as a distinct shock to the great host of friends and associates he had made in this section of the county, who admired and respected him as a sterling citizen.

ULYSSES GRANT CHURCH—For nearly forty years Ulysses Grant Church of Watertown has been one of the most widely known and successful attorneys in New Haven County. Throughout this period he has also attained distinction in public life and has also been active in the social affairs of his surroundings.

Mr. Church was born in Chaplin, Windham County, November 22, 1869, the son of Julius and Marcia Minerva (Turner) Church, both of his birthplace where his father engaged in farming. Mr. Church received a general education in the public schools of his native community and the Mount Hermon Preparatory School, Mount Hermon, Massachusetts. He then matriculated at Yale University from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in the class of 1895, and then attended the Yale Law School, securing his LL.B. degree from this institution in 1897. The same year he became associated with the New Haven law firm of Arvine and Beers and was serving here when the Spanish-American War broke out. He resigned and enlisted in the Connecticut Naval Militia, First Division of Connecticut. During the latter part of 1898 he came to Waterbury and established himself in a general law practice which he has since conducted with outstanding distinction and success. Professionally he is a member of the American Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association and the Waterbury Bar Association.

As a resident of this community he has been actively identified with public life. For eight years he served as prosecuting attorney in the Waterbury District Court, was corporation counsel for four years and served as a member of the old State Civil Service Commission for eight years. As a member of the Republican organization he has been prominent in party affairs, serving as chairman of the Waterbury Republican City Committee for many years, as well as holding membership on the State Central Committee.

Socially he is identified with numerous of the leading organizations, including the Waterbury Rotary Club, in which he is a former president. He is also a past president of the local chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution, fraternizes with the Masonic Order in which he holds a thirty-second degree, and is a member of the Shrine, belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and through his military experience holds membership in the Spanish-American War Veterans. In his religious convictions he worships at the Congregational Church of Watertown.

On December 21, 1899, at Chaplin, Mr. Church married Mabel Spafford Lincoln, daughter of Edgar S. Lincoln, of that community. They are the parents of one son; Richard Lincoln, who is a mechanical engineer and associated with the Waterbury Farrell Foundry and Machine Company.

HON. CORNELIUS L. MALONEY—Long recognized as one of the leading business men and public officials of the Town of Winchester, the Hon. Cornelius L. Maloney, of Winsted, has performed a particularly valuable work as judge of the Town Court.

Judge Maloney was born December 8, 1879, at Mill River, Massachusetts, son of Patrick and Julia Maloney, both of them natives of Ireland.

Brought to Winsted by his parents while he was still an infant, Cornelius L. Maloney attended the parochial schools here until he was sixteen years of age. After a brief period with the New England Knitting Company, he was for two years employed by a clothing store operated in Winsted by George Rank. Later he became manager of this store; afterward being engaged in a men's store owned by David E. Posner, Boston, Massachusetts. Meanwhile, his brother had established an undertaking business in Winsted, and in 1906 Mr. Maloney completed a course at the Renouard School of Embalming and entered business with his brother. After his brother's death, Cornelius L. Maloney took over the enterprise, proceeding to operate it at No. 518 Main Street, under his own name. He is the sole owner of this business, which uses the style of "C. L. Maloney"; and is also a director of the Winsted Savings Bank.

A Democrat in his political views, Mr. Maloney has long been active in public life. He has served as a member of the School Board and in numerous other positions of public importance. In June, 1935, he was appointed judge of the Court of the Town of Winchester, being reappointed for another two-year term in 1937. He has revealed himself as the possessor, in rich measure, of those qualities that go into the making of the true judicial nature—fairness, open-mindedness and dignity,—and has earned the respect and confidence of the people of his community.

Also connected with many organizations, Judge Maloney is a member and past president of the Winsted Kiwanis Club. He is very active in fraternal circles, belonging to Winsted Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in which he is past exalted ruler; the Foresters of America, in which he is treasurer of Court Highland; the Fraternal Order of Eagles; and the Ancient Order of Hibernians. He holds the Fourth degree in the Knights of Columbus, is a member of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, the National Funeral Directors Association and is a Director of Winsted Young Men's Christian Association.

Cornelius L. Maloney married, on October 25, 1910, at Winsted, Connecticut, Katherine Calnan, of Derby, Connecticut. They became the parents of four children: 1. Elizabeth, a graduate of the Bay Path Business College, Springfield, Massachusetts.

William I Allyn

2. Catherine, a senior at the Seton Hill College, Greensburg, Pennsylvania. 3. Frances, in training to be a nurse, at St. Elizabeth, Brighton, Massachusetts. 4. Cornelius L., Jr., born May 29, 1919, attended Catholic University, Washington, D. C. The family home is situated at No. 43 Bridge Street, Winsted, and Mr. Maloney has his office at No. 402 Main Street, in this city.

OTHNEIL G. WILLIAMS—Widely known for his connection with the William L. Gilbert Clock Corporation, of Winsted, Othneil G. Williams is vice-president and assistant treasurer of the company and is one of its prominent workers. He has been with this organization for more than fifteen years.

Mr. Williams was born November 9, 1900, at Geneva, New York, son of the late Charles E. and Harriet E. (Glanville) Williams. His father was long manager of the William L. Gilbert Clock Company, so serving at the time of his death.

The graded schools at Hagerstown, Maryland, provided the early education of Othneil G. Williams, who also attended the schools of New York City and of Warren, Pennsylvania. He completed his preparatory work at the Gilbert School, and in 1922 took the degree of Bachelor of Science from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. For about a year thereafter he was employed by the Public Service Electric Company, at Newark, New Jersey, but in 1923 he came to the William L. Gilbert Clock Corporation in a minor position. Subsequently he served in different capacities, including the positions of inspector, foreman and assistant superintendent. Then, in 1928, he was elected vice-president of the company, though he was at that time only twenty-eight years of age.

This clock company dates back to an early period in New England history. It was about 1774 that a corn mill, sawmill and dwelling-house were built by Elias Balcom on the "mill lot" at Still River Falls, which had been preserved by the Hartford proprietors of Winchester, and in 1776 he conveyed his interest to Stephen Chubb, Jr., of New Hartford. In the next year Mr. Chubb sold it to Ensign Jessee Doolittle, of New Hartford. Deacon Abraham Filley, of Winchester and New Hartford, had charge of the mill and made a wooden clock with a penknife. The grist mill was swept away by a flood, and in 1803 the property was bought by Colonel Samuel and Captain Luther Hoadley, who erected a small wooden clock factory about 1807. Riley Whiting, born on his father's farm (Bushnell's) near Sucker Brook, in 1785, married Urania Hoadley in 1806, and about 1810 went into partnership with his brothers-in-law. In 1813 he became sole owner of the clock business, continuing to operate it until his death in 1835, while on a business trip in Illinois. In 1841 Mrs. Whiting sold the factory to Lucius Clarke, who formed a partnership with William L. Gilbert under the name of Clarke, Gilbert and Company for the manufacture of clocks. Mr. Clarke retired in 1845, and the business then was taken over by William L. Gilbert, and was known successively as the Gilbert Manufacturing Company and the William L. Gilbert Clock Company. The William L. Gilbert Clock Company was incorporated in 1871, and on September 10, 1934, the William L. Gilbert Clock Corporation was incorporated. The Gilbert corporation represents Winsted's largest industry, employing more than 400 operatives and doing more than $1,000,000 worth of business. In peak times the volume of business exceeded $2,000,000. The main items for sale are alarms, novelty clocks and mantel and wall clocks. The officers are: Ralph E. Thompson, president and treasurer; Othneil G. Williams, vice-president and assistant treasurer; J. J. McClellan, vice-president; Hadleigh H. Howd, secretary; and M. J. Duyser, assistant secretary.

In addition to his other activities in the business world, Mr. Williams is also a director of the Maderite Paper Box Company, the Clock Manufacturers' Association and the First National Bank of Winsted; a director of Litchfield County Hospital and trustee of the Gilbert Home and Gilbert School. He is a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, the Green Woods Country Club and the Farmington Country Club. In the Free and Accepted Masons he is affiliated with lodge, Royal Arch chapter, commandery of Knights Templar and the council of Royal and Select Masters. Politically he is a Republican, and he is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Mr. Williams holds a lieutenant's commission in the Ordnance Department, Reserve Officers' Corps.

Othneil G. Williams married, on June 28, 1930, at Rockford, Illinois, Janet Sheldon, daughter of Charles E. and Fannie (Penfield) Sheldon. Three children were born to them: 1. Othneil G., Jr., on March 30, 1932. 2. Charles S., on March 12, 1934. 3. Delia C., on May 5, 1937. The Williams family residence is situated in Torringford Street, Winsted; and Mr. Williams' business address is No. 276 North Main Street, Winsted, Connecticut.

WILLIAM I. ALLYN—Regarded as one of eastern Connecticut's most successful farmers, William Israel

Allyn has come to be widely known in the vicinity of Ledyard, where he makes his home. He has interested himself in all matters pertaining to the general welfare, and he is respected and honored by a host of friends in all walks of life. His family is an old and honorable one, which is believed to date back to Robert Allyn, on record in Salem, Massachusetts, in 1637.

Abel Allyn, paternal grandfather of William I. Allyn, was born December 24, 1790, on the family homestead in Ledyard, Connecticut. He was a carpenter in his home community and owned two farms, and was a public-spirited citizen, an earnest Christian and a member of Ledyard Congregational Church, which he helped to found and build. He was a Whig in politics until his death on August 20, 1857. On May 4, 1817, he married Mary Hakes, born November 6, 1794, in Ledyard, daughter of Ezekiel Hakes. She died April 17, 1878. They were the parents of eight children: Abel, Israel, Mary E., Isaac, William M., Harriet N., Margaret J. and Hannah E. Allyn.

Of these, Israel Allyn, father of William I. Allyn, was born May 13, 1822, on the Ledyard homestead, and studied in the district schools and a select school kept by a Mrs. Tuttle, in Ledyard. He himself became a teacher, then entered the employ of Henry Bill, the publisher, at Norwich, and for twenty years traveled through the West as a business man, winning substantial success. He was also active in public affairs, serving for a term on the Board of Selectmen, for a term as judge of probate, and in 1869 as a representative from his town to the State Legislature. He was a charter member of the Bill Library Association, president of the Ledyard Cemetery Association and a member of Ledyard Congregational Church. For a time he was superintendent of the Sunday school, and at his death, which occurred January 22, 1897, he left $1,000 to the church. On November 25, 1873, Israel Allyn married Mary Ann Williams, born April 1, 1847, in Ledyard, died May 16, 1886. To their marriage the following children were born: 1. William Israel, of further mention. 2. Susan Mary, born January 6, 1877, married, on December 25, 1901, Wilbur E. Baldwin, a merchant at Taftville, New London County. 3. Henry Abel, born January 5, 1879; he died April 19, 1938.

The first-named of these three children, William Israel Allyn, was born January 20, 1875, in Ledyard, Connecticut, and attended the district school here, then went for a term to Norwich Business College. Following in the footsteps of his father, he began his career as a teacher, though in early boyhood he had had the experience of the home farm and of service as a grocery clerk for Sam Prentice, of Taftville. He taught for a year at Avery Hill, in Ledyard. After his father's death, he served as guardian to his sister and brother on the home farm, residing on this property until, after his marriage, he returned to Taftville to become associated once more with the Prentice store. He remained there only a few months, coming in April, 1899, to the farm that he purchased: the Captain James A. Billings place. Here he has made extensive improvements, remodeling the house and erecting a fine barn. He then took up general farming and fruit raising, in which he was eminently successful from the outset.

A large Colonial house, pure white, and his white barns nearby are landmarks in the district. Mr. Allyn has also interested himself in political and civic affairs. He was elected assessor soon after he became of age, continuing in that office for a year. In November, 1899, he was elected town clerk and treasurer, starting his duties January 1, 1900. He has since carried on his work as treasurer of Ledyard town deposit fund, being elected from time to time on both the Republican and Democratic tickets. In 1902, Mr. Allyn was delegate from Ledyard to the constitutional convention. In 1905, 1907, 1911, 1917 and 1919, he was elected to the Connecticut House of Representatives, at Hartford, and in 1909, to the State Senate. From 1931 to 1933, he was county commissioner. He is also president and a trustee of the Bill Library, at Ledyard, having succeeded his father in this capacity, and is president of the Ledyard Cemetery Association. He belongs to Charity and Relief Lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons, at Mystic. He is a charter member of Grange No. 167 of the Patrons of Husbandry, at Ledyard, and is a sixth degree Granger. Mrs. Allyn also belongs to the Ledyard Grange and served as State Flora for two terms in the State Grange. She likewise is active in the Daughters of the American Revolution. Both Mr. and Mrs. Allyn are members of the New London County Pomona Grange, and are members of the Congregational Church.

In Ledyard, Connecticut, on January 20, 1898, William Israel Allyn married Martha Alma Gardner, who was born January 16, 1880, in Groton, Connecticut, daughter of Benjamin J. and Mary Jane (Billings) Gardner and granddaughter of Captain James Allyn Billings, of Ledyard. William Israel and Martha Alma (Gardner) Allyn became the parents of seven children, only two of whom survive at the time of writing: 1. Margaret, born January 16, 1899, wife of Walter C. Morgan; they have a son, Walter C.

Morgan, Jr. 2. Frederick P., who was graduated from Chapman Technical School, in New London, and in 1931, from Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, now working on the home farm with his father; he is a deputy of New London County Pomona Grange, and has served also in the State Legislature, being elected in 1936, and again in 1938; he married Bernice Percival, of Ledyard, daughter of Robert Percival, and they have a son, Robert W. Allyn.

HOWARD MERTON DEMING—As one of Connecticut's leading business men, Howard Merton Deming, of Winsted, has performed a work of importance and value to his community and State. He is owner and operator of the Sterling Name Tape Company, of this city, and one of the substantial and useful citizens of this district of Connecticut.

Mr. Deming was born October 14, 1881, at East Canaan, Connecticut, son of the late Wilbur M. and Hattie (Smith) Deming. His father was a photographer in Winsted for forty years prior to his death. Howard M. Deming attended the graded schools of Winsted, leaving Gilbert High School at the age of fourteen years to enter the employ of the Hurlbut National Bank, earning $1 a week for his labors there. Ten years later he left to devote his entire time to the business that grew into the well-known Sterling Name Tape Company. This enterprise began as his own private business, and the initial capital was $18.

The origin of the idea for this business is an interesting one. In 1906, Mr. Deming's wife received from the laundry an undergarment on which had been marked the laundry number in indelible ink. The spreading ink had been responsible for making a brown spot as large as a quarter, visible through any thin waist. Mr. Deming, on that occasion, conceived the idea that, if laundry could be well marked at home, no such accident need occur. His work then consisted of operating a small job printing plant and novelty store called "The Hoodoo Store," in a small building, just north of where the Hurlbut Bank now stands, in Winsted. Mrs. Deming had some tape, and Mr. Deming knew how to make indelible ink. The laundry number, 440, was printed on tapes and sewed on all the articles sent to the laundry. The printed tapes served so well that others were made for friends who also liked the idea. Some samples displayed in the show window brought some pleased customers from the hospital. Such being the case, it was but natural for Mr. Deming to send samples to a few neighboring hospitals. The results were favorable, and advertising was then sent to about 1,700 hospitals.

So the business grew. The "Hoodoo Store" was proven to be no "hoodoo" to him, and before long he was able to move into larger quarters. The business continued to grow, and job printing and stationery were dropped as other lines took their place. In 1928 the large building opposite the railway station was purchased, and soon it was filled with machinery and supplies. The printing of "Washproof" name tapes remains today the leading item of the business, though a specialty is also made of selling hospital, camp and school supplies with names of owners indelibly printed or engraved on them. Items now sold include blankets, sheets, pillow cases, towels, handkerchiefs, laundry bags, napkin rings, bandage scissors, fever thermometers, identification pins, scout knives, flashlights, fountain pens, watches, diaries, leather novelties, ponchos, duffel bags, and the like. Employment is furnished to twenty or thirty people, depending upon the season. Orders come from all parts of the United States and often from foreign lands, even those not in the daily news, such as South Africa, Liberia, Ethiopia, Arabia and Iceland. Many well-known people have sent letters to the company. Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has given the firm at least thirty orders. Tapes have been printed for the sons of Calvin Coolidge and Franklin D. Roosevelt. Recent orders from Gene Tunney, Fannie Brice and Joe Penner have added to the distinction of the firm's list of customers. Very ordinary envelopes are often found to contain unusual orders, such as one asking for 666 napkin rings and another for name tapes for 1,300 boys. In 1933 Mr. Deming removed the century-old building east of his factory and erected a substantial garage for twelve automobiles, thereby greatly improving the appearance of the region near the railway station. The economic depression after 1929 proved to be but a slight irritation to the Sterling Name Tape Company, whose promise for the future is bright.

In addition to his business activities, which have done much to promote prosperity in Winsted, Mr. Deming is active in general community affairs. He belongs to the Winsted Manufacturers' Association and is a member of its executive committee. Before the change of local government, he served as a member of the Board of Relief of the Borough of Winsted, and was also a member of the Board of Appeals of the Winsted Zoning Commission.

Howard M. Deming married, in 1905, at Winsted, Connecticut, Pauline Hosking, daughter of John Hosking. They have two children: 1. Virginia. 2. Crystal. The family home is situated at No. 26 Curtice Street, Winsted, and Mr. Deming has his business headquarters at No. 9 Willow Street, where the Sterling Name Tape Company has its building.

ROBERT E. MAHER—As one of Winsted's leading business men, Robert E. Maher has earned the admiration and confidence of his fellow citizens in all departments of life. He is secretary and general manager of the Winsted Edge Tool Works, and is widely and favorably known for his contribution to the industrial life of his times.

Mr. Maher was born June 16, 1881, at Winsted, Connecticut, son of the late John and Anna (Tallman) Maher. His father was a merchant tailor.

Attending the graded and high schools of Winsted, his Connecticut birthplace and the center of his present activitity, Robert E. Maher later completed a course at a Hartford business school. He was then employed for a year as a bookkeeper by his father, and for three years was associated with the Adams Express Company in Winsted. He then spent two years in a position as bookkeeper with Hotchkiss Brothers, in Torrington, Connecticut, afterward coming to the Winsted Edge Tool Works. That was in 1905. Since that year he has filled different positions of importance with this company, of which he is now secretary, director and general manager, having so served since 1935.

Quite aside from his contribution to the business life of his community, Mr. Maher has concerned himself with the general civic affairs of Winsted. He is a Republican in his political views and for years has taken a lively interest in public matters. He served for two terms as burgess of Winsted before its consolidation with the Town of Winchester, and was from 1921 to 1931 selectman of the Town of Winchester. Since 1933 he has served as first selectman of Winchester and mayor of Winsted. He is also a director of the Winsted Chamber of Commerce, as well as of the Rotary Club and the Winsted Club, both of this city. In the Free and Accepted Masons, Mr. Maher is affiliated with Winsted Lodge and with the Royal Arch Chapter and Council of Royal and Select Masters, and he is also a member of Winsted Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. All the different groups with which he has been connected have, each in its own sphere, benefited from his participation in their affairs.

Robert E. Maher married, on June 5, 1906, at Winsted, Connecticut, Hattie Cook, daughter of H. E. Cook. To this marriage one daughter was born, Dorothy E., who became the wife of Karl E. Herdling. The Maher family residence is situated at No. 59 Hinsdale Street, Winsted, and Mr. Maher's business headquarters are at No. 32 Lake Street, this city.

CITIZEN PRINTING COMPANY—THEODORE VAILL, THOMAS A. HAGGERTY—As publisher of the "Winsted Evening Citizen," the Citizen Printing Company of Winsted has for many years been one of the major forces active in the development of the town and its neighborhood. Indeed, since the Citizen Publishing Company stems directly back to the first newspapers in Litchfield County, it is from the presses of the Company, and its predecessors, that the papers streamed which moulded most of the public opinion which, for nearly a century, has ruled the vicinity.

Established in 1888, the Citizen Printing Company first published the "Winsted Evening Citizen" on April 30, the same year, and the paper has appeared each week day ever since. At present, its officers are: Dudley L. Vaill, president; Luther L. Chase, vice-president; Theodore Vaill, secretary, treasurer and manager; Edward B. Gaylord, Dwight B. Tiffany, Dudley L. Vaill, Benjamin Epstein, Joseph A. Norton, Edward R. Holmes, Luther L. Chase, Thomas A. Haggerty, and John van A. Duyser, directors; Thomas A. Haggerty, managing editor; John van A. Duyser, foreman; and William Simmers, foreman of the job printing department.

While the first paper in Winsted was the "News," published by George B. Cook in the "fifties," this paper endured but a short while, giving place to the "Mountain County Herald," which, first appearing May 14, 1853, is still being published under the name of the "Winsted Herald." Following the Civil War, the paper was taken over by the Winsted Printing Company, a corporation formed by Theodore F. Vaill who, after a military career as adjutant of the Second Regiment, Connecticut Heavy Artillery, an outfit known as the Litchfield County regiment, entered the newspaper business, being editor of the "Herald" as well as president of the Winsted Printing Company. Upon the death of Theodore F. Vaill, in February, 1875, his brother, "Joe" Vaill, took over the editor's chair and filled it for sixteen years, becoming widely and familiarly known in all newspaper offices in Connecticut. In 1891, Mr. Vaill leased the "Herald" to Wombaugh and Safford, as he wished to devote himself to his position as executive secretary of the Connecticut World's Fair Commission.

Wombaugh and Safford shortly retired and Mr. Vaill's son, Robinson L. Vaill, became editor, remaining until he resigned to go to Philadelphia. Thereafter, Mr. Vaill employed several editors until, finally, the "Herald" was sold to the Citizen Printing Company in 1894.

The Citizen Printing Company had been organized March 24, 1888, and, a month later, the Company had launched its paper, the "Winsted Evening Citizen," as an independent paper under the direction of John H. Van Keuren as editor and had also launched, as a weekly, the "Litchfield County Leader" with Nathaniel B. Stevens as editor. Shortly before purchasing the "Herald," the Citizen Publishing Company had acquired the "Winsted Press," the famous "Greenbacker" paper edited and owned by Henry A. Bills.

With these papers, the Citizen Printing Company became firmly established and, down through the years, it has constantly enlarged and modernized its plant to care not only for the publishing of the papers but also to meet the needs of commercial printing in the neighborhood. The editors of the Company have included several very well known journalists—among them Walter L. Bevins, who succeeded John H. Van Keuren, Irving E. Manchester, and Louis T. Stone, who, in addition to his outstanding accomplishments as a newspaper man was also nationally famous as a nature story writer. It was after the death of Mr. Stone, March 13, 1933, that Theodore Vaill, grandson of Theodore F. Vaill, became manager and treasurer of the Citizen Printing Company and Thomas A. Haggerty, the managing editor.

Theodore Vaill, was born September 19, 1905, in Winsted, son of Dudley L. Vaill, president of the Citizen Printing Company. After passing through the Winsted grade schools and Gilbert School, Winsted, Theodore Vaill prepared for college at Phillips Exeter Academy, Exeter, New Hampshire, and then entered Amherst College with the Class of 1929. However, in 1926, Mr. Vaill left college to become a reporter on the staff of the "Winsted Evening Citizen," his father having shortly before organized the incorporation of the Citizen Printing Company. From the editorial staff, Mr. Vaill progressed to the circulation department, but, on August 10, 1928, he left the "Citizen" to become a partner with Hallett Clark in the Clark and Vaill Insurance Agency. This firm, established in 1877 by Irving Griswold, is one of the oldest agencies in this section of Connecticut. With Mr. Clark giving particular attention to the real estate activities of the firm, and Mr. Vaill directing the insurance business, the firm expanded rapidly and broadened its field of activity. However, Mr. Vaill had never lost his interest in the newspaper field and on May 8, 1933, he disposed of his interests in the Clark and Vaill corporation and returned to the "Citizen" as secretary, treasurer and general manager of the Citizen Printing Company, offices which he has occupied through the present time. For several years, in addition to his business activities, Mr. Vaill has been active in Winsted political life as a member of the Republican party and also serving as a member of the Board of Relief of the Town of Winchester. He is a member of the Second Congregational Church and belongs to Winsted Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, Chi Psi fraternity, Green Woods Country Club and Union Hose Company, No. 1. Mr. Vaill has one son: Theodore, Jr., born in 1928.

Thomas A. Haggerty, managing editor of the "Winsted Evening Citizen," was born December 12, 1873, at South Coventry, son of Owen and Ellen (Eaton) Haggerty. After attending the public schools at Adams, Massachusetts, and Rockville, Connecticut, Thomas A. Haggerty entered the composing room of the "Transcript," North Adams, Massachusetts. There, after mastering his trade, he changed over to the editorial offices and mastered the profession of journalism, eventually becoming owner of the "North Adams Herald." After thirty-two years with the "Herald," Mr. Haggerty sold his paper in 1926 and came to Winsted as managing editor and director of the "Winsted Citizen" and Citizen Publishing Company. For all his life, Mr. Haggerty has been active in the political and civic life of his home towns: in North Adams, he was a member of the Board of Registrars for several years; in Winsted he has served as director of the Recovery Committee, chairman of the Zoning Committee, secretary and director of the Visiting Nurse Association, and director of the Chamber of Commerce. A member of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, Mr. Haggerty is also a third degree member of the Knights of Columbus and was Grand Knight of the North Adams Council.

Thomas A. Haggerty married, June 21, 1899, in North Adams, Massachusetts, Mary A. Burke. Mr. and Mrs. Haggerty are the parents of two daughters: 1. Mrs. Robert L. Pollard. 2. Mrs. M. W. Doyle, Jr.

DANO ELECTRIC COMPANY—WALTER V. DAVEY, ROBERT L. NOBLE—Manufacturers of electrical apparatus used by various companies manufacturing electric clocks, electrical relays, electrical instruments and other electrical products, the Dano Electric Company, of Winsted, is rapidly developing an increasingly diversified market in New England, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Incorporated in January, 1936, the Company is at present under the direction of the following officers: Walter Vernon Davey, president and secretary; Robert L. Noble, vice-president and treasurer; and Walter V. Davey, Robert L. Noble and Alma Noble, directors.

Walter Vernon Davey was born April 29, 1887, at Cortland, New York, son of Merton L. and Fanny (Rogers) Davey. After passing through grade schools in New York State and in Pennsylvania, Walter Vernon Davey prepared for college at the high school in Williamsport, Pennsylvania, and at Dickinson Seminary, Williamsport, entering Syracuse University with the class of 1912. In 1912, Mr. Davey left the university to be employed by a Syracuse firm, The States Company, manufacturers of electrical apparatus and, when the company moved to Hartford, Connecticut, in 1913, he came with them to rise, in the years which followed, to become secretary and a director. In 1927, Mr. Davey resigned his association with The States Company and, after spending a short time with the Hartford Battery Company, came to Winsted to organize a coil winding department for the firm of Strand and Sweet, a company of which he became manager in July of 1928. Two years later, in 1930, Mr. Davey resigned from his association with Strand and Sweet, when the company changed ownership, but remained as manager for the new owners for a year. Then, in 1931, he started his present business of manufacturing electrical apparatus, operating it as his own enterprise until the present corporation was created in 1936. In addition to his interests in the Dano Electric Company, Mr. Davey is president of the Winsted Y. M. C. A., a director of the Winsted Hardware Manufacturing Company, and attends the Methodist Church, and is a member of Alpha Chi Rho fraternity. Earlier in his career, he served for two years in an infantry regiment in the Connecticut National Guard, holding a commission as a second lieutenant at the time of his resignation.

Walter V. Davey married, October 15, 1914, at Hartford, Lelia R. Williams, daughter of Charles and Ida (Sandman) Williams. Mr. and Mrs. Davey are the parents of four children: 1. Walter, Jr., born October 4, 1917. 2 and 3. Gladys M. and Norman W. (twins), born February 3, 1920. 4. Elizabeth R., born July 13, 1921.

Robert L. Noble, vice-president and treasurer of the Dano Electric Company, was born June 24, 1894, son of Robert N. and Martha (Eldridge) Noble. After passing through the public schools and high school in New Haven, Mr. Noble, when eighteen years of age, became an assistant chemist with the Acme Wire Company, later being made the company's standards engineer. After sixteen years in this association, Mr. Noble, in 1929, came to Winsted as chief engineer for the Strand and Sweet Manufacturing Company, occupying that position until he joined Mr. Davey in the incorporation of the Dano Electric Company. A member of the Winsted Congregational Church, Mr. Noble is an active member of the Masonic fraternity, belonging to several bodies in New Haven, including the New Haven Council, Royal and Select Masters. During the World War, Mr. Noble enlisted in the Chemical Warfare Service, December, 1917, and was stationed both at Washington, D. C., and Lakehurst, New Jersey, being given a reserve commission as a second lieutenant after his discharge.

Robert L. Noble married, in September, 1920, at New Haven, Alma L. Jente, daughter of Paul and Margaret (Dietter) Jente. Mr. and Mrs. Noble are the parents of two children: 1. Rhoda H., born July 3, 1921. 2. Muriel, born July 27, 1923.

CHARLES R. TUBBS—Representing the seventh generation of the Tubbs family of East Lyme, Charles R. Tubbs has participated in many ways in the business and public affairs of this Connecticut district. He is now town clerk and tax collector of Niantic, having so served since 1912, and is the operator of a fire insurance agency.

Mr. Tubbs was born May 19, 1884, in Old Lyme, Connecticut, son of J. Herman and Grace (Chapman) Tubbs and member of an old and honorable family. His father has served since 1895 as deputy sheriff of New London County. In 1884, he was a member of the State House of Representatives, and between 1882 and 1893, he ran a general store in East Lyme. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and is one of Lyme's most distinguished and honored citizens.

Public schools in East Lyme provided Charles R. Tubb's early education, and he attended Niantic High School. His first employment was as turnkey at the Norwich Jail. After two years in that work, he spent twelve years with the New London-East Lyme

Charles R Tubbs

Railway. Between 1922 and 1929 he was engaged in the ice business in Niantic. In more recent years he has conducted a fire insurance agency, as already indicated.

At the same time he has served as town clerk and tax collector since 1912. He is a Past Master of Bay View Lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons, and is affiliated with Niantic Lodge No. 17 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he is a Past Noble Grand and Past District Deputy.

Charles R. Tubbs married, in New London, Connecticut, on January 22, 1914, Aldea Burke, daughter of Esueheb and Zoe (Goddard) Burke. The daughter of this marriage, Olive M. Tubbs, was graduated with honors from Grace Williams Memorial Institute and also was graduated from the Connecticut College for Women, in New London, in 1936, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. She is now engaged in teaching in the Niantic schools.

In addition to all his other activities, Mr. Tubbs is active in the East Lyme Chamber of Commerce, the Congregational Church and other bodies. In his spare time he is fond of hunting as a pastime.

ROBERT E. A. DOHERTY—Printing, newspaper work and engraving have occupied much of the career of Robert E. A. Doherty, who has been postmaster of Winsted since his appointment in May, 1935. His contribution to the city and its people and institutions has been a highly significant one, rich in its value to his contemporaries and splendid in its effects upon the world around him.

Mr. Doherty was born June 16, 1888, at Camden, New Jersey, son of James P. and Julia J. (Barrett) Doherty. His father was a leather worker and later a manufacturer of leather.

St. Anthony's Parochial School, at Winsted, furnished the first formal education of Robert E. A. Doherty. He was only four years old when his father died, and he was thirteen when he first went to work at the printing trade. Entering upon an apprenticeship in the office of the Winsted "Citizen," he became a journeyman printer, also being employed in different newspaper composing rooms in New England and afterward in still other departments. In 1924 he was co-founder of the Winsted "Times," a weekly newspaper, and until 1928 he conducted a job printing business. He carried forward his commercial printing activities as an officer of the Winsted Printing and Engraving Company thereafter continuously until his appointment to the postmastership of Winsted on May 13, 1935.

His participation in politics and public affairs has been most contributive. A staunch Democrat, he served for four years as chairman of the Democratic Committee of the Town of Winchester. Fifteen years as registrar of voters for Winchester added greatly to his popularity in the community. And, as postmaster, he has so heartily striven for increased efficiency in the postal system that he has still further augmented his standing in this region of Connecticut. He holds the third degree in the Knights of Columbus, and has served in all the chairs of his council. He worships in the faith of St. Joseph's Roman Catholic Church, in Winsted.

On April 20, 1915, at Winsted, Connecticut, Mr. Doherty married Ida M. Straub. Their children have been four in number: 1. Augustine J. 2. Patricia A. 3. Robert E. 4. John J.

ST. ANN'S (FRENCH) CHURCH—REV. JOSEPH V. E. BELANGER, PASTOR—St. Ann's Church, Bristol, whose parishioners are principally people of French descent, was founded in November, 1907, by the late Rev. Joseph Philip Perreault, with about two hundred and fifty families in the beginning. He remained as priest until his death, August 6, 1936. The present church building, at No. 225 West Street, was erected in 1910. There are now forty-five hundred members of the parish. A parochial school with an enrollment of five hundred and sixty pupils, is conducted, teaching subjects up to and including the eighth grade. Church activities include the League of the Sacred Heart, a men's club; Children of Mary, for girls, and the Ladies of St. Ann, for adult women.

The pastor, Rev. Joseph Victor Euclid Belanger, was born February 9, 1874, in the Province of Quebec, Canada, one of a family of ten children of the late Francis and Caroline (Aubé) Belanger. He was educated in St. John's Parochial School, Port Joly, Quebec, and finished his formal education at St. Ann's College, de la Pocatiere, Province of Quebec. He also studied at Grand Seminary, Quebec, and was ordained April 22, 1900. After being assistant at the Parish of St. Anselme for a time, he was kept from his work for about two years on account of ill-health. Then for two years he was assistant pastor at Deschambault, Province of Quebec. In September, 1904, Father Belanger came to Waterbury, Connecticut, as assistant pastor of St. Ann's Parish. On November 20, 1907, he became pastor of St. Thomas Church, Voluntown, Connecticut, continuing until October 4, 1910, when he became pastor of St. Anthony's Church, Bridgeport. Here he served until January 14, 1914, when he went to Baltic, Connecticut, as pastor of St. Mary's Church. From November 19, 1918, to September 17, 1936, he was in charge of St. Ann's Church, Hartford, or until he came to his present Bristol parish. The Rev. Joseph V. E. Belanger is a member of the St. John the Baptist Society and a member of the Artisans, of Montreal, Canada. The church rectory is at No. 215 West Street, Bristol.

RICHARD SCHULZE—With his appointment as town clerk of Bridgeport in 1933, Richard Schulze entered the field of public service after a long and active career in the machinist's trade. He has been, throughout this period, a close student of economics and public affairs and is well qualified for his present office, in which he is now serving his second term.

Mr. Schulze was born at Manchester, New Hampshire, on August 29, 1873, a son of Julius and Emelia S. Schulze. His father, a weaver by trade, was born in Saxony, Germany. His mother was born in Kenmitz, Germany. Both came to the United States in early life.

Richard Schulze attended the public schools of Manchester until he was about fourteen years old, at which time family circumstances forced him to find work in a factory. A few months later, he entered the employ of the Union Form Company, of New Haven, and at the age of sixteen became a machinist's apprentice, completing his term of service at the age of twenty. As a journeyman, he followed his trade for forty-five years, working with various companies. Mr. Schulze has always been active in the trade union movement since he first became a member of the International Association of Machinists in 1894. He has also been greatly interested in the economic organization of contemporary life and the problems resulting therefrom, giving close study to their solution. As a result, he has been a convinced Socialist for almost four decades and has taken a prominent place in local councils of his party. A strong supporter of Bridgeport's Socialist mayor, Jasper McLevy, he was appointed by him, in November, 1933, to the office of town clerk of Bridgeport, and, in 1935, was reappointed for a second term. He has met the responsibilities of his position with efficiency and diligence, helping to write the notable chapter in Bridgeport's municipal government which is associated with the McLevy administration.

HON. JOHN SMITH—Carrying on an extensive practice of law in Bridgeport and making his home in Stratford, the Hon. John Smith has distinguished himself in both communities. In Stratford he was formerly judge of the Probate Court until his retirement from that office, and in this entire district of Connecticut he is widely known and recognized as a leader.

Judge Smith was born November 23, 1867, at Coventry, England, son of the late Henry and Martha (Bidmead) Smith. His father was a weaver by trade.

The public schools of his native English district provided John Smith's early education, and he also attended the King Henry VIII School in England. In 1894, he came to America, where he found various employment in the years that followed. For about seven years prior to his admittance to the bar, he served as clerk of the Probate Court, District of Bridgeport. Qualifying himself for the practice of law through private study, he was admitted to the bar of Connecticut in 1909, and at once began his professional practice in Bridgeport. Since that time he has carried on his general work in the law, with offices at No. 886 Main Street, Bridgeport.

Along with his strictly professional activities, Mr. Smith has been interested in political and public affairs. His service as clerk of the City Court covered the years from 1909 to 1913. In January, 1922, he started his service as judge of the Probate Court at Stratford, so continuing until 1936, when the age limitation set by statute forced his retirement. He then resumed his private practice as a lawyer, in which he continues today.

He is a member of the Fairfield County Bar Association and the Connecticut State Bar Association. Politically he is a Republican, and he has always taken a lively interest in partisan affairs. Fraternalism has attracted his attention, and he is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he is affiliated with the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Consistory, the Knights Templar commandery, and Pyramid Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He also belongs to the Knights of Pythias and the American Order of Foresters, and is a member of the Algonquin Club, the Mill River Golf Club and the Cupheag Club. Each of these groups and all of the projects with which he has been connected have benefited from his labors in their behalf, with the result that Judge Smith is widely honored, respected and trusted.

The Hon. John Smith married, in 1889, in Coventry, England, Helena Bidmead. They became the parents of two children: 1. Mabel S., who is the wife of Clark P. Lane, Jr., of Bridgeport. 2. Kenneth B. The Smith home is situated in Cut Spring Road, Stratford.

WILLIAM JOSEPH McKEE—The long and distinguished career of William Joseph McKee, as a member of the East Hartford Police Department, has gained him recognition as one of the most prominent and able peace officers in Hartford County. He has been a member of the force for over thirty-five years, twenty-one of which he has served as chief of the department.

Mr. McKee was born in East Hartford, July 4, 1871, the son of William and Mary (Coffey) McKee, both deceased, and former residents of this community where his father engaged in farming for a number of years. Chief McKee received a general education in the public schools of East Hartford and, after completing his studies, became an apprentice in the cooperage and carpentry trades, which he pursued for twenty years. His association with the police force of this community dates back to June, 1902, when he was appointed a supernumerary policeman. He was appointed a regular member of the department on April 1, 1912, and four years later, in November, 1916, was named chief, an office he has since occupied with distinction and success. As a police officer, Mr. McKee is a member of the New England Chiefs of Police Association and the Connecticut State Police Association. He has supported all worthy social and civic movements in his native community, and largely confined his social activities to the affairs of the Hartford Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

CHARLES J. HERMANSON—Since 1917, when he organized the Barnum Forge Company, Inc., of Stratford, Charles J. Hermanson has served as president of this corporation. His wide technical experience and effective leadership have been reflected in the steady progress of the company, which now occupies an established place in Connecticut industry.

Mr. Hermanson was born at Hellesfors, Sweden, on November 8, 1872, a son of Andrew and Caroline (Jacobson) Hermanson. He was educated in the public schools of Sweden, which he left at the age of fifteen to become an apprentice in the blacksmith's trade, and at twenty found himself a qualified journeyman. For a period of eight months he worked as a journeyman blacksmith in Sweden, but at the end of that time, although he had not yet attained his majority, he came alone to America, landing at Montreal. After remaining in the Canadian city for about two months, he removed, in 1892, to Ansonia, Connecticut, and was there employed until 1896 in the rolling mills of the American Brass Company. In the latter year he resigned, spent several months in a local blacksmith's shop and then went to Shelton, Connecticut, where he was employed by Wilcox and Howe. A year later found him in Derby as an employee in the plant of the Driggs-Seabury Company. In 1901 a machinists' strike terminated this connection and caused him to move to Bridgeport. Here he obtained a position as a blacksmith with the Bridgeport Brass Company, remaining until the fall of 1902.

In 1902, Mr. Hermanson became associated with the American and British Gun Company, entering upon a fifteen-year period of service with this company. During this time he gained further valuable experience and gradually rose within the organization as larger responsibilities were entrusted to him. Meanwhile, having carefully saved his earnings, he accumulated a sum approximating $9,000. Very heavy demands upon the metal industries were caused by the progress of the World War, and in 1917, with Samuel Smigelsky as a silent partner, he organized the Barnum Forge Company in Stratford to help supply the needs of war times. The company was formed to carry on a general jobbing business in iron and steel forgings. Three people comprised the entire original organization, but the enterprise was successful from the beginning and gradually expanded. It received large government contracts during the war, both for the military forces and for the merchant marine, and, in addition, did a great deal of work for foreign governments. This included the forging of guns and gun accessories. After the war the high standards of the company and the reputation of its products for satisfactory performance insured its continued success. Mr. Hermanson has been president and directing head of the company since its formation. His wife, Mrs. Augusta Hermanson, is secretary, and Samuel Smigelsky is treasurer. These are its only officers.

Mr. Hermanson has always devoted his closest attention to business and has had time for few other interests, although always seeking to meet the responsibilities of good citizenship. He is affiliated fraternally with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and is a member of the Methodist Church.

In April, 1896, at Ansonia, Connecticut, Charles J. Hermanson married Augusta Faley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Faley. They are the parents of the following children: 1. Arthur, born in 1898, who was graduated from Bridgeport High School and attended Lehigh University. He is married and has two children: Arthur and Norman. 2. Eric, born in 1903, educated in Bridgeport schools. He is also married and has two children: Eric Carl and Dolores Ann. 3. Ann, a graduate of Bridgeport High School.

RUSSELL FAMILY—What follows is a brief history of one of New England and Connecticut's ancient and honorable families and, incidentally, of one of the oldest industrial corporations of this State. The name Russell is evidently derived from the French signifying "hill by the water." In the thirteenth generation from Turstain, William Bertrand was with his son, Hugh, in the battle of Hastings, England. Hugh later inherited the castle of Rozel ("hill by the water"), and in the twelfth century the name was corrupted to Russell.

William Russell, the American progenitor, born in England, in 1612, evidently came to America with one Colonel Fenwick, and in 1638 became one of the settlers of New Haven, where he died in 1664. His youngest son, Noadiah, was one of the twelve clergymen who founded Yale College. He and eight succeeding generations have been identified with Middletown, Connecticut.

The line of descent of this branch follows in outline:

(I) William Russell, emigrant, 1612-1664.

(II) Noadiah Russell, minister, 1659-1713.

(III) William Russell, minister, 1690-1761.

(IV) Samuel Russell, merchant and operator of lead mine in Middletown during time of the Revolutionary War, 1727-1794.

(V) John Russell, ship captain, 1765-1801.

(VI) Samuel Russell, China merchant and builder of the old house which was given to Wesleyan University in 1936 and now serves as Honors College, 1789-1862.

(VII) George Osborne Russell, manufacturer, 1816-1849.

(VIII) Samuel Russell, manufacturer, mayor, etc., 1847-1928.

(IX) Thomas Macdonough Russell, manufacturer, mayor, etc., 1874-1935.

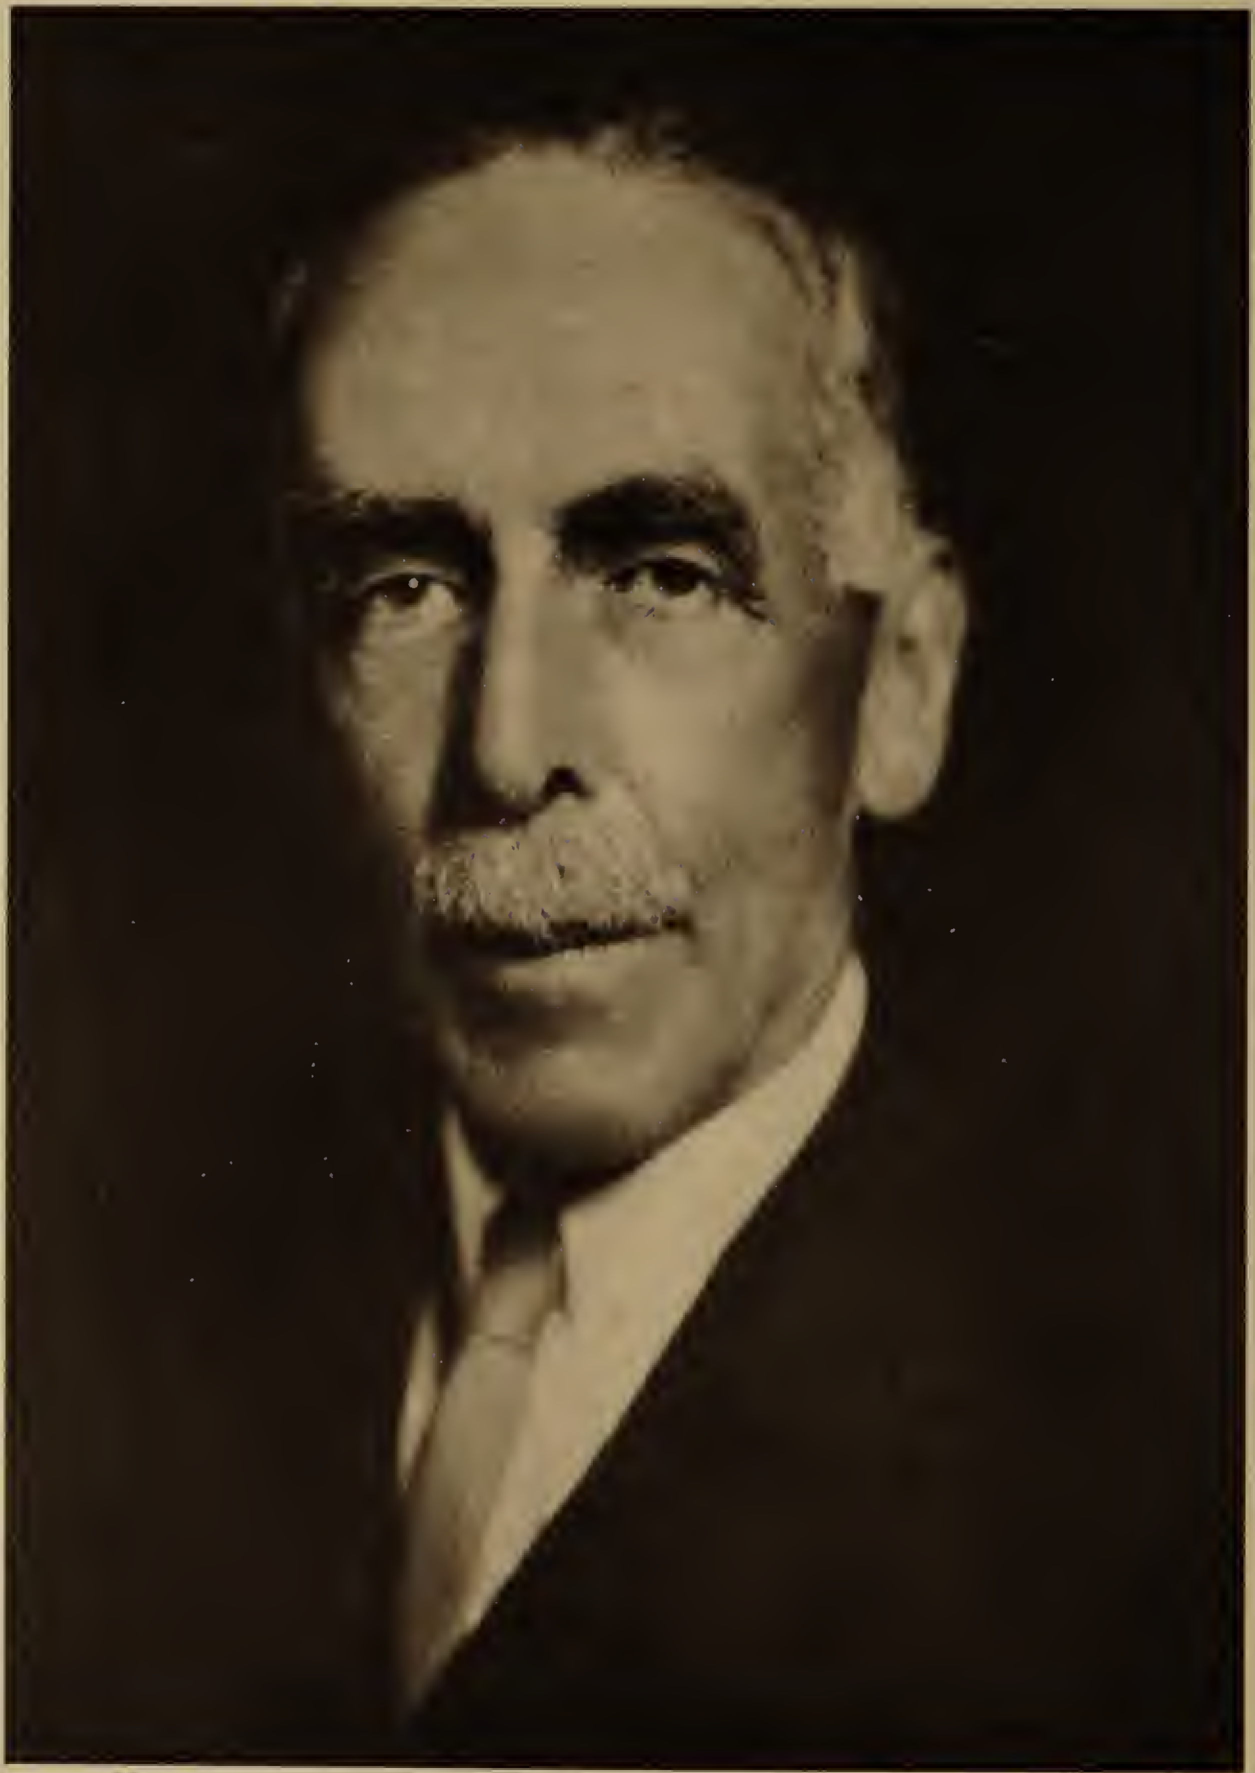
(X) Thomas Macdonough Russell, Jr., 1901-

(XI) Children of T. Macdonough Russell, Jr.: T. Macdonough Russell, 3rd, 1929; Samuel Russell, 2nd, 1932; Margaret Russell and Julia Russell, 1936.

On August 25, 1789, Samuel Russell (VI) was born. He was the founder, in 1834, of the Russell Manufacturing Company, of which he was the first president. Under the trade name of "Rusco," this corporation's products are known all over the world. During the Civil War its plant was turned over to the making of military supplies for the Union forces. In the World War period, it made such articles of military equipment as cartridge belts, haversacks, canteen covers, webbing, and a number of other products within its capabilities.

Samuel Russell, as early as 1823, initiated the firm of Russell and Company, Canton, China, and the United States, which attained a world-wide reputation in the days of clipper ships and the dominance of American shipping. Quoting from a biographer in "Connecticut History Makers," Samuel Russell was a man of high ideals and broad liberal views, giving freely to the support of religious denominations and private charities. After his demise, his widow gave to the City of Middletown the Russell Library as a memorial to him. He was a member of many charitable and benevolent institutions and active in the development of his native city. Edward A. Russell, 1797-1874, brother of Samuel, also was engaged in the East India trade and was a former Mayor of Middletown and State Representative. Samuel Wadsworth Russell, son of Samuel Russell (VI), married Clara A. Casey, daughter of Dr. William Casey, of Middletown. Samuel Russell (VIII), son of George Osborne Russell (VII), and Amelia Charlotte (Mather) Russell, was born September 8, 1847, and died April 18, 1928, in his eighty-first year. He was vice-president of the Russell Manufacturing Company. A lifelong Democrat, he was former Mayor of the city, philanthropist and foremost citizen, who was also identified with the progress of Middletown during his entire life.

October 26, 1870, Samuel Russell (VIII) married Lucy Macdonough Hubbard, second daughter of the Hon. Henry G. Hubbard and granddaughter of Commodore Macdonough, of the Battle of Lake Champlain fame (September 11, 1814). To them were born three children: Samuel Russell, Thomas Macdonough Russell, and Lucy Hubbard Russell. Mrs. Russell died in 1876. Of a second marriage, there was born to Mrs. Sara Chapman (Clark) Russell one daughter, Mrs. Charles F. Rogers. There were seven grandchildren: Charles and Samuel Dabney, Thomas Macdonough Russell, Jr., Margaret Hubbard Russell, Mrs. William R. Everitt, Charles F. Rogers, Jr., and Laura E. D. Rogers; and seven great-grandchildren. Thomas Macdonough Russell, the elder, died in 1935. Samuel Russell, Jr., also died in 1935 and Lucy Hubbard (Russell) Dabney, in 1937. A more comprehensive account of Samuel Russell, and succeeding generations, may be found in the record of Thomas Macdonough Russell in this volume, following.



G M Russell

THOMAS MACDONOUGH RUSSELL—A leader in the financial, manufacturing and civic life of Middletown, Thomas Macdonough Russell's interests and activities centered principally within the city in which several generations of his family have been prominent. His great-grandfather, Samuel Russell, after retirement from the China trade, founded in 1834, the industrial concern of which Thomas Macdonough Russell was later to become president. He was an executive of several banks and had financial interests in various enterprises. He entered public life as representative in the General Assembly and served one term as Mayor of Middletown. Throughout his life he was identified with organizations and activities devoted to the best interests of his city and his advice and assistance were consistently sought in all phases of community problems.

In this volume, preceding this brief record is an account of the "Russell Family," giving something of the ancestral background of Mr. Russell. He was born in Middletown in 1874, the son of Samuel and Lucy Macdonough (Hubbard) Russell. His mother was a granddaughter of Commodore Macdonough, known for his victory at the Battle of Lake Champlain (September 11, 1814), during the War of 1812. His grandparents were George Osborne Russell (1816-1849) and Amelia Charlotte (Mather) Russell. Thomas Macdonough Russell was educated at St. Mark's School, Southboro, and completed his technical training at Yale Sheffield Scientific School.

While it was almost traditional that he should enter the Russell Manufacturing Company, Mr. Russell believed in the value of broad professional training and experience as a prerequisite to an executive position. He founded, in 1909, the T. M. Russell Engineering and Supply Company, which engaged in civil engineering and electrical contracting. He was one of the group who planned and surveyed the route of the trolley line from Hartford to Middletown. After several years he entered the Russell Company in a subordinate position and was promoted upon proven merit and abilities. He was elected president of the company in 1915, serving until 1933, when he continued his activities there as chairman of the Board of Directors. Mr. Russell also was vice-president of the Central National Bank, a director of the Middletown Trust Company, of the Middletown Savings Bank and of the Middlesex Mutual Assurance Company. He was one of the organizers of the "Middletown Sun," a Republican newspaper, which flourished from 1909 to 1915.

For more than thirty years Mr. Russell served on the Board of Education of the Middletown City School District and upon his resignation had the pleasure of seeing his son elected to succeed him In 1901, he was elected to the Connecticut General Assembly and was a member of the Finance Committee. As a public-spirited citizen his services were again drafted by the electorate and from 1907 to 1909 he was Republican Mayor of the City, an office his father had held before him. He was a member and chairman of the Bridge Commission on the new Middletown-Portland bridge from 1931 until his death. In 1896, he joined the 2nd Connecticut Regiment as a private and when he resigned in 1905, had been successively corporal, sergeant, first sergeant, second lieutenant, first lieutenant and captain of Company H, of Middletown. He was a major on the staff of Governor Frank B. Weeks. When the United States entered the World War, Mr. Russell was made a lieutenant-colonel in the Home Guards; in 1918, he received a commission as captain in the Engineers Division of the American Red Cross and sailed for France in the latter part of that year.

Devoted during his entire life to sailing, he owned, from early youth, a succession of boats which were familiar along the waters of the Connecticut River and the seaboard. He was a charter member and commodore of the Middletown Yacht Club, a member of the New Haven Yacht Club, of the Cruising Club of America and, at the time of his death, was surveyor of the American Power Boat Association.

A member of the Church of the Holy Trinity, he served as vestryman for many years. He was affiliated with St. John's Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; Washington Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Columbus Council, Royal and Select Masters, and Cyrene Commandery, Knights Templar.

In November, 1899, Thomas Macdonough Russell married Henrietta Ingersoll, daughter of Jonathan and Grace King (Skinner) Ingersoll, of New Haven, and they had two children. 1. Thomas Macdonough, Jr., born February 1, 1901, in Middletown. 2. Margaret Hubbard, born April 2, 1905, in Middletown; married in 1931, John Paul North, of Philadelphia.

Thomas Macdonough, Jr., is a vice-president of the Russell Manufacturing Company; a director of the Central National Bank, the Middletown Trust Company, and the Middlesex Mutual Assurance Company. He is president of the Russell Library, chairman of the Middletown Planning Commission, member of the Board of Education and a member of the General Assembly. He completed his formal education at Williams College, as a member of the class of 1923. From 1928 to 1932, he was a member of the Connecticut National Guard with the rank of first lieutenant. He is commodore of the Middletown Yacht Club and a member of the Conversational Club. In 1927, he married Marjorie Tilton, of New Haven, daughter of Walter H. and Clara Louise (Parmelee) Tilton, and they have four children: 1. Thomas Macdonough III, born June 1, 1929. 2. Samuel II, born June 13, 1932. 3-4, Julia and Margaret (twins), born October 28, 1936.

The elder Thomas Macdonough Russell died on July 30, 1935.

SAMUEL RUSSELL, JR.—A biographer wrote of Samuel Russell, Jr.: "Probably no man in Middlesex County, Connecticut, has done more to elevate the occupation of farming and to aid others in developing and making the most of this industry."

Mr. Russell was born in Middletown, January 14, 1873, son of Samuel Russell and Lucy Macdonough (Hubbard) Russell. An account of Mr. Russell's family and its immediate connections, and about the Russell enterprises and activities in Connecticut precedes this record.

Samuel Russell, Jr., after attending private schools in Middletown, became a student at St. Mark's School, Southboro, Massachusetts, and was a year at Harvard University, returning to Middletown in 1905. In 1896 Mr. Russell purchased part of the old Alsop farm in the Westfield section of Middletown, known as Ridgewood. In 1898 he married and went to live at Ridgewood, where he resided for twenty-eight years. During this time he became greatly interested in agriculture and, as his interests grew, added more acres to the original tract of seventy-five acres, until the total of about six hundred acres was reached during the World War. At that time Mr. Russell was Chairman of Beef Production under the Food Conservation Committee of Connecticut Council of Defense, and was instrumental in developing a State wide interest in the raising of beef cattle. His herds of Hereford cattle numbered several hundred of grade and pure bred stock.

In connection with this interest Mr. Russell developed the Baby Beef Clubs among the 4 H Club members of Connecticut and, with his support, these clubs have become an outstanding feature of the Eastern States Exposition. Always interested in boys and girls, he actively supported them in their interests and, through his efforts the first 4 H Club agriculture fair was organized in Connecticut and held for three years on his farm. These fairs are now quite numerous throughout the State, being organized under the leadership of 4 H Club members.

Mr. Russell's other farm interests were his orchards, cattle and, finally, a string of three-quarter breed horses. He will always be remembered as an outstanding horseman.

Mr. Russell was elected three terms to the State Legislature and served as chairman of its Agricultural Committee. Many interesting bills came from his committee and he was himself responsible for some bills of much importance.

He served five years as vice-president of the Russell Company and as a member of various local boards. He was president of the Middlesex County Farm Bureau and member of the Westfield Grange, and Russell Library. For many years Mr. Russell was an active member of the Town School Board of Middletown and was instrumental in the reorganization and consolidation of these schools. Also, Mr. Russell was Major on Governor Holcomb's staff during his term of office.

In 1926 Mr. and Mrs. Russell purchased property in Camden, South Carolina, where they spent about eight months of the year. The Ridgewood Farm interests were terminated at this time. A few years after Mr. Russell's death in October, 1935, the remaining portion of Ridgewood Farm became the property of Mr. Russell's nephew, T. M. Russell, Jr., who now makes his home there.

In 1898, Samuel Russell, Jr., married Julia Palmer Webster, thereby joining two prominent and old families of Connecticut. According to the "Encyclopedia of Biography" (Connecticut): The Webster family was established in this country by John Webster, a native of Glasgow, Scotland, who came from Warwickshire, England, to New England, where he was one of the original settlers of Hartford, Connecticut, and was a magistrate of the Colony, 1631 to 1659; deputy governor, in 1665; and governor, in 1666. His name headed the list of fifty-nine signers who agreed to settle Hadley, Massachusetts, 1669, where he became a judge. He died on April 5, 1686, and was buried at Hadley. The line of succession from this first John Webster is through his oldest son, Robert, who died in 1676. His son, Deacon Jonathan Webster (1657-1735), was a merchant at Hartford, who married Dorcas Hopkins on May 11, 1681. Their third son, Captain Stephen Webster (1693-1724), married, June 6, 1717 Mary Burnham. Their third son, Timothy (1723-1803), married, August 15, 1745, Sarah White. Their fourth son, Reuben (1757-1833), was a farmer and Revolutionary soldier and married, June 2, 1781, Anne Buell. Their eldest son, Hosea (1789-1883), was a veteran of the War of 1812, and married, September 18, 1824, Marie Buell. Their only son was William Reuben Webster, born October 20, 1830, who farmed, first, the old Webster estate in Litchfield, and second, an Oyster Bay, New York, farm. In Buffalo, New York, on December 15, 1867, he married Helen Stephenson, daughter of Timothy and Sinai (Matteson) Stephenson. Their daughter, Julia Palmer Webster, is the wife of Samuel Russell, Jr., as already stated. Mr. and Mrs. Russell were prominent in many Middletown activities, social, civic, humanitarian. It will be recalled that years ago they contributed the larger part of the cost of the fine school house erected in the Westfield district of Middletown. It was but one of many contributions to the life and betterment of this section.

HON. HENRY GRISWOLD HUBBARD—One of the great industrial leaders in Connecticut of the middle half of the past century, the Hon. Henry Griswold Hubbard, was not only outstanding in his contribution to the manufacturing interests of Middletown through his long connection with the Russell Manufacturing Company, but rose to be highly esteemed in civic and public life and as a benefactor. He is credited with furthering immensely the weaving of elastic web in the country, almost a hundred years ago; also with the introduction of the weaving of silk in this section of the State, and the compiling of a remarkable record as an industrial executive.

Mr. Hubbard was a member of a notable American family, tracing his lineage in this country to George Hubbard, born in England, in 1601, who probably came to the Massachusetts Bay Colony with one of the Puritan groups in 1635-36. He is of record as a citizen of Hartford, in 1639 and, during the following year married Elizabeth Watts, daughter of Richard and Elizabeth Watts. In 1650 he was one of the band who settled Mattabesatt, which three years later was given the name, Middletown. They had a son Joseph (1643-1707), who, on December 29, 1670, married Mary Porter, and they were the parents of Robert Hubbard (1673-1740), who married Abigail Adkins Ward. Their son, Robert (2) Hubbard (1712-1779), married, October 9, 1735, Elizabeth Sill. Their son, the Hon. Elijah Hubbard (1745-1808), was a man of prominence, active in the Revolution, president of the Middletown Bank, and for twenty-eight years a member of the Connecticut General Assembly. He married (first) Hannah Kent, and their son, also Elijah (1777-1846), who graduated from Yale in 1795, was a lawyer, Middletown magistrate, and president of the Middletown Bank, 1822 to 1846. He married, October 26, 1810, Lydia Mather, and their second child was Henry Griswold Hubbard, of the seventh generation from the American progenitor, George Hubbard.

Henry Griswold Hubbard was born October 8, 1814, in Middletown, as had been all but the first two of his forebears. After attending local schools, at fourteen he entered Captain Partridge's Military Academy, Norwich, Vermont, which later became Norwich College. Later he was a student at the Elling High School, and Wesleyan University. Failing health caused his retirement from college, and for a time he was employed in the store of J. and S. Baldwin, at Middletown. He also was associated with Jabez Hubbard, in New York, in the commission wool business, but in 1833 returned to Middletown, where he opened a store with Jesse Baldwin. Three years later he was a stockholder in the Russell Manufacturing Company, from which time he was to be for half a century its manager and directing power.

As shown elsewhere in this volume, the Russell Manufacturing Company became the major industrial concern in Middletown years ago, giving employment to many and turning out a large total of products. Mr. Hubbard is credited with persuading this company to specialize in the weaving of elastic webbing. This was in 1841, when this business was comparatively new in America. Forty-five years later, 1885, he introduced the weaving of silk, then unknown in the Middletown section. During his managership factories were built at Higganum and Rockfall. An early biographer, in relating an incident in Mr. Hubbard's industrial life wrote:

> For fifty years he ran smoothly along in this business without a law suit or a strike. At the end of that period he was confronted with the demands of the Knights of Labor, which he steadily resisted. He told his employes, at least the workmen who pressed the claims, that if he shut down, which he would do rather than submit to dictation, it would make no difference to his position, while it could not fail to be disastrous to them. In that contest he was master of the situation, and there was no stopping of the works. For many years no man was more devoted to business. He rarely went from the city, and to keep the huge business machinery in running order engrossed all his time. His life was one of industry, and in business he was eminently successful against powerful competition.

However devoted to business, Mr. Hubbard made time for good citizenship, public service and humanitarian activities. In 1866 he was elected senator from the 18th senatorial district. In both 1884 and 1888 he was a presidential elector, voting for Grover Cleveland. At one time or another he served in local offices, but never sought political preferment. He was a director of the Middletown Bank, from 1844 to his death, and for years was a trustee and director of the Middletown Savings Bank, which he also served as president. Although he affiliated with the Episcopal Church he was a liberal in his religious views, donating generously to churches of all faiths. He gave land for the Church Guild at South Farms and contributed to its fund, and advocated vigorously the erection of a Catholic church, at South Farms. His charities were based upon the Biblical idea of not letting the left hand know what the right did, so that the extent of his benevolence was known only to beneficiaries, personal or organizations. In appraisal of his character and personality, a writer has said:

> Mr. Hubbard was a man of decision of character, and almost invariably relied on his own judgment. His mind was thoroughly one of business, in which his judgment was good and his tact and far-sighted acumen remarkable. He had the faculty of remembering faces and names, and, it is said, could readily call by name all of his many employes. With all his wealth, and the position and influence he held, he was unostentatious, and easily approached by even the most humble. He had a commanding personality—a magnificent presence. Such a make-up gave him power and popularity. To his intimate friends he was very social. He enjoyed a good story and a hearty laugh. He was rarely out of temper, yet he possessed a strong command of it. His silence at times was proverbial. Generally speaking, his urbanity was wonderful. When on matters of importance he thought it time to speak his sentences were concise, definite, and rarely admitted of lengthy argument.

On June 20, 1844, Henry Griswold Hubbard married Charlotte Rosella Macdonough, daughter of Commodore Macdonough, "hero of Lake Champlain during the War of 1812," where his brilliant naval exploit, in 1813, defeating several British ships, won him medals and expressions of approval from the Congress of the United States. Mrs. Hubbard was a woman of many Christian virtues—a lady of refinement and culture who made the world better for having lived in it. Her bequests to the church and to various worthy institutions were large. Her death occurred March 10, 1900. Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard were the parents of three children: 1. Margaret Sill, born March 30, 1845. 2. Lucy Macdonough, born November 6, 1846, who became the wife of Samuel Russell (q. v.), and died February 2, 1876. 3. Charlotte Elizabeth, born June 3, 1848.

LELAND PINNEY WILSON—The Wilson family, of which Leland Pinney Wilson is a present day representative, has been prominently identified with the development of the town of Windsor, and the village of Wilson, Connecticut, more than a century. The village was, in fact, named for his father, and ancestors have been identified with Windsor since the seventeenth century.

Records and traditions indicate that the American progenitor of this branch of the Wilsons was one Robert, who came from England and settled in Windsor in about 1645, removing to Farmington, Connecticut, in 1653, where he died in 1655. He married Elizabeth Stebbins, daughter of Deacon Edward Stebbins, freeman of Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1634, who went to Hartford a year later, and was one of the original deacons of the Rev Thomas Hooker's Church. Their son, Samuel, born in Farmington about 1653, married Mary Griffin, and their son, John, born 1686, in Windsor, married Mary Marshall. Their son, Joel, born in Windsor, 1718, married Abigail Loomis. Their son, Moses, born in Windsor, 1748, married Huldah Allen and all of their six sons served in the American Revolution. A son, Henry, born 1785, and who died in 1849, married Eleanor Loomis, and was the first to settle in the section later known as Wilson Station, town of Windsor. Their son, Allyn M., born November 21, 1830, became a brick manufacturer, and to secure adequate transportation for his product, arranged with the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad to establish a stop, to be known as Wilson Station, "at which two passenger trains each way were to stop on signal." Such was the way in which Wilson Village acquired its name. Allyn M. Wilson married, on October 14, 1853, Ellen Barber, and they were the parents of four children, of whom Leland Pinney is the sole survivor. Only one other child reached maturity, Arthur Morton, former president of the New England Wholesale Grocers Association; vice-president of the National Wholesale Grocers Association, and vice-president and treasurer of The E. S. Kibbe Company of Hartford.

Leland Pinney Wilson, son of Allyn M. and Ellen (Barber) Wilson, was born in Windsor, April 25, 1871, and was educated in local public schools and the Hannum (now Morse) Business College, at Hartford, Connecticut. As a youth he entered the employ of the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company, in March, 1891. In the words of a biographer: "His promotion testified to his ability and success in his chosen vocation and, when he retired from the service of this corporation, July 1, 1921, he had for seven years been superintendent of the Loss Department having responsibility for the adjustment of losses totaling from four to five million dollars annually. Since his retirement he has acted as local agent for the Connecticut Fire and Aetna group of insurance companies taking care of a large part of the insurance in his community."

Mr. Wilson has made many major contributions to municipal progress, being a leader in the adoption of a greatly needed building code, and the "Zoning Law and Regulations" for the town of Windsor, passed by the State in 1931. He was not only the chairman of the Zoning Commission, but had done a great deal of the investigating and promotion which preceded the adoption of this important measure. He was also to the fore in the movement which led to the revaluation of town property, based on that most modern method of investigation, an aerial survey. He also was to the fore in the inception and activities of the Wilson Fire District which has taken over so large a part of local physical improvements. He was largely responsible also for the movement which enabled the Windsor Fire District to receive water from the Hartford system.

Mr. Wilson took a great interest in the Tercentenary Celebration of Windsor, the oldest town in the State, which took place September 26, 1933. Beginning about two years prior thereto he worked at intervals consuming five and one-half months in searching town, probate, genealogical and historical records; also old charts, atlases and maps, locating 161 buildings within the present boundaries of Windsor that were erected before the year 1840, ninety-eight of which antedated 1800. He placed suitable markers on each, showing date built and name of original owner. The work was made difficult as the deeds of half a century ago made no reference thereon to former deeds of the same property and a release of mortgage of this period and earlier, being largely from individuals, read identically with that of a warranty deed; furthermore fully fifty per cent. of all conveyances were by inheritance from parent or other relative and in many instances, the probate court failed to mention the transfer upon the land record; here is where genealogical and probate records became of great assistance. This work attracted wide attention and many letters and inquiries came to Mr. Wilson from other towns in the State approaching anniversaries, as to the method used in securing the information. Mr. Newton Case Brainard of Hartford was so pleased with the results that he had photographs taken of all the buildings erected prior to 1800, presenting copies of each to The Windsor Historical Society and The New England Society for the Preservation of Antiques.

At this writing, Mr. Wilson is chairman of the Board of Finance, Town of Windsor; chairman of the Zoning Commission, Town of Windsor, treasurer of the Wilson Fire District, of the Windsor Historical Society, of the Church of Christ, Wilson; and is a member of the Finance Board of the Metropolitan District of Hartford, and of the Executive and Finance Committee of the Windsor Library Association. He is also charter member of the Connecticut Chapter of the American Planning and Civic Association. Since the first year of the present century, Mr. Wilson has been Superintendent of the Sunday School of the Church of Christ and is senior deacon.

On October 1, 1896, Leland Pinney Wilson married Ellen Belle Dickson, daughter of Dr. James N. and Cynthia (Ensign) Dickson, both deceased, and both members of old New England families.

WILLIAM EDWARD HINES—In recognition of abilities displayed in industry and a devotion to the best interests of his home locality, William Edward Hines was elected to public office with the endorsement of both political parties. He is a native and lifelong resident of East Hartford, born February 27, 1892, son of William J. and Margaret (Bergen) Hines. His father, a well-known contractor and builder, died on January 24, 1929. Mrs. Hines still lives in East Hartford.

After a public school education, Mr. Hines went to the Morse Business College, Hartford, and completed a comprehensive group of studies. His first employment of importance was with the Whitney Manufacturing Company, with which he became connected, in 1911, and remained for about a year. He then was associated with Bellings and Spencer, of Hartford, for seventeen years, for the larger part of the time as paymaster, but later as advertising man for the firm. Resigning, Mr. Hines was service man and traffic manager for the Union Drawn Steel Company for three and a half years. He is secretary and a director of the East Hartford Federal Savings and Loan Association, elected by the shareholders in 1932.

Mr. Hines was interested in politics almost from the time he cast his first vote but was not especially active in political party affairs although a staunch Democrat. In October, 1931, he was elected town clerk of East Hartford, and was re-elected in 1933 and 1935 for two-year terms. Both parties endorsed his nomination and his choice by the people was based upon proven qualities, experience in business and interest in municipal matters. Mr. Hines enlisted for service in the United States Navy, on March 22, 1918, and was assigned to the Naval Aviation Reserves, remaining on duty until honorably discharged in December, 1918. He is a member and past commander of the American Legion, Brown-Landers Post, No. 77. Fraternally he is affiliated with the Hartford Lodge, No. 19, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and the Hartford Council, No. 11, Knights of Columbus. He is a member of the Town Clerks' Association of Connecticut, and is a popular figure in the East Hartford Chamber of Commerce; a member and past president of the Exchange Club, of East Hartford; and a member of the Sunset Ridge Country Club.

HENRY SNOW, III—Henry Snow, III, Civil War veteran, and his daughters, L. Louise, former business woman, and Minnie Rose, educator, are names long familiar to residents of East Hampton. The first Henry Snow was the son of Ebenezer and Anna (Crowell) Snow. His parents married, February 14, 1772, on Cape Cod, Massachusetts, but became residents of Connecticut, and lie buried in the East Haddam cemetery. Ebenezer Snow died on January 21, 1832; his wife died on September 17, 1830. Their son Henry, was born February 21, 1776, and lived to December 23, 1851. He married Anna Cooke, who died May 30, 1848, and they were the parents of eleven children: Henry, II, John, Nancy, Alexander, Hulda Ann, Julia, David, Mary, Ebenezer, Azel Gideon and William Andrew.

Henry Snow, II, was born June 27, 1802, and died August 30, 1855. He married Eunice Sears, born May 11, 1801, who died June 10, 1875. They were the parents of three children: Barbara Ann, Henry, III, and Betsy Lavina. Henry, III, was born July 31, 1839; while young his parents moved to western New York State, where he spent a part of his boyhood. The family removed to Michigan, where his father died in 1855. He and his mother and sister, Betsy Lavina, then returned to Connecticut, where he became an employe in an East Hampton bell factory whose products have attained such wide fame with the years. He was an especially fine artisan, doing the finer work in the foundry.

A young man approaching twenty-three, Henry Snow, III, enlisted in the Twenty-first Regiment of Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, a member of Company H, and soon was off to that great adventure of the men of his day, the Civil War in the South. The date of his mustering into service was September 5, 1862, and he received his honorable discharge from the Union Army, June 16, 1865. Starting in as a private he was promoted to corporal, during regimental activities in the Richmond, Virginia, sector. He participated in such battles as Drewry Bluff, Cold Harbor, Fort Harrison, Fredericksburg, the raid on Bermuda Hundred, and numerous minor engagements. One of the first to join in the Grand Army of the Republic movement, he was a member of Mansfield Post, No. 15, Middletown, and long a beloved figure among veterans. He was also a member of the East Hampton Grange, and both he and his wife were active members of the Congregational Church. He died February 23, 1921.

On May 29, 1867, Henry Snow, III, married Celene E. Rose, born April 26, 1841, a native of Centerbrook, Town of Essex, Connecticut, who died June 27, 1924. They were the parents of two daughters: Lavinia Louise and Minnie Rose.

Lavinia Louise Snow, born April 15, 1871, supplemented her academic education with studies in the Middletown Business College, and for about a decade was with one of the city's commercial firms. She is a member of the Grange; Rebekahs, Nesis Lodge, No. 58, and formerly of the King's Daughters. She is a member of the Congregational Church and for many years was secretary of both the Sunday school of the Congregational Church and the Grange, but is now an invalid.

Minnie Rose Snow devoted her life to educational work. Born July 3, 1874, she is a graduate of Wesleyan University, class of 1897, with the degree of Bachelor of Philosophy, and has taken postgraduate studies in Yale University and Columbia University. Included in her teaching experience has been two years in the Rockville schools, Connecticut; one year in the Enfield, Massachusetts, schools; three years in East Hartford High School; three years in Wallingford, Connecticut, High School; two years in the Amsterdam, New York, High School; and from October, 1909, to March, 1936, when she retired, also was a teacher in Manual Training High School, Brooklyn, New York. Miss Snow is a member of the Connecticut Wesleyan University Alumnae; of the Middletown College Club, and the Daughters of the American Revolution; also a member of Whatsoever Circle of King's Daughters. Of the Congregational faith, she is a member of the Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, New York.

Everett J Arbour

EVERETT JOSEPH ARBOUR—Throughout his business career, Everett Joseph Arbour has been active in the trucking industry and he is now connected with the Consolidated Motor Lines, Incorporated, operators of more than five hundred motor trucks in the eastern section of the United States. He was born in New Britain, Connecticut, November 14, 1901, the son of Joseph and Emma (Beloin) Arbour. Joseph Arbour, a native of St. Raphael, Province of Quebec, Canada, has also been long prominent in the trucking industry, and is now president of the Consolidated Motor Lines, Incorporated.

Everett Joseph Arbour received his early education in St. Mary's Parochial School, and he then attended high school for two years, after which he pursued a business course at Huntzinger's Business School, in Hartford. Following in the footsteps of his father, he purchased several trucks, and the firm of Joseph Arbour and Son came into existence. In 1930, a consolidation of Joseph Arbour and Son, Woodland Transport Company and the United Arbour Express Company was effected, and the business was incorporated as the Consolidated Motor Lines, Incorporated. In 1930 the Reliable Motor Lines merged with this company, two years later the Bill Kneeland Express was added, and in 1937 the Thompson Motor Freight and Simpson Transportation Company merged with the Consolidated Motor Company, and today this organization is regarded as one of the leading freight transportation companies in this section of the United States. Mr. Arbour is well known in the business life of New England, being chairman of the Consolidated Motor Lines of Massachusetts, regional vice-president and a director of the American Trucking Association, chairman of the Board of Directors of the Connecticut Motor Truck Association, and also a director of the Fidelity Industrial Bank of New Britain. He is also a leader in civic affairs, and serves as a director of the Diocesan Bureau of Social Welfare.

He is a communicant of St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church, and an affiliate of the Knights of Columbus and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

Mr. Arbour was married at New Britain, August 31, 1920, to Helen Dery, daughter of Alcide and Emma (Daucette) Dery. Mr. and Mrs. Arbour are the parents of two daughters: 1. Frances, sixteen years old. 2. Shirley, fifteen years old. Both are enrolled in St. Joseph's Academy, of Hartford.

Everett Joseph Arbour is a member of: Wampanoag Country Club, West Hartford; New York Traffic Association, New York City; Shipsinkers, New York City; New Britain Traffic Bureau; National Freight Golf Association, New York City; Mayor's Emergency Relief Committee, Hartford.

MERRITT JOHNSON CORNWELL—A well known figure in recent years in the business circles of East Hampton, Merritt Johnson Cornwell has run true to the traditions of his family which dates back to the beginnings of New England, members of which were among the early settlers of the Middletown section of Connecticut. Since 1928 he has been the assistant treasurer and manager of both the East Hampton Lumber and Coal Company and the Colchester Lumber and Coal Company, Inc.

Mr. Cornwell was born in Westfield, Connecticut, July 13, 1897, the son of Herbert Isaac and Jennie (Johnson) Cornwell. A genealogy of this branch of the Cornwell family is appended to this record. His father, who died in 1900, was long associated with the Meriden Britannia Company. His mother is a resident of Newfield, Connecticut. Merritt Johnson Cornwell was graduated from the Middletown High School in 1916, and entered Norwich College, Vermont, from which he was graduated with the class of 1920, after completing courses in electrical engineering.

During the World War period, Mr. Cornwell was in the Plattsburg, New York, Training School for Officers. Upon his return to civilian life, he went to Middletown and, until 1928 was in the employ of Meech and Stoddard, dealers in grain. In 1928 the East Hampton Lumber and Coal Company was organized, of which, as has already been mentioned, he has been the assistant treasurer and manager since, also holding like offices with the Colchester Lumber and Coal Company, Inc. Mr. Cornwell is a member of the board of finance of the Town of East Hampton, and fraternally is affiliated with Wooster Lodge, No. 10, at Colchester, Free and Accepted Masons, of which he is a Past Master; and with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a member of Treadway Cavanaugh Post No. 64, American Legion. While in Norwich College he played on the baseball and football teams and remains a sports enthusiast.

On September 10, 1922, Merritt Johnson Cornwell married Blanche Bernardine West, daughter of Fred and Lyda G. (Havens) West, both residents of Middletown who trace their ancestry to passengers on the "Mayflower." Mr. and Mrs. Cornwell are the parents of three children: 1. Merritt West, born May 14, 1924. 2. Winthrop Fred, born December 4, 1926. 3. Joan Alice, born October 17, 1931.

The Cornwell family was established in America by one William Cornwell, of England, in the very early seventeenth century, according to the "Cornwell Genealogy," from which the following facts are derived. The first record of him in the Massachusetts Colony is of 1633, when he and his wife Joane, were residents of Roxbury, Massachusetts. Old records indicate that he fought in the Pequot War, in May, 1637, for which he later received a grant of land at East Hartford. In 1638 he assisted in the purchase of land from the Indians at Stratford, Connecticut; and by 1639, was a land owner in Hartford and was then being known as a "sergeant at arms." In about 1648 he removed to Middletown. He was a representative in the Colonial Legislature in 1654, 1664 and 1665. William Cornwell died in Middletown, February 21, 1678.

(II) John Cornwell, son of the above William, was born April, 1640; married, June 8, 1665, Martha Peck; and died in Middletown, November 2, 1707.

(III) Captain Joseph Cornwell, son of John and Martha (Peck) Cornwell, was born on October 5, 1674, and died February 5, 1742. He married (first) Abigail Harris, of Middletown, who died May 13, 1723. Captain Cornwell married (second) Elizabeth Hall.

(IV) Joseph Cornwell, son of Captain Joseph and Abigail (Harris) Cornwell, born April 7, 1711, married (first) Abigail Candee, who died May 1, 1743. Joseph Cornwell married (second) Midwell Lane.

(V) Isaac Cornwell, son of Joseph Cornwell, born June 30, 1747, was a Revolutionary soldier. He married, May 15, 1775, Hannah Roberts, who died February 1, 1805.

(VI) Joseph Cornwell, son of Isaac and Hannah (Roberts) Cornwell, born March 16, 1788, died in 1845. He married, October 22, 1818, Lucinda B. Miller.

(VII) Merritt Miller Cornwell, son of Joseph and Lucinda B. (Miller) Cornwell, born September 28, 1819, died August 26, 1882. He married Mariette Addis.

(VIII) Herbert Isaac Cornwell, son of Merritt Miller and Mariette (Addis) Cornwell, born 1866, died in 1900. He married, in 1896, Jennie Johnson, of Middletown.

(IX) Merritt Johnson Cornwell, son of Herbert Isaac and Jennie (Johnson) Cornwell, is the subject of this record.

Since the Revolutionary War, the Cornwells have lived or been born in Westfield, Connecticut. The previous generations of this family were identified with Middletown.

ERASTUS DEVINE BURNHAM—For nearly three centuries the name of Burnham has figured prominently in the history of Connecticut, particularly the Town of South Windsor, where, remarkably enough, the family resides on the original land acquired by its progenitor who settled here about 1640, and became one of the largest land owners of his time, holding property which embraced East Hartford, South Windsor and Manchester. Since that time its descendants have been active leaders in the affairs of their surroundings, and its present representative, Erastus Devine Burnham, has upheld the illustrious family traditions, contributing substantially to the welfare of this community as a public official, successful businessman and civic leader. At the present time his principal interests are devoted to tobacco growing and the real estate business which he has engaged in for a number of years.

Erastus Devine Burnham, who represents the eighth generation of this family in this country, was born at South Windsor, April 28, 1871, the son of Erastus Williams and Mary Graham (Devine) Burnham, II, who were also the parents of the following children: 1. William, who was born in 1856, and died at the age of one year. 2. Owen William, who was born June 11, 1857, and died February 12, 1935. 3. Charles L., who was born December 20, 1858. 4. Emeline M., who was born November 29, 1860, and died in 1927. 5. Agnes C., who was born October 10, 1862, and died in March, 1930. 6. Henry E., who was born May 22, 1864, and died November 3, 1864. 7. Frederick A., who was born September 5, 1866. 8. Robert L., who was born March 22, 1868, and died July 13, 1868.

Mr. Burnham's father, Erastus Williams Burnham, II, who was born April 28, 1834, and died April 11, 1921, at the age of eighty-seven years, was the eldest son of eleven children born to Erastus Williams and Emeline (Parsons) Burnham. This family enjoyed an unusual record of longevity. All of the children lived to marry and have families, and four celebrated their golden wedding anniversaries. Erastus Williams Burnham, II, who was a farmer and paper maker by trade, served with the Union forces during the Civil War, enlisting, first, in the 12th Connecticut Infantry, from which he was honorably discharged at New Orleans, Louisiana, for disability. Later, however, he re-enlisted in the 1st Connecticut Heavy Artillery, which he was identified with throughout the conflict. He saw action in a number of major engagements and was wounded at the Battle of Crater, in Petersburg.

On May 15, 1855, he married Mary Graham Devine, a native of Glasgow, Scotland, who was born January 14, 1830, and died October 22, 1911.

The Burnham family trace their American ancestry to Thomas Burnham, who is recorded to have come to this country from England about 1640, and originally settled in Hartford on the site of what is now known as Exchange Corner. Later he removed to East Hartford, where he practiced his profession as an attorney, and also acquired extensive real estate holdings, acquiring the tract of land mentioned, which comprised East Hartford, South Windsor and Manchester, which made him one of the largest realty owners of his generation in this section. He was born in England in 1620, died in Connecticut, August 5, 1703, and married Anne Wright in 1639. Descent is traced through their son Thomas, II, who was born in 1646, and married Naomi Hull, January 4, 1676; through their son Charles, who was baptized in 1690, died November 15, 1779, and married Lydia Williams on November 7, 1727; through their son Eleazer, who was born February 2, 1729, died March 4, 1815, and married Tryphenia King, November 20, 1778. From this point the lineage is carried on through their son Phineas, who was born June 24, 1783, died February 1, 1830, and married Abigail Huntley, April 4, 1803. They were the parents of Erastus Williams, grandfather of Erastus Devine Burnham, who was born April 15, 1810, died October 20, 1854, and married Emeline Parsons, July 8, 1833.

Erastus Devine Burnham spent his early childhood on the family farm at South Windsor. In 1883, his parents removed to Holyoke, Massachusetts, and it was here that he received a general education in the public schools, completing his studies in 1886. He then secured a position with F. L. Tabor, a jeweler and watchmaker in Holyoke, whom he was to work with for eight years learning the trade. At the expiration of this period he entered the Waltham Horological School at Waltham, Massachusetts, from which he was graduated in 1895. During the latter year he became employed with the George E. Shaw jewelry and optical business at Putnam, Connecticut, where he remained about two years, and, in 1897, he returned to Holyoke and established himself in the jewelry and optical business, where he continued until 1904, when he retired from this work to engage in tobacco growing, the lumber business and the real estate business, pursuits he has followed since with outstanding success. Since that time the family has resided for given periods in Springfield and Holyoke, Massachusetts, and prior to returning to the family farm in South Windsor, spent its summers here. The family home is situated on a one hundred and twenty-acre tract of land, which formerly comprised a part of the holdings of Thomas Burnham, the first American ancestor. Mr. Burnham has cleared approximately seventy-five acres, fifty-five of which are planted in tobacco, one of his principal businesses. Aside from the aforementioned occupations, Mr. Burnham is president of the South Windsor Warehouse Company, and president of the First Connecticut Agricultural Credit Association of Manchester. He was one of the organizers and first president of the Connecticut Valley Broad Leaf and Havana Seed Growers, Inc., an association of sun-grown tobacco farmers.

In his civic activities he has contributed substantially to the welfare and progress of his surroundings. He served as a member of the Board of Selectmen for the Town of South Windsor in 1925 and 1926, is a member and former commander of Camp No. 50, Sons of the Union Veterans of Hartford, and fraternizes with Evergreen Lodge, No. 14, of the Free and Accepted Masons, and the local lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a member of the Central Baptist Church, of Hartford, and served as deacon several years.

On May 31, 1894, at Springfield, Massachusetts, Mr. Burnham married Mellie Warner Barton, member of an old and distinguished New England family, and the daughter of James Harvey and Susan Ellis (Warner) Barton, both natives of Granby, Massachusetts, where the former was born September 23, 1826, and the latter June 22, 1835. Her parents were married November 27, 1856. Mrs. Burnham, who was graduated from Mount Holyoke College with the class of 1891, and taught school at West Brookfield, Massachusetts, for one year, between 1892 and 1893, traces her American ancestry on both sides of the family to the early part of the seventeenth century. Through his maternal ancestry, her father, son of Phineas Dwight and Eunice (Preston) Barton, was a descendant of David Preston, native of England, who was the son of William and Elizabeth (Sale) Preston. David Preston is recorded to have come to this country at the age of thirteen years, and settled in Dorchester, Massachusetts, in 1635, where he lived throughout his life. He married Mary (last name unknown), and the line is carried on through their son, John, who married Sarah Gardner; through their son, John, who married Mary Smith; through their son, John, who married Hannah; through their son, Lieutenant John, who was born in 1719, served in the Continental Army during the Revolutionary War, and is now buried in Granby, Massachusetts. He married Rachael Clark, and they were the parents of John, who married Eunice Moody, grandparents of James Harvey Barton. Mrs. Burnham's Chapin ancestry records among its ancestors Deacon Samuel Chapin, whose statue stands in a park next to the public library in Springfield, Massachusetts.

Mr. and Mrs. Erastus Devine Burnham are the parents of three children: 1. Edwin Graham, who was born December 19, 1898, married Helen Parmelee in February, 1923, and they have two children: i. Elizabeth Barton, born April 10, 1924. ii. Edwin Cowles, born March 29, 1932. 2. Marion Barton, born November 25, 1901, married Kenneth Segee, September 17, 1927, and is the mother of two children: i. Donald Kenneth, born August 28, 1930. ii. Ruth Burnham, born April 6, 1934. 3. James Erastus, born April 3, 1904, married Christabel Barr, April 6, 1929, and they are the parents of two children: i. William Franklin, who was born January 23, 1933, and died April 4, 1933. ii. James Barry, born May 18, 1934.

LAWRENCE D. GRIFFIN—During his five years residence in the community of Thompsonville, Lawrence D. Griffin, realtor and insurance executive, has come to be recognized as one of the outstanding business leaders of this vicinity and has also achieved prominence in social and civic affairs, serving in an important capacity for several municipal agencies and being identified with a number of clubs and societies.

Mr. Griffin was born in the city of Springfield, Massachusetts, December 5, 1898, the son of Daniel and Jennie A. (Gorman) Griffin, the former a native of his son's birthplace and the latter of Thompsonville. His father, who died in 1908, was a member of the Springfield Police Department. Mr. Griffin received the early part of his general education in the parochial schools of Springfield and completed this part of his studies at the Enfield High School in 1917. He then matriculated at the Catholic University in Washington, D. C., and continued at this institution until he enlisted in the United States Army for World War service in June, 1918. At this time he was dispatched to Plattsburg, New York, and later stationed at Camp Grant in Rockford, Illinois, where he was commissioned a second lieutenant and continued in training until he was honorably discharged on March 1, 1918. He then returned to Washington, D. C., and resumed his studies at George Washington University from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in the class of 1923.

His first position was in the Marine Corps Division of the United States Navy Department in Washington, which he was associated with for about a year. He then served a like period with the government census bureau at this point and at the expiration of this period joined the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, which concern he remained with for two years after which he entered the auditing department of the Travelers Insurance Company in Hartford. In 1927, Mr. Griffin joined the Guarantee and Accident Company of London, and after working for this firm three years, came to Thompsonville, where he established himself in a real estate and general insurance business which he has conducted with outstanding success since. In this work he represents a number of the leading insurance companies of the nation. His offices are located at No. 110 Main Street, Thompsonville. The nature of his accomplishments has not only served to increase his business but has also won him the deep esteem and respect of his colleagues.

As a resident of this community Mr. Griffin has also taken a keen and active interest in social and civic affairs. Since 1933 he has been a member of the Board of Education of Enfield and since 1934 has been a member of the local police commission. Through his military service he belongs to the Horace J. Tanguay Post, No. 80, of the American Legion in Thompsonville. Mr. Griffin fraternizes with the Knights of Columbus.

CHESTER HARRY HALE—As vice-president of the C. K. and H. T. Hale, Incorporated, plantations in Gildersleeve, Connecticut, and Chicopee Falls, Massachusetts, Chester Harry Hale is directing a business which his family has engaged in for generations. The executives of C. K. and H. T. Hale, Incorporated, are: Truman H. Hale, president; Chester Harry Hale, vice-president and superintendent; Titus S. Hale, treasurer; Harry L. Hale, secretary. It is a closed corporation, all stock being held by its officers. Prior to assuming his present office in 1930, he was superintendent of their tobacco plantation in Chicopee, which he had managed with great success for twelve years. Since 1930 he has been superintendent of both plantations. In Gildersleeve he is active and prominent in social and civic affairs.

Mr. Hale was born in Gildersleeve, Middlesex County, April 23, 1899, the son of Chester Kellogg and Lillian L. (Meyers) Hale, the former a native of his son's birthplace, and the latter of Lowell, Massachusetts. His father, who was born on May 13, 1853, and died on June 6, 1930, was one of the most able and successful tobacco planters in this section of the State. He devoted his life to this occupation and did much to build up the plantation and enhance family prestige in this business. Chester Kellogg Hale was superintendent of the American Sumatra Tobacco Company plantations in Connecticut and Massachusetts for thirty years.

The Hale family, one of the oldest in New England, traces its Connecticut ancestry to Samuel and Thomas Hale, the former of whom was in Hartford as early as 1637, and served in the Pequot War. Originally the family came from Wales, from which this branch removed over three centuries ago. In the generations that have followed there have been a number of distinguished personages, among them the patriot Nathan Hale, who immortalized himself when he uttered the famous phrase, "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country," when he was about to be executed by the British as a spy during the Revolutionary War.

Such is the stock from which Chester Harry Hale springs. As a boy he attended the public schools of Portland and later completed this part of his education at the Middletown High School. After finishing his studies he joined his father on the family tobacco plantation in Gildersleeve and, under the expert guidance of the elder Hale received a horticultural and business training that has been of inestimable value to him in all of his undertakings since. He was on the farm in 1914 when they began to supplant the prime Havana seed tobacco for shade tobacco, and later was transferred to the Chicopee Falls plantation, comprising four hundred and thirty-two acres, one hundred and twenty of which are given over to the cultivation of tobacco. He assumed his duties as superintendent here in 1918, and continued in this capacity until the death of his father, on June 6, 1930, when he returned to the Gildersleeve plantation. During the latter year the business was incorporated and Mr. Hale became vice-president of the concern which is devoted to the growing, packing and marketing of shade grown tobacco. He operates both plantations and employs approximately one hundred people.

Aside from business affairs, Mr. Hale has been keenly interested in the affairs of his native community where he now is a member of the executive board of the fire department, and a member of the Grange, Patrons of Husbandry. He also belongs to the Middletown Rotary Club and worships at the Congregational Church, in which he is a former member of the board of trustees. An ardent sportsman, Mr. Hale finds his principal recreations in motor boating, bowling, deep sea fishing, baseball and football.

On May 15, 1920, Chester Harry Hale married Dorothy Bradford Douglas, daughter of Arthur and Effie (Curtis) Douglas, of Glastonbury, Connecticut, whose mother is a descendant of the famous Governor Bradford, of the Plymouth Colony. Mr. and Mrs. Hale are the parents of four children: 1. Chester Kellogg, born September 7, 1921. 2. Douglas, born March 18, 1923. 3. Nathan Strong, born April 22, 1924. 4. Dorothy Bradford, born November 19, 1928.

PATRICK C. BURKE—The Burke family name, of County Tipperary, Ireland, has been fittingly perpetuated beyond the span of memory by the admirable and inspiring careers of the very earliest progenitors; all of whom were active participants in the political, social and religious life of their respective communities.

The parish of Temple Derry was the home of John and Johanna (Costello) Burke, progressive and successful farmers who spent their entire lives in Ireland. They became the parents of four sons: Michael, John, Patrick C., of whom further, and Timothy. Only John, who emigrated to Australia in 1877, and Patrick C., whose birth occurred on August 15, 1854, ever left the ancestral home.

In 1877, arriving in America, Patrick C. Burke spent a few months in the City of New York and then came to Litchfield County, Connecticut, establishing permanent residence in the Town of Litchfield. He became a successful stone mason, developing his trade into a contracting business which, in turn, created work on a larger scale with the State, surrounding towns, railroads and institutions. The sphere of his interests, extending into church, civic and fraternal activities, was widespread. He served the Town of Litchfield as selectman for twenty-seven years and was president of the Board of Selectmen for seventeen years consecutively. Through the medium of his office it became his privilege to make personal contacts with many high officials throughout the State. He has known all the Governors of Connecticut for the past fifty years and acted as chairman and master of ceremonies on many occasions. In 1931 when he went out of office he was tendered the highest tribute of respect and esteem ever accorded any man in like office by civic officials as well as neighbors and friends. Although active in councils of the Democratic Party, he met with political success in this strong Republican community and was acknowledged fair and unbiased in his deductions.

At one time, Patrick C. Burke operated extensive farmlands, comprising two hundred eighty acres, but he disposed of a great portion of this property following the death of his wife in 1911. He retained the site of his home, North Farms, where he has lived since 1901, situated on the main road running to Torrington, two miles from Litchfield. Despite his absorption in the religious, business, and civic pursuits of his community, he has found time in his busy life to indulge his hobby as a horseman. He has been the proud owner of many thoroughbred race horses, in addition to dray and farm horses of the finest stock. He frequently entered his horses in races in Connecticut and neighboring states. An active communicant of St. Anthony's Roman Catholic Church, he is fraternally a pioneer member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and the Knights of Columbus.

On April 17, 1880, Patrick C. Burke and Anne Ryan, a native of Burrisleigh, County Tipperary, Ireland, were united in marriage in the local church at Winsted, Connecticut. Mrs. Burke was a daughter of James and Margaret (Grant) Ryan, who, in addition to Anne (Ryan) Burke, were the parents of the following children: Michael, John, Louis, a son who died in infancy, Mary and Margaret. Anne and Mary came to America in 1877, but the other children remained in Ireland.

Patrick C. and Anne (Ryan) Burke became the parents of ten children, two of whom died in infancy or young childhood and the others, as follow, were: 1. Margaret A., the wife of Albert J. Hausmann, assistant postmaster of Litchfield, who has four children: Anne G., Margaret M., Albert F., and Clare M. 2. Johanna J., unmarried, who lives at the old homestead and supervises the family interests. 3. Mary A., unmarried. A successful business woman, she operated one of the leading department stores in her town for many years. She now conducts the Lakeview Inn, at Litchfield. 4. Ellen C., the wife of Melville S. Kane, an insurance broker in Litchfield; their children are: Patricia Anne and Edward J. Kane. 5. Nora W., who married William J. Leonard, associated with the Southern New England Telephone Company at Danbury; their children are: David P., James B., John M., Anne M. and Rita J. Leonard. 6. Elizabeth J., a teacher in the Litchfield Center School. 7. John M., construction foreman with the Associated Gas and Power Company, is District Commissioner of the Ethan Allen District of Boy Scouts, Litchfield; married Mary Dunn, a teacher in Torrington, and their children are: Barbara, Joan, Ellen, Moria and Anne R. 8. James F., who is an electrician with the American Brass Company in Torrington. He married Margaret Hayes, a teacher in Torrington and they have three children: Patrick C., James F. and John J.

During the period of the World War, John M. and James F., sons of Patrick C. Burke, rendered service in the United States Army.

THOMAS WHITE BEAUMONT—No figure in the community of Cromwell has enjoyed quite the esteem, respect and affection accorded to Thomas White Beaumont, president of the Cromwell Dime Savings Bank since 1926, and former postmaster, town clerk and treasurer. It may also be said that no figure of his generation has been more active in the social and civic affairs of the town, particularly the Masonic Order, in which he has been a member for over half a century.

Mr. Beaumont was born in Cromwell, September 3, 1856, the son of Edmund and Ruth (White) Beaumont, both natives of his birthplace where his father engaged in farming and for a time manufactured hammers and axes. His mother was the daughter of Thomas and Rebecca (Edwards) White, the former also a farmer and sea captain during his younger days. On his paternal side Mr. Beaumont traces his American ancestry to Joseph Beaumont, a native of Derby, England, who came to this country at the age of eighteen and joined his brother James, who had preceded him, in Cromwell. He originally worked here, later went to Poughkeepsie, New York, where he became a foreman in a cotton factory, and then returned to Cromwell where he formed a cotton and wool goods manufacturing company, said to be the first of its type in the State. Later he manufactured hammers and axes with his son, Edmund, father of Thomas White Beaumont.

Mr. Beaumont, who was left an orphan at a comparatively early age, spent most of his boyhood in the home of his aunt, Augusta White. He received the early part of his general education in the district schools, later was a student at the Cromwell Academy and eventually completed his studies at the Middletown High School. He then became a clerk in the grocery store of L. H. Williams in Cromwell, and after serving here for several years became associated with W. R. McDonald in a similar capacity, continuing with this Cromwell merchant who was appointed postmaster under President Harrison. His employer, in turn, named Mr. Beaumont assistant postmaster, an experience that was to prepare him to assume the office when President McKinley chose him on August 5, 1897. He continued in this capacity for the next sixteen years and in 1915 was elected to represent his district in the State Legislature. A year later he was named town clerk and treasurer, and continued in this office until 1926 when he was elected president of the Cromwell Dime Savings Bank, in which he had been a member of the board of directors since 1890. In this position he holds the distinction of being the sixth man to head this institution, which is now over sixty-seven years old. The bank, which was founded by eleven citizens of Cromwell, received its charter in 1871 and opened for operation in a building situated directly across the street from the present structure, which was known as Briggs Hall and also housed the local post office and a large general store. John Stevens, guiding spirit in the founding of the bank, became its first president. Deposits at the end of the first year totaled $41,177.07; deposits for the year 1930 passed the two million dollar mark. In the meantime the bank had outgrown its original quarters, removed to the United Association Building in 1890 and continued there until 1928, when it occupied its present home which was constructed under the administration of Mr. Beaumont, the present chief executive. Under his administration the institution has continued to prosper which in itself is a tribute to his ability as a business leader.

A loyal and devoted Mason, Mr. Beaumont has been a member of Washington Lodge, No. 81, for over fifty-two years, an officer for over forty-nine years, and secretary for forty years. His long tenure of membership was celebrated by his associates at a banquet given in his honor. Commenting upon the event and the honored guest's career a local newspaper dispatch made the following observation: "This record reveals a well-rounded life and it tells the story of why Mr. Beaumont is held in such high esteem by his fellow townsmen. His achievements, counted from his days as a grocery clerk, when his personal popularity put him in the political picture for postmaster, up to the present is characteristically American. And now, at eighty-one, Mr. Beaumont still continues to serve. Blessed with a strong constitution he has seldom known a sick day and each morning finds him at his desk in the Cromwell Dime Savings Bank." Politically, Mr. Beaumont has always been a staunch Republican and in his religious convictions has worshiped at the Congregational Church.

On September 30, 1880, at Cromwell, Mr. Beaumont married Jennie Hanmer, daughter of John J. Hanmer, a retired New York merchant who removed to this community in 1869. Mrs. Beaumont passed away in 1932.

ISAAC P. KELLOGG—Isaac P. Kellogg, President of Apothecaries Hall Company, of Waterbury, was born October 30, 1871, in Northampton, Massachusetts, son of Jonathan Dwight and Caroline (Parsons) Kellogg. His father, who was widely known as a merchant, was engaged in the dry goods business until his death.

The schools of Northampton provided the early training of Isaac P. Kellogg, who completed his high school studies there and then attended Williston Academy. He came to Waterbury in 1891, entering the employ of Holmes, Booth and Haydens Manufacturing Company, with whom he continued his connection until 1895. Afterward he was associated with the Anglo Cycle Fittings Company for a short time, and then with the Mathews and Willard Manufacturing Company. He became associated with Apothecaries Hall Company in 1901, and on May 24, 1902, was chosen treasurer and a director of the organization. Since that time his identification with the company has been in executive capacities. In 1906, he was elected president and treasurer of the company, both of which offices he filled until 1934, when he resigned the treasuryship. As president and treasurer and later, as president, he has been the chief factor in directing the policy of the corporation.

In 1852, the business was incorporated under its present name. The original capitalization was $12,500, which, in 1854, was increased to $20,000; in 1916, to $240,000; and in 1925, to $720,000.

Under the leadership of noteworthy executives the company has entered into a number of fields rarely associated with the drug business.

Mr. Kellogg is also a director and corporator of the Waterbury Savings Bank; a director of Waterbury National Bank, and of Apothecaries Hall Company. Quite aside from his interest in these connections, he has been active in civic and social affairs in his community. He is a staunch Republican, and a warm supporter of his party's policies and principles. He belongs to both the Waterbury Club and the Waterbury Country Club. Fraternally, he is connected with the Free and Accepted Masons. He is a member of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church. His career has led him forward along many lines of activity, with the result that he has achieved success in many different departments of life.

On January 15, 1902, Isaac P. Kellogg married Sara Rice Munson, daughter of Luzerne I. and Mary B. (Rice) Munson. They became the parents of the following children: 1. Stoddard, who died at the age of twelve years and eight months. 2. Frederic Rice. 3. Thomas Parsons.

CHARLES E. KAUFMAN, M.D.—A careful, if somewhat interrupted, preparation for the profession of medicine is one of the foundations upon which the successful practice of Charles E. Kaufman, M.D., was laid. He was born in Sioux City, South Dakota, December 1, 1881, son of Charles Kaufman, and prepared for college at St. John's Military Academy, Delafield, Wisconsin. Matriculating at Denison University, Granville, Ohio, after two years he left and was graduated from Yale University, with the class of 1909. He continued in New Haven to study medicine at the Yale Medical School, but because of the death of his father and the necessity of attending to the affairs of the family, he withdrew in 1911, and did not again take up his work there until 1917. Graduated in 1920, with the degree of Doctor of Medicine, he had acquired an unusually comprehensive knowledge and experience in his profession, for he had interned, while in medical school; had studied during the forced interims, and later pursued postgraduate work at the Harvard Medical College and in the Graduate School of New York City.

Dr. Kaufman established himself in practice in West Haven, Connecticut, in 1921, and built up a large clientele by his skill and labors. While his work was general in character, he became increasingly prominent as a specialist in throat and nose diseases. He was appointed Health Officer of West Haven on May 1, 1935. He served on the staff of Grace Hospital, and was a member of the American Medical Association, Connecticut State Medical Association, and the County and City Medical Societies. Fraternally, Dr. Kaufman was affiliated with the Masonic Order, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and was a member of the Rotary Club. Golf was his favorite recreation. He was of the Congregational faith and worshipped in the First Church of West Haven.

In New York City, on October 8, 1909, Charles E. Kaufman, M.D., married Rae M. Robichaud, daughter of Jean and Marie Louise Robichaud. Dr. and Mrs. Kaufman had three children: 1. Charles E., Jr., born December 6, 1912. 2. Leslie R., born January 8, 1914. 3. Ralph O., born January 20, 1916.

Dr. Charles E. Kaufman died in December, 1937.

THOMAS BENTON LASHAR—During his long association with the silver manufacturing industry, Thomas Benton Lashar rose to positions of influence and large responsibility in the several organizations with which he was connected. His service of more than thirty years, most of it spent in Connecticut, established his place as a leading figure in the field of enterprise to which he devoted most of his active life and at the time of his retirement in 1926 he was a partner in the Associated Silver Company of Chicago.

Mr. Lashar was born in Bridgeport, Connecticut, in March, 1869, a son of Benjamin F. Lashar, who occupied an important position in street railway operations in this city, inheriting the interests of the grandfather, Conrad Lashar, who laid tracks in New York City as well as all the tracks in Bridgeport. Thomas Benton Lashar was educated in the public schools of Bridgeport and after completing the high school course entered the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University. Later he also studied in the School of Mines of Columbia University. For a time he was associated in business with his father, but his interests soon turned to other fields and in 1893 he became associated with the International Silver Company of Bridgeport, having charge of sales as well as occupying himself with problems of design. He continued in this connection for many years, contributing substantially to the development of the company both through his executive capacities and his technical ingenuity and skill. In addition to his regular duties he devoted much time to research in silver manufacture and metallurgy and placed to his credit important technical improvements which have proved very useful.

During the World War, Mr. Lashar assumed new responsibilities when he was sent to Washington, D. C., by the International Silver Company. He also represented a number of other manufacturers, serving in the Ordnance Department until after the war. In 1919, returning to the pursuits of peace, he joined the Associated Silver Company of Chicago and was a partner in this company until his retirement from active business in 1926. Here he repeated his earlier successes and enhanced the reputation built up through many years of distinguished attainment. Mr. Lashar also owned and operated the

Edward J. Ahern

International Polish Company of New York City, directing its affairs with sure hand. He also founded at this time a technical development in the Lashar-Dean Chemical Company of Chicago as well as the Lasharizing Process relating to chemical and metallurgical processes of silver. After his retirement he spent his summers in Fairfield and his winters in Florida, retaining many of the Connecticut contacts of earlier years. He was a member here of the Fairfield Country Club, the Beach Club and the Brooklawn Country Club. He was also a member of the Holland Society and Hardware Clubs of New York, and in Florida he was a member of the Mount Dora Yacht Club. A communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church, he was an active layman, serving both as a vestryman and as a member of the choir of his church, and contributing generously to the work of the church as well as various charitable interests. His personal tastes were simple and his favorite recreations centered in the life and sports of the out-of-doors and in his library where he passed many pleasant hours with favorite books.

On September 28, 1893, Thomas Benton Lashar married, in Bridgeport, Edith Holmes, daughter of Charles A. and Eliza J. (Terrell) Holmes. They became the parents of two sons: 1. Thomas Holmes, who married, in Mount Dora, Florida, Lavonne Laduc and has one son, George Holmes. 2. Conrad Hayden, who married Mary Jewell, October 31, 1930.

Mr. Lashar died at his winter home in Florida on December 23, 1930. In the business world his fine gifts were profoundly admired, but in equal measure his qualities of character and citizenship commanded the respect of all with whom he came in contact and in this State he is remembered today with warm regard.

CARLTON KELLOGG HEADY, M.D.—Engaged in the practice of his profession in Milford, Dr. Carlton Kellogg Heady is one of his community's leading physicians.

Dr. Heady was born May 24, 1890, in Milford, Connecticut, son of Dr. Elias Buell and Julia Virginia (Kellogg) Heady. His father, who was also a physician, a graduate of Yale Medical College, class of 1872, practiced his profession in Milford for more than thirty years. He served as coroner here, and was for many years health officer of Milford. He belonged to all the medical societies and was widely known and respected. He died December 16, 1909, in Milford. He and Julia Virginia (Kellogg) Heady were the parents of four children, two of whom survive: 1. Carlton Kellogg, of further mention herein. 2. Louis E., a member of the class of 1904 at Yale University, now a metallurgist.

In Milford's public schools and at Hopkins Grammar School, in New Haven, Carlton Kellogg Heady received his early education. Later he became a student at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, where he was graduated in 1913 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. Serving an interneship at Bridgeport Hospital for one year, he opened offices in Milford in 1914 and started a general practice of medicine, carrying on his labors in this connection down to the present.

Along with his regular practice, Dr. Heady has done considerable hospital work. He is attending surgeon at Milford Hospital, having held this post since the institution was first started. He is also health officer and belongs to the American Legion, the Fairfield County Medical Society, the New Haven County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society, the New Haven Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He is a Fellow of the national body.

Extensively interested in civic and social life, Dr. Heady is a member of the Milford Club and the Pine Orchard Club, as well as of the Free and Accepted Masons. During the World War, Dr. Heady enlisted in the Medical Corps of the United States Army. Commissioned a first lieutenant, he served abroad for one year, and received a wound stripe for being gassed in the course of active duty. In Milford he is a member of the Congregational Church. Many organizations and constructive projects have received his attention and help, and, moreover, have profited substantially from the work that he has done.

In October, 1923, Dr. Carlton Kellogg Heady married, in Milford, Connecticut, Jessie Linsley, daughter of Wilbury Linsley.

EDWARD J. AHERN—Born in Naugatuck, the career of Edward J. Ahern has wholly been identified with the newspaper and printing business in this city. Educated in the local grade and high schools, he became associated with the Naugatuck News Company, at the age of twenty, in its advertising department. He is now the secretary and treasurer of both the Naugatuck News Company and of the Naugatuck Printing Company.

Mr. Ahern is the son of Thomas W. and Nellie E. (Brennan) Ahern, born November 24, 1886. He is a member of the New England Daily Newspaper Association, and of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association. During 1911-12, he was borough clerk, and is notably active in municipal affairs. Fraternally, Mr. Ahern is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and is secretary of the Naugatuck Lodge of the order; and is a member of the Knights of Columbus, and the Independent Order of Red Men. Mr. Ahern was one of the organizers of the Rotary Club in Naugatuck, and served as its first secretary. He is a Democrat in politics; and is of the Roman Catholic faith.

On November 17, 1914, at Ridgefield, Connecticut, Edward J. Ahern married Marguerite Fogarty, and they are the parents of a son, James E.

ELLWOOD C. WEISE, M.D.—In his accomplishments, Dr. Ellwood C. Weise, of Bridgeport, is recognized as one of the outstanding dermatologists of the eastern part of the United States. He has specialized in this phase of medical science and syphilology for over a decade and, in conjunction with his local practice, also serves in an associate capacity for a number of leading medical institutions in this and neighboring States.

Dr. Weise was born in the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, July 18, 1896, the son of M. Herman and Anna E. (Schulze) Weise, who passed away in 1924. His father, now living in retirement, did experimental gun work during his active business life. During his childhood Dr. Weise was brought to Bridgeport by his parents, and received a general education in the public schools of this community. After completing this part of his studies he entered the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, from which he was graduated with a Doctor of Medicine degree in the class of 1920. The following year he served as an interne at the Bridgeport Hospital and, in 1922, was resident physician at the Bridgeport City Dispensary. In the meantime he had established himself in a general practice of medicine, which he conducted on this basis until 1925, when he began to specialize in dermatology and syphilology. Since that time he has enjoyed an unusually successful career and won the respect of many of the foremost medical leaders of the country. At the present time he is associate dermatologist at the Bridgeport Hospital, assistant attending dermatologist at the Vanderbilt Clinic at the Medical Center in New York City, instructor in dermatology at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University, and dermatologist at the Bridgeport City Dispensary. Dr. Weise is an ex-president of the section on dermatology and syphilology of the Connecticut State Medical Society, secretary of the Bridgeport Medical Association, a diplomate of the American Board of Dermatology and Syphilology, a Fellow of the American Medical Association, and a Fellow of the New York Academy of Medicine. In addition to these affiliations, he is honorary member of the Alpha Omega Alpha fraternity.

Dr. Weise maintains a summer home in Washington, Connecticut, where he has facilities for swimming, hunting, fishing and horseback riding. He has evinced a great interest in community affairs and has contributed substantially to the welfare of his surroundings as a physician and public-spirited citizen. During the World War he was a member of the Student Army Training Corps.

On December 15, 1921, in Bridgeport, Dr. Weise married Irene A. Schroeder, daughter of Charles Schroeder, and they are the parents of three children: 1. Ellwood C., Jr., born November 3, 1922. 2. Charles R., born March 4, 1924. 3. Kenneth Schroeder, born August 2, 1934.

BERKLEY MELVIN PARMELEE, M.D.—Listed among the outstanding authorities in Fairfield County on radium treatment and the science of X-Ray is the name of Dr. Berkley Melvin Parmelee, of Bridgeport, who has specialized in the aforementioned departments of medicine for the past fifteen years and now serves as radiologist for a number of the larger medical institutions of this section of the State. He is prominent and popular among his colleagues, and at present is president of the Bridgeport Medical Society, as well as a member of several other local, State and national professional organizations.

Dr. Parmelee was born in St. Albans, Vermont, April 18, 1895, the son of Abner A. and Gertrude A. (Foss) Parmelee. His father, who died in 1929, was a railroad engineer and at one time served as a representative in the Vermont State Assembly. Dr. Parmelee received a general education in the public schools of his native community and, after completing this part of his studies, matriculated at the University of Vermont, entering the College of Medicine in which he received his professional training, and from which he was graduated with a Doctor of Medicine degree in the class of 1918. He then served a year as an interne in the Bridgeport Hospital and, in 1919, established himself in Bridgeport. Two years later he became associated with Dr. W. A. LaField, X-Ray specialist, an association that was maintained until the latter's death in December, 1932. Since that time Dr. Parmelee has conducted this work alone and become radiologist for the Bridgeport Hospital, the Danbury Hospital and the New Milford Hospital, also being a former radiologist for the Stamford Hospital. In conjunction with his professional duties, he is clinical instructor at the Yale Medical School, and assistant radiologist at the New Haven Hospital. He is a member of the New England Roentgen Ray Society, the American Roentgen Ray Society, the Fairfield County Medical Society, for which he served as secretary from 1925 through 1929, and the Connecticut State Medical Society, and American Medical Association.

Socially, Dr. Parmelee belongs to the University Club, the Brooklawn Club; fraternizes with the local lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons, and worships at the Christ Episcopal Church in Stratford. During the World War he volunteered for service in the United States Army and was assigned to inactive duty in order that he might complete his interneship. He was honorably discharged in 1919. Through his military experience he is a member of the local post of the American Legion. Dr. Parmelee finds his principal diversions in sailing and boating.

On January 18, 1919, at Bridgeport, Dr. Parmelee married Grace D. Moore, a native of Stratford, and they are the parents of four children: 1. Elizabeth M. 2. Robert M. 3. Kenneth A. 4. Janet M.

D. HAYES MURPHY—President and treasurer of The Wiremold Company of Hartford, Connecticut, D. Hayes Murphy for many years has been prominently and actively identified in the electrical manufacturing industry. He was born November 24, 1877, at Providence, Rhode Island, a son of Daniel E. Murphy, who was General Agent of the Northwestern Life Insurance Company at Milwaukee, Wisconsin, and of Rosalie G. (Maher) Murphy, formerly of New Haven, Connecticut.

Mr. Murphy received a public and high school education in Milwaukee, supplemented by a course at the University of Wisconsin, graduating therefrom in 1900 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. He is a member of Sigma Chi fraternity and in his senior year held the position of commodore of the Wisconsin crew. Shortly after his collegiate career he became secretary and treasurer of the American Conduit Company of Milwaukee, remaining there until 1902; during 1902-1909 he was general manager in the Safety Amorite Company, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; from 1909 to 1910 he was secretary and treasurer, American Conduit Manufacturing Company, Pittsburgh; in 1912-1919 he acted as president and treasurer of the same company at Pittsburgh, and in 1919 became president and treasurer of The Wiremold Company at Hartford, which position he holds today. The company manufactures conduits for electric wires, the chief product being "Wiremold," a surface wiring system.

Mr. Murphy is a director of the Capitol National Bank and Trust Company, St. Francis Hospital and the Young Men's Christian Association, all of this city. In October, 1937, he was elected president of the National Electric Manufacturers' Association. He formerly served as vice-president in charge of the Supply Division of the Association, as well as a member of its board of governors.

Mr. Murphy is past president of The Wampanoag Country Club of West Hartford; member of the Connecticut Advisory Board of the Liberty Mutual Insurance Company, of Boston, Massachusetts; member of the Electrical Manufacturers' Club; National, State and local Manufacturers' associations; United States and local Chambers of Commerce. He is vice-president of the West Hartford Town Council and chairman of the West Hartford Town Building Committee. Politically he is a Republican and his favorite recreations are golf and yachting.

On January 20, 1904, D. Hayes Murphy married Jessica Esther Davis, daughter of Daniel J. and Eliza A. (Young) Davis, of Madison, Wisconsin, and they are the parents of five children: 1. Rosalie, who married A. J. Massey, of Glencoe, Illinois. 2. Jessica, who married Edward P. Jones, of West Hartford. 3. Marjorie. 4. John Davis. 5. Robert Henry.

HARRY KRASOW—United States Commissioner for the District of Connecticut, Harry Krasow is a well-known lawyer who has been engaged in the practice of his profession in Waterbury since being admitted to the bar on January 18, 1927. His formal education and technical training were obtained from local schools, Connecticut State College, and Georgetown University Law School, from which he was graduated with the class of 1926, a Bachelor of Laws. In 1930 he was appointed United States Commissioner of the District of Connecticut, at Waterbury, comprising the Fifth Congressional district.

Mr. Krasow was born in Russia, on Christmas Day, 1901, and was brought to the United States by his parents, Samuel and Annie Krasow, as a child of three years. His father has been a contractor in Waterbury since 1910, and the son, who is unmarried, continues to make his home with the older folk. Harry Krasow is a member of the Phi Epsilon Pi, Greek letter fraternity, and is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias. He is a Republican in his politics and vice-president of the New Haven County Young Men's Republican Club. In 1936 he served as president of the Waterbury Young Men's Republican Club. His office is at No. 36 North Main Street, Waterbury.

M. CLARK TERRILL—During his long and distinguished career which spans over twenty-nine years, M. Clark Terrill has risen from a comparatively modest position to become vice-president of the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company of Hartford, one of the largest organizations of its type in the country. On the basis of experience he is eminently qualified for this responsible post and enjoys the esteem and respect of his business colleagues.

Mr. Terrill was born at Newtown, Connecticut, November 4, 1888. His father, Mortimer B. Terrill, was a merchant. Though the family were in limited circumstances this did not prevent Mr. Terrill from fulfilling his ambition for a college education and after he completed his general education in the public schools of Newtown and Ansonia, he entered Yale University and worked his way through, being graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in the class of 1909. He was working in the dean's office at Yale when Colonel Charles W. Burpee, then director of the educational and publicity departments of the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company, met him. Colonel Burpee took an interest in the young man and hired him. Mr. Terrill began in a minor capacity, gradually worked his way to the post of field correspondent, became editor of the company house organ and after leaving this department was named agency secretary. In 1924, he was appointed assistant secretary of the company, and five years later elevated to the office of secretary. In February, 1930, he was elected second vice-president and in January, 1934, became vice-president and in 1935 director. Each of his undertakings has been marked for its efficiency and excellence and while he has proven himself an executive of exceptional capabilities he has not gained this reputation at the expense of friendship and respect on the part of his associates. To all he is a quiet, modest personality whose greatest desire is to help those who seek his counsel.

As a business leader in this city he is also a member of the board of directors of the Hartford National Bank and Trust Company. Socially he belongs to the University Club, the Hartford Club, the Yale Alumni Club, all of this city, the Yale Club of New York and the Manchester Country Club. In addition, he is a trustee of Kingswood School, a director of the Hartford Retreat and also a director and chairman of the finance committee of the Connecticut Institute for the Blind.

Mr. Terrill is a widower. He is the father of two children: 1. Robert Clark. 2. Richard Mommers.

AXEL P. BERGMAN, M.D.—As a physician specializing in X-ray work, Dr. Axel P. Bergman has come to occupy a position of honor and respect in medical circles in New Haven, where he has carried on his professional practice since just before the turn of the century.

Dr. Bergman was born May 2, 1869, in Stockholm, Sweden, son of Peter and Emma J. (Ludin) Bergman. The schools of Sweden provided his early education. After completing his work at the Stockholm College Preparatory School, he came to America in 1890, here matriculating at New York University, in 1892, and being graduated in 1895. Serving an interneship at Charity Hospital, in New York City, for two years, he started his active practice of medicine in Cooperstown, New York, there remaining for three years. Coming to New Haven in the autumn of 1899, he opened offices and here established his permanent practice. He has continued his work in this city down to the present, and since 1909 has been specializing in X-ray. Taking up the science of X-ray, then a very new development, with Charles Lester Leonard, in Philadelphia, he completed the course of study in six months, then began the actual practice of his specialty. He is the second physician in New Haven to do X-ray work, and is now the oldest man in point of service and seniority engaged in this branch of medicine in the city. He has his offices at No. 27 Elm Street.

In addition to his regular practice, he is a member of the New Haven City Medical Society, the New Haven County Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the American Medical Association. He also belongs to the American Roentgen Ray Society. Adding hospital service to his other work, Dr. Bergman is Roentgenologist at St. Raphael's Hospital, having held this position since 1910. Contributing also to the civic and social life of his city, he is particularly interested in fraternal affairs, belonging to both the Free and Accepted Masons and the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. In the

A. P. Blyman

Masonic order he holds the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, and he is also an initiate in the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He belongs likewise to the Woodmen of the World. Fond of stamp-collecting, he has many odd and valuable specimens of the philatelist's art.

Dr. Axel P. Bergman married Christine Scholz, who died on January 13, 1936. Their marriage took place in New Haven, on January 2, 1895. They had one daughter, Gertrude Pauline, who is now the wife of Dr. James N. Stanio, a dental surgeon.

HENRY K. W. WELCH—After thirty-eight years of association with the J. B. Williams Company, soap manufacturers, of Hartford, Henry K. W. Welch retired from the presidency of the organization in 1937. His contribution to the business life of his city and his times was a distinguished one while he was yet an official of the company, and his influence continues today as a powerful force for good in industrial and civic circles.

Mr. Welch was born December 4, 1865, in Hartford, Connecticut, son of Henry K. W. and Susan Leavitt (Goodwin) Welch, who were natives of Hartford County. His father was a lawyer who devoted his life to his profession, practicing in partnership with Judge Shipman. He died in 1870.

The son, Henry K. W. Welch, received his early education in the public schools, continuing as a student until he was sixteen years of age and then turning his attention to the problem of earning a livelihood. His first employment was as an office boy with the Travelers' Insurance Company, a position in which he was engaged for eighteen months. He then proceeded to New York City with the firm of Perkins, Goodwin and Company, entering the paper business in Duane Street and continuing his connection with that same house for fifteen years. In 1899 he returned to Hartford, becoming associated with the J. B. Williams Company, soap manufacturers, as secretary, and some time later being made vice-president and treasurer. For fifteen years he remained vice-president and treasurer of the Williams organization, succeeding Samuel H. Williams as president in 1935, when Mr. Williams became chairman of the board of directors. Literally working his way upward in the company "from office boy to president," he was head of the firm until May 29, 1937, when he retired from his more active business endeavors after thirty-eight years with the company.

In addition to his work with the J. B. Williams Company, Mr. Welch has had other prominent business connections. He also became vice-president and treasurer of the J. B. Williams Company of Canada, Limited, of Montreal, Province of Quebec. Canada, as well as a director of the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company, the Phoenix Fire Insurance Company, the Connecticut General Life Insurance Company, the Hartford-Connecticut Trust Company, the Hartford Courant Company, the Hartford Retreat, the Russell Manufacturing Company (of Middletown) and the Collins Company.

Wholly aside from his business activities, Mr. Welch is interested in civic and social affairs, and his voice is an important one in Connecticut and particularly in the Hartford district. He belongs to the Hartford Club, the Hartford Golf Club and the Wampanoag Country Club, Incorporated, as well as to the Twentieth Century Club. In spare time he enjoys golf and healthful outdoor recreations. Politically he is a Republican, and he is a member of the Congregational Church.

Henry K. W. Welch married, on June 30, 1909, Mary Hopkins Clark, daughter of Charles Hopkins Clark, who was for years editor of the Hartford "Courant." The following children were born to them: 1. Elinor Goodwin. 2. Sarah Pierrepont. 3. Mary Frances. 4. Caroline Hopkins. 5. Archibald Henry.

HON. JOHN C. BLACKALL—The service of the Hon. John C. Blackall to the State of Connecticut has been constructive and varied, particularly in the different public offices that he has held. He is now Insurance Commissioner of the State and a member of the State Employes' Pension Commission, and has been State Senator and a leader in Democratic politics, not only in Hartford, his home community, but in a much larger sphere.

Mr. Blackall was born March 29, 1892, in Waterbury, Connecticut, son of John and Margaret (Kelly) Blackall. Public and parochial schools and the high school of Waterbury provided him his early education, and in 1912 he was graduated from St. Thomas Seminary, in Hartford. Afterward he devoted two years to the study of philosophy at St. Bernard's College, in Rochester, New York. Then in 1914 he joined the staff of the Waterbury "American" as a reporter, remaining in that position until 1915. In that year he became a member of the reportorial staff of the Hartford "Times." Later he was promoted to the assistant city editorship, continuing with the "Times" until 1917, when he resigned in order to become private secretary to the Hon. Augustine Lonergan. He acted as Mr. Lonergan's secretary during two successive Congressional terms in Washington. In the last session, under the Wilson Administration, Mr. Blackall was assistant enrolling clerk of the House of Representatives, occupying that post from December, 1920, to March, 1921. The next development of his career was to become private secretary to Congressman Carl E. Mapes, of Michigan, with whom he continued until the adjournment of Congress in 1923.

Coming to Hartford, Mr. Blackall opened a law office in this city, having studied law at Georgetown University Law School, in Washington, D. C., while acting as secretary to Messrs. Lonergan and Mapes. From 1923, the year in which he was admitted to the bar of Connecticut, until July, 1928, he was engaged in the practice of law in association with E. W. Broder. Since that time he has been independently engaged in practice. His clientele has expanded with the years, as the public has had repeated proof of his ability. He prepares his cases with thoroughness, care and precision, and his accomplishments have been outstanding in character.

From an early period in his life Mr. Blackall has interested himself in politics as a Democrat. He was first elected to the State Senate of Connecticut in 1932, and he was the man chosen, while still serving his first term, to make the nominating speech for Senator Lonergan, who was seeking nomination to the United States Senate, at the Democratic State Convention in Eastern Point, Connecticut. In 1934, Mr. Blackall was re-elected to the State Senate, and was at that time Governor Wilbur Cross's candidate for Democratic leader in the upper house. He was also chairman of the insurance committee of the Senate. He was still serving his second term as State Senator when he was appointed to his present post—that of Insurance Commissioner of Connecticut. At the same time his work as a member of the State Employes' Pension Commission has been an important one, rich in its value to the people.

Taking an interest in fraternal affairs, he belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is also a member of the Hartford County Bar Association and the Connecticut State Bar Association. He has put forth every possible effort to serve well the people and institutions of Hartford, and this city, like the State itself, has richly benefited from his labors in its behalf.

On November 24, 1921, John C. Blackall married Mae A. Kelly, daughter of Michael C. and Bridget (McCarthy) Kelly, of Waterbury, Connecticut. The following children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Blackall: 1. Mary Frances, on November 17, 1922. 2. John C., Jr., born August 23, 1926. 3. Lewis Randall. 4. Joan Marie.

PROFESSOR HENRY AUGUSTUS PERKINS—Widely known as a physicist and writer on scientific topics, Professor Henry Augustus Perkins, of Hartford, heads the physics department at Trinity College, in this city. His service has also included work as acting president of the college through two different periods, and both education and science have been enriched by his accomplishments.

Professor Perkins was born November 14, 1873, in Hartford, Connecticut, son of Edward Henry and Mary Evelyn (Dwight) Perkins. His great-grandfather, Enoch Perkins, came to Connecticut in 1790. He was a prominent lawyer. The grandfather, Henry A. Perkins, turned his attention, on the contrary, to finance, and was for years president of the city's oldest bank, the Hartford National Bank. He died in 1873. The father, Edward Henry Perkins, who died in 1876, was for years a partner in the private bank known as the G. P. Bissel Bank. And his wife, the mother of Professor Perkins, gave much of her time, thought and material resources to charitable and cultural purposes. She died in 1917. Edward Henry and Mary Evelyn (Dwight) Perkins were the parents of two sons: 1. Professor Henry Augustus Perkins, of further mention. 2. Edward C. Perkins, who was graduated from Yale University, New Haven, in the class of 1898, and, choosing medicine for his career, devoted his efforts wholeheartedly for years to missionary work as head of a hospital at Kiukiang, China.

After completing his preliminary education in the Hartford public school system, Henry Augustus Perkins went to Yale University, taking his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1896. Three years later Columbia University conferred upon him the degrees of Master of Arts and of Electrical Engineering. For a year he was with the Hartford Electric Light Company as assistant to Professor William L. Robb in the engineering department, and then for two years he did graduate work in physics at Yale University. Since that time he has been continuously associated with Trinity College, having accepted the post of professor of physics at this institution in 1902. From time to time he added to his own education, studying physics at the Sorbonne and the College de France, in Paris, France, in 1908 and 1909 and again in 1921 and 1922. He received his degree of Doctor of Science from Trinity in 1920. For a time, after the retirement of President Flavel S. Luther, and prior to the advent of President Remsen B. Ogilby, in 1920, Professor Perkins acted as president of the institution. He had also served as acting president in 1915 and 1916.

Adding authorship to his other attainments, Professor Perkins became the writer of textbooks on "Thermodynamics" and "College Physics." He also produced a number of articles which appeared in the "Educational Review," the "Yale Review," the "North American Review" and the "American Mercury." He has contributed likewise to "Le Radium" and "The American Journal of Science." Various researches have accompanied his other undertakings, particularly in the velocity of magnetism, discontinuous discharges, metallic conductivity and the like. He has been president of the board of trustees of the American School for the Deaf since 1913.

Acting in many capacities that make him a man of civic usefulness, Professor Perkins has made his special contribution to a number of organizations and their work. He was president of the Hartford Park Board in 1919 and 1920. Today he is a director of the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company, a member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, and also a member of such groups as the American Physical Society, the Société Française de Physique, the American Alpine Club, the Explorers' Club, the Hartford Club, the University Club of Hartford, the Graduate Club of New Haven, and the Alpha Delta Phi fraternity. He is also a member of the honorary scholastic society of Phi Beta Kappa and of Sigma Xi. Politically he has been a consistent Republican. He is also a director of the Watkinson Library and the Hartford Public Library. In spare time he does as much welfare work as he is able to do, and his favorite forms of relaxation are travel, mountain climbing, painting, playing with an amateur orchestra, and philately.

On April 8, 1903, Professor Henry Augustus Perkins married Olga Flinch, of Copenhagen, Denmark, daughter of Alfred and Frederika (Boge) Flinch, of that city. The children of this marriage have been: 1. Henry Augustus, Jr., born June 17, 1904. 2. Evelyn Ingeborg, born June 26, 1908.

COLONEL EDWIN E. LAMB—As city controller, Colonel Edwin E. Lamb has rendered a notable service to his native City of Hartford. His career in business and the military has been a distinguished one, bringing him respect, confidence and honor, and his community and his contemporaries are the gainers from his civic activities.

Colonel Lamb was born September 6, 1870, in Hartford, Connecticut, son of Edwin John and Julia (Culver) Lamb. The Lamb family was established in this part of Connecticut at an early period. The paternal grandfather of Colonel Lamb was John Lamb, who settled in New London. He married Sarah Hope House, a native of Glastonbury, Hartford County, and was for years engaged in farming. His son, Edwin John Lamb, the father of Colonel Lamb, for many years conducted a bakery on Trumbull Street, in Hartford, an enterprise that had been started by his mother and had attained a country-wide reputation for "home baking." He developed it to larger proportions in his native City of Hartford, and came to be recognized as one of the city's leading business men. His wife, Julia (Culver) Lamb, was a native of Norwich.

Their son, Edwin E. Lamb, studied in the public schools of Hartford, his birthplace, attending high school until he was seventeen years of age, when he put aside his textbooks in order to enter the factory of the Pratt and Whitney Manufacturing Company, there learning the machinist's trade. He remained for four years in the employ of Pratt and Whitney, afterward carrying on his work in the trade in other connections for a number of years and also assisting in the conduct of his father's bakery. From 1902 to March 26, 1917, he was associated with the Underwood Typewriter Company, having charge of a department. On April 22, 1922, he was elected city controller, being re-elected in 1924 and again in 1926. Repeatedly re-elected to this post, he still effectively serves the community as organizer of its official financial life. The fact of his constant return to this position through the vote of his fellow townsmen is full evidence of his popularity and his commendable record in this public office.

Quite aside from his business and public activities, Colonel Lamb has also distinguished himself in military affairs. He was nineteen years old when he enlisted, on August 1, 1889, in Company A, First Infantry, Connecticut National Guard, as a musician. On July 14, 1892, he was advanced to a second lieutenancy, and a year later he became first lieutenant. In the Spanish-American War he was mustered into the United States service as first lieutenant of Company A, First Regiment of Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, on May 17, 1898, and on October 31, the same year, he was mustered out. On June 1, 1905, he was advanced to a captaincy, and on September 13, 1907, he became major of the First Infantry. On August 7, 1914, he was commissioned lieutenant colonel. On June 20, 1916, Colonel Lamb was called into the federal service for duty on the Mexican border at Nogales, Arizona, being mustered out of the Army at Hartford on October 30 of the same year. His World War record dates from March 26, 1917, when he was called into the United States service. He was on detached service at the School of Musketry, at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, from May 27, 1917, to August 1, the same year, and was drafted into the federal service as lieutenant colonel of the 102nd Infantry, Fifty-first Brigade, Twenty-sixth Division, on August 5, 1917, sailing for France on September 19. On January 1, 1918, he was appointed provost marshal on the Staff of General William R. Sample, commanding the Advance Section, S. O. S., American Expeditionary Forces, and he became colonel of infantry on May 29, 1919. On July 20 he arrived in the United States, receiving his honorable discharge on August 4. On May 23, 1920, he was appointed a colonel of infantry of the Officers' Reserve Corps, and was made recruiting officer for organizing the first infantry units of the new Connecticut National Guard. On August 27, 1920, he was appointed colonel of the Connecticut Regiment of Infantry, later designated as the 169th Regiment of Infantry, Connecticut National Guard. It was so styled on May 23, 1921, and on December 31, that year, Colonel Lamb retired from the National Guard.

While with the Army in France, in the spring of 1919, Colonel Lamb was a delegate to the convention in which the American Legion was organized in Paris, and on his return home he took part in the organization of the Rau-Locke Post of the Legion, of which he became provisional commander and later commander. In addition to his other activities, he is a member of Charles L. Burdette Camp, United Spanish War Veterans; of the Military Order of the World War; the Mexican Border Veterans Association; the Yankee Division Veteran Association; the Veteran Association of the First Regiment, Connecticut National Guard; the First Connecticut Volunteer Infantry Veteran Association; the Hartford Germania Guard Veteran Association; the Naval and Military Order of the Spanish War; and the Hartford Chapter Reserve Officers' Association. He spent thirty years and four days in continuous military service up to the date of his discharge, on August 4, 1919, at the end of the World War, and then organized the first unit of the new National Guard, which extended his actual time of service another two years and contributed in a large measure to the efficiency of the National Guard. His valuable service on foreign soil will long be remembered.

Fraternally Colonel Lamb is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Foresters of America. He is a member of the Hartford Saengerbund. He has concerned himself with a wide variety of public affairs, and has won a creditable place for himself among Hartford's citizens and officials.

On September 6, 1892, Colonel Lamb married (first) Anna L. Dietrich, of Hartford, Connecticut. Their three children were: 1. Estella Julia. 2. Edwin John, who volunteered for service in the Navy during the World War. 3. Charles Dietrich.

Mrs. Lamb died February 18, 1928. Colonel Lamb married (second) Florence R. Porter, of Hartford.

REV. JAMES T. BUTLER—As pastor of St. Joseph's Church, in Chester, the Rev. James T. Butler has performed a work of importance and true value. He is honored in his community, which has been the gainer from his contribution to the general spiritual life, and is loved by members of his own flock and a host of close friends and acquaintances.

Father Butler was born in Naugatuck, Connecticut, on October 13, 1887, son of Michael and Katherine (McCarthy) Butler. His father is now deceased.

The schools of Naugatuck, his birthplace, provided his early education, and, in 1911, he was graduated from high school there. In 1913, he finished his work at St. Thomas' Seminary, in Hartford, and, in 1920, he attended the Catholic University, in Washington, D. C. He was ordained on December 21, 1918, at the Cathedral in Hartford, Connecticut. His first assignment was as assistant pastor at St. Francis' Church, in Naugatuck. Next, he was assigned to the Church of St. Francis Xavier, in Waterbury, where he remained for thirteen years. While at Waterbury he was chaplain to both the Police and Fire Departments, as well as to the Knights of Columbus. His next assignment was to St. Mary's Church, in New London, where for four years he served as assistant pastor, and Administrator after the death of the Rev. Timothy Crowley, LL.D. In 1936, he was appointed pastor of St. Joseph's Church, in Chester, where he carries on his religious activity down to the time of writing.

He is a man of wide acquaintance in his community and as friend and priest is loved by members of all denominations and religious faiths in this region of Connecticut. While at school and college he was a "star" athlete, both in football and baseball. The same dynamic personality that carried him successfully through his academic days has been of use to him in his work with the Church, and the Chester community finds him one of its leading citizens and spiritual guides.

LEON PARKER BROADHURST—For the past fifty years, the name of Leon Parker Broadhurst, president, since 1915, of the Phoenix State Bank and Trust Company of Hartford, has been prominently identified with the social, civic and business life of this community, where, in addition to the aforementioned office, he is a director in a number of large industrial and financial institutions.

Mr. Broadhurst was born in South Manchester, Connecticut, June 14, 1871, the son of Thomas and Ellen M. (Lyman) Broadhurst. He received a general education in the public schools of Hartford, and after completing his high school studies began his career in banking, entering this work in 1887, as a mere lad of sixteen years. Since that time he has engaged in every phase of the profession and thus became eminently qualified for his present duties. He is universally admired and respected for his ability and accomplishments and held in the highest esteem by the business community, to whose development he has contributed so materially. In an advisory capacity he serves as a member of the board of directors for the Phoenix State Bank and Trust Company, C. H. Dexter and Sons, The Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company, the Sisson Drug Company, the Hartford Rayon Company, the Capital City Lumber Company, the National Fire Insurance Company, the Taber-Cadillac Corporation, the Cushman Chuck Works, the Atlantic Screw Works and the New Britain Machine Works.

Though business duties have claimed most of his attention, he has found time to devote to the social and civic life of his surroundings and has contributed substantially and usefully to the general advancement of the community, serving as a member of the Hartford City Council for four years and on the Board of Aldermen for two years. He belongs to the Hartford Club, the Wampanoag Golf Club, is a Republican in politics and worships at the Congregational Church.

In May, 1895, Mr. Broadhurst married Alice M. Best, of Hartford, and they are the parents of the following children: 1. Mrs. Katherine Ferguson. 2. Mrs. Nellie Armstrong. 3. Grace Alice.

JONATHAN GROUT—Long prominent in the affairs of Bridgeport, where he has actively interested himself in both professional and community life, Jonathan Grout is one of the city's leading lawyers. Since 1921 he has been a member of the widely-known law firm of Boardman and Grout, now Boardman, Grout, Swain & McCarthy.

Mr. Grout was born March 17, 1892, in Brooklyn, New York, son of Edward Marshall and Ida Ludovica (Loeschigk) Grout, and member of an old and honorable family. He is a direct descendant of Colonel Jonathan Grout, of Vermont, who was a member of the First United States Congress. Edward Marshall Grout, father of the present Jonathan Grout of Bridgeport, was for years a prominent figure in the life of New York City. He was president of the Borough of Brooklyn, one of the five boroughs making up Greater New York, and served for two years as New York's city comptroller. He and his wife, Ida Ludovica (Loeschigk) Grout, were both natives of New York State.

Jonathan Grout, their son, studied at the Prospect School, in Brooklyn, New York, later becoming a student at the Morristown School, Morristown, New Jersey, where he remained from 1905 to 1907, and at the Hotchkiss School, Lakeville, Connecticut, in 1908 and 1909. In 1913, he was graduated from Colgate University with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, after which he attended the New York Law School until 1915. During the years between 1913 and 1916, through most of which time he was a student, Mr. Grout was connected with the law office of Butcher, Tanner and Foster, in New York. His admittance to the New York State bar came in 1916, in the autumn of which year he came to Bridgeport, here being admitted to the Connecticut bar in 1917. From 1916 to 1920 he was with the law firm of Marsh, Stoddard and Day, in Bridgeport. Then he associated himself with Judge William B. Boardman in the firm known as Boardman and Grout, whose offices are at No. 955 Main Street, this city.

Along with his work as a lawyer, Mr. Grout has participated in public affairs to an unusual extent, wholeheartedly giving his time and energy in order to promote the general good. From 1921 to 1925, he served as judge of the Town Court of Fairfield, and he was also town counsel from 1925 to 1931. He is a director of the Fairfield Trust Company, McKesson and Robbins, Ltd., the Investors' Mortgage Company, and the Claude Neon Company of Connecticut, Inc. Politically, he supports the Republican Party and its policies and principles. He belongs to the Bridgeport Bar Association, of which he is past president, the Connecticut State Bar Association and the American Bar Association. His social affiliations are with the University Club, of Bridgeport; the Country Club, of Fairfield, and the Black Rock Yacht Club. He worships in the faith of St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church, of Bridgeport. When not too preoccupied with his professional or civic duties, Mr. Grout enjoys healthful outdoor life, being especially fond of sailing, golf and tennis.

Jonathan Grout married, on January 2, 1917, at Fairfield, Connecticut, Alice Bartram Pierce. They became the parents of the following children: 1. Jonathan De Witt. 2. Philip De Forest. 3. Thomas De Forest. The family residence is on Sachem Road, Brooklawn Park, Fairfield.

JOHN RUSSELL BARNES—Operating for many years one of the largest nurseries in New England, John Russell Barnes, of Wallingford, was one of the foremost men in his line of business, earning the respect and admiration of his fellow citizens in all departments of life. He was honored for his sincerity and unassuming character, and enjoyed the confidence of those with whom he dealt. His friends were numerous and loyal to him, cherishing his kindliness and generosity as traits to be treasured and emulated.

Mr. Barnes was born May 20, 1867, in Cheshire, Connecticut, son of James and Sarah Elizabeth (Pennewell) Barnes. He was descended from Thomas Barnes, a member of an ancient family of Surrey, England, who settled in New Haven about 1638. The Pennewells were a Delaware family. The public schools of Cheshire, his birthplace, provided John Russell Barnes his elementary education. Because of his father's premature death, his own independence and initiative were developed at an early age. He attended the Eastman Business College, in Poughkeepsie, New York, where he was graduated in 1884. Always interested in horticulture, he started nursery work and soon became the owner of his own enterprise, the Cheshire Nurseries. In 1900, he removed to Wallingford, here setting up the Barnes Brothers Nursery Company, the beginning of the present large establishment along the Colony Road. His nurseries have grown to be among the largest in New England, being especially well known for their fruit trees and fine ornamental stock.

Mr. Barnes at all times, along with his activities as president and treasurer of the Barnes Brothers Nursery Company, took a deep interest in civic and social affairs. He was a member of Wallingford's Park Commission, a council member of the Wallingford Historical Society, a director of the In Memoriam Cemetery Association and the Center Street Cemetery Association, and a member of the American Association of Nurserymen, the New England Nurserymen's Association, of which he served as president, and of many other horticultural organizations. He belonged also to the Rotary Club of Wallingford, being one of its charter members, and was a trustee of the Congregational Church. He was a director of the Walker-Rackliff Company of New Haven and the Puritan Bank and Trust Company of Meriden. He was constantly interested in the advancement of horticulture and always a student of improved methods and new plants.

On June 14, 1905, at Wallingford, Connecticut, John Russell Barnes married Grace Paddock, daughter of Joel Hall and Delaphine (Hall) Paddock, and a direct descendant of several of the founders of the Town of Wallingford. They had three children: 1. Helen Elizabeth, born May 8, 1906. 2. Delaphine Hall, born November 21, 1907. 3. Joel Paddock, born December 27, 1908.

The death of John Russell Barnes occurred May 5, 1929, in Wallingford, Connecticut, and was an occasion of profound sorrow in the community which he had so long served. His position was one of high standing, and the influence of his life will be felt for years to come as a continuing force for good. He personified those sterling qualities which have made the New England character outstanding.

JOSEPH COOPER WIDMER—The death of Joseph Cooper Widmer, in 1933, brought to an end a long and useful career, which reflected honor upon himself personally and upon the industry and corporations with which he was identified.

Mr. Widmer was a native of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, born September 23, 1858, son of Charles and Sarah (Satcher) Widmer. His father, of Swiss birth, lived at Locle, Switzerland, prior to his migration to the United States. The son was given the advantages of a sound preliminary education, but it was upon his own initiative and work that he went to the University of Pennsylvania. He left college to engage in the tobacco business, and Joseph Cooper Widmer remained down through the years connected with this industry, in which he became a familiar figure throughout the country. After two years in Philadelphia, he made his headquarters for years at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, after which he became manager of the Continental Tobacco Works, the Louisville, Kentucky, branch of the American Tobacco Company.

Of his career from this time on, a biographer has written:

> He was well qualified by experience and ability for this position, and his successful record brought him prompt advancement within his company's organization. The large tobacco companies were now entering upon a remarkable period of development, offering ample scope to men of enterprise and vision. Mr. Widmer was not slow to make his influence felt in the American Tobacco Company and in 1901 he came to New York, where his talents were employed in the purchasing and manufacturing departments of his company and its subsidiaries. Among the most important of these allied corporations were the American Cigar Company and the Amsterdam Supply Company. In 1911, when the United States Supreme Court handed down a decree, holding the American Tobacco Company to be a combination in restraint of trade within the meaning of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, the Liggett and Myers Tobacco Company was formed to purchase factories, brands and business from the original corporation. Mr. Widmer became an original member of the board of directors of the new company and was appointed director of purchases of the entire organization. He served in this capacity with notable fidelity and efficiency until his death, meeting every duty devolving upon him with complete success and playing a major part in shaping policies of the corporation. He became one of the industry's best known executives and enjoyed the respect of tobacco men throughout the world.

Mr. Widmer was also a director of the Manufacturers Trust Company for a number of years. He was a member of the Hudson River Country Club, the Wykagyl Country Club and the Manhattan Club and was an active Episcopal layman. Mr. Widmer was very much interested in the Red Cross Society and the Boy Scouts of America, contributing generously to their work and to various other civic and benevolent causes. His favorite recreation was golf.

On December 4, 1884, at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Joseph Cooper Widmer married Kate Webb, daughter of Major Joseph P. Webb, M.D., a Pittsburgh physician, and Amelia (Wells) Webb. They became the parents of two children: 1. George Ellis, who married Beth Elsie Kemble, daughter of Edward Windsor Kemble, the well-known illustrator, cartoonist and author. They have one son, Kemble, a graduate of Lehigh University, now at Stanford University studying geology. 2. Gertrude, who was killed in a boat accident in 1929. She had served as a Red Cross aid during the World War from 1916 until February, 1918.

Mr. Widmer died at New York City on January 3, 1933, following an illness of a few months. His death brought to its close a long and distinguished career, which reflected honor upon himself personally, upon his company and upon the industry in which he was active for so many years.

In the spring of 1933, Mrs. Widmer came to Connecticut settling at Ridgefield, where she has since made her home. Mrs. Widmer is a direct descendant of John Webster, fifth governor of Connecticut, and of Governor Thomas Welles; is a member of the Colonial Dames, Founders of Hartford, the Pilgrim Society, and Mary Washington Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution.

PAOLINO GERLI—Among the many people who have been attracted to Ridgefield, Connecticut, as a place of residence, is Paolino Gerli, who since 1928 has maintained an estate upon the Branchville Road, where he lives for the major part of the year. He is engaged in the silk business under his own name and is an extensive importer of raw silks, with headquarters in New York City. Mr. Gerli was born in Italy, on October 20, 1890, son of Francis and Amalia (DePauliny) Gerli, and came to the United States in 1905, settling in New York. He was educated in his native land and in the United States.

In 1910, Paolino Gerli married Pearl Egan, and they are the parents of two children: 1. Pauline, graduate from the Spence School, now Mrs. John McN. Sullivan. 2. Francis, graduate from Georgetown University, Washington, D. C., and Fordham Law School, who is now practicing in New York.

CHARLES WILLIAM WEITZEL—For the past decade Charles William Weitzel has engaged in the plumbing and heating contracting business in the Town of Ridgefield, and in this capacity has come to represent some of the largest and most prominent plumbing accessory firms in the nation, as well as attaining a success that has won him the esteem and success of his fellow citizens. Prior to establishing himself here he gained wide and varied experience in the trade in New York City and later in Wilton, where he operated for six years. In his civic activities he has taken a keen interest in the affairs of his surroundings, and now holds membership in several of the leading fraternal organizations of this vicinity.

John Weitzel, the founder of this family in America, was born in Oberengleheim, Germany, came to the United States of America on November 5, 1886, and settled in New York City. He married Mary Haller, who was born in Württemberg, Germany, and came to America July 28, 1884. They were the parents of three children:

1. Conrad Weitzel, born January 15, 1890, adopted 1893, married Edna George, February 11, 1917; no children.

2. John Weitzel, Jr., born June 30, 1893, married July 30, 1923, Amanda Lindeman, and has two children, Charlotte and Florence.

3. Charles William Weitzel, of whom further.

Charles William Weitzel was born in New York City on April 20, 1895, received a general education in the public schools of this city. After completing his studies, he secured a position with the New York firm of Ozab and Miller, and began to acquire a training and experience in the plumbing and heating business that was to equip him eminently for the work he has since undertaken. He remained with this organization for about nine years and then established himself in a plumbing and heating contracting business in Wilton, continuing with success from 1920 to 1926. During the latter year he removed to Ridgefield, where he has since continued his activities in this work and now represents some of the leading plumbing accessory firms of the country, including the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company, the Kohler Company, the Crane Company, and the Briggstell. He is also agent for the Bethlehem Doe Oil Burner, and serves as representative of several other products of a kindred nature. His prominence in the trade is evident from the important positions he has been chosen to fill by his colleagues. He is a member and director of the State Association of Master Plumbers, belongs to the National Association of Master Plumbers, the Fairfield County Association of Master Plumbers and the Norwalk Association of Master Plumbers. In his social affiliations he belongs to the Jerusalem Lodge, No. 49, of the Free and Accepted Masons, for which he serves as Senior Warden, and also fraternizes with the local lodge of the Improved Order of Red Men. In his religious convictions he worships at the Congregational Church.

On June 3, 1916, Mr. Weitzel married Elizabeth Emma Becker, daughter of Charles and Emily (Baker) Becker. She is a very active figure in the social and civic affairs in Ridgefield, serving as a member of the Parent-Teachers Association, treasurer of the Women's Auxiliary of the Master Plumbers Association, former president of the Connecticut State Plumbers Associates, and being a member of the Order of the Eastern Star. She also belongs to the Grange, the League of Women Voters and the Women's Republican Club. Mr. and Mrs. Weitzel are the parents of four children: 1. Elizabeth H., born January 2, 1917. 2. Mary Lillian, born October 21, 1918. 3. Charles William, Jr., born December 22, 1922. 4. Helen Emiley, born June 20, 1929.

LOUIS PATRICK FITZGERALD—Historians and biographers have repeatedly pointed out that the Irish come to the United States with ambitions and abilities, the will to work and an adaptability to circumstances and conditions, that enable them to forge ahead to places of importance in all walks of life. They seem also to be able to pass this rich heritage on to their children. The career of Louis Patrick Fitzgerald of Rockville is an illustration of these facts. He was born in South Manchester, Connecticut, March 9, 1894, son of John and Nora (Shea) Fitzgerald, both natives of Ireland who came to America in their youth and married in their adopted country. The mother is deceased, but John Fitzgerald still lives in Manchester.

Louis Patrick Fitzgerald was not born to ease or wealth and, as a small boy shined shoes and did odd jobs while he was attending the schools of his birthplace. Then he went to work in the Cheney Mills, the Roger Paper Mill and other plants to gain a livelihood. His abilities ran along mechanical lines, from the first, although he early manifested a gift for salesmanship which has stood him in good stead in later years. He secured employment driving a motor truck, and was not content until he knew how, and why, automotive vehicles were made. Eventually he borrowed tools and other equipment and opened a garage in Manchester, starting in 1916. A good business was being developed, even though he had to learn how to make repairs as he went along, but then came the World War, and Mr. Fitzgerald entered the Army service as a member of the Sixth Battery. When he received his honorable discharge some months after the Armistice, it was with the rank of corporal and an extensive knowledge of mechanics as regards motor equipment.

Upon his return to civilian life, Mr. Fitzgerald was in poor health for a year. When able to take up business activities once more, be became a salesman for Ford automobiles, continuing as such for six years. In 1926, he secured the Ford Agency for Rockville, which has become an outstanding factor in the motor circles of the city during the past ten years. He operates under the name of the L. P. Fitzgerald Company, of which he is the sole owner. From the sales of a few cars in the first year the increase of business has been many-fold, despite the depression which has held sway in the country during two-thirds of the decade he has been operating. What Mr. Fitzgerald has achieved has been the result of his own indefatigable energies, the quality of his commercial acumen, and a courageous enterprise which brooks no failures.

FRANK TOWNSEND HUTCHENS—For many years Frank Townsend Hutchens was a distinguished figure in American art. The range and scope of his talents are reflected in scores of canvases which have won him international recognition and many of which are hung in notable collections, both public and private, throughout the country.

Mr. Hutchens, who came of old American stock, was born June 7, 1869, at Canandaigua, New York, a son of Hiram L. and Mary Abigail (Townsend) Hutchens. Educated in local schools, including Canandaigua Academy, he early manifested his exceptional gift for art and came to New York City, where he studied at the Art Students' League. Subsequently he went to Paris, where he was a student in the Academy Colarossi, the Academy Julian and at the Beaux Arts. At the former institution he was awarded the silver medal. From the beginning of his career as an independent artist his powers developed steadily. Whether in the portraiture for which he was celebrated, his Tunisian and North African scenes, his canvases of Taos and the Southwest, his portrayal of the Connecticut countryside, or his more abstract paintings, his technical skill and felicity of vision have won him the respect of the world of art. Mr. Hutchens exhibited abroad at the Royal Academy of London, the Paris Salon, the Amsterdam International Exposition, and in this country at the National Academy of Design (New York), the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts, the Art Institute of Chicago, the Corcoran Gallery at Washington, D. C., the Allied Artists of America, the New York Water Color Club, the American Water Color Society, the Salmagundi Club, and others. His paintings are represented in the permanent collections of the Delgado Museum at New Orleans, the Syracuse Museum of the Fine Arts, the Rochester Memorial Art Gallery, the High Museum at Atlanta, the Milwaukee Art Institute, the State Capitols at Tallahassee, Florida, and Albany, New York, the Toledo Museum, the Herron Art Institute in Indianapolis, the Military Academy at West Point, the Erie Art Museum, Erie, Pennsylvania, the Contemporary Exhibition at Baltimore, the Museum at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, and in many important private collections. Among his best known works are the "Old Cafe Sidi-Bou-Said," "The Spahi," "Bab Menara," "Tunis Market," "Returning Home," "Autumn," "Betrayal of Christ"; his more recent, "The Covered Wagon," "Winter in Taos," "Boats at St. Tropez," "Mosque in Tunis," "Tayeb," "Elizabeth Shackleton's Garden," "Tulips," and "May Time, Silvermine"; and his portraits of many distinguished people, including his twenty-five portraits in oil of past presidents of the Florida Senate, in the Senate Chambers of the Capitol at Tallahassee, and his portrait of Governor Doyle E. Carlton, of Florida; Governor (Dave) Sholtz and Mrs. Sholtz, also of Florida; his portraits of Patrick J. Hurley, former Secretary of War, and Mrs. Hurley; of United States Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, of Florida; United States Senator James W. Wadsworth, of New York; General Peyton C. March, General Edgar S. Dudley (in the Museum at West Point, New York), John N. Willys, Ambassador to Poland, and others.

Mr. Hutchens was a member of the Salmagundi Club of New York, the American Water Color Society, the Allied Artists of America; a life member of the Art Students' League; a member of the American Art Association of Paris, the Art Association of New Orleans, the Art Society of St. Petersburg, the Taos Society of Artists, the Silvermine Guild of Artists, the Society of the Four Arts at Palm Beach, and the National Arts Club of New York. He conducted the Hutchens Summer Art School at Unadilla Forks, New York, for ten years; served during the World War as a member of the Gallaher Machine Gun Battery of Norwalk and, in addition to his other connections, was a director of Goodwill Industries, in Fairfield County. Mr. Hutchens, who was a member of the Silvermine colony at Norwalk, also had a winter home at "Goodwood," Tallahassee, Florida, and traveled extensively, both in the United States and abroad. He was affiliated with the Masonic Order, was a Republican in politics, a member of the Presbyterian Church, and found his principal recreation, outside the field of art, in golf and fishing.

On November 1, 1900, he married Mabel Reynolds, of Lockport, New York. She died October 5, 1932.

Mr. Hutchens passed away on February 6, 1937, the day after he had completed the portrait of Senator D. Stuart Gillis, new president of the Senate of Florida. He is survived by one brother, Floyd Grant, and one sister, Mrs. Clara Amanda Scott.

JOHN CAVANAGH—The Crofut & Knapp Company, of which John Cavanagh is now president, has occupied for many years a dominant position in the hat industry and its name is synonomous with the finest productive skill of American hatters. It was founded in 1858, more than three-quarters of a century ago, by James H. Knapp and is today one of the oldest organizations in America engaged in the manufacture of hats for men.

James H. Knapp was one of the pioneers in the industry and for a number of years had been engaged in the business as a member of the firms of Gillane, French & Knapp, and Knapp & French. Shortly after starting out for himself he selected Andrew J. Crofut as an associate. Mr. Crofut was experienced in the art of stiffening hats and at that time a leader in this important branch of the trade. In the latter part of 1860 the Crofut & Knapp shop made and put on the market the first derby hat manufactured in America, one of the many progressive innovations featuring the company's history. In the evolution of manufacturing practice as well as in the creation of styles, the Crofut & Knapp organization has been in the lead since its inception. A number of men who later became large factors in the trade served their apprenticeship in the Crofut & Knapp factory, and under the instruction of James H. Knapp laid the foundation of their future success. Some of them are: John B. Stetson; Fletcher H. Montgomery, president of the Knox Hat Manufacturing Company, who came in as a boy and eventually succeeded William W. Lester as secretary and treasurer; and other leaders in the industry. The executives of the present company without exception are men who have risen from the ranks of the employees. John Cavanagh, president, and Philip N. Knapp, chairman of the board, worked at the bench. Robert A. Holmes and Thomas Johnstone came from the sales force, and J. L. O'Brien, whose recent death depletes the official roster, were master hands at every detail of manufacturing. J. R. Wilmot and F. H. James were members of the office and accounting departments. Many of the directors have served the company since boyhood.

In 1908, the Crofut & Knapp Company added straw hats to the products hitherto produced. Silk hats appeared in the line for the first time in 1917 and caps in 1919. Meanwhile the increasing business in straw and silk sailor hats for women made it a logical move to add a department for the manufacture of high-class sport and tailored hats for women, and these have been a feature of the company's production since 1919. Its activities thus embrace almost all phases of the hat industry, and every line produced has met the familiar standards of excellence long associated with the company's name.

In keeping with the prestige of the company and the vast extent of its organization, three new factories were erected at East Norwalk in 1923 on the line of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad. They embrace operations from the cutting of the fur to the complete hats. The edifices which have housed the business since that time are the last word in factory construction, and all equipment is similarly modern and of the most effective type. Twenty-three hundred skilled workmen, selected for their ability to make hats in accordance with the company's high standards, are employed.

The career of John Cavanagh, president of the Crofut & Knapp Company, reflects the quality of his native endowments and the happy opportunity provided for their use during his long association with the organization which he heads. Joining the company as a boy with some understanding of the fundamentals of hatting, he perfected his knowledge in every branch of hat manufacture during an immensely thorough course of training under the founder, James H. Knapp. Gradually, as he demonstrated his capacities, he was given larger and larger responsibilities, rising within the organization to foreman, superintendent, general manager and finally to the presidency.

John Cavanagh was born in Norwalk, Connecticut, on January 16, 1864, a son of Lawrence and Margaret (Murphy) Cavanagh. He is a grandson of Thomas Cavanagh, who was born in Ballacedere, County Sligo, Ireland, and learned the dry goods business there under his father, who was an importer. He married a member of the Dunbar family and later came to the United States, where he established a dry goods business in New Haven, Connecticut. This enterprise he continued until within a few years of his death. Lawrence Cavanagh, his son, was also born in Ballacedere, County Sligo, Ireland, and at the age of fifteen left his native land, making his way to the Isthmus of Panama. From that country he came to New Haven, joining his parents there. He subsequently entered the employ of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, and for half a century occupied responsible positions with this road. His wife, Margaret (Murphy) Cavanagh, was born in Tipperary, Ireland.

John Cavanagh spent his boyhood in Norwalk, receiving his education in local public schools. In his youth he joined the Crofut and Knapp organization and soon advanced from minor positions to offices of great responsibility and trust. In 1910 he was made general manager of the company; in 1919 was elected vice-president; and eventually, after many years of service, succeeded to the presidency of the organization. Under his leadership much of the company's recent progress has taken place. He is not only an able executive but possesses an unsurpassed knowledge of manufacturing and has made important technical contributions which have helped to maintain the high position of his company. Chief among these is the new process of hat manufacture which he invented and perfected in 1913 and which has since become universally known as the Cavanagh Edge Process. Mr. Cavanagh is also chairman of the board of Dobbs & Company, New York City hatters, and directs the coalesced interests of the Dobbs and Crofut & Knapp organizations. In addition to these connections, he is a director of the American Safety Razor Corporation; president and director of John Cavanagh, Limited; a director of the Central Fairfield Trust Company; and president of the Hat Corporation of America. His services to these organizations have been highly valued by his associates and his opinions on all matters connected with their operation are received with profound respect.

Despite the pressure of his business interests, Mr. Cavanagh has found time to be active in many civic connections and has had a prominent part in promoting the progress of the Norwalk communities. He was mayor of the old cities of Norwalk and South Norwalk several decades ago and was instrumental in the success of the movement which resulted in their consolidation in 1913. He has been president of the Chamber of Commerce, one of the principal leaders in the development of Norwalk Hospital and a generous supporter of many other community institutions and movements, through which his public spirit has made itself felt as an effective force in the city. Mr. Cavanagh is also a member of the Catholic Clubs of New York and Norwalk, the South Norwalk Club, the Norwalk Club, the Shorehaven Ox Ridge Hunt Club, the Fairfield County Hunt Club and the Woodway Golf Club.

He married Agnes Garvan, daughter of the late Hon. Patrick Garvan, of Hartford, and they are the parents of three children: John Garvan, Lawrence Dunbar and Carroll John.

HAROLD E. FINCH—For generations the name of Finch has occupied a prominent place in the social, civic and business life of Fairfield County, and today its fame is being perpetuated by Harold E. Finch, of Ridgefield, where he engages in the real estate business, is a public official and ranks among the most influential leaders of the local Republican organization.

Mr. Finch, a native of Ridgefield, was born here August 17, 1886, the son of John H. and Susie (Carruthers) Finch, also the parents of the following children: 1. Edith (deceased), the late wife of Raymond McLean, and mother of two children, Donald and Raymond. 2. Hattie, who is married to George Underhill, and they have three children: Ruth, Charles and George. 3. Irma, now Mrs. Charles E. Benjamin, and the mother of one son, Richard. 4. Alma, now Mrs. Otto Abbott.

Mr. Finch's father, John H. Finch, was born in Ridgefield, August 10, 1860, received a general education in the district schools, later learned the painter's trade, and then established a paint shop in Ridgefield, which he was to operate for over half a century. He retired from this venture about a decade ago, and since that time has been inactive save for a period of about one year, when he aided his son in the operation of the first bus line between Ridgefield and Danbury. Throughout his life he has been active in community affairs. He is listed as a charter member of the Ridgefield Fire Company, a member of the Order of United American Mechanics, and worships at the Methodist Church. On October 13, 1895, at Brooklyn, New York, he married Susie Carruthers.

The family, of English origin, traces its American ancestry to early colonial times. The first descendant on record is Ichabod Finch, native of Fairfield County and farmer in Wilton. His son, William Finch, also a Wilton farmer, was the father of Judge William J. Finch and Nelson Finch, grandfather of Harold E. Finch. Judge William J. Finch was, without reservation, the most influential leader of his generation in this section of the State where, in addition to his judicial duties, he served as a member of numerous important public bodies, including the General Assembly and also engaged in farming. His brother, Nelson Finch, a native of Wilton, engaged in the mercantile business and died here about 1861. He married Harriett M. Dann, whose ancestors served with the American forces during the Revolutionary War.

After a general education in the public schools and under the private tutorship of Mr. Nash in Ridgefield, Mr. Finch enrolled at Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, New York, from which he was graduated as a designer of interior decoration. He began his career as a designer in New York City and two years later became sales manager for a firm here, a capacity in which he was to serve for various organizations during the next decade and a half. In 1928, he returned to Ridgefield and purchased the United Cigar Agency and Novelty Store, as well as establishing himself in a real estate business which he still conducts with success.

Since his return to this community he has been actively identified with civic and political affairs. In this connection he has been chairman of the Republican Town Committee for the past eight years, is a former clerk of the Probation Court, and during the last four and a half years has served as probation officer.

Mr. Finch has been equally prominent socially, holding membership in a number of the leading organizations of this district, including the Silver Spring Country Club, the Salem Skeet Club, of Salem, New York, the Ridgefield Lions Club and the Ridgefield Fish and Game Association. He also belongs to the Ridgefield Fire Company, fraternizes with Jerusalem Lodge, No. 49, of the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he is also a member of the Chapter of Royal Arch Masons at Danbury, and worships at the Methodist Church.

On September 6, 1913, at New York City, Harold E. Finch married Alice Jane Harding, and they are the parents of the following children: 1. Alice J., born September 9, 1914. 2. Louis John, born July 17, 1916. 3. Winifred F., born January 19, 1919. 4. Katharine Ann, born January 1, 1924.

WILLIAM PINCHBECK, Jr.—The family of Pinchbeck have for years figured prominently in Connecticut affairs. William Pinchbeck, Jr., was born in Yorkshire, England, and when a child of about eight years of age, he was brought to America by his parents, William Pinchbeck, Sr., and his wife. Coming to the United States, William Pinchbeck, Sr., spent about four years in New York City, then removed to South Salem, New York, and took up farming. Here the son received his early education in the Boutonville public school, afterward being employed on his father's farm. When he was twelve years old he worked on other farms, as well as with a number of greenhouses, learning the nursery business. In 1903, he established himself in business on about five acres of ground. Gradually he increased the acreage until his holdings included 120 acres, conducting a general greenhouse business under his own name until, in 1929, he admitted his sons to the business and incorporated it as Pinchbeck Brothers, Inc.

At that juncture the sons took active control of the enterprise. The greenhouses are situated on one of Ridgefield's historic spots, and there are also greenhouses of William Pinchbeck, Inc., at Guilford. The greenhouse, completed August 1, 1929, is the largest in the world, being 81 feet wide and 1200 feet long, with about 86 acres planted entirely with roses for the cut flower market and shipped to all flower markets in the East: fifteen hundred roses a year. Another greenhouse, built in 1937, is 81 feet wide and 600 feet long, and is devoted to production of gardenias.

William Pinchbeck, Jr., married Ida Green, daughter of Charles Green, of Katonah, New York. They are the parents of three children: 1. Joseph, who manages the greenhouses at Ridgefield; he married Effie Washburn, and they have two children, Howard and Sylvia. 2. William E., who manages the Guilford greenhouses; he married Harriet Washburn, and they have three children, Anne, William Washburn and Harriet Faye. 3. Frank, who married Helen Curey; they have two children, Franklin and Peggy.

CHARLES ARTHUR BRECK, M.D.—In 1932, Dr. Charles Arthur Breck began the practice of medicine at Wallingford. He took up his professional duties in this community after making a distinguished record at Yale Medical School and during the intervening years has firmly established his reputation.

Dr. Breck was born at Ada, Ohio, on November 13, 1904, a son of Charles W. and Bertha D. Breck. His father is a dentist at Ada and has been a prominent figure in its life, serving, in addition to his professional connections, as president of the Building and Loan Association and as a member of the local School Board.

Charles Arthur Breck received his preliminary education in the public schools of his birthplace and after completing the high school course entered Ohio Northern University, where he was a student from 1919 to 1921. He became a member of the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity at that university and a member of the Varsity "N" Association, composed of those who have won their letter in athletics. In 1922, Dr. Breck entered Yale College and in 1926, in preparation for his chosen career, became a student in Yale Medical School, where he continued until 1930. He served as instructor in anatomy at that institution in 1929-30, and in the latter year was also editor of the "Yale Journal of Biology and Medicine." After taking his medical degree, Dr. Breck completed his hospital training and in 1932 settled in Wallingford, where his activities have since centered. His thorough preparations for his career have had their part in his growing practice, and the reputation which he has won reflects the qualifications which he brings to his professional duties.

Dr. Breck is attending physician at New Haven Hospital and Dispensary and continues his connection with Yale Medical School as a clinical instructor. He is a member of the New Haven City and County Medical Societies. While at Yale he was elected to the honorary fraternity, Sigma Xi; the honorary medical fraternity, Alpha Omega Alpha, of which he was secretary; the Nu Sigma Nu fraternity, in which he served as president and treasurer of the Yale Medical School Chapter; and the Nathan Smith Club, an historical organization. Dr. Breck is also a member of the Wallingford Country Club, the Wallingford Club and the Graduates Club of New Haven. He is a communicant of the Presbyterian Church.

On June 24, 1933, at Hartford, Connecticut, he married Alicia Hadfield, daughter of Seth and Mary P. Hadfield. Mrs. Breck is a graduate of Oxford School, Hartford, and Dana Hall. Dr. and Mrs. Breck have two daughters: 1. Mary Alicia, born May 24, 1934. 2. Susan Hadfield, born March 23, 1937.

HARVEY B. LOWN—Engaged in a general insurance business, with offices on Main Street, Ridgefield, Harvey B. Lown is widely known in this region of Connecticut.

Mr. Lown was born October 26, 1899, at Wilton, Connecticut, son of Charles W. and Gertrude (Bishop) Lown, born in Schoharie County, New York, coming to Connecticut about 1887, settling in Danbury and later moving to Wilton, Connecticut. He was a farmer until 1912, when he became manager of estates in this section. He has a brother, Frank E. Lown, who lives in New Canaan, and a sister, Mabel Lown, now Mrs. Shook, of Massachusetts.

In the public schools of Ridgefield, Harvey B. Lown received his early education, and after completing his high school studies he enlisted in the United States Navy, serving until 1920, when he was discharged as a first-class storekeeper. Going to work at once for the D. F. Bedient Company, in Ridgefield, he was a bookkeeper in that organization until, in 1922, he went with George G. Scott as manager of his business agency and painting and contracting business. Until January, 1927, he continued in that capacity, then purchased the insurance agency from Mr. Scott. Since that time he has operated this agency under his own name, more recently adding real estate services to his other work. He handles a general line of insurance and trades in a wide variety of business and residential properties.

To his business endeavors Mr. Lown has added public service of significance. In 1933 and again in 1935 he was a member of the Connecticut General Assembly, serving as a representative in that body. He was elected on the Republican ticket, and at the 1935 session was chairman of the committee on banks and a member of the finance committee. In 1933 he was a member of the insurance committee and the fish and game committee. Since 1927 he has continuously been Ridgefield's tax collector, and since November, 1928, he has been a member of the town committee. He belongs to St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church, of Ridgefield, and to Jerusalem Lodge No. 49 of the Free and Accepted Masons and Pilgrim Lodge No. 46 of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

In 1929, Harvey B. Lown married Elizabeth M. O'Shea, and they reside in Ridgefield.

GEORGE EUGENE CRAWFORD—As president of the Crawford Laundry Company, George E. Crawford has made a valuable contribution to the business life of Bridgeport, where his efforts have been many-sided and constructive and their results beneficial.

Mr. Crawford was born July 15, 1867, in Wales, Massachusetts, son of Ossian and Levinia (Shepherd) Crawford, both representatives of old Massachusetts families. The Crawfords came originally from Scotland to this country, settling in Connecticut in the forepart of the eighteenth century. The first of the Crawford line in America are buried at Union, Connecticut. The Shepherds are of English descent. Ossian Crawford, father of George E. Crawford, was a builder in Wales, Massachusetts.

The public schools of that Massachusetts community, where he was born, provided George E. Crawford's earliest formal education. He also attended school at Brimfield, Massachusetts, being graduated from high school there. In 1888 he came to Bridgeport, having meanwhile been employed in New Haven and at Montgomery, Alabama. From Alabama he came to Bridgeport, founding, in 1888, the business known as the Crawford Laundry Company, one of the largest laundries in Connecticut. The enterprise was started under his name, and in 1908 was incorporated. All the firm's trade is centered within a radius of twenty-five miles from Bridgeport, and the company is completely modern in all respects.

In addition to conducting the affairs of this great laundry, Mr. Crawford was president of the Bridgeport Chamber of Commerce in 1916 and 1917, so serving again in 1923-1924, 1925-1926, and from 1936 to 1938. He is president of the Bridgeport Coat and Apron Supply Company, a director of the Bridgeport City Trust Company and the Bridgeport Housing Corporation, and a member of the Brooklawn Country Club and the Algonquin Club. He is president of the Twilight Club and a member of the board of directors of the Bridgeport Kiwanis Club. A staunch Democrat in his political views, he served as a member of the Fire Commission and the Board of Education of this city. Within his party organization he has opposed the "New Deal" of President Roosevelt. Fraternally he is connected with the Free and Accepted Masons, holding the thirty-second degree in the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite and being a past potentate of his temple in the Ancient Arabic Order of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He worships in the faith of the United Congregational Church, of Bridgeport.

George E. Crawford married, in Bridgeport, Connecticut, on December 21, 1893, Ida Byrd Hawes, daughter of Jacob and Flora (Bliss) Hawes, of Bridgeport. Four children, three sons and a daughter, were born of this marriage: 1. William H. 2. A. James. 3. Louise, wife of John C. Thompson, of Bridgeport. 4. George E., Jr. The family residence is situated at No. 2090 North Avenue, Bridgeport.

FRANKLIN HOYT—As owner of the Franklin Hoyt Funeral Home in New Canaan, Franklin Hoyt continues under his own management an enterprise with which he has been associated throughout his active career. He has long been prominent in the New Canaan community and is one of the fraternal leaders of the town.

Mr. Hoyt was born in New Canaan on October 19, 1884, a son of Elbridge and Mary E. (Williams) Hoyt. He was educated in the public schools of Lewisboro, New York, and for several years was variously employed. Later, however, he became associated with E. B. Lawrence, undertakers, in New Canaan, as an apprentice and thus began the connection which he has since continued. In order to qualify for his profession, he enrolled in the Barnes School of Anatomy, Sanitary Science and Embalming, and was graduated there on January 31, 1911. In the same month and year, he received his Connecticut license, but continued his association with his original employer. In January, 1926, he purchased Mr. Lawrence's entire interest in the business and changed its name to the Franklin Hoyt Funeral Home, of which he has since been owner and manager. This is a completely equipped funeral home, whose standards of service are of the highest type. Mr. Hoyt, who is a well known member of his profession, is a member of the Funeral Directors' Association of the State of Connecticut and is influential in its councils. In addition to his Connecticut license, he is also licensed by the State of New York.

During his long residence in New Canaan, Mr. Hoyt has been active in a variety of civic connections and in many fraternal affiliations. He is a member of Wooster Lodge, No. 37, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, at New Canaan; the New Canaan Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry; South Norwalk Lodge, No. 704, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; and the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he is affiliated with Harmony Lodge, No. 67, and with many higher bodies, including Washington Chapter, No. 24, Royal Arch Masons; Clinton Commandery No. 3, Knights Templar; the bodies of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite through the thirty-second degree of the Consistory; and Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is an honorary member of Howard M. Bossa Post, No. 653, Veterans of Foreign Wars, in New Canaan, and was one of the organizers of the New Canaan Lions Club, in which he has since been active. Through these contacts, he has greatly increased the range and scope of his service to the community and has become one of the best known residents of New Canaan. Mr. Hoyt is a communicant of St. Mark's Episcopal Church.

He married, on August 17, 1908, Mary M. Keating, daughter of Frank and Annie Keating. Mr. and Mrs. Hoyt have one daughter, Florence M., who married Cecil Williams, of New York City.

LOUIS SEYMOUR MAIN—Possessing a rich heritage, Louis Seymour Main, of South Windsor, is emulating his distinguished ancestors who for generations have been prominent figures in the social, civic, political and business life of this section of the State. At present Mr. Main is residing at the old Stoughton home, where his mother was born, and operates a large tobacco farm.

Member of an old and distinguished New England family, Mr. Main was born in the city of Hartford, December 11, 1871, the son of Martin Van Buren and Emily (Stoughton) Main, both natives of this State and deceased. His father, who died on July 12, 1892, engaged in the ice business in Hartford for many years. Mr. Main received a general education in the public schools of Hartford and after completing his studies became associated with his father in business. When the elder Main died, Mr. Main took over the management of the ice company and continud to conduct it until 1905, when he established himself in a trucking business which he operated until 1920. He removed to the Stoughton home in South Windsor in 1926 and has resided here since, operating a large tobacco farm.

On December 1, 1897, at Hartford, Mr. Main married May E. Butler, daughter of Oscar M. and Lucy S. (Flint) Butler, both deceased. Her father, who was born in Chicopee, Massachusetts, was a veteran of the Civil War having served as a first lieutenant in Company G, of the Connecticut Volunteers. On her mother's side she is a descendant of the Flint family, also an old New England family. Mr. and Mrs. Main are the parents of the following children: 1. Arline, born November 19, 1898, died July, 1908. 2. Inez L., married Charles H. Momm, of New London, who died January 21, 1937; she is the mother of two children, Arline Momm and Charles H. Momm, Jr. She is now living in South Windsor. 3. Louis B., who is married to Ruth Woodford. 4. Luella E., who lives at home. (Louis B. and Luella Main are twins.)

(The Main and Talmadge Lines.)

First record of the Main family in Connecticut is traced to Elias Main, of Willington, who was born in 1760, and died in 1854, at the age of ninety-four years. He married Abigail Jones, of Stafford, and they were the parents of Bradley Crandal Main, of whom further.

Bradley Crandal Main was born in Willington, July 17, 1793, and died in December, 1871, at the age of seventy-eight years. On January 5, 1818, he married Elizabeth Talmadge, daughter of Joseph Talmadge, of New York, who was a corporal in Fowler's Company during the Revolutionary War, and served as sergeant from January, 1780, to 1782, according to the Military Register on record in the historical room at the Atheneum Building in Hartford. Mrs. Bradley Crandal Main passed away September, 1865, at the age of seventy-three years and lies buried beside her husband in South Windsor, where a handsome tablet was erected to their memory by a number of descendants in May, 1908. They were the parents of the following children: 1. Elias Talmadge Main, born September 14, 1819, married Jane Smith, June 23, 1842, and died on September 6, 1888, at the age of sixty-nine years. 2. Andrew Jackson Main, born February 21, 1822, married Lucy Richardson, November 27, 1845, and died on October 13, 1881, at the age of fifty-nine years. 3. Elijah Jones Main, born March 22, 1824, married Cornelia Holt, November 21, 1841, and died November 7, 1863, at the age of thirty-nine years. 4. Abby Ann Main, born March 1, 1826, married Philo West, November 7, 1849. 5. Abram Bradley Main, born October 24, 1829, married Laura Knowles, and died October 7, 1872, at the age of forty-three years. 6. Elizabeth Sarah Main, born July 9, 1831, married Elijah S. Pierce, November 28, 1850, and died March 25, 1886, at the age of fifty-five years. 7. Martin Van Buren Main (q. v.). 8. Joseph Augustus Main, born May 29, 1836, and died March 29, 1857, at the age of twenty-one years.

(The Stoughton Line.)

The Stoughton family, of remote antiquity in Surrey, England, is first recorded during the reign of King Stephen (1135 to 1145). Authentic ancestry is traced back to Thomas Stoughton of County Wilts, England, and the father of Thomas and Israel, of whom further.

(I) Thomas and Israel, first members of this family to come to America, made the voyage on the ship "Mary and John," and settled in Windsor, now South Windsor, where Thomas on November 30, 1665, married Mary Wadsworth, and died on September 15, 1684. They were the parents of John, of whom further.

(II) John, who was born June 20, 16—, and died May 24, 1712. He married (first) Elizabeth Biswell, who died July 16, 1686; (second) January 23, 1689, Sarah Fitch, who died May 18, 1731. He was the father of Sergeant William B., of whom further.

(III) Sergeant William B., born March 10, 1685 or 1686, and died May 18, 1750. He married (first) Elizabeth Strickland, on July 6, 1710; she died in May, 1731. On July 17, 1735, he married (second) Martha Walcott. He was the father of William B., of whom further.

(IV) William B., born April 3, 1715, died December 27, 1781. He married Abigail Wolcott, February 8, 1743, and they were the parents of William B., of whom further.

(V) William B., who was born June 6, 1750, and died November 29, 1831, at the age of eighty-two, married Eleanor Prior, who died on August 18, 1840. They were the parents of William, of whom further.

(VI) William, baptized on February 15, 1789, died October 22, 1868, at the age of eighty. He married (first) Nancy Alexandre, who died December 2, 1843, at the age of forty; (second) Jerusha Q. Abbe, who died August 8, 1871. He was the father of Emily, of whom further.

(VII) Emily, born April 4, 1839, died April 6, 1915, at the age of seventy-six years. On June 5, 1862, she was married to Martin Van Buren Main, who was born June 11, 1833, and died July 12, 1892, at the age of fifty-nine. They were the parents of the following children: 1. Sanford Eugene, who was born June 10, 1865, and died in infancy. 2. Bertie Augustus, who was born June 14, 1868, and died July 22, 1869. 3. Louis Seymour, whose name heads this review.

(The Flint Line.)

Through her maternal ancestry, Mrs. May E. (Butler) Main is a descendant of Henry Flint, who, according to record, was born April 19, 1752, and died July 18, 1830. He married Beulah Wheeler, who was born February 6, 1762, and died June 6, 1831. Henry Flint served with the Continental forces during the Revolutionary War, enlisting on April 24, 1775, as a private in Captain Abishai Brown's Company, Colonel John Nixon's 5th Regiment. He took part in a number of important engagements, among them the siege of Boston in 1775. He served as a member of the main guard at Prospect Hill under Colonel L. Baldwin, in July, 1775, and also served in Captain Adam Wheeler's 2nd Company, Lieutenant Colonel Thomas Nixon's 4th Regiment, according to regimental returns dates, North Castle, November 9, 1776. He was identified with this unit for twelve months.

FRANK L. FISHER, M.D.—Widely and favorably known for his work as a physician in Stamford, Dr. Frank L. Fisher has performed a labor of vast importance to his adopted city, doing much for the furtherance of good health and fitness of his patients and for the cause of well-being as a whole.

Dr. Fisher was born at Truro, Nova Scotia, Canada, on November 25, 1897, son of George L. and Annie W. (Johnston) Fisher.

The public and high schools of his Canadian birthplace provided the early education of Frank L. Fisher, who later studied at Dalhousie University, in Halifax, Nova Scotia. He was graduated from McGill University, Montreal, Province of Quebec, in 1924, taking the degree of Doctor of Medicine at that institution. For the ensuing two and one-half years he served an interneship at Montreal and then another at Williamsport, Pennsylvania, and finally a third at Stamford, Connecticut. In 1927, he began his general medical practice in Stamford, continuing it down to the present. In addition to his regular private practice, which has grown with the passing of the years, he is active in the general affairs of his profession, notably as a member of the Fairfield County Medical Society, the Stamford Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society, and the American Medical Association. He is recognized as one of the very contributive members of his profession, in which he has earned the respect and admiration of a host of friends.

In the civic and social affairs of his adopted community Dr. Fisher has likewise taken the role of leadership. He is a member of the Hubard Heights Country Club, and of St. Andrew's Protestant Episcopal Church, in Stamford. He also belongs to the Free and Accepted Masons, which he joined in Nova Scotia. He is a member of the clinical staff of Stamford Hospital. During the World War he was a sergeant in the Canadian Army from 1915 to 1919, serving overseas in France. As a member of the Army Medical Corps he did much to serve the cause of the Allies. He is also a member of the Suburban Club, in Stamford. He is a Republican in his political views.

Dr. Frank L. Fisher married, on May 28, 1927, Muriel Keith, daughter of Samuel and Jane Keith. The following children were born to them: 1. George L., on August 1, 1928. 2. Jane N., on August 31, 1930.

WILLIAM EDWIN GATES—As postmaster of Glastonbury for eight terms, thirty-two years, director of the Glastonbury Bank and Trust Company, and active leader in the social and civic affairs of this section of the county, William Edwin Gates, retired, has come to be recognized as one of the most influential and successful citizens of his generation in this community where he has resided for over half a century.

Frank L. Fisher

Mr. Gates was born in Lyme, March 29, 1857, the son of Francis Edwin and Sarah Maria (Day) Gates, both residents of this State, where his father engaged in farming. His mother was the sister of Robert E. Day, prominent Hartford attorney, and niece of William Hungerford, of the law firm of Hungerford and Cone, of Hartford, who served as counsel for the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad and was ranked as one of the most brilliant lawyers of his day in this country.

Mr. Gates received a general education in the public schools of Hartford and was graduated from the high school in this community in 1877. After completing his studies he entered the timber business in Hadlyme, milling and supplying ship timber, a work which he engaged in successfully until 1883. During this period he also taught school for two winters, 1881 to 1883, and the following year established himself in a grocery business in Middlefield, which he conducted until September, 1885, when he purchased a similar establishment in Glastonbury, operating this store until 1896, when it was destroyed by fire.

His career as a postal official dates back to 1886, when he was appointed assistant postmaster in Glastonbury. Three years later he was appointed postmaster by John Wanamaker, then Postmaster General; in 1900 was named for the post by President McKinley and was appointed and re-appointed by President Theodore Roosevelt in 1905 and 1909. He resumed his activities with this department in 1922, under the administration of President Harding, and was successively appointed by Presidents Coolidge and Hoover. In view of the fact that this was a third class office, Mr. Gates was not compelled to devote all of his time to official work and consequently was able to engage in other pursuits, among them that of floor salesman for the E. S. Kibbe Company in Hartford, with which he was associated from 1896 to 1905. He retired from all active business in 1934.

The extent of Mr. Gates' prominence in the life of this community can be best illustrated by listing the important and responsible positions he was chosen to occupy in several municipal and business agencies. For a number of years he has been a member of the board of directors of the Glastonbury Bank and Trust Company and at present is a commissioner of the Glastonbury Fire Department. He is a former justice of the peace and for a year served as second selectman. Socially he is listed as a charter member of the Glastonbury Chamber of Commerce and a charter member of Elm Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He also fraternizes with the Daskam Lodge, No. 86, of the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he was recently awarded a gold pin in recognition of his fifty years membership. He is the second oldest member of this lodge and the oldest from Glastonbury. For twenty-seven years he served as a member of the Putnam Phalanx and at the time of his retirement from this organization held a lieutenant's commission. Mr. Gates worships at the First Congregational Church, in which he is a former member of the church committee. During his long affiliation with the United States Postoffice he attended a number of postmaster's conventions, including those held in Washington, D. C., Asheville, North Carolina, Detroit, Michigan, and Sacramento, California.

Mr. Gates was largely instrumental in the construction and paving of the road in front of the Glastonbury Cemetery, costing about $3,500, which sum was given by Mrs. Harriet Wells Turner and John T. Robertson, of Manchester, and himself. He was also responsible for the establishment, in 1917, of fire protection in the Glastonbury Fire District, where Mr. Gates resides.

In 1928 two other Fire Districts, the Hebron Avenue and the Naubuc, joined with the Glastonbury District under the name of the Glastonbury Fire Department which now has a La France engine and pumper, a volunteer fire fighting force of forty members, and said to be one of the most efficient departments in the State.

In 1885, Mr. Gates married (first) Theba Holmes, who passed away in 1886. She was the daughter of Silas R. and Emily (Rose) Holmes. There was one son by this union: Robert Holmes, who is now general manager of the Turner, Day, Wootworth Handle Company of Louisville, Kentucky. In 1889, Mr. Gates married (second) Isabella Robertson, who died in 1922. She was the daughter of William and Elizabeth Robertson. On June 24, 1926, Mr. Gates married (third) Ethel Maynard, daughter of Henry B. and Anna (Marvin) Maynard, both deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Gates are now residing in the home he purchased in 1899, which is one of the showplaces of this section, having been built by Timothy Hale in 1750.

FRANCIS G. WAY—Associated with several of the largest and most successful cloth manufacturing concerns in the State of Connecticut, Francis G. Way today is recognized as one of the most able and influential textile executives in the Commonwealth. He has been identified with this business for the past thirty years, and during this period has resided in the community of East Glastonbury, where he is active and prominent in social and civic affairs.

Mr. Way, member of an old and distinguished Connecticut family, was born at East Lyme, April 7, 1879, the son of James A. and Mary Alice (Kelley) Way. His father, who was a sea captain during the early part of his life, later engaged in farming and became one of the most influential civic leaders of his generation in East Lyme, where he held several town offices and was elected a member of the State Legislature. The elder Way died in 1915 and his wife passed away in 1924.

After completing a general education in the New London public schools, Mr. Way took a special course at Yale University, and was admitted to the Connecticut State bar in 1904. He established himself in a general practice at New London which he conducted for two years. At the expiration of this period, he retired from the legal profession and became associated with Angus Park in the Angus Park Manufacturing Company, founded by his father-in-law, who was ranked as one of the outstanding textile leaders of the State. In 1920, Mr. Way became president of the company, which is devoted to the manufacture of woolen cloth for both men and women's clothing and has a large plant in Glastonbury. He also acquired interest in several other Park enterprises, including the Airlie Mills, at Hanover, which he heads as president also, and the Assawaga Company, at Killingly, for which he is secretary. The nature of his success has brought him richly merited recognition. His advice and sound judgment have frequently been sought and in this connection he has been invited and now serves as a member of the board of directors of the Glastonbury Bank and Trust Company.

Mr. Way has also employed his talents to the benefit of his surroundings. He is a former member of the zoning board in Glastonbury, and at present serves as a member of the board of finance for the town. Socially, he belongs to the Service Club of Glastonbury, the Rotary Club of Hartford, the Manchester Country Club, and fraternizes with the Masonic Order in which he is a thirty-second degree Scottish Rite Mason and is identified with the Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

On December 12, 1906, Mr. Way married Margaret Park, daughter of Angus and Elizabeth B. (Eadie) Park. Her father, as mentioned heretofore, enjoyed a career of outstanding distinction in the textile business. He was a native of Scotland, learned every phase of the trade there and, during his youth, came to America, as several of his relatives had done. For a period he worked for a large textile mill in Canada, serving as supervisor. Shortly before the turn of the century he came to East Lyme, entered the Niantic Mills, which his uncle and brother were associated with, and later went in business for himself, purchasing the old Allen Mills in Hanover, which are now known as the Airlie Mills. He also acquired several other important properties in the State which, until his passing, he continued to operate with outstanding distinction and success. He was a director of several financial institutions in this section and active socially.

Mr. and Mrs. Way are the parents of three children: 1. Elizabeth E., who attended the Connecticut College for Women and is now residing at home. 2. Frances G., who was graduated from the Connecticut College for Women. 3. Angus Park, who was graduated from Mount Herman College, and is now attending the State College at Storrs.

RAYMOND AFFLECK HARDIN—For many years a leading citizen of Glastonbury, Raymond Affleck Hardin is now town clerk here. His work in the community and in this State has included extensive public service, and he has shown himself disposed to devote his energies wholeheartedly to the task of representing the people.

Mr. Hardin was born March 2, 1880, in Glastonbury, Connecticut, son of Samuel C. and Elizabeth P. (Affleck) Hardin. On the paternal side of the house, the family dates back to an early period in the nation's history.

In the public schools of Glastonbury, his birthplace, Raymond Affleck Hardin received his earliest formal education, and later he studied at Hartford High School. His father was for fifteen years town clerk of Glastonbury, and it was very natural that the son should turn his attention to this same realm of public service. The father also had served as town treasurer, had been a member of the State Legislature in 1899. He died in December, 1902, and the mother passed from this life February 22, 1910.

The first business association of Raymond Affleck Hardin was with the Phoenix Fire Insurance Company, in Hartford, with whom he remained two years. He then undertook to raise tobacco, continuing in this work and as a dealer in fertilizer until 1929. Elected assessor of the Town of Glastonbury in 1908, he served in that position until 1930. He was then elected town clerk for the term commencing January 1, 1930, and in 1931, 1933 and 1935, was re-elected to this responsible town position.

Not only has he rendered outstanding service to his fellow citizens in this important office, earning the plaudits of the people of this district, but he has likewise turned his mind to business and finance. He is a director of the Glastonbury Bank and Trust Company. He also takes part to a considerable extent in fraternal and social affairs in his community, being a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, the Glastonbury Service Club and the East Glastonbury Fish and Game Club. In the Masonic Order he is a member of Daskam Lodge, No. 86. Mrs. Hardin is affiliated with the Order of Eastern Star.

In Talcottville, Connecticut, on October 14, 1909, Raymond Affleck Hardin married Lillian M. Warner, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth (House) Warner, both of whom are now deceased. One son, Samuel C. Hardin, was born to this marriage on May 27, 1918. He is now a student at Connecticut State College.

CLARENCE DWIGHT BURBANK—As owner of the Franklin Theater and the Thompsonville Hotel, which he now leases, Clarence Dwight Burbank has been recognized as one of the most successful business men and public spirited citizens in Thompsonville during his residence here, which spans nearly a quarter of a century. He originally engaged in farming, later entered the real estate business and finally built the theater on Pleasant Street, which he has operated since 1917 with outstanding distinction and success.

Mr. Burbank was born in Suffield, November 25, 1872, the son of Webster Ebenezer and Frances (Austin) Burbank, the former a native of his son's birthplace and the latter of Ravenna, Ohio. His father, now deceased, was a farmer and tobacco raiser. After being graduated from the Thompsonville High School in 1892, Mr. Burbank matriculated at Harvard University, in which he studied for one year and from which he was compelled to retire due to ill health. He intended at this time to pursue a medical career.

Upon leaving Harvard he returned to the family farm and worked there until 1904, when he acquired property of his own in Suffield, on which he cultivated tobacco. He continued here until 1912 when he sold the property and removed to Thompsonville to enter the real estate business, which he followed with success until 1917. During the latter year he built the Franklin Theater on Pleasant Street, a house with a seating capacity for one thousand, which he has conducted since. He is universally respected for his accomplishments throughout this section and is an active figure in social and civic affairs.

At one time he served as president of the Taxpayers Association of Enfield and throughout his career here has been a staunch supporter of all movements and organizations designed to aid in the general welfare. In his fraternal affiliations he has been one of the most influential and active members of Apollo Lodge, No. 59, of the Free and Accepted Masons, for which he served as Master, 1909 and 1910, and High Priest for four years. He also is a member and former trustee of Washington Chapter, No. 30; belongs to Suffield Council, No. 23 and was Master four years; the Washington Commandery, No. 1, in Hartford; the Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite in which he holds the coveted thirty-second degree. Mr. Burbank enjoys sports of all types and is particularly fond of baseball, football and horseback riding.

On February 15, 1899, at Thompsonville, Mr. Burbank married Mabel Lord, adopted daughter of Benjamin Franklin and Charlotte (Benton) Lord of this community, who were members of old New England families and are now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Burbank were the parents of three children: 1. Judith Lord, born November 24, 1899, is now married to Raleigh B. Brown and the mother of three children: Dolores, Raleigh, Jr., and Ronald. 2. Bernice Lord, born August 4, 1903, married to Carl J. Schlaick, and they have one daughter, Dorothy, born June, 1932. 3. Dorothy Lord, born July, 1906, died December, 1908.

FRED CADY DAVIS—Member of an old Connecticut family, Fred Cady Davis, of Somers, has been engaged for many years in educative work. He is a teacher in Hartford High School and is recognized as one of his profession's notable and very contributive members.

Mr. Davis was born March 8, 1890, in West Stafford, Connecticut, son of George Williams and Myrtilla (Hawood) Davis and a member of a well-established family. He is of the ninth generation in direct line of descent from Thomas Davis, founder of the line in America, who lived from 1603 to 1683, the intervening generations being: John Davis, born in 1628, died in 1675, who married Mary, surname unknown; their son, Cornelius Davis, born in

George Williams Davis was born in 1850, and died in 1894. He was a farmer by profession and long a resident of West Stafford, his great-great-grandfather having been one of the original proprietors of Stafford. Myrtilla (Hawood) Davis, mother of Fred Cady Davis, was born in 1864.

Fred Cady Davis attended the schools of Somers and later was a student at Enfield High School and Amherst College, taking his degree of Bachelor of Arts at Amherst in 1911. He ran the home farm of his family for a time thereafter, remaining so engaged for about five years. He then proceeded to New York State to make his home, operating a community center for Levi P. Morton at Rhinecliff, New York, for two years. Starting his career as a teacher at the conclusion of that time, he specialized in history and government, teaching for four years at Enfield High School. He then spent three years at New Haven High School, taking up his work next in Hartford High School, where he now carries on his work.

He maintains his residence at Somers and has wide interests, both professional and civic. He is a member of the New England History Teachers' Association and the State Teachers' Association, as well as of the Beta Theta Pi fraternity, which he joined in his own student days.

Fred Cady Davis married, in June, 1912, at East Windsor, Connecticut, Janet Whitlock, daughter of Walter B. and Frances (Smith) Whitlock, both now residents of Connecticut. Four children were born to them: 1. George Whitlock, in 1913. 2. Walter Whitlock, in 1919. 3. Eric Whitlock, in 1924. 4. Richard Whitlock, in 1935.

ALBERT HENRY GAESS—With a background of experience gained through almost forty years of activity in the manufacturing line, Albert Henry Gaess is largely contributing his knowledge to the growth and development of the Gaess Manufacturing Company of Waterbury.

Mr. Gaess was born in Baden, Germany, on April 29, 1885, the son of Albert and Mary Agatha (Kistler) Gaess. The Gaess family came to America in 1895, and settled in Waterbury. Albert Gaess, Sr., and his wife are still residents of Waterbury, and Mr. Gaess is employed there as a toolmaker.

Albert Henry Gaess first enrolled in the Baden schools, and completed his education in Waterbury. From 1898 until 1900, he was employed by the Waterbury Manufacturing Company, but in 1900, he began to serve his apprenticeship as a mechanic with the Chase Brass and Copper Company, remaining here until 1907. For the next four years he was employed by the Scovill Manufacturing Company, and with this concern, he familiarized himself with the art of mechanical designing. From 1911 to 1936, he was with the E. J. Manville Company of Waterbury, acting in the capacity of chief engineer and sales manager. In addition to his duties with the E. J. Manville Company, Mr. Gaess took a correspondence course in Mechanical Engineering, and was licensed as a Mechanical Engineer in 1937. He resigned from the E. J. Manville Company in 1936 to establish the Gaess Manufacturing Company, with himself as treasurer. This company, although young in years is progressing towards a prominent position in its field, manufacturing rivets, studs, and screws and special upsets.

In politics, Mr. Gaess is identified with the Republican Party, and is interested in all activities pertaining to the welfare of his home city.

He married Minnie Bertha Pelka, of Waterbury, the daughter of Frank Pelka, on August 14, 1907. Mr. and Mrs. Gaess are the parents of three children: 1. Dorothy J., married Adam R. Muchalight, of Waterbury. 2. Roger W. 3. Minnie B. The family maintain their home on Country Club Road, Waterbury.

PAUL JOHN KUNKEL—One of the leading druggists of Waterbury, Paul John Kunkel has devoted his life to meeting the needs of citizens of the City for drugs, medicines and related materials.

Paul John Kunkel was born in Waterbury, August 30, 1890, son of Lorenze Kunkel. A tailor, Mr. Kunkel's father came to America from Germany in 1880.

Waterbury public schools gave Paul John Kunkel his education. He attended grammar school until he was thirteen years old and then completed his education by attending night school, finishing his studies with two years of chemistry at the night sessions.

The first job Paul John Kunkel found as a boy of thirteen, was with the Waterbury Clock Company, where he ran errands. Then, for a time, Mr. Kunkel was an apprentice tool maker at the Scovill Manufacturing Company. However, Paul John Kunkel was, even as a boy of seventeen, more interested in compounding prescriptions and following the multitudinous duties of a druggist than he was in shaping steel into forms dictated by blue prints so, when in 1907 he found an opportunity to work in a drug store, he gladly abandoned his apprenticeship and entered the drug business. His first work was, again, that of an errand boy, but, aided by his night classes in chemistry, he soon worked himself into a more responsible position. Once thus happily engaged, Paul John Kunkel never lost his interest in being a druggist. From an employee, in 1923, he launched his own establishment at 1884 East Main Street. He remained in that location for twelve years, moving his store in September, 1935, to its present quarters at 1806 East Main Street, Waterbury. He is now president of the Waterbury Druggists Association.

All his life, Paul John Kunkel has been active in St. Paul's Methodist Church on Farm Street. As a lad, he was captain of the St. Paul's Boys Brigade. Masonry has been Mr. Kunkel's fraternal interest; he is one of the leading Masons of Connecticut, holding the thirty-second degree rank. And, for many years, Mr. Kunkel has been prominent in the activities of the Concordia Singing Society. In 1916 and 1917, he was a vice-president of the organization.

On January 8, 1914, at Waterbury, Paul John Kunkel married Bertha Eleanor Gervais. Mr. and Mrs. Kunkel have not had children.

HAROLD WEBSTER THOMAS—As superintendent of the schools of Plainville, Harold Webster Thomas has shown himself to be one of Connecticut's leading educators.

Mr. Thomas was born July 20, 1893, in Hume, New York, son of Alba Merton and Elizabeth (Mills) Thomas and member of an old and honorable family. The Thomases came to New England in 1640, settling in Williamstown, Massachusetts. Alba Merton Thomas, father of Harold Webster Thomas, was for years a grocer in Pike, New York, being connected with the Economy Grocery Company, of Washington, D. C. He is now retired from his active endeavors.

Harold Webster Thomas attended Rochester Pike Seminary and the high school at Pike, New York, later becoming a student at the University of Rochester, as well as at the University of Vermont. In 1932 he became a student at Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, so continuing until 1935. Meanwhile, he carried on for years his work as an educator, having been principal of schools in Springwater, Athens and Union Springs for six years. He was principal of Beeman Academy, in Vermont, for one and one-half years in 1920 and 1921, and superintendent of the schools of Johnstown, Vermont, starting September, 1922, and continuing until January, 1931. From January, 1931, until August, 1936, he was superintendent of schools in Simsbury. In 1936 he was made superintendent of schools in Plainville, continuing in this work down to the present.

In Plainville Mr. Thomas is also financial agent of the Board of Education, belongs to the National Education Association, department of Superintendents; and is a member of the October Conference of New England School Men; and served on Resolutions Committee, 1937-38, of the New England Association of School Superintendents. He is active in many local organizations, including the Chamber of Commerce. He also belongs to the Free and Accepted Masons, and while a student in Rochester became a member of the Theta Delta Chi and Phi Epsilon fraternities. He worships in the faith of the Congregational Church.

In Rochester, New York, on April 12, 1913, Harold Webster Thomas married Emma Iutzler, daughter of Jacob Iutzler. The children of this marriage have been: 1. Collins Rhys, who was born March 20, 1919. 2. Elliott Harold, born August 3, 1920. 3. Barbara Elizabeth, born July 26, 1925. 4. Joyce Ann, born October 19, 1931.

MAX MYERS—During the past thirty-five years Max Myers has been an active figure in the business life of Hartford. During that time he has successfully carried on important interests in real estate, investments, finance, and manufacturing and has assumed with equal distinction his many civil responsibilities.

Mr. Myers was born in Poland, on July 15, 1880, a son of Isaac and Rose (Klaber) Myers. His mother died on January 14, 1911. His father, who died in 1928, was engaged in the tobacco business in Hartford. The family came to the United States about 1890 and Max Myers, still a boy, obtained his education at the Brown School and the Hartford

Public High School. He also attended and was graduated from Huntzinger's Business College, following which he entered upon his active career with H. B. Claflin Co., in New York City. This was in 1901. Shortly afterwards, he became associated with M. Martin and Co., underwear manufacturers, also in New York, and in 1902 returned to Hartford to enter business for himself as an underwear manufacturer. The name of the firm was Myers and Gross. Mr. Myers continued active in its management until 1925, building a large and successful enterprise. Upon retiring from manufacturing he turned his attention to the development of Hartford real estate. His long business experience and successful record have made him one of the leaders of Hartford business life.

Mr. Myers is a director of the West Hartford Trust Company; also, treasurer of and a director in the dress manufacturing firm of R. Kolodney Inc., of Hartford and New York.

He has always evidenced an enlightened sense of civic responsibility during his career in this city, and has given generously of his time and means in supporting community institutions and charitable causes, contributing substantially to their progress. In this connection he is now president of the United Jewish Charities of Hartford, a director of the Community Chest, a director and treasurer of Congregation Beth Israel, in which he has been a moving spirit for many years. He is affiliated with Hartford Lodge, No. 88, Free and Accepted Masons, is a member of the Alumni Parents Association of the Taft School in Watertown, and a member of the Tumble Brook Country Club. His influence in Hartford life is extensive and widely recognized as a wholesome and constructive force in community affairs.

Mr. Myers married (first) in April, 1910, Lillian Blumenthal, daughter of Benjamin and Caroline (Ryder) Blumenthal, of Hartford. Mr. Myers married (second) Gladys Blumenthal, sister of his first wife who died in 1912. Mr. and Mrs. Myers have resided at 12 Vanderbilt Road, West Hartford, for the past twenty-six years and have a summer home at Short Beach on Long Island Sound.

There are three sons: The eldest, James Carroll, is a graduate of the Taft School, class of 1930, and Yale University, class of 1934. He was born March 24, 1911. The second son, Robert Lee, was born on January 9, 1919, graduated from Taft in the class of 1937, and attends Yale University. The youngest son, Leonard Ryder, was born on July 29, 1921, and attends Taft School.

ARTHUR CLAYTON WILLARD—As Town Clerk of Wethersfield, Arthur Clayton Willard administers an important public agency of the town with efficiency and success. He has held his present position since 1926, having begun his service in the Town Clerk's office as assistant to Albert H. Galpin on August 5, 1919, at that time giving up the market gardening business which had been his occupation.

Mr. Willard was born at Wethersfield in 1876, a son of Stephen Franklin and Irene Augusta (Havens) Willard and is a descendant of the family founded by Josiah Willard (eldest son of Major Simon Willard), who bought land on Broad Street in 1661.

Stephen F. Willard was influential in organizing the Willard Family Association in 1907, and Arthur C. Willard is its present Historian. Meetings are held, annually, at some place of interest to the Willards. Stephen F. Willard's life occupation was the seed industry, being associated with the Comstock Ferre & Company, one of the oldest firms in the business. He served as superintendent of the Congregational Sunday School for fifteen years.

Irene Augusta Havens Willard was still living in 1938, at the advanced age of eighty-six.

Arthur Clayton Willard received his early education in local schools, attending Wethersfield Academy in the days when it was directed by Professor J. O. Hurburt. Later he studied at Hannum's Business College in Hartford.

He is a member of the Wethersfield Business Men's and Civic Association, and the Congregational Church.

He married, on April 2, 1907, Ethel Louise Thompson, daughter of Sherwood Ralph Thompson. Mr. and Mrs. Willard have one daughter, Emma Amelia, born September 11, 1912.

HON. LEONARD O. RYAN—In the practice of law, as a public official and as a civic leader the Hon. Leonard O. Ryan has made many important contributions to the life and progress of Middletown, Connecticut, with which his whole career has been associated. He was born in this city on December 10, 1886, son of Arthur B. and Agnes M. (Sears) Ryan. After being graduated from the Middletown High School, he entered Wesleyan University, from which he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts, with the class of 1908. His legal training was acquired at Yale University Law School, being graduated in 1912, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws.

After completing his very comprehensive preparations for the legal profession, Leonard O. Ryan initiated a general practice at Middletown which he has since continued with marked success. He has a large clientele and is widely recognized as possessing legal talent of a high order. An active Democrat and notably public-spirited, he has served the municipality of Middletown in a succession of official capacities. He was clerk of the city court for two years; then judge of the city court from 1933 to 1937; corporation counsel for six years, from 1920 to 1924 and 1926 to 1928, and from 1920 continuously until 1930, was chairman of the Middletown Democratic Town Committee. He is a director and trustee of the City Savings Bank; has served as a director of the Middletown Young Men's Christian Association; and a trustee of the First Baptist Church. Mr. Ryan is a member of St. John's Lodge, No. 2, Free and Accepted Masons; Washington Chapter, No. 6, Royal Arch Masons, Columbia Council, No. 12, Royal and Select Masters, Cyrene Commandery No. 8, Knights Templar; Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, and also Central Lodge, No. 12, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and Apollo Lodge, No. 33, Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the American Bar Association, and also of the State and County Bar associations and is now serving as president of the Middletown Bar Association.

Leonard O. Ryan married, October 10, 1916, at Middletown, Connecticut, Edith R. Lowrey, daughter of William E. and Eunice S. (Hall) Lowrey. Mr. and Mrs. Ryan have a daughter, Elizabeth S., born July 8, 1923.

CURTISS STOW BACON—During the past three decades, Curtiss Stow Bacon has served without interruption as judge of the Court of Probate for the district of Middletown. This distinction, accorded him by the electorate, reflects his sound legal qualifications and the confidence which his services inspire.

Judge Bacon was born in Middletown on July 2, 1877, a son of Arthur William and Henrietta B. (Parker) Bacon, and a descendant of the old Connecticut family founded by Nathaniel Bacon, who settled at Hartford about 1649 as a youth of nineteen. In the fall of 1650, he joined the company which founded Middletown, becoming a large landholder and influential citizen. This community has since been the seat of the family. From Nathaniel, the line is traced through John (1), his fourth son, born in 1663; Lieutenant John (2), son of John (1), who was born in 1695; John (3), son of Lieutenant John (2) and Sarah (White) Bacon, his wife, who was born in 1723; John (4), born in 1751, son of John (3) and Rhoda (Gould) Bacon; John (5), born in 1779, eldest son of John (4) and Grace (Griswold) Bacon; Curtiss Bacon, son of John (5) and Amy (Coe) Bacon, who was a member of his family in the seventh American generation and the grandfather of Judge Curtiss Stow Bacon. Curtiss Bacon was born on April 17, 1804, in what is now Middlefield, and for many years was prominent in public life, relinquishing his earlier profession as a teacher to serve as town constable, deputy sheriff, sheriff, United States Marshal under Presidents Pierce and Buchanan, and again as deputy sheriff, constable, and finally county commissioner. He was an influential figure in the Democratic Party and a delegate to its National Conventions. On November 9, 1828, he married Ann Stow, daughter of Obed and Luch (Kirby) Stow, and a descendant of pioneer New England settlers. Their son, Arthur William Bacon, father of Judge Bacon, was born on September 10, 1836, in the parish of Westfield. Educated at Wesleyan University, from which he was graduated in 1856, he subsequently studied law with Waldo P. Vinal and Moses Culver, was admitted to the bar and rose to a position of leadership in his profession. He was considered the ablest attorney of the Middlesex bar. Arthur William Bacon was also active in public life, representing Middletown in the General Assembly in 1867-69, 1870 and 1874. He married, on November 15, 1871, in Barnstable, Massachusetts, Henrietta B. Parker, daughter of Frederick and Emeline (Howland) Parker, and a descendant, through her mother, of John Howland, a signer of the historic Mayflower Compact.

Curtiss Stow Bacon, of this record, was the only son of his parents. Spending his boyhood in Middletown, he received his education in local public schools and, after completing the high school course in 1896, he entered Wesleyan University, where he remained until the end of the junior year. In the fall of 1899, he became a student in Yale Law School and was there graduated in June, 1902. Judge Bacon was at once admitted to the Middlesex County Bar and entered the practice of law at Middletown. He quickly established his professional reputation and, in 1906, was appointed city attorney, an office he filled with distinction until the following year. In November, 1908, he was elected judge of the Court of Probate for the district of Middletown, and, despite his own affiliation with the Democratic Party, has been continuously re-elected to the bench since that time in a normally Republican district. His legal scholarship and courtesy have won him the respect and regard of the bar, and his faithful administration of his duties has brought him the confidence of the public at large.

In addition to his service on the bench, Judge Bacon is a director and trustee of the City Savings Bank of Middletown. He has been an active figure in the civic life of the community, where his influence has been effective in promoting many worthy causes, and is a member of numerous organizations both local and of wider scope. These include: the American Bar Association, Arrawanna Tribe, Improved Order of Red Men, Middletown Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of which he was Exalted Ruler in 1908-09; St. John's Lodge, No. 2, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, the Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity at Wesleyan University, and the Middletown Yacht Club. In the Elks, Judge Bacon was also a delegate to the Grand Lodge Session at Los Angeles in 1909. He has served a number of enlistments in the Second Company of the Governor's Foot Guard of Connecticut, and is a communicant of the Church of the Holy Trinity in Middletown. By common consent, Judge Bacon is one of the first citizens of his community, continuing in his own career the fine traditions so long associated in Middletown life with the family name.

Judge Bacon was married to Yvonne Ross, and has two children: 1. Adelle, who married William Henry Hatfield, of Bridgeport. 2. Curtiss, a student at Yale University, class of 1941.

FRED M. GODARD—For well over a quarter of a century Fred M. Godard was identified with the Hartford County Temporary Home in an official capacity, and to a large extent shaped the policies and promoted the usefulness and increased the scope and size of this noteworthy institution for dependent and neglected children, situated at Warehouse Point, Connecticut. He was born in North Granby, Connecticut, September 11, 1868, son of Harvey and Sabra (Beach) Godard, both of whom are deceased.

Mr. Godard was educated in local elementary schools, Wilbraham Academy, and the Yale Business College, at New Haven. His first position of importance was with the Federal Internal Revenue Department, as a gauger of distilled liquors in Government bonded warehouses. He was connected at this time with the Weights and Measures Division of the department in Connecticut. In 1906, Fred M. Godard accepted the superintendency of the Hartford County Temporary Home, at Warehouse Point, then a relatively insignificant part of the humanitarian service of the Connecticut city. He proved himself an executive and administrator of skill and ability and, at the time of his death, he had the care of almost two hundred and fifty children, and the Warehouse plant had become a property valued at nearly a third of a million dollars. Mr. Godard was affiliated with the Granby Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, and was a member of the Windsor Locks Rotary Club.

On June 15, 1898, at Warehouse Point, Fred M. Godard married Jane Steele, daughter of Robert and Mary (Dunn) Steele, both deceased. Mrs. Godard was assistant superintendent of the Hartford County Temporary Home during her husband's regime from its initiation, and still continues in that position. She is a member of the Order of the Eastern Star and prominent in varied activities. Mr. and Mrs. Fred M. Godard were the parents of a daughter, Idell, who, on August 16, 1930, married Albert Wattes Redway, and is the mother of two children: i. Nancy G., born October 22, 1932. ii. Albert Wattes, 2d, born March 6, 1936.

Mr. Godard died on February 18, 1933, and Connecticut lost one of its outstanding leaders in welfare work, and a worthy citizen. Hartford County was fortunate in having in charge of one of its humanitarian institutions one who came to his post as a young man and was completely devoted to a delicate and far-reaching work. He influenced the lives of hundreds and sent them out into the world better equipped to meet the difficulties they had to face, better prepared for good lives and good citizenship. He richly deserved the approval he received and the esteem in which he was held.

HOSKAR FRANK—Although he arrived in the United States an all but penniless Russian immigrant, Hoskar Frank possessed inestimable wealth of character, courage and ability. Through his own efforts he developed a successful manufacturing enterprise, the New England Braid Manufacturing Company, and remained at its head for many years until ill health forced his eventual retirement. He was also well known for his long civic prominence at Meriden, Connecticut, which was his home during the greater part of his life in America.

Mr. Frank was born in Gomel, Mohilev, Russia, on May 28, 1858, a son of Samuel and Bluma (Herrman) Frank. Left an orphan at the age of five, he was early forced to shift for himself and was so denied the advantage of any formal schooling. What education he secured came to him, like everything else in life, only by his own unaided initiative. In his 'teens, Mr. Frank served an apprenticeship in the Russian Army. Later, when he was twenty-seven, he became a carriage manufacturer at Gomel, and continued in this business until he started the long journey to the United States at the age of thirty-three. When he arrived in New York in 1891, he had a wife and eighteen cents, but he faced the future with confidence in the opportunities of his new home and in his own ability to make the best of them. He obtained whatever work he could find in New York, and after about a year removed to Meriden, Connecticut, where he peddled fruit and vegetables. A short time later he became a butcher and opened a market in Meriden, but the passing of another year found him entering a more profitable field as a wholesale metal dealer. This enterprise occupied him for about four years, during which time it became one of the largest of its kind in the East.

In 1900, Mr. Frank sold his metal business and purchased the bankrupt estate of the Chapman Manufacturing Company. He now organized the Connecticut Saddlery and Bell Company, which he continued until 1903. In the latter year he disposed of his holdings and organized the New England Braid Manufacturing Company, of which he was president until his retirement in 1925. Called into existence through his initiative, the New England Braid Manufacturing Company reflected his business acumen and soundness of judgment in its long record of progress and growth. From 1903 to 1906, the plant of the company was located in Meriden, but thereafter the headquarters of the concern were situated in New York City. From 1906 to 1921, Mr. Frank commuted daily from Meriden to New York, but, when his health began to fail, he was obliged to relinquish some of his more arduous duties. In 1922, he admitted one of his old employes to partnership and, in 1925, retired from all active connection with the company's management, although he retained his interests therein, and his advice and counsel were always at the disposal of his former associates. Mr. Frank was also active for a number of years in the real estate field at Meriden and, about 1922, became interested in New York real estate. He was very successful in both enterprises, but the greater part of his personal fortune was built in the braid manufacturing business.

For forty years, Mr. Frank was one of the best known residents of Meriden, and was respected by all its people, not only as an able businessman, but for his fine civic spirit, his charity and many kindnesses. He was a man of enlightened social conscience, contributing generously to all worthy causes, and often assuming the responsibilities of leadership in working for their success. He was particularly concerned with supporting homes for the aged and for orphans, and was associated with many of these institutions, both at Meriden, New Haven, and elsewhere. During the World War, he was prominent in organizing war relief agencies. His generosity knew no limits of creed or faith, and no one in need who sought his assistance was ever turned away empty-handed. It gave him great satisfaction to be able to render aid to the afflicted, yet all his gifts were made with the complete lack of ostentation which always distinguished him. Mr. Frank was a member of the Zionist Organization of America and the I. O. B. A. He was for seventeen years president of the local Jewish Synagogue, and one of its chief supporters throughout his life. In addition to his other connections, he was president of the Meriden Hebrew Business Loan Association, which he organized, from 1910 to 1929.

In June, 1883, Hoskar Frank married Freda Lapides, and they became the parents of one son, Herbert A., who married Evelyn Barbara Graham, in Brewster, New York, on February 13, 1932. They have one child, Robert Asher, born December 8, 1934.

Mr. Frank died in Meriden, on January 14, 1934, following many years of failing health. Although his illness brought him much suffering and, from 1928 onward, he was confined to his bed, he bore his affliction with fortitude and his spirit never faltered. His death was a serious loss to Meriden, and its people in every walk of life paid tribute to the value of his accomplishments and the inspiration of his character and example.

WILLIAM GAMALIEL SNOW—Distinguished by his business achievements and by his deep interest in a variety of advertising and research work, William Gamaliel Snow, of Meriden, has been connected with the International Silver Company as director of research and information, and with the Kelsey Press Company, dealers in printers' supplies, as a director. He is a member of the old Snow family who came originally from England to the New world, becoming prominent on this side of the Atlantic, particularly in New England.

Mr. Snow was born April 9, 1863, in Meriden, Connecticut, son of Gamaliel Fowler and Caroline

(Atwater) Snow, of this place. His father was for many years engaged in the manufacture of machinery, tools and other products in Meriden, and during the Civil War was with the firm known as Snow, Brooks and Company, making rifles for the United States Government, established in 1845 as Oliver Snow & Co.

The public schools of Meriden furnished William Gamaliel Snow his early education, and as early as 1880 and 1881 he was editor, publisher and printer of the "Sun," of Granville, Hampden County, Massachusetts. In 1881 and 1882 he was with the printing office of Albert N. Daniels, in Hartford, Connecticut, and in 1882 he became associated with Porter Brothers and Company, at No. 78 Worth Street, New York, serving from July 1 of that year as a notion department salesman until 1888. From 1889 to 1892 he was in the lumber business in Granville, Massachusetts, but in 1893 he returned to Connecticut, becoming active in association with the Meriden Britannia Company as sales and advertising executive, in Meriden, and remaining with them until 1898, when the International Silver Company, successor, was formed.

His work with the International Silver Company began in that year, and until 1928, a period of three decades, Mr. Snow served the organization as its advertising manager. From 1929 to 1937 he was active in advertising and research work as director of research and information for the International Silver Company, acting at the same time as a director of the Kelsey Press Company, of Meriden, as noted above.

Mr. Snow has long been deeply interested in all matters pertaining to press work, printing and advertising, and is a member of the Advertising Club of New York, which he joined in 1916. Ten years earlier he became a member of the Home Club, of Meriden. He also belongs to the "Fossils," which he joined in 1905. This organization, with headquarters in New York, benefited materially from his work as its president in 1922. Mr. Snow is also active in the Connecticut Historical Society, and his deep interest in history and family genealogy has rendered him one of Connecticut's valuable citizens. Expert in research activities, he has chosen to investigate many of Connecticut's earlier industries and old families, and has done a great deal of writing of a historical nature. At about the turn of the century he published a little volume entitled "Connecticut Amateur Directory for 1880," and he also published "Pen and Scissors," an amateur press venture that attracted wide interest in the State and among the printing craft members.

Mr. Snow's own family is, of course, an ancient one, and descent from such forebears as his would alone be enough to give a man the deep interest that he has in historical backgrounds. The immigrant ancestor of the line was William Snow, who was born in England in 1624 and came to Plymouth in 1635. He lived for a time in Duxbury, then settled in Bridgewater. He married Rebeckah Brown, daughter of Peter Brown, who came to America in the "Mayflower" in 1620. He died in 1708 at the age of eighty-four years. His son, Joseph Snow, was born in Bridgewater, and married Hopestill Alden, granddaughter of John and Priscilla Alden, of "Mayflower" fame. The son of this marriage, James Snow, born in 1693, married Ruth Shaw in 1719. Their son, John Snow, born in 1736, married Hepsibah Hall, of Lyme, Connecticut. Their son, Arthur Snow, born in 1777, married Lynda Shailor. Their son, Gamaliel Fowler Snow, born in 1820, married Caroline Atwater in 1862. Their son, William Gamaliel Snow, whose name heads this review, represented the sixth generation of descent in direct line from the immigrant forebear, William Snow.

William Gamaliel Snow married, on September 25, 1895, at Meriden, Connecticut, Bessie Louese Taylor, daughter of Charles Lyman and Harriet Winslow (Tuttle) Taylor. Her father came from Bristol, Connecticut, and her mother from Meriden. To this marriage were born two children: 1. Glover Atwater, on August 9, 1896; he is president and manager of the Kelsey Press Company. 2. Lucy, born August 29, 1899, who married Ernest Sutclift Wilson, sales executive with the International Silver Company.

Mr. Snow retains his deep interest in amateur journalism. As he himself wrote many years ago in "Pen and Scissors,"—

> As an educational foundation, amateur journalism and printing is unequalled. I would not separate the two, as a boy may not be a success as a writer yet improve his general composition, but the knowledge he gains from setting type and working the press, together with the general information he will gather in coming in contact with brother editors, is sure to be of advantage. . . . If the young man works hard and has had a term in the "amateur" school it will make his progress all the more rapi and certain.

ALBERT R. LAMB, M.D.—Although his professional career has centered in New York City where he has attained distinction as a physician, Dr. Alber

R. Lamb is a member of a Connecticut family and a native of this State. He was born at Waterbury on April 22, 1881, son of George Burton and Isabelle (Johnson) Lamb, and after the completion of his preliminary education in the Taft School, entered Yale University from which he was graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1903. He prepared for his profession in the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University, taking the degree of Doctor of Medicine in 1907, and served his internship at Presbyterian Hospital in 1909-1910. In the latter year he was appointed resident bacteriologist at Presbyterian Hospital and in 1911 became resident pathologist, serving as such until 1914. In 1914 he was appointed assistant attending physician and chief of the out-patient department, holding the former office until 1916 and the latter until 1918. From 1916 to 1918 he was associate attending physician and in 1919 became attending physician, a responsibility he has borne during the intervening years.

In 1922, Dr. Lamb was appointed clinical professor of medicine at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Columbia University, and has since held this chair. Meanwhile, his success in private practice reinforced the claim to professional distinction arising from his institutional service and firmly established his place among the leading physicians of the city.

Dr. Lamb is a member of the American Medical Association, the New York Academy of Medicine, the Society of Internal Medicine, the New York Clinical Society and American College of Physicians. His authority as a diagnostician and internist is widely recognized in medical circles and his various medical papers are considered important contributions to the literature of the subjects which engage his interest. During the period of the World War, Dr. Lamb served as a major in the Medical Corps of the United States Army and was attached to the American Peace Commission. In addition to his other connections he is a member of the Cosmopolitan, Medical, Yale, Century and University clubs of New York and a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

On January 4, 1910, at Providence, Rhode Island, Albert R. Lamb married Helen Foster. They are the parents of the following children: 1. Mary Nightingale. 2. Albert R., Jr. 3. Priscilla Foster. 4. Helen.

FRED DAVID FAULKNER—Not only has Fred David Faulkner, of New Haven, served his community and his State as one of the outstanding lawyers and authorities on the law, but in his public capacity he has done much to change and improve the existing statutes.

Mr. Faulkner was born November 23, 1894, son of Peter and Elizabeth (Montgomery) Faulkner. His father was for years engaged in business, though he is no longer active in those endeavors.

The schools of New Haven provided the early education of Fred David Faulkner, who was graduated in 1914 from Hillhouse High School. Four years later he was graduated from Georgetown Law School, and in that same year he was admitted to the bar of the State of Connecticut. For a time he served as a newspaper reporter, obtaining an experience that never ceased to be of value to him, but he started his formal practice of law at No. 39 Church Street, New Haven, where he carries on his practice today. As one of the city's younger lawyers, he has done a valuable work here and has become intensely popular.

At the same time he has rendered service of importance to his State. For years he has been active in politics. He was elected to the Connecticut State Legislature in 1923, and a second time in 1937. In both sessions he took an active part in programs of labor legislation, especially in his concern with railway matters in his first session. In the last session he was made a member of the committee on cities and boroughs, and he was interested primarily at that time in municipal problems, promoting much legislation that affected the city government. He made strong pleas for bi-partisan representation on all boards, whether appointed or elected. He also worked on the pension laws, especially as they affected police and firemen. He was active in behalf of the Civil Service bills, having in mind the effect that they would have on public appointments. A conscientious worker for the general good, he has, of course, been a partisan politician, but he has struggled at all times for measures that would be of general value, aside from politics.

In June, 1937, Mr. Faulkner was appointed chief clerk of the New Haven City Court, a position that he has filled with distinction and with credit to himself. During the War he was connected with the Army Air Service. He served as commander of New Haven Post No. 47 of the American Legion. He belongs to the New Haven County Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association, the Knights of St. Patrick, the Young Democratic Club of New Haven, the Monticello Democratic Club of New Haven, and the State Federation of Democratic Clubs. He worships in the faith of St. Brendan's Roman Catholic Church, of this city.

Mr. Faulkner is unmarried.

GEORGE DAVID HALL—A life-long resident of Wallingford, where he continued the family farming interests, George David Hall was for many years one of the respected citizens of this community. He was descended from the founders of Wallingford, tracing his ancestry to John Hall, who was at Boston some time after 1630, and came to Wallingford after residing for a time in New Haven. He was a signer of the Second Plantation Covenant of Wallingford, dated 1672. Three of his sons, John, Thomas and Samuel, who evidently preceded him to Wallingford, were signers of the First Covenant of 1670. John Hall, Sr., who married Jane Woolen, was freed from military training in 1665, being then in his sixtieth year. He and his son, John, were chosen selectmen at Wallingford in 1675. John Hall, Sr., and his sons were the founders of the Wallingford branch of the Hall family, and their descendants have resided here since that early day. In this line are Heil Hall, born May 6, 1735; Josiah, born February 22, 1775; and David Merriman, father of George David Hall, who was born on May 27, 1818.

George David Hall was born at Wallingford, on June 20, 1859, and received his education in the local district school. Like his father, he became a farmer and devoted himself to agricultural pursuits throughout his active career. He was well known in the Wallingford section, and because of his industry and sterling qualities of citizenship, had won and retained the respect of his fellow townsmen. Mr. Hall was a member of the Epsicopal Church, which he consistently supported, and as faithfully met the other obligations which life brought him.

He married, on October 23, 1884, Jennie Blakeslee Hough, daughter of Elijah James Hough, and a descendant of Edward Hough, of Westchester, Cheshire County, England. From Edward, the line is traced through William, and Samuel, son of William, who was born in New London, Connecticut, and was a mill wright by trade. Samuel Hough came to Wallingford to assist in the construction of the first mill in the township, and died here on March 14, 1714. His son, James, was born on December 15, 1688. James was the father of Joseph, born in 1717, died on January 5, 1809, and Joseph, in turn was the father of James. James (3) Hough, born on March 5, 1799, was the grandfather o Jennie Blakeslee Hough. He died at Wallingford on April 25, 1855. Elijah James Hough, Mrs. Hall's father, was born on July 28, 1829, and spent his life in this community, where the Hough name has been a respected one through successive generations Mrs. Hall was born in Wallingford, on January 15 1864.

George David Hall died March 18, 1937. He wa a charter member of the Wallingford Grange, No 33, which was founded May 27, 1885.

Mr. and Mrs. Hall were the parents of thre children: 1. Louis Cook, born March 27, 1888, marrie Helen Louise Keith, August 16, 1917. 2. Almo Blakeslee, born November 27, 1891, married Gertrud Hall, October 17, 1916, and they had six children: I Sylvia Jane, born September 2, 1917. II. Almo B., Jr., born January 2, 1919. III. Margaret Hart born February 11, 1921; she died February 23, 1921 IV. Catherine Louise, born February 7, 1924. V Ellen Gertrude, born August 29, 1925. VI. Davi Sherman, born December 31, 1927. 3. Mabell Hough, born March 7, 1898, married Llewelly Denton Cornwell, July 14, 1932. Mr. and Mr Cornwell have one son, Ralph Weld, born June 1936.

CHARLES ISSELEE—For a number of yea Charles Isselee was ranked as one of the mo prominent and successful landscape architects Fairfield County. A short time prior to his untime death he established himself in Darien where l operated as a landscape architect and practiced h profession with outstanding success. Before comi here he had enjoyed an extensive experience in h native Belgium, England, Massachusetts and Ne York State, which eminently equipped and qualifi him for the position of leadership he assumed amo his colleagues.

Mr. Isselee was born in Brussels, Belgium, Fe ruary 23, 1889, and received a general education the schools of his native country. After completi this part of his studies he attended the Royal Hort cultural College in Brussels and upon finishing h training here went to Dusseldorf, Germany, whe he was to work for several years. He eventual removed to the southeast section of the city London, England, where he engaged in business wi a Mr. DeConnick for about two years. In 1912 came to the United States and settled in Cromwe Middlesex County, Connecticut, where he was as ciated with A. N. Pierson for a short time, leavi to go to Springfield, Massachusetts, with Ma

George. D. Hall

Aitken. In due time he came to White Plains, New York, as manager for the E. C. Haynes Company and continued with this organization until it dissolved. For a short time, thereafter, he did private estate work and thus rounded out a program he had set for himself as a measure of learning business methods that would enable him to establish a firm of his own.

Satisfied that he was equipped he came to Stamford in 1916 and founded a concern that specialized in the importation of bulbs and nursery stock from Holland and Belgium. In conjunction with this he also did landscape work and continued in this city for about a year and a half when he removed to Darien, purchasing his present location, which he owned and operated until his passing, when the property was sold to Mr. Mideleer. Recently, however, it was repossessed by Mrs. Isselee, who is now managing it. During his life in Fairfield County, Mr. Isselee established an enviable reputation for his ability and professional achievements. He was widely known and enjoyed a large and lucrative patronage throughout the county.

On April 29, 1912, in Lewisholm, England, Mr. Isselee married Florence M. Challis and they were the parents of eight children: 1. Karel, who was born in 1913, and is now associated with his mother in business. 2. Louis, deceased. 3. Ralph, born in 1915, and also associated with his mother. 4. Doris, now Mrs. Joseph Bruno. 5. Mark, a student. 6. James, a student. 7. Jeanne, a student. 8. Charlotte, also a student.

Mr. Isselee died at his home in Darien, April 23, 1925, at the age of thirty-six. His untimely passing was keenly felt by the host of friends and associates he had made who looked upon him as a man of unique abilities and talents.

IRVING B. CONKLIN—It is a tradition of the Conklin family, which dates back to its American progenitor, John Conklin, of Salem, Massachusetts, 1640, that the love of the land inevitably lures some of each generation back to its cultivation. Irving B. Conklin has the reputation of being one of the outstanding dairy farmers of the Ridgefield section of Connecticut, but came to this occupation only after a varied experience in other lines of activity. He is a native of Hyde Park, New York, born October 15, 1899, son of Byron and Mary Jane (Van Wagoner) Conklin, his father long engaging in agriculture in that Hudson River region of fertile soil and splendid estates.

The academic education of Irving B. Conklin was supplemented by graduation from the famous Eastman Business College, at Poughkeepsie, New York. Both before and after his schooling, he was associated with his father and employed on the estate of a former Senator. Like many brought up on a farm, he had to try his hand at other occupations before becoming convinced that agriculture was his vocation, the thing he liked most. For a time he was with the American Locomotive Works at Schenectady, in its machine shop; then he was employed by the De Laval Separator Company, which he followed with studies in the East Side Young Men's Christian Association School, New York City. Then he went to Katonah, New York, for Arthur Iselin, man of large affairs, where he remained for nearly two years. Returning to Poughkeepsie, he became an automobile dealer for some time, but quit to go with Dr. Shelton, of Ridgefield, Connecticut, where he was superintendent of his estate for five years.

Mr. Conklin went in business for himself when he purchased forty-nine acres of land near Ridgefield, and established a dairy, now consisting of some seventy cows. He caters to the Ridgefield area with his products and has proven his ability and skill in that most difficult of vocations—dairying. He is a member of the Connecticut Milk Producers Association, Fairfield County Farm Bureau, and fraternally is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. His religious faith is that of the Methodist Church.

On June 29, 1921, Irving B. Conklin married Ethel Overfield, and they have three children: 1. Barbara. 2. Joan. 3. Irving.

HUGH C. McCOLLAM—For over forty years the name of Hugh C. McCollam has occupied a prominent place in the building and real estate realm of the central part of Fairfield County. Throughout this period he has operated in Easton and Redding, specializing in the construction of residences and farm buildings. In a social and civic capacity he has taken an active part in the social and civic affairs of this section and through his contributions to the general welfare has been chosen for several important public offices.

Mr. McCollam was born in the Province of Quebec, Canada, January 31, 1861, and after receiving a general education in the common schools of that country, secured employment in the bridge construction department of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, then extending its facilities throughout the Dominion. While he was associated with this system Mr. McCollam worked on the projects being pushed from Cross Lake to Port Arthur and along the shores of Lake Superior. He became assistant building superintendent for a section covering five hundred miles and continued in this capacity until 1888, when he returned to the family farm where he was to work for about six years. It was at the expiration of this period that he came to Connecticut and settled in Easton, where he established himself in a general contracting and real estate business in Redding, which he has been conducting since with outstanding distinction and success.

His residence here has been marked for the contributions he has made to practically every phase of civic life, particularly in the government of the community. He has been chairman of the Town Board of Finance since it was organized about six years ago, has been chairman of the board of commissioners for Putnam Park for the past sixteen years, served as a member of the relief agency here on several occasions and has also occupied the office of assessor. Mr. McCollam fraternizes with the John D. Candee Assembly of the Knights of Columbus, in which he holds a fourth degree and where he is also a member of the Bethel Council. In his religious faith he adheres to the Roman Catholic doctrines and worships at the mission of the Bethel Parish in Redding Ridge.

In 1897, Mr. McCollam married Gertrude Moore, who passed away in 1932. Mr. and Mrs. McCollam were the parents of seven children: 1. Alexander, who is married to Caroline Moore. 2. Arthur, who is married to Gertrude Crowe. 3. Charles, who is married to Bertha Millaney and the father of one son, Charles, and one daughter, Mary Gertrude. 4. Kenneth. 5. Mary, now Mrs. Vincent Hayes, of Waterbury, and the mother of one son, John V. 6. John, who is married to Anna Gerrig. 7. Margaret. The family residence is the Abel Burr homestead, which was built and occupied in 1810.

THE SPINNING WHEEL INN—On the highway from Southport to Danbury is Redding Ridge, and The Spinning Wheel Inn. How long the latter has occupied this site no one knows, but long before the American Revolution this Salt Box House was built. All the original buildings have vanished with the exception of the old house itself, which in its solidity seems a part of the rock upon which it was built. It expresses the simplicity of the early settlers of Connecticut, four rooms surrounding the great stone chimney, parlor, kitchen, buttery and small back bedroom, which completes the first floor. At the front door, sturdy ladder-like steps lead to the small rooms above. With loving care the original old beams have been oiled and rubbed, the hand-fashioned woodwork preserved and the time-worn latches retained.

For a time a boot and shoe-making trade was carried on here. The following quotation from an early record quaintly tells of a young apprentice "who would learn the Art or Trade of Boot and Shoemaking and at the expiration of his Indenture to be presented with a full and complete suit of apparel for Holidays and Occasions of Worship."

A very early deed reads: "To All People to whom these presents shall come, Greeting. Know ye that I, Eli Sanford, of Redding in Fairfield County, For the Consideration of Eight Hundred and Twenty Dollars, do Give, Grant, Bargain, Sell and Confirm unto Bradley Burr said Parcel of Land with Buildings thereon." It was dated November 19, 1819. Bradley Burr drove the stage coach, and the waiting passengers were welcome to warm themselves by the fire in the old kitchen, which was the room on the south side of the house. He was well known as a stage coach driver. In his dark green cloak, red scarf and picturesque white stove-pipe hat, he drove his lumbering old stage coach, drawn by four horses, three times each week to Norwalk, faithfully carrying the mail.

The property came down from generation to generation, to a grandson, Marcus H. Burr, who on September 11, 1915, sold it to Dr. Alfred E. Cohen, and, on November 29, 1924, it was purchased by Elaine D. Tottle. Mrs. Tottle had in mind the creation of a place where guests would love to come, and to reproduce something of the atmosphere of the ancient inns which played so important a part in the lives of our forefathers. Her enterprise was opened to the public on May 5, 1925. A successful attempt was made to keep even the necessary additions true to Colonial style, and to cater to those who liked the simplicity, yet richness, of hospitality of a bygone age. Within a short time, a lifelong friend, Mrs. Edith S. Hiss, took charge of the Gift Shop, and several years later, William A. Tottle, son of Mrs. Tottle, became business manager. Mrs. Tottle is a Baltimorean, so there is more than a touch of Southern dignity and variety of regimen about the Inn. The old spinning wheel which furnished a name, is still extant, and the house, true to its traditions of gracious service, stands with its doors hospitably open to all.

J. D. Herz. D.D.S.

JOHN DICKEY HERTZ, D.D.S.—During more than forty years, Dr. John Dickey Hertz has been engaged in the active practice of dentistry at Stamford, winning a place among the leading professional men of the city and the State. His successful career is reflected in the many demands upon his services and the wide reputation he holds in his profession.

Dr. Hertz was born in Ephrata, Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, on December 27, 1870, a son of Dr. D. Rhein and Elizabeth (Hibshman) Hertz. He is descended from the old Pennsylvania family, established in that colony about 1739 when Conrad Hertz, or Hartz, and his three brothers came from Germany to settle in Alleghenyville.

Dr. D. Rhein Hertz, father of Dr. John Dickey Hertz, was born in Ephrata on May 19, 1837. A graduate of the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery in Philadelphia, he practiced his profession with continued success in the community of his birth and died there on October 14, 1905. He was a prominent figure in his community and a deacon of the Reformed Church.

Dr. D. Rhein Hertz married, on November 19, 1868, in Lancaster, Pennsylvania, Elizabeth Hibshman, who was born August 26, 1841, in Ephrata, daughter of John and Magdalena (Shirk) Hibshman. On the paternal side she was a descendant of Gebhard Hibshman, who came from Germany to Pennsylvania about 1732, settling at Ephrata.

Dr. John Dickey Hertz is a descendant of Colonial and Revolutionary families on both the paternal and the maternal sides. He spent his boyhood in Ephrata, Pennsylvania, and after completing his course in local public schools attended the State Normal School at Millersville. Meanwhile, he decided to adopt the profession of dentistry and accordingly entered the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery. In 1893 he was graduated from that institution with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery and shortly thereafter came to Stamford, Connecticut, where his activities have since centered. Until 1901 he was associated with Dr. A. G. Weed at 194 Atlantic Street. Upon the retirement of the latter, Dr. Hertz continued this practice and during the intervening years has been one of Connecticut's best known dentists. In 1926 he removed from Atlantic Street to Bedford Street, where his present offices are located. He is a member of the American Dental Association, the Connecticut State Dental Association, of which he was president from 1935 to 1936, the Western Fairfield County Dental Society, of which he was the first president, the First District Dental Society of New York City, the American Academy of Periodontology, the New York Academy of Dentistry, the Alumni Association of the University of Pennsylvania, the Delta Sigma Delta Fraternity, the Horace Wells Club of Connecticut, of which he was president in 1936, and the Stamford Dental Society. From June, 1922, to October, 1924, he served by appointment as a member of the Dental Commission of the State of Connecticut, and during the World War was director of the Stamford District in the Preparedness League of American Dentists, an organization formed to supply free dental service to all enlisted men. Dr. Hertz is also active in the work of the Dental Clinic which is maintained by the Visiting Nurses' Association of Stamford, contributing generously of his time and effort to its support. He is a member of the Stamford Hospital staff as dental surgeon.

In addition to his professional connections, Dr. Hertz is a director of the Stamford Trust Company and the Stamford Savings Bank. As a leading citizen of his community he has recognized the obligations of his position and exercised a constructive influence in civic affairs, taking part in numerous local drives in behalf of worthy causes. In past years he has been city chairman of campaigns to raise funds for the Boy Scouts, The Family Welfare Society and the Stamford Community Chest and, during the World War, participated actively in all the organized drives. He is also on the Advisory Committee of the Salvation Army. Dr. Hertz is affiliated fraternally with Union Lodge No. 5, Free and Accepted Masons, of which he was Master in 1913, when the Lodge celebrated the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of its organization. In this order he is also a member of Rittenhouse Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, Washington Council, Royal and Select Masters, Stamford Commandery, Knights Templar, Bridgeport Consistory, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, and Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is affiliated, in addition, with Puritan Lodge, No. 43, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is a member of the Stamford Chamber of Commerce, the Rotary Club, which he organized and served as first president, the Woodway Country Club and the Congregational Men's Club. He is a member of the Stamford Yacht Club. In earlier years Dr. Hertz served an enlistment in the Fourth Regiment, Connecticut National Guard, of which he was regimental commissary. In politics he is a Republican.

On August 4, 1903, in Toronto, Canada, Dr. John Dickey Hertz married (first) Emma C. Doyle, born in Brockville, Canada, daughter of Thomas and Elizabeth Doyle. She was educated in the Convent de Notre Dame in Brockville. Following her marriage she became active in various spheres of women's interests in Stamford, was a member of the Woman's Club, the Schubert Club, a director of the Visiting Nurses' Association, and during the World War was active in Red Cross work. She was a member of St. John's Roman Catholic Church in Stamford. Mrs. Hertz died in this city on January 16, 1927.

Dr. and Mrs. Hertz became the parents of one son, Clarence Edward, born May 1, 1904, educated in the Glenbrook Public School, the Brunswick School in Greenwich and Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Maine, from which he was graduated in 1926 with the degree of Bachelor of Science. On September 16, 1928, he married Elizabeth Murray of Port Chester, New York, and they are the parents of three children.

On June 8, 1929, Dr. Hertz married (second) Mary Caroline Dederick of Brooklyn, New York. Mrs. Hertz is a member of St. John's Episcopal Church of Stamford, the Woman's Club, the Schubert Club and the Daughters of the American Revolution.

JOHN D. FEARHAKE—Although his earlier life was spent in the South, where he first entered upon his career in the profession of law, John D. Fearhake has practiced for many years in New York and Connecticut. He is now an active member of the New Canaan bar.

Mr. Fearhake was born in Huntsville, Texas, on December 30, 1869, a son of George and Susan (Mason) Fearhake. His father was a merchant in Huntsville. Mr. Fearhake received his preliminary education in the public schools of his birthplace and after completing the high school course attended old Frederick Academy, at Frederick, Maryland. In 1889 he was graduated from the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, taking the degree of Bachelor of Civil Engineering. Meanwhile, however, he decided to enter the law and studied in Texas, where he was admitted to practice in 1892. During the following eight years, his activities centered at Galveston, but in 1900 he came to New York and in 1901 was admitted to the New York bar. He practiced in New York City from 1901 to 1929, and during much of this period was a member of the well known New York firm of Merrill, Rogers, Gifford and Woody. Mr. Fearhake has made his home in New Canaan since 1908. In 1912, Mr. Fearhake was also admitted to the Connecticut bar, although his principal professional interests remained in New York until 1929. Since that time he has been engaged in practice at New Canaan. He served from 1927 to 1931 as judge of the New Canaan Town Court and afterward as associate judge of the Town Court.

Mr. Fearhake is a member of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, the Connecticut Bar Association, and of several non-professiona organizations, including the New Canaan Country Club and the Free and Accepted Masons. ALFRED WILKINSON WALTON MARSHALL—Many different business activities have occupied the life of Alfred Wilkinson Walton Marshall, of Greenwich, who was for years a banker and publisher and is now engaged in the real estate business. He heads the A. W. W. Marshall Company, Inc., of this city, which he organized in August, 1935, to deal in real estate, insurance and appraisals, and himself became this company's president.

Mr. Marshall was born April 1, 1875, in Greenwich, Connecticut, son of Joseph Hoyt and Mary Louise Marshall. He attended the public schools of Greenwich and Port Chester, and began his banking career in Port Chester, New York, with the First National Bank. It was in 1890 that he took up his work with that institution. In 1906, he was made secretary of the Greenwich Trust Company, carrying on that work until 1935. He was for years secretary, vice-president and a director of the Greenwich Trust Company, but turned in his resignation from all three positions in December, 1934, in order to begin his own independent career in real estate and insurance. While still carrying on his banking activities, however, Mr. Marshall served, from 1922 to 1935, thirteen years in all, as secretary and a director of the Greenwich Trust and Title Company. The Greenwich Publishing Company was organized in 1915 to publish the "News and Graphic," a daily newspaper, and Mr. Marshall also became connected with that enterprise as a director and as secretary-treasurer.

His connection with real estate was a somewhat gradual development in his career. From 1905 to 1920, he was a director of the Field Point Land Company, one of the very exclusive developments in the Town of Greenwich. After 1905, he was also a director, secretary-treasurer and a guiding spirit in the Edgewood Park Land Company. Beginning in 1918, he was a director and secretary of the Greenwich Holding Company, which owned some of the very fine properties in Greenwich, which were formerly held by the late Robert Jay Walsh. Also, during his twenty-nine years of association with the Greenwich Trust Company, of Greenwich, he handled many millions of dollars worth of first mortgages and the insurance that was pledged with them, as well as the insurance of the trust company's building, which ran to about $500,000.

It was with such a background of experience that Mr. Marshall started his labors as president of the A. W. W. Marshall Company, Inc., of No. 100 West Putname Avenue, Greenwich. For three decades he has been active in civic affairs in Greenwich. For fifteen years he was a director of the Young Men's Christian Association, treasurer of the Chamber of Commerce, and treasurer of the Greenwich Country Club. He was for ten years a director and secretary of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club, and treasurer of the Second Congregational Church. While living in Port Chester, Mr. Marshall was, from 1900 until his resignation in 1904, town clerk of the Town of Rye, New York. During the World War he was chairman of all the Liberty Loan drives in Greenwich. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons, holding the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite Masonry, and member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. Formerly, he was president of the Rotary Club, and he has for years been a member of the Sons of the American Revolution. He belongs to the Westchester Country Club, the Greenwich Country Club and the Milbrook Country Club. Though no longer actively engaged in banking, he still takes an interest in the work of the Connecticut State Bankers' Association and the American Bankers' Association. Politically, he is a supporter of the Republican Party's policies and principles. He worships in the faith of the Congregational Church. His particular fitness for the work that he has undertaken in the business world as president of the A. W. W. Marshall Company, Inc., of Greenwich, has led him along the forward path in the commercial realm of life, and he is now one of the most active contributors to the development of Greenwich.

Alfred Wilkinson Walton Marshall married (first), on October 4, 1905, Edith Walsh, who died in 1910; and (second), on April 22, 1929, Catherine Harper. By the first marriage there was one son, Robert J. Walsh.

WALTER X. BURNS—Widely and favorably known as a lawyer in Greenwich, Walter X. Burns occupies a position of leadership and standing in his profession and in the community where he resides.

Mr. Burns was born July 23, 1904, in Waterbury, Connecticut, son of John and Emma (Hayes) Burns. He received his early education at the St. Thomas Parochial School, in Waterbury, his birthplace, later attending Crosby High School, in that place. He was graduated from Amherst College in 1925 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and, in 1928, took his Bachelor of Laws degree from the Law School of Yale University, in New Haven. Admitted, in 1928, to the bar of the State of Connecticut, Mr. Burns at once began his active practice of law, in which he has continued down to the present. He became an associate, in that same year, of William L. Tierney.

Along with his other activities, Mr. Burns has been a leader in professional, civic and social affairs. He is member and president of the Greenwich Bar Association, secretary of Greenwich Zoning Board of Appeals, and tax attorney of the Town of Greenwich. He is a member of the Young Men's Christian Association, the Theta Delta Chi and Phi Alpha Delta fraternities, and St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church. A Republican in his political views, he is a leader in promoting many worth while enterprises through the partisan organization. In spare time he is fond of outdoor life and healthful recreations, particularly enjoying trout fishing whenever opportunity offers.

Mr. Burns married, January 7, 1936, Margaret M. Mitchell, of Waterbury.

WILLIAM SMITH HIRSCHBERG—A leader in the affairs of Greenwich, William Smith Hirschberg is a member of the legal profession and a participant in numerous enterprises of distinction in his community and in the circle of society in which he moves.

Mr. Hirschberg was born October 8, 1889, in Glenbrook, Connecticut, son of William R. and Mary (Smith) Hirschberg. He received his early education in the public schools of Darien and at Stamford High School, later attending Colgate University. In 1912 he was graduated from the New York Law School, and in June of that same year was admitted to the bar of the State of Connecticut and began his professional practice. His first legal work was with Walsh and Wright, but at the death of R. J. Walsh, in 1917, he became a member of the firm of Wright and Hirschberg. Later this enterprise came to be known as Wright, Hirschberg and Pettengill, and finally, on January 1, 1935, it came to be styled Wright, Hirschberg, Pettengill and Strong. This firm is engaged in a general practice of law, and the contribution that Mr. Hirschberg has made to its success has been a notable one.

He is a member of the Connecticut State Bar Association, a non-resident member of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, and a member of the American Bar Association. His work in the legal profession has naturally led to other activities, both in business and in the realm of public service. He is chairman of the Board of Estimate and Taxation, of Greenwich, and has held other public offices. For many years he was a member of the Board of Education, as well as a trustee of Greenwich Academy. In 1929 he was State Senator from Greenwich, and his service has also included the judgeship of the Town Court. He is a staunch Republican.

Mr. Hirschberg is also a director of the Trust Company of Old Greenwich and a director and president of the Greenwich Mortgage Company. In the Free and Accepted Masons he is connected with the local lodge. He is a member of the Second Congregational Church. His work has also included service as police commissioner of Greenwich. A member of the Innis Arden Golf Club of Old Greenwich, Mr. Hirschberg is particularly fond of golf and of the opportunity for healthful outdoor exercise that it affords him.

On June 17, 1916, William Smith Hirschberg married Margaret Louise Roberts, daughter of John and Sarah (Phillips) Roberts. The ceremony took place in Stamford. The children of this marriage were the following: 1. Margaret Smith, born May 3, 1917. 2. William Roberts, born September 3, 1921. 3. Mary Louise, born April 4, 1923. 4. John Roberts, born February 15, 1928.

GEORGE J. LACOURSE — Builder of many churches, banks, business blocks and residences, as well as schools and other public buildings, George J. Lacourse is not only one of Bristol's leading contractors but also an outstanding public citizen with years of civic service to his credit.

George J. Lacourse was born in Bristol, December 10, 1880, son of the late Leon and Euphemia (Dube) Lacourse, who were both natives of Canada and members of families of French origin. Leon Lacourse, who came to Bristol in 1879, was a carpenter for many years and, in his later life, a building contractor.

Leaving school at the age of twelve to enter the shops of the New Departure Company, George J Lacourse received but a limited formal education one which, however, he greatly amplified by subsequent private study. When fifteen, he left the factory in which he was first employed and became an apprentice carpenter. Rapidly mastering his trade in 1900, at the age of twenty, he set himself up as

OHN LOCKWOOD WATERBURY—Widely known f his activities in the coal, fuel and wood business i Stamford, John Lockwood Waterbury is secre- ta and a director of David Waterbury and Son, I , of this city.

r. Waterbury was born July 10, 1913, in Stam- fo , Connecticut, son of David and Ida May (hn) Waterbury and member of an old Connecti- cu family. He represents the seventh generation of e Waterbury line to reside in Stamford. More co plete details concerning the historical back- gr und of the family in this city will be found in th volume under the heading of "David Water- bu ," wherein is also recorded the life story of the fa er of John Lockwood Waterbury.

hn L. Waterbury attended the Taft School, at W ertown; the King School, at Stamford; and als a business college in which he did much to add to is knowledge of commercial affairs. In 1932 he ecame associated with David Waterbury and So Inc., which was formally incorporated in that year. David Waterbury is president of this business house, of which his grandfather, the great-grandfather of John L. Waterbury, was the founder. John L. Waterbury himself was made secretary of the company in 1934, after two years of association with it, and also became at that time a member of the board of directors. His brother, Daniel C. Waterbury, was made vice-president and treasurer. The firm has been an important one in Stamford's economic life, and now furnishes fuel oil, as well as the ancient commodities of coal and wood, to meet the demands of the trade.

Along with his activities in the commercial world, John L. Waterbury is a member of several social and civic groups. He belongs to Lodge No. 899, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and to the Sons of the American Revolution and is a thirty-second degree Mason. He is also affiliated with the Stamford Yacht Club, the Suburban Club, the Stamford Gun Club and the Sound Beach Gun Club, and the Woodway Country Club. His religious association is with St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, of Stamford. His deep interest in the activities of his community and its people and his desire to promote the general well-being have been distinguishing qualities in Mr. Waterbury, who is, as a result of his many accomplishments, widely honored and trusted.

John L. Waterbury married, on July 14, 1934, at Stamford, Connecticut, Janice Wright, whose mother's name is Evelyn (Dudley) Wright. The ceremony took place in St. John's Church.

EDWARD GAYNOR BRENNAN—Maintaining offices in Stamford, his birthplace, Edward Gaynor Brennan is one of his community's successful lawyers. His legal connections have caused him to be widely known and popular in business circles, and he is credited with real distinction as one of Stamford's leading citizens.

Mr. Brennan was born July 12, 1902, in Stamford, Connecticut, son of William H. and Margaret (Sexton) Brennan. His father, who died February 20, 1923, was formerly chief of police of Stamford for a quarter of a century, as well as a councilman of this city. The mother makes her home in Stamford.

Public and parochial schools in Stamford, as well as the high school here, provided the preliminary education of Edward Gaynor Brennan, who afterward became a student at Rutgers University, there taking his degree in 1925. In 1928 he received his Bachelor of Laws degree at Yale University, New Haven. In that same year he was admitted to the bar of Connecticut, and at once he began his practice of law. He has been eminently successful in his work, and is now situated at No. 105 Bedford Street, Stamford. He is Connecticut counsel for The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company, as well as the legal representatives of other important interests. Since 1932, he has been president of the Bedford Realty Company, of Stamford.

A Republican in his political views, he has been consistently interested in promoting the general welfare through service in public office and by every means at his disposal. In 1932, when the Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt swept the country in the elections, Mr. Brennan was one of the few Republican candidates to withstand the Democratic landslide. He was elected to the General Assembly of Connecticut in that year, and served in the 1933 session. He led his ticket at that time and so gained a great deal of prestige in political circles. In 1933, 1934 and 1935, he also was prosecuting attorney in Stamford. In 1935 he became State Senator.

Mr. Brennan is a member of the Stamford Bar Association and the American Bar Association. He belongs to St. John's Roman Catholic Church, of Stamford. In spare time he greatly enjoys participation in healthful sports, notably athletics, golf and handball.

On July 8, 1929, at Stamford, Connecticut, Edward Gaynor Brennan married Frances Ward Clearly, daughter of William H. and Anna (Ward) Clearly. The children of this marriage are: 1. Edward Gaynor Brennan, Jr., born August 9, 1930. 2. Frances Ward Brennan, born November 17, 1931. 3. Donald Carroll, born February 2, 1937.

FRANCIS K. NORMAN—During the past five years, Francis K. Norman has been associated with the well known Stamford law firm of Cummings and Lockwood. In this connection he has been active in the firm's large practice and has established his position as one of the ablest younger members of the Stamford bar.

Mr. Norman was born in Darien, Connecticut, on July 6, 1903, a son of Judge Mark W. Norman, who is a member of the firm of Cummings and Lockwood, and Florence (Kendall) Norman. He received his preliminary education in the public schools of Darien, the King School at Stamford, Stamford High School and Phillips-Exeter Academy, following which he entered Princeton University and was there graduated in 1928. He prepared for his profession at Columbia Law School, Harvard Law School and Boston University Law School, fro which he was graduated in 1932. In the same ye he was admitted to the Connecticut bar and enter upon his present association with the firm of Cu
mings and Lockwood, whose former senior memb was Homer S. Cummings, Attorney General of t
United States. Offices of the firm are situated
No. 1 Atlantic Street, Stamford. During the inte vening years, Mr. Norman has risen steadily professional stature, meeting the duties devolvi upon him with distinction and success. He is member of the several bar associations, the W
Burn Golf Club, the Tokeneke Club and the Camp
Club of Princeton, and is a director of The Ho
Bank and Trust Company of Darien.

On June 21, 1930, Francis K. Norman marri
Louise Packard, daughter of Edward B. and Co
(Hewitt) Packard.

One son, Mark Packard Norman, was born Ju
14, 1936.

J. HOWARD BOGARDUS—Through his long serv as secretary and treasurer of the Stamford Sa ings Bank, J. Howard Bogardus has won an esta lished place in the business life of the city.
has administered his responsible office in a ma
ner to reflect credit both upon himself and up the institution with which he is associated.

Mr. Bogardus was born at Fishkill-on-the-Huds
(now Beacon), New York, on April 8, 1874, a s of John S. and Kate (Schutt) Bogardus. He descended from the ancient Netherlands fam founded in this country by Everardus Bogard better known as Dominie Bogardus, who played prominent part in the early life of the New Amst dam settlement. Dominie Bogardus, a native
Holland, sailed from that country for Fort Amst dam in 1633 on the Dutch frigate "Zoutberg," company with the newly appointed governor, maj
general, director-general, provost marshal, a Burgomaster Wouter van Twiller. He was the s ond minister in the colony, being preceded only Michaelius, and was long thought to have been first. Dominie Bogardus, dissatisfied with his ori nal church, which was situated on what is now north side of Pearl Street, between Whitehall a Broad, persuaded Governor van Twiller to hav new church built within the walls of the fort. La he also obtained a parsonage, on the front door which he placed a brass knocker he had brou from Holland. It has been said that "the outside his house was the delight of the passer-by, wl inside he dispensed a cordial hospitality." In y r of his arrival he acquired a tobacco plantation o Manhattan Island. As one of the few men of e cation and culture in the colony, it was the p ilege of the minister to sit in the council with it leaders. Dominie Bogardus, a man of sturdy in ependence, became involved in a bitter dispute w the Governor, who sought to curtail that privile and deprive him of his influence in the governm t of the colony. Recognizing the fruitlessness o uch strife, the clergyman, in 1647, received perm sion to visit his native land and sailed on the b "Princess," which was lost with some eighty p engers. He was survived by his widow, the ce rated Anneke Webber Jansen, or Anneke Jans, w m he had married in 1638. She was the daughte of Tryntje Jans, or Tryn Jonas, who, as a profe onal midwife in the employ of the West India C pany, performed for the Colony of New Amsterda the responsible duties equivalent to those now re ered by the trained nurse. She married (secon Roeloff Jansen van Masterlandt, who came to N Amsterdam in 1630 with his wife and child as armer to the Patroon Kilaen van Rensselaer at salary equivalent to seventy-two dollars a year. In 35 or 1636 he was settled among the dignitaries of e colony, receiving from Governor van Twiller a tent for sixty-two acres of land. About this far , which passed subsequently into the possession of inity Church, an historic controversy has arisen. An ke Jans Bogardus, after the death of her sec d husband, had the grant confirmed to hersel and her heirs, upon the subsequent capture of the province by the British, also had the grant cor med by the first British Governor, Richard Ni les. In 1671 they sold it to Governor Lovelac but one of the heirs failed to sign the convey ce and this fact has given rise to the extensive liti ion and controversy between the Trinity Ch h Corporation, in whose hands the immensely val le property is vested, and the descendants of the riginal owners.

F m Everardus and Anneke (Jans) Bogardus, the ne of descent is traced through their son, Cor lis, who was born September 9, 1640, and remov l as a young man to Albany, New York, residing here until his death in 1666. He married Hel a Teller, daughter of William Teller, of Alb y, and it was their descendants who first laid clai to the Trinity Church property. Their son, Cor lis (2) Bogardus, born in Albany, October 13, 1665 removed to Kingston in boyhood with his uncl Pieter Bogardus, and there married Rachel De Witt, daughter of Tjerck Classen De Witt, who came to America some time prior to 1656. This family was illustrious in the Netherlands, whose government was administered by Grand Pensioner Johannes De Witt from 1652 to 1672. In this country the line is also distinguished. Maria De Witt, a descendant of the American progenitor, Tjerck Classen De Witt, married Captain James Clinton, who became a general in the American Revolution, and their son, De Witt Clinton, was one of the ablest and best loved governors in the history of the State of New York. Cornelis (2) Bogardus was the owner of a sailing vessel plying between the Hudson River ports and possibly trading at more distant coastal points. He was prominent in affairs of the colony until his death in 1718.

Cornelis (3) Bogardus, a son of Cornelis (2) and Rachel (De Witt) Bogardus, was born in Kingston, New York, January 8, 1699, and died February 12, 1758. He married Catharine Tudor (Toeter), daughter of Captain John Tudor, and shortly afterward settled in Fishkill, New York, on land situated in the "Rombout Precinct," or Patent, the vast estate of 85,000 acres belonging to his aunt, "Madame Brett" (Catherine Rombout). Unusually well educated for the day, he assumed major responsibilities in the administration of his aunt's estate and throughout the remainder of his life was one of the most influential residents of the Fishkill settlement.

Matthew Bogardus, son of Cornelis (3) and Catharine Tudor (Toeter) Bogardus, was baptized September 10, 1740. A member of his family in the fifth American generation, he married Abigail Ferguson and among their children was Abraham, born January 28, 1771. He was the father of Samuel Bogardus, born January 16, 1806, who made his home in Fishkill, where he became a builder and contractor on a very large scale. He also became an extensive property holder, owning at one time nearly the whole of Spy Hill, of Revolutionary fame. He served as deputy sheriff and in other offices, and in the former capacity was constantly on duty at the time of the draft riots during the Civil War.

John S. Bogardus, son of Samuel, and father of J. Howard Bogardus, of this record, was born on December 27, 1828, and died on June 14, 1903. His early years were spent in Fishkill, where he completed his education and subsequently entered his father's business, serving in various capacities until his appointment as superintendent and general manager. As such, he had active charge of the large building operations carried on by the concern. With passing years he became increasingly interested in architectural design and eventually took up the study of architecture in New York City. He entered the practice of his profession at Newburgh, New York, and rapidly established his professional reputation, becoming a member of the American Institute of Architects. At length he returned to New York City, where his services were retained in the design of many important buildings in the metropolitan area. In 1881, Mr. Bogardus settled at Stamford and from that time until his death continued in the practice of architecture. Many of the finest buildings in Stamford were erected from his designs, including several school buildings, numerous residences built on an elaborate scale and a number of business blocks. His talents won him wide recognition and brought him a distinguished position among the architects of his day. John S. Bogardus married Kate Schutt, and they became the parents of a number of children, of whom three lived to reach maturity, as follows: 1. Frank Walcott, member of Getman, Judd & Company, Stamford lumber dealers, and a prominent business man of this city. 2. J. Howard, of this record. 3. Clarence Elmer, who is also associated with Getman, Judd & Company.

J. Howard Bogardus was still a boy when the family home was established in Stamford. After completing his early education under his mother's tuition, he attended Stamford High School and prepared for a business career in Merrill's Business College. Entering the employ of the Stamford Savings Bank as a clerk, he served a thorough apprenticeship in banking practice and theory, and as he demonstrated his capacity for larger resposibilities, rose gradually within the organization. In July, 1911, the position of secretary and treasurer having become vacant, he was elected to this office, in which he has served during the intervening years. As one of the major officers of the institution he has an influential part in the direction of the bank, both in shaping and executing its policies. His judgment is highly valued not only by his immediate associates, but in wider banking circles and his professional standing is reflected in his having served over a period of years on various executive committees of the Savings Bank Association of Connecticut, on committees of The National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, and as vice-president and chairman of the Fairfield County Group No. 3 of Savings Bankers. For a number of years M Bogardus was identified with the Stamford Tru Company as director and member of the executiv committee.

He was also a member of the Henry J. Evan Protective Committee of the Chicago and Easter Illinois Railroad, and has served as treasurer o the Stamford Children's Home, an institution i whose support he has been much interested, an for two years he was a member of its board o trustees. He was a member of the Liberty Loa Committee in every Stamford campaign during th World War and has been influential in the civi life of the community, although always remainin by preference in the background. Mr. Bogard was formerly active in the Young Men's Christia Association and was for some years a member the Stamford Yacht Club and its nominating committee. He was a member of the Suburban Clu and is a member of Woodway Country Club, Congregational Men's Club and Truesdale Lake Clu He was a member of St. Andrew's Episcop Church, which he has served variously as a memb of the vestry, treasurer of the church and treasurer of the Sunday School. Although prompt i meeting the duties of good citizenship and ready t lend a helping hand in behalf of worthy movements, his personal tastes and habits have bee simple and his leisure is devoted principally to h family.

On February 15, 1908, J. Howard Bogardus ma ried Kate Noble. They are the parents of o daughter, Catherine, born December 14, 1911.

Mrs. J. Howard Bogardus, who is a member St. John's Episcopal Church in Stamford and h been active in various spheres of women's intere in the community, is a daughter of James and An Elizabeth (Daniel) Noble. She is descended fro Thomas Noble, born about 1632, probably in En land, who came to the Massachusetts Colony son time prior to January 5, 1653, when he was admitt as an inhabitant of Boston. He moved thence Springfield and finally to Westfield, where he b came a leading citizen. From him and his wi Hannah Warriner, the line is traced through Ma thew, their son; through Joseph Noble, in the thi American generation, who settled in Great Barrin ton and was prominent there; through his s Joseph Noble, 2d; through his son, Roger Nob born in 1742 in Sheffield, Massachusetts, died September 15, 1810, a soldier in the French a Indian Wars, in the Revolutionary War, duri

ITCHELL STUART LITTLE—For the past qu ter of a century Mitchell Stuart Little, president of The M. S. Little Manufacturing Company, and of er in a number of other large industrial and fir cial organizations, has been one of the most in ential and successful business leaders in the City of Hartford, where he is also prominent socially.

r. Little was born in Hartford, January 5, 1885, th son of George H. and Mary Belle (Little) Little. H received a general education in the public schools of is native city and after completing this part of is studies matriculated at Yale University, from wl h he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts deg e in the class of 1907. The same year he ret ned to Hartford and embarked upon a business car r that has since been marked for its distinction and success. His first position was with the Whitloc Coil Pipe Company of this city, which he was ass iated with for five years. Satisfied that he had sec ed a thorough and practical foundation here, he res ned in 1912, to found The M. S. Little Manufac ring Company, which has been devoted to the mar facture of brass plumbing and heating goods. For a decade he operated this venture under indiv al ownership, which he relinquished in 1922, wh the company was incorporated. At this time he was lected president and director of the firm, which has ontinued to expand and develop under his able mar gement.

His achievements have brought him further important business connections which have served to establish him as one of the outstanding leaders in the industrial and financial affairs of the community. In addition to the aforementioned office he is also president and director of the Sigourney Tool Company, the Smyth Manufacturing Company, and vice-president and director of the E. C. Fuller Company of New York. He is a member of the board of directors of The Standard Screw Company, The Arrow-Hart and Hegeman Electric Company, the Terry Steam Turbine Company, Smyth-Horne, Limited, of London, England, and three corporations of the Aetna group, which include the Aetna Life Insurance Company, the Aetna Casualty and Surety Company, and the Automobile Insurance Company. He is also a director for his old employers, the Whitlock Coil Pipe Company, holds the same office in the Hartford Gas Company and is a trustee of the Society for Savings.

While he is a Republican in politics, pressure of business affairs has prevented him from taking an active part in civic affairs. Socially, however, he is a widely known and popular figure, holding membership in many of the leading clubs of this vicinity, including the Hartford Club, the Hartford Golf Club, the Yale Alumni Association of Hartford County, the 20th Century Club. In religion he worships at the South Congregational Church.

On February 8, 1919, Mr. Little married Elizabeth Hill Hapgood, daughter of Edward H. and Mary Elizabeth (Smith) Hapgood of Hartford. Mr. and Mrs. Little are the parents of three children: 1. Virginia, born February 14, 1920. 2. Stuart West, born December 17, 1921. 3. Edward Hapgood, born June 20, 1927.

MATTHEW H. KENEALY—Continuing the tradition of prominence at the bar and in public life associated for many years with the family name, Matthew H. Kenealy, of Stamford, has become a well-known figure in this State. He is now a member of the Stamford law firm of Kenealy and Ryan, and has filled with credit a number of responsible offices both in the municipal government and in the service of the Commonwealth.

Mr. Kenealy was born at Stamford on September 16, 1884, a son of Michael and Elizabeth A. (Fagan) Kenealy. His father, who died on September 16, 1916, was also a lawyer, studying for his profession in the office of James Olmstead, in Stamford, after completing a public school education. Admittted to the Connecticut bar, he rose rapidly in his profession and over a period of many years took an active part in public life. He was first prosecuting attorney of the Borough Court of Stamford, in 1883; served in both the House and the State Senate; and was Speaker of the House in 1903. From 1904 to 1912, he was also chairman of the Republican State Central Committee.

Matthew H. Kenealy received his preliminary education in the public schools of Stamford, including the high school, and at Suffield School, in Suffield, Connecticut. He prepared for his chosen profession at Yale University, where he was graduated from the Law School in 1910, and in June of the same year was admitted to the Connecticut bar. Immediately thereafter he began the practice of law at Stamford in association with his father, continuing until 1915, when he became a member of the firm of Fessenden and Kenealy. In 1920, this firm was reorganized as Fessenden, Kenealy and Ryan and, in 1931, was dissolved and succeeded by the present firm of Kenealy and Ryan, now located at 322 Main Street, Stamford. During the intervening years, Mr. Kenealy had become a well-established member of the Stamford bar, carrying on a large general practice whose extent and importance reflected the value placed upon his services. He continues as one of Stamford's most active attorneys.

In addition, Mr. Kenealy has undertaken many services in the public interest. He is a former registrar of voters at Stamford; former prosecuting attorney of the City Court of Stamford; has served one term (1919) in the lower house of the State Legislature, and four terms in the State Senate, 1921, 1923, 1925 and 1926. He has also been chairman of the Board of Recreation of Stamford since 1915, and was assistant to the Statute Revision Commission in 1929, 1931, 1933 and 1935. He has always had an enlightened interest in the cause of civic progress and has made substantial contributions to its advancement. Mr. Kenealy is a Republican in politics and, from 1926 through 1930, was chairman of the Republican Town Committee. He is a member of the American Bar Association and the Connecticut State Bar Association, and is active fraternally, notably in the Knights of Columbus, which he has served as president of the building association of the Order since its organization at Stamford in 1920. He has been very instrumental in winning success for the building program. In addition, Mr. Kenealy is a member and Past Exalted Ruler of Stamford Lodge, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a member of the Catholic Church, and finds his principal recreation in athletic sports, particularly golf and swimming.

On December 25, 1918, in Darien, Connecticut, Matthew H. Kenealy married Estelle E. Cave, daughter of Thomas P. and Etty E. (Oberlander) Cave. Her father was a contractor and builder in this State. Mr. and Mrs. Kenealy have two children: 1. Matthew H., Jr., born May 19, 1921. 2. John C., born May 21, 1924.

JAMES T. CRANE—After more than a quarter of a century as a member of the New York bar, James T. Crane opened offices in Stamford, and now carries on a general practice in both cities. He has been a resident of Stamford for many years and is a well-known figure in its public life.

Mr. Crane was born at Newburgh, New York, on December 31, 1876, a son of James M. and Elizabeth P. (Murray) Crane. His father, an educator, was principal of the high school and superintendent of schools at Newburgh.

James T. Crane was educated in the public schools of Newburgh and at Newburgh Academy, following which he entered Yale University, from which he was graduated with the Bachelor of Arts degree in 1898. In 1900, he was grauduated from New York Law School with the degree of Bachelor of Laws and, in July of that year, was admitted to the New York bar, entering practice with the New York firm of Boardman, Platt and Soley. Mr. Crane continued his association with this firm, later O'Brien, Boardman and Platt, until 1909. Since that time he has practiced independently in New York City, with offices at No. 2 Rector Street. In 1927, he was admitted to the Connecticut bar and also opened offices in Stamford, dividing his time between his legal duties in both cities. He enjoys a distinguished professional reputation based on his successful record at the bar, and the demands on his services over the past twenty-five years have grown to large proportions.

As a resident of Stamford, Mr. Crane has also been actively interested in the civic life of the municipality and in public affairs. He is an influential Republican and has served since 1925 as treasurer of the Republican Town Committee, taking a prominent part in local counsels of his party. In 1930, he was chosen clerk of the City Court of the City of Stamford and has administered that office, in addition to his other professional responsibilities, during the intervening years.

During the period of the World War, Mr. Crane was a member of the Connecticut State Guard. He has been a member of various civic and social organizations at Stamford, and is a communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church. His favorite recreation is golf.

On October 11, 1906, James T. Crane married Florence Robinson, daughter of Colonel E. R. Robinson, of the United States Marine Corps, and Emma C. (Wallen) Robinson. Their residence is on Valley Road, Stamford.

FREDERICK A. REININGER, D.D.S.—When Dr. Frederick A. Reininger came to the United States in 1901 to become an American citizen and establish his home in this country, he had already begun the study of dentistry in his native Austria. Completing preparations for his career he entered practice and during the past quarter of a century has been an established figure in professional circles of the City of Stamford, where his large practice centers.

Dr. Reininger was born in Vienna, Austria, on February 21, 1884, a son of Anthony and Emma (Thielemann) Reininger. His father, who was born on January 12, 1854, and died on November 22, 1909, was a life-long resident of Austria and in his business career became proprietor of one of the fine coffee shops for which the City of Vienna is noted. The mother, Emma (Thielemann) Reininger, was born on April 28, 1863, in Dresden, Germany.

Frederick A. Reininger received his academic education in Viennese schools, graduating from the Gymnasium in 1898. For three years afterward, he studied dentistry under the Viennese dental surgeon, Dr. Hillischer. At the end of that time he sailed for America and in 1901, settled in Brooklyn. Enrolling in the College of Dental and Oral Surgery in New York City, he was graduated there in 1907, with the degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery and for five years devoted himself to professional duties as an associate of various New York practitioners. In 1912, however, he established his home and his practice in Stamford, Connecticut, with offices originally located in the Advocate Building. From 1921 to 1923, he was situated on Main Street and since 1923 has had his offices on Bedford Street. His authoritative knowledge of the whole field of dentistry and dental surgery has won him the confidence of the city and his practice has grown steadily with passing years. He has always kept abreast of developments in dental science, maintaining completely modern equipment and adopting new techniques as soon as their value had been conclusively demonstrated.

Dr. Reininger, who enjoys the highest professional standing, is a member of the First District Dental Association of New York City, the Stamford Dental Society, the Connecticut State Dental Society and the American Dental Association. He is a member of the regular dental staff of the Stamford Hospital and a member of the dental staff of the Visiting Nurse Association in this city. In addition to his professional connections, he is active fraternally, being affiliated with Rippowam Lodge, No. 24, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and with Union Lodge, No. 5, Free and Accepted Masons. In the latter order he is also a member of several higher bodies, including Rittenhouse Chapter, No. 11, Royal Arch Masons, and Washington Council, No. 6, Royal and Select Masters. Dr. Reininger is a Republican in politics and a communicant of the Lutheran Church. He finds his principal recreation in music and is a gifted singer, possessing a fine baritone voice, which is displayed to advantage both in opera and lieder. His knowledge of the resources of music is extensive and his taste discriminating.

On October 3, 1912, in Ridgewood, New Jersey, Dr. Reininger married Amanda G. Carstens, who was born June 15, 1892, in Jersey City, New Jersey. She is a daughter of John F. and Amanda (Dibbern) Carstens, both of German birth, who came to the United States in early life. Dr. and Mrs. Reininger are the parents of three sons: 1. Frederick A., Jr., born July 16, 1914, a graduate of Colgate University. 2. Herbert, born February 6, 1919, who graduated from Peekskill Military Academy, in 1936 and is now studying voice at the Institute of Musical Art of The Juilliard School of Music, New York City. 3. Richard, born October 16, 1925.

WILLIAM CASE HUBBARD—A life-long resident of Bloomfield, where he devotes himself to dairying and farming pursuits, William Case Hubbard has occupied a position of prominence in the life of his community for many years. He has served frequently in public office and in other positions of civic responsibility, contributing substantially to the progress of the town which has so long been his home.

Mr. Hubbard was born in Bloomfield on January 7, 1881, a son of William Gorton and Adelle Violet (Case) Hubbard. His father, who was born here on March 16, 1856, was a farmer. He was a major in the Governor's Horse Guards and served a two-year term as Representative, beginning in 1881. William Gorton Hubbard died in 1919. He was a son of Norman and Sarah Elizabeth (Gorton)

Hubbard, and a grandson of Hector and Elizabeth (Wilson) Hubbard, all farmers born in Wintonbury (now Bloomfield). Hector Hubbard, who died March 18, 1842, aged forty-one years, was a son of Nathaniel and Sarah (Phelps) Hubbard. Hector's wife Elizabeth (Wilson) Hubbard died September 28, 1838, aged thirty-six years.

William Case Hubbard, of this record, was educated in the public schools of Bloomfield and in Northwest High School, Hartford, from which he was graduated. He has been a farmer throughout his active career, raising fruits and vegetables, but devoting his principal attention to dairying, a field in which he is well known. In 1927-1928, he was an appraiser and adjuster under the Commission of Domestic Animals of the State of Connecticut, an appointment reflecting his reputation as an authority on animal husbandry. For this position his long experience as a farmer thoroughly qualified him.

Mr. Hubbard has found many other opportunities for public service, however, enjoying both the confidence and respect of his fellow townsmen. Over a period of two decades, he was for twelve years assessor of the Town of Bloomfield. He was Justice of the Peace for several years, and in 1927 was elected tax collector of the Bloomfield Center Fire District, an office which he still holds. In 1933 he was elected a member of the Board of Education, and in 1936 was re-elected for a second three-year term, serving at the present time as chairman of the board. Mr. Hubbard was also a director of the Prosser Public Library for several years. He has devoted himself with fidelity to the duties of these offices, meeting successfully all responsibilities devolving upon him.

In addition to his other connections, Mr. Hubbard is a director of the Wintonbury Cemetery Association and chairman of the board of directors of the Bloomfield Cemetery Association. He is active fraternally in Hiram Lodge, No. 98, Free and Accepted Masons, at Bloomfield, and Tunxis Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of which he has twice served as Master, and is Past Patron of Wintonbury Chapter, No. 81, Order of the Eastern Star, of which he was a charter member. He is also an active member of the First Congregational Church of Bloomfield and serves as chairman of the board of trustees of the trust funds of the church.

On March 28, 1916, at Hartford, William Case Hubbard married Josephine S. Curran, of Holyoke, Massachusetts. She is a leading figure in the Order of the Eastern Star at Bloomfield, having served as Matron and Secretary of Wintonbury Chapter. Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard are the parents of two sons: 1. Norman, born January 2, 1917. 2. Talcott, born July 23, 1923.

JOHN PAUL CRANOUSKI—New crops and new producers of them have been characteristic of the modern period in Connecticut agriculture. In the Connecticut Valley the growing of certain tobaccos has been specialized, and among the prominent leaders in this industry is John Paul Cranouski, a native of Lithuania, born May 16, 1868, son of Paul and Elizabeth (Rukus) Cranouski, both deceased.

Mr. Cranouski came to the United States in 1889, and for the larger part of a year worked on a Massachusetts farm. There followed a year in the coal mines of Mahanoy City, Pennsylvania, but in 1891 he came to Poquonock, Connecticut, and started to work in the tobacco fields. Eight years later, 1899, he was able to purchase the homestead of forty-four acres which he still owns. He plants about twenty-five acres to tobacco annually, which in the terms of the industry is a good amount. He is a former director of the Tobacco Growers Association, of Windsor, and an authority on his specialty. Mr. Cranouski is a Catholic in his religious faith, treasurer of the Kazimero Society, and a member of the American Roman Catholics Alliance.

At Windsor, Connecticut, on July 2, 1895, John Paul Cranouski married Rose Bubbles, daughter of John and Anna Bubbles, both deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Cranouski are the parents of five children: 1. Archie Joseph, married Theresa Padigamas, and they have a son William. 2. Mona C., married Peter K. Meakin, and they have two children, Gladys and John. 3. Lucy, married Paul Peters, and is the mother of a son, Paul Peters, Jr. 4. William, married Edna Strahl, and they have a daughter, Hedwig Cranouski. 5. Peter, married Florence Strahl.

THE LUM FAMILY—JESSIE MABEL LUM—The last member of her branch of the Lum Family, Jessie Mabel Lum, of "Quaker Farms," Oxford, Connecticut, worthily carries on the traditions of her ancestors. She lives in a house erected in 1812, that is surrounded by an estate comprising two hundred and ninety-five acres of land. Miss Lum was educated at St. Margaret's School, Waterbury, from which she returned to Oxford to play her part in the social circles of her birthplace. She has long been notably active in religious and charitable works as a member of Christ Episcopal Church, Oxford.

Harpin Lum

The source of the following tracings of her ancestry is the book "Genealogy of the Lum Family," compiled by Edward H. Lum, of Chatham, New Jersey. It is the result of two decades of work and is written with exceptional care. Not even the author attempts to decide whether the name is derived from the Saxon, Scottish or English, for it is a very ancient surname, almost as old as the first attempts to denote persons by individual names. There were Lums in England in the middle 1200's, "and nowhere else," says Edward H. Lum, of Chatham.

The American progenitor of the family with which this account has to do, was one John Lum, born about 1620, in Yorkshire, England, the first record of whom in New England, is dated 1642, where he is listed as one of the pioneers of Stamford, Connecticut, who "was granted a home lot and land in a field to be enclosed." During the following years he moved about a great deal, being in Hempstead, Long Island, in 1644; Southampton, Long Island, 1651; Huntington, Long Island, 1657; and was at Fairfield, Connecticut, prior to 1667, where it is supposed that he died. While not a matter of record it is believed that John Lum married, in 1642, a Miss Strickland, at Stamford, Connecticut. She may have been the daughter of Sergeant John Strickland, who was at Charlestown, Massachusetts, as early as 1630, and within five years removed to Connecticut, locating at Wethersfield before going to Stamford, in 1640.

Sixth and last of the children of John Lum was Jonathan (2), born about 1666, who died in 1758. He is on record as purchasing land from the Indians in the Derby, Connecticut, section, August 15, 1695, but was a land owner in Derby as early as 1695. He married (second), in New Milford, Connecticut, Lydia (Warner) Bronson, widow of Deacon Samuel Bronson. She was born in Waterbury, March 13, 1680, daughter of John, Jr., and Ann (Norton) Warner. Second of his children was Jonathan (3), born in 1710, who died February 25, 1802. He married, March 13, 1734, Elizabeth Tomlinson, daughter of Samuel and Hannah Tomlinson. Both this Jonathan and his wife were buried at "Quaker Farms," Oxford, Connecticut.

Of their children was Jonathan (4), usually written as the "third Jonathan," born December 10, 1750, who died March 6, 1811. He married (first) Sarah Andrews (or Sarah Fairchild), and their first and only child was Jonathan (5), born January 16, 1773, who died February 2, 1833. He married, October 10, 1793, Charity Frazier, and of their children was George (6), born January 28, 1809, who died November 15, 1895. He married, January 1, 1838, Mary Sherman, daughter of John and Cynthia (Hyde) Sherman. They had three children, of whom the second was called Harpin, an old family name.

This Harpin Adam Lum, of the seventh generation from John Lum, was born in the Bowers Hill district of Oxford, Connecticut, on April 13, 1844, and died there April 10, 1882. On December 9, 1874, he married Mary W. Northrop, daughter of Milo and Emma (White) Northrop, of Oxford. Harpin Adam Lum was a prominent business man in Oxford, a justice of the peace for many years, a member of the Congregational Church, and a generous supporter of religious and charitable works. He was the father of an only child, Jessie Mabel, of this review, who was born in Oxford, July 11, 1880.

ALBERT BIRDSEY STARR—Varied service in business and civic life has rendered Albert Birdsey Starr, of East Hampton, one of his community's foremost citizens. He was for years connected with the Starr Brothers Bell Company, manufacturers of bells and fish-nets, of this community, and is now assistant postmaster of the town.

Mr. Starr was born August 17, 1882, at East Hampton, Connecticut, son of Vine B. Starr, III, and Bessie C. (Birdsey) Starr. His father, who was a bell manufacturer in that community, died in 1910. The mother still makes her home in East Hampton. Albert Birdsey Starr's great-grandfather, named Vine Starr, was a native of either Middletown or East Hampton, and was a manufacturer of bells. He married Nancy Barton, of East Hampton. One of their children was Vine Starr, Jr., who also became a bell-maker. At one time he lived in Louisville, Kentucky, there operating a foundry to supply the large demand for bells of all kinds in the South, but after two years in that region he returned to East Hampton to continue his business activities. He married Amanda Markham, and they were the parents of six children, one of whom was Vine B. Starr, III, father of Albert Birdsey Starr. Vine B. Starr, III, and his wife, Bessie C. (Birdsey) Starr, had five children: 1. Albert B., of further mention. 2. Sophia. 3. Helen, now deceased. 4. Daniel H. B., of the Highway Department of Hartford. 5. Vine B. Starr, IV.

Of these children, Albert Birdsey Starr received his early education in the graded and high schools of East Hampton and Middletown, afterward becoming a student at Cornell University, Ithaca, New York, where he took the Master of Arts degree in 1907. His first employment was with the bell factory of his family, and from 1907 to 1925, he served as secretary of the Starr Brothers Bell Company.

His work as assistant postmaster began in October, 1925, when he was appointed to this office, and he continued his labors thereafter in this connection, doing much to build up the efficiency of the local postal system. He still carries on this valuable work. He is active in fraternal, social and civic life, being a member of Anchor Lodge, No. 112, of the Free and Accepted Masons, of East Hampton, as well as of Washington Chapter of the Royal Arch Masons, of Middletown, and associated with the Order of Eastern Star. He belongs also to Bell Lodge, No. 54, of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and to the local lodge of the Rebekahs. He is also a member of the Sons of the Revolution. Each of these organized groups, and, indeed, every project with which he has been connected has benefitted to a marked degree from his labors, and the East Hampton community is the richer for his useful life.

Mr. Starr is unmarried.

AMBROSE MARKHAM STARR—A Connecticut businessman and an industrialist of first rank, Ambrose Markham Starr is widely known throughout the United States as a manufacturer of bells and of a very dissimilar product, fish nets. The success and growth of his companies are largely attributable to his personal contributions in constructive direction and effective leadership. He also stands out as one of the public-spirited citizens of East Hampton, for he has always devoted a considerable portion of his time and energy to civic affairs, and at various times has held elective offices, State and local, political and general.

Mr. Starr was born at East Hampton, June 18, 1872, son of John M. and Augusta (Markham) Starr. His great-grandfather was Vine Starr, a native of Middletown or East Hampton. He was a manufacturer of bells in East Hampton, and married Miss Nancy Barton, of this place. Of their children was Vine Starr, Jr., who followed in the footsteps of the older man, and became a maker of bells. It is related of him that at one time he removed to Louisville, Kentucky, and operated a foundry there to supply the large demand for bells of all kinds in the South. After two years, however, he returned to East Hampton to continue his business. He married Amanda Markham, and they were the parents of a daughter and five sons: 1. Julia, who married Asa Brooks, of Moodus, Connecticut. 2. George M., who married (first) a Miss Watrous, and they had three daughters. He married (second) Lila Ingraham, and they were the parents of a daughter. 3. John M., who had one son, Ambrose M., of whom further. 4. Vine B., III, who married Bessie C. Birdsey, and their five children were: Albert B. (q. v.), Sophia, Helen, deceased, Daniel H. B., of the Highway Department, Hartford, Vine B., IV. 5. Wilbur F., who married Nellie Smith, of New Haven. 6. Henry S., who had one daughter, now deceased.

John M. Starr, father of Ambrose Markham, of this record, was born in East Hampton, in 1846, and died March 16, 1921. His wife, Augusta (Markham) Starr, was born April 27, 1844, and lived until September 14, 1934. John M., George M., Vine B., III, and Wilbur F. Starr, were the four brothers who organized and incorporated the Starr Brothers Bell Company, of East Hampton, in 1882. At this time they were associated with such noted industrialists as A. C. Chase and C. F. Pope, of Waterbury. The business had been started by Vazey and White, as early as 1840, being purchased by Starr Brothers, forty years later. John M. Starr was treasurer of the corporation from its beginning to his death, nearly four decades later. He was also a director of the Middletown Trust Company, of the Lakeview Cemetery Company, and a trustee of the Congregational Church, of East Hampton.

Ambrose Markham Starr entered the bell factory in 1889, as a youth of seventeen years. Although a son of one of the founders, he learned the industry from the bottom up, rising from the ranks, promoted only as he proved his worth. When familiar with every detail of the manufacturing business, he was graduated into the sales department, traveling extensively. At the time of his father's passing, in 1921, he assumed full control of Starr Brothers, and has been its president and treasurer since. He is also the sole owner of the A. M. Starr Net Company, of East Hampton, manufacturers of commercial fish nets, sold from coast to coast, with thousands used in the Great Lakes and the Gulf of Mexico.

Among the directorates upon which Mr. Starr acts are: the Central National Bank, Middletown; Middletown Trust Company, East Hampton Building and Loan Association, Starr Brothers Bell Company, Lakeview Cemetery Association; and he is a trustee of the Middletown Savings Bank. A Republican, he has represented this district in the Legislature for three terms of two years each, 1927-

28, 1931-33, 1933-34. He refused a further nomination to the House of Representatives, and, in 1936, declined to run for State Senator. While a member of the Legislature, he sponsored progressive bills covering the building of good roads and county improvements. As a member of the Fish and Game Committee, he secured the passing of a measure establishing a fish hatchery at Leesville, Connecticut, Town of Moodus, and was instrumental in inaugurating works starting in 1927, to the end that shad should once more be brought back to the Connecticut River.

Fraternally, Mr. Starr is affiliated with Anchor Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, the Middletown Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, Middletown Commandery, Knights Templar, and Sphinx Temple, Hartford, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. Numbered among his clubs are the Middletown Golf Club, and the Oasis Club, of East Hartford. He worships in the East Hampton Congregational Church, and is notably generous in his support of welfare and humanitarian work.

At Ithaca, New York, on June 18, 1896, Ambrose Markham Starr married Maude Allen, daughter of Joseph and Clara (Estabrook) Allen, and they were the parents of two children: Allen E., and Robert John, both of further mention. Mrs. Starr's great-grandfather was Captain Hobart Estabrook, born May 9, 1789, at Millington, Connecticut, who received his commission during the War of 1812, from Governor Oliver Wolcott. On May 16, 1809, he married Asenath Harvey, daughter of Robert and Asenath (Cone) Harvey, and, until 1827, they resided in the Estabrook house in the Town of East Haddam. In November of that year, he was given full charge of the selling of sixteen thousand acres belonging to the Connecticut School Fund. In 1866, Captain Estabrook removed to Havana, New York, where he died on May 18, 1872. Captain Hobart Estabrook's son, Robert C., born April 26, 1810, married, on June 5, 1833, Polly M. Smith, daughter of Isaac L. Smith, and their daughter, Austa C., married Joseph Allen. It is related of Robert C. Estabrook that he drove an ox cart loaded with furniture from Millington, Connecticut, to Newfield, New York. The journey consumed more than forty days!

Mrs. Ambrose Markham Starr was especially prominent in religious activities and a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She passed away on April 4, 1933.

ALLEN E. STARR—In the biography of Ambrose Markham Starr, which precedes this record, an account is given of the Starr family and of the Starr Brothers Bell Company, one of the oldest and outstanding industrial firms of East Hampton, Connecticut. Allen E. Starr is the son of Ambrose Markham and Maude (Allen) Starr, the former the president of the Starr Brothers Company.

Allen E. Starr was born in East Hampton, July 19, 1898; was educated at East Hampton Public and Middletown High schools, Staunton Military Academy in Virginia, graduating with class of 1917. After graduating he enlisted in the United States Marine Corps, seeing service at sea and abroad during the World War and was honorably discharged August, 1919. Through this service he became a member of Treadway-Cavanaugh Post No. 64, American Legion. After completing his education and World War service he became associated with the Starr Bell Company and also with the A. M. Starr Net Company, of which his father is also head. He is a Mason and active in civic and social life.

On December 9, 1922, Allen E. Starr married Mary Hale, of Glastonbury, Connecticut, and they are the parents of a daughter, Virginia, born November 4, 1923.

ROBERT JOHN STARR—The Starr Brothers Bell Company is one of East Hampton's oldest and noteworthy industrial establishments, founded in 1840 and organized under its present name forty years later. Robert John Starr, superintendent of the corporation, is the son of Ambrose Markham Starr, one of the original organizers and its present president. He was born in East Hampton, September 14, 1904, and was educated in local public schools, the Middletown High School, and Wesleyan University, from which he was graduated in 1926, a Bachelor of Arts. Shortly after leaving college he entered the bell factory, and following the traditions established in the company since its beginning, he was started in a humble capacity and worked his way up the various rungs of the ladder to superintendent. A full story of Starr Brothers, and the Starr family can be found in the biography of Ambrose Markham Starr, and his wife Maude (Allen) Starr, on a previous page.

Robert John Starr takes a lively interest in local and Middletown affairs and enjoys a large popularity and a host of friends. While in Wesleyan University, he played on the football team and was a member of the track team, and remains a lover of sports. In 1933 he was elected to the School Board, for a term of four years.

On June 22, 1929, Robert John Starr married Claire Fisher, daughter of James L. and Annie (McDermott) Fisher, of Fitchburg, Massachusetts, and they are the parents of two children: 1. Joanne, born March 17, 1932. 2. John Fisher, born August 12, 1934.

HARRY F. MANNWEILER—Close attention to one's vocation and constructive activities for the benefit of Seymour, have been outstanding characteristics in the career of Harry F. Mannweiler. He has been a public official for the past fourteen years, and during a part of that time and over a much longer period he has been connected with the rubber industry.

Mr. Mannweiler is a native of Seymour, born March 26, 1888, son of Charles and Barbara (Metzer) Mannweiler. Educated in the local schools he entered the employ of the H. P. and E. Day Company, of Seymour, and completed an association of more than a quarter of a century with this important firm before retiring in 1930. Appointed deputy registrar of voters for this district, he was soon made registrar, and his service in this connection covered about fourteen years. He has also been justice of the peace, and, in 1925, was appointed by the Governor, the first judge of the Town Court of Seymour, acting as such for six years. In October, 1931, Mr. Mannweiler was elected first selectman of Seymour, and has been a foremost figure in serving the best interests of the town ever since. Fraternally, he is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Knights of Pythias, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Wildley Encampment, and the Improved Order of Red Men, of which he is a Past Sachem. He is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Concordia Singing Society, and of the Men's Club, of the Congregational Church. In 1907, Mr. Mannweiler joined the Volunteer Fire Company, of which he has been secretary from 1908. The variety of his affiliations indicates the breadth of his interests and the part he plays in Seymour life. He is a member of the Congregational Church.

In West Hoboken, New Jersey, on January 9, 1917, Harry F. Mannweiler married Katherine C. M. Kast, daughter of Albert and Katherine Kast.

JUDGE STANLEY P. MEAD—Prominent at the bar of Fairfield County and in its public life, Judge Stanley P. Mead has won a distinguished reputation both in his professional career and through his service in the various offices which he has filled. He is now completing his third term as Judge of the Town Court of New Canaan.

Judge Mead was born in New Canaan, Connecticut, on April 10, 1890, a son of Benjamin Penfield and Florence (Heath) Mead. He is a grandson of Captain Benjamin C. and Mary E. (Ritch) Mead and a direct descendant of William Mead, who came from England to the Massachusetts colony in 1635. Subsequently he moved to Wethersfield, Connecticut, and eventually came to Stamford, where he was granted land December 7, 1641. He died at Stamford in 1663. Captain Benjamin C. Mead, grandfather of Judge Mead, was born in Greenwich, Connecticut, in 1817 and died there in 1879. At the age of fourteen he went to sea and when he was only twenty was master of a sailing vessel. Later he became owner of two schooners, following the sea throughout his active career. Benjamin Penfield Mead, the father, was born in Bridgeport, Connecticut, September 23, 1848. After obtaining his education in the public schools of Bridgeport and Greenwich Academy, he shipped with his father until he was twenty-one and then entered the employ of Davis and Benson, wholesale flour merchants of New York City. Subsequently, he settled in New Canaan, Connecticut, where he formed a partnership with James W. Burtis and entered the grocery business. This association, a very successful one, continued until about 1900. Mr. Mead also had important real estate interests and was prominent in civic and public affairs. In the course of years, he held every town office, and, beginning in 1885, he served three consecutive terms in the lower house of the State Legislature, distinguishing himself by his fidelity and ability in the performance of his duties. Later he was State Senator from the Twelfth Senatorial District, was for two terms State Comptroller and for a time State Auditor. In both houses of the Legislature he was a member of important committees. Mr. Mead, who was a Republican in politics, was never defeated during some thirty years in public life, a tribute to his hold upon the electorate and the confidence which he inspired among the public at large. At New Canaan, he was influential in all phases of the community life and was one of the founders of the Public Library and Free Reading Room, an organizer of the New Canaan Fire Company and the founder of the New Canaan Water Company. He died at New Canaan on March 17, 1913, survived by his wife, who was born in that city in 1857, daughter of Benjamin N. and Julia (Hoyt) Heath.

Harry F. Mannweiler

Stanley P. Mead, of this record, received his preliminary education in the New Canaan public schools and at Stamford High School, from which he was graduated in 1907. In the fall of the same year he entered Yale University, taking the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1911, and subsequently prepared for his profession in Yale Law School, from which he was graduated in 1913 with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Upon his admission to the bar in 1913, he entered general practice in association with the firm of Bartram & Mead at Stamford, to which he was admitted as a partner several years later. In 1923 he formed the law firm of Mead & Mead at Stamford with his brother, Benjamin H. Mead (q. v.). Subsequently Joseph L. Melvin was also taken into the firm. Judge Mead has had a major part in the development of the extensive practice enjoyed by his firm, which is one of the most active in the county, representing many important interests. In his career at the bar, he specialized particularly in real estate law and has been for many years a recognized authority in that field. He has served as counsel for the New Canaan Savings Bank and the First National Bank of New Canaan for many years, and in addition to his purely professional connections was secretary and a director of the New Canaan Water Company for many years.

Like his father, Judge Mead has also been active in Republican politics and public life. His appointment as Judge of the Town Court of New Canaan, an office in which he is now serving his third consecutive two-year term, reflected both his legal and judicial qualifications and his devotion to the public interest. In addition, Judge Mead represented his district in the Lower House of the State Legislature from 1933 to date, and during the present session was a member of the Judiciary Committee. Although giving his allegiance in general, to Republican principles, he has always been independent in his public career and unfettered by partisan considerations. For over twenty years, Judge Mead has been a member of the New Canaan School Board and has been its president for the past ten years, and has served variously as counsel for the Borough, justice of the peace and prosecutor and clerk of the Town Court. His civic interests have been broad, including, particularly, the Connecticut Child Welfare Society, of which he is now vice-president, and the county and State organizations of the Young Men's Christian Association. He is affiliated with the honor scholastic fraternity, Phi Beta Kappa; the Alpha Chi Rho, Phi Alpha Delta and Chi Tau Kappa fraternities at Yale University; is a member of the Chamber of Commerce at Stamford, and is a member and deacon of the New Canaan Congregational Church, which he formerly served as trustee and superintendent of its Sunday School. His principal recreations are found in the pursuits of outdoor life, notably golf, gardening and motoring.

On September 18, 1915, in New Canaan, Connecticut, Stanley P. Mead married Esther F. Comstock, who was born in New Canaan, September 4, 1891, daughter of Frank L. and Esther Elizabeth (St. John) Comstock. Her father was for a number of years a clothing manufacturer and retail merchant in this city. Mrs. Mead, who is a graduate of the New Canaan public schools, Stamford High School and the New Haven Normal School of Gymnastics, is a member of the Church of Christ, Scientist, and of the Woman's Club of New Canaan.

Judge and Mrs. Mead are the parents of two children: 1. Penfield C., born March 26, 1920. 2. Ann Comstock, born December 4, 1926.

BENJAMIN HEATH MEAD—As senior member of the law firm of Mead and Mead, at Stamford, Benjamin Heath Mead occupies a leading position at the Fairfield County bar. He is today one of the first citizens of the county and is known by reputation far beyond its borders.

Mr. Mead was born in New Canaan on March 27, 1883, a descendant of the old New England family founded by William Mead, who came from England to Massachusetts in 1635, and subsequently lived in Wethersfield and Stamford, Connecticut. He is a son of Benjamin Penfield and Florence (Heath) Mead, and a grandson of Captain Benjamin C. Mead, born in 1817, died in 1879, a resident of Greenwich, Connecticut, who followed the sea throughout his active career and from the age of twenty was master of his own vessel. Later he became the owner of two schooners. Benjamin Penfield Mead, the father, was born in Bridgeport, Connecticut, September 23, 1848, and died at New Canaan on March 17, 1913. Following a few years spent at sea, he became associated, after attaining his majority, with the firm of Davis and Benson, New York flour merchants, and subsequently entered the grocery business at New Canaan in partnership with James W. Burtis. He was so occupied until about 1900, meeting with marked success. Mr. Mead also acquired numerous real estate interests and assumed many responsibilities in public life. He was for six years a member of the State Senate; for four years a member of the Lower House of the Legislature; served for two terms of four years each as State Comptroller; and was also for a time State Auditor. Undefeated in thirty years of public life, he was one of the most admired citizens of the commonwealth in his generation and was long influential in Republican politics, serving for many years as a member of the State Central Committee of his party. He was a member and trustee of the New Canaan Congregational Church. His wife, Florence (Heath) Mead, who survived him, was a daughter of Benjamin North Heath, a well known farmer of New Canaan.

Benjamin Heath Mead was educated in the public schools of New Canaan, King School at Stamford, and Yale University, where he pursued both the academic curriculum and the law course. He was graduated from Yale Law School in 1908, with the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and upon his admission to the bar in the same year entered practice at Greenwich in association with his uncle, James R. Mead. After a few months, however, he removed to Stamford, where he formed a partnership with Floyd B. Bartram under the firm name of Bartram and Mead. This association continued until 1922, a period which saw Mr. Mead's professional reputation solidly established and witnessed a rapid increase in the demands upon his services. In 1922, he established the new firm of Mead and Mead, in association with his brother, Stanley P. Mead (q. v.), to which firm Joseph L. Melvin was presently admitted. Since that time its large and important practice has been conducted under the name of Mead and Mead.

Both in his professional capacity and as an executive and director, Mr. Mead has been associated with many substantial local enterprises, and is an incorporator and counsel of the New Canaan Savings Bank. He was also one of the organizers of the Title Insurance and Mortgage Company of Connecticut; the Building and Loan Association of Stamford; is a director and counsel of the Beneficial Loan Association; and secretary and counsel of the Building Material Dealers Association of Stamford. In these connections, his services are highly valued by his associates and his judgments are received with profound respect.

Mr. Mead is a member of the several bar associations, including the American Bar Association, the Connecticut State Bar Association, the Fairfield County Bar Association and the Stamford Bar Association. He is an active Republican in politics and has held a number of local offices, serving as a member of the Town Council at New Canaan and for a term as a member of the Stamford City Council. He has also been active in many civic interests, through which his influence has been made effective as a constructive force in behalf of his city and county. He is a leading member of the Stamford Historical Society, which he has served as president; is a director of the Visiting Nurses Association; and director and member of the Finance Committee of the Boy Scouts of America. During the World War, he was prominent in the Liberty Loan and Red Cross drives, and served as a member of the local Draft Board, while in the Presidential elections of 1920 and 1924, respectively, he was president of the Harding Club and of the Coolidge Club of Stamford. Mr. Mead is affiliated fraternally with Union Lodge, No. 5, Free and Accepted Masons, and in this order is a member of many higher bodies, including Bridgeport Consistory, Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, and Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He is also affiliated with New Canaan Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was the organizer and first president of the Stamford Kiwanis Club, serving for two years; is a member of the Stamford Chamber of Commerce and the Suburban Club and was also the organizer of the Hubbard Heights Golf Club and its first secretary. He is fond of golf and other outdoor pursuits, but his favorite recreation is horseback riding and he maintains a fine stable of saddle horses. With his wife he is a member of the Church of Christ, Scientist, in which Mrs. Mead takes a very active part.

On April 9, 1909, in New Canaan, Benjamin Heath Mead married Ivy St. John Comstock, who was born in New Canaan, June 3, 1884, daughter of Frank L. and Esther Elizabeth (St. John) Comstock. Her father, until his retirement, was a merchant in that city. Mrs. Mead was educated in the public schools of Stamford and at Pratt Institute, in New York City. Before her marriage she was a teacher in the Sea Pine School for Girls at Brewster, Massachusetts, and instructor in domestic science in the Hebrew School of Technology.

Mr. and Mrs. Mead are the parents of five children: 1. Benjamin Heath, Jr., born January 12, 1913. 2. Esther Elizabeth and 3. Florence Louise, twins, born September 23, 1915. 4. Faith Brickford, born October 22, 1917. 5. Frank Comstock, born December 20, 1922.

CHARLES DILLON—Prominent among the businessmen of Hartford, the late Charles Dillon achieved a career that was important and exemplary. Starting life with a rich heritage of Irish parentage and ancestry, he possessed many of the fine traits of the race—optimism, enterprise, the will to succeed, and a deep consideration for the less fortunate. He had his own way to make from boyhood, and climbed high without aid of influential friends or inherited means. Large success rewarded his endeavors down the years, and it is worthy of more than passing note that the wealth it brought was generously shared with the community and individuals to their great benefit. Loyal, constructive citizenship characterized his civic interests. He gave only of his best to Hartford life and affairs.

The parents of Mr. Dillon, Edward and Mary (Ledwith) Dillon, both natives of Ireland, came to the United States shortly after their marriage and settled in Hartford, where their son, Charles, was born in 1852. His father, a machinist by trade, found work to do, although not at the high wage that after the Civil War gradually became common. He spent the remainder of his life in the city, a substantial citizen, appreciative of the institutions, the ideas and ideals of his adopted country. He and his wife were devout Catholics. They were the parents of eight children, of whom Catherine H., of Hartford, Connecticut, is now the sole survivor.

The academic education of Charles Dillon was not extended beyond that provided by the old St. Patrick's Parochial School, for he was hardly more than a boy when he set about earning his own livelihood. He entered the employ of the Ballerstein Company, Hartford, dealers in millinery. He found he business interesting and one he believed had a profitable future, a faith that experience demontrated was well founded. Then, and later in finance nd real estate, Charles Dillon seemed to have the rare gift of vision and foresight, the ability to look eyond the present and, with it, the courage to deend upon his own outlook and judgment. It was ot long before he had become a partner in the rm, which, after the death of Mr. Ballerstein, he urchased outright. A store in New Haven was established and then, with his brother, he set up another establishment in Bridgeport, Connecticut, drygoods and similar articles being added to the erchandizing interests of the two men.

Charles Dillon lived to see his enterprises grow with the communities in which they were situated, and become important mercantile units favorably own throughout the State. In later years he beme interested in finance, and was a director of the First National Bank of Hartford. He also accumulated large holdings of real estate in all the cities with which his mercantile establishments were located. The expansion of his interests naturally led to activities in civic affairs, although he was never a seeker of political office. The Knights of Columbus was his principal fraternal affiliation, and he became one of the leaders in the organization, playing a most prominent role in the building of a new home for the Knights of Columbus, in Hartford. During the World War period, Mr. Dillon was outstanding in the Order as chairman of its executive committee, which directed the campaign, in 1917, that raised a fund of $50,000 in Hartford for the humanitarian purposes of war times. For this he was honored with a public testimonial, and presented with a silver loving cup which is now treasured by his sister, Catherine H. Dillon.

Charles Dillon died April 24, 1923, sincerely mourned as a business leader, good citizen, philanthropist and humanitarian. It is fitting in this connection to mention that his sister, Catherine H. Dillon, in August, 1937, donated a building to St. Francis Hospital, Hartford, for the treatment of children. This splendid gift is in memory of her brothers, Charles and Edward Henry, and their long continued helpfulness of the very young.

What has been written so far, fails to paint so true a portrait of Charles Dillon as does the following editorial, written at the time of the younger brother's death, but is concerned with them both. In part this reads:

> Charles Dillon, and Edward, started out with very few possessions. They began at the very first rung of the ladder and forced their way up. While others were squandering their weekly earnings, these brothers were saving and planning and mapping out new fields of labor. Early in their business career they decided that the methods which had yielded richly in Hartford would not be wasted in another city. They ran a model millinery and drygoods store in Hartford and Bridgeport.
>
> These industrious brothers acquired central real estate in both cities. When the elder passed to his reward they were both conceded to be beyond financial worry. . . . The business methods of the brothers were never criticized. They evidently worked on the assumption that honesty was the best policy and that nothing can be exchanged for business honor. During the last decade of his life Edward Dillon lived quietly with his sister, Miss Catherine H. Dillon. Together they interested themselves substantially in the charitable and religious works of the city. St. Francis Hospital was the frequent recipient of their bounty. St. Joseph's Cathedral counted them among its most generous supporters.

With only the change of the given name one may rightly say further:

Charles Dillon was too modest to court the appreciation of a wide circle of his fellow citizens, but there were those who had discovered his rare qualities and who ranked him among the sanest and the most reliable of the leaders of this community. He lived sanely and soberly from the opening to the closing of his career. His passing will be deeply regretted by the wise men of the city.

EDWARD H. DILLON—The Dillon brothers, Edward H. and Charles, were long prominent figures in Hartford's commercial, financial, and realty circles, and with their sister, Catherine H. Dillon, especially noteworthy for charitable and humanitarian activities. Both men have gone to their reward, and Miss Dillon, the last survivor of the family, in memory of her brothers and their interest in the welfare and health of children, in 1937, gave St. Francis Hospital, Hartford, a building for the care of children.

Edward H. Dillon was born in Hartford, Connecticut, in 1867, son of Edward and Mary (Ledwith) Dillon, who came from their native Ireland to America and Hartford in the 1850's. The father followed the machinist's trade, and saw that his eight children were given an education. Edward H. Dillon left school at the age of seventeen years to become associated with his brother Charles in a millinery business in the city. Eventually he was taken in as a partner, and given the opportunity to take over the management of a new drygoods and millinery store in Bridgeport. He proved himself a thoroughly capable merchant, and the establishment of the two brothers became among the largest of their kind in Connecticut.

Progressive, forceful and civic minded, Mr. Dillon always gave serious and helpful attention to his duties as a citizen. His only public office, however, while a resident of Bridgeport, was that of a member of the Board of Education. He also acquired large realty holdings and was a director of the First National Bank, of Bridgeport. In Hartford he was a director of its First National Bank, of the Morris Plan Bank, was an extensive property owner, and in both cities he was notably active in welfare, philanthropic, public health and educational movements. In this connection a contemporary said:

> The return to Hartford from Bridgeport, a decade and a half ago, of Edward H. Dillon, added a useful and welcome figure to the business and civic life of Hartford. He was a man of sound business judgment which was sought by numerous financial and civic organizations. He was, moreover, moved by a spirit of citizenly responsibility which made him an important participant in civic and philanthropic work. Few good causes but attracted his quietly given support. St. Francis Hospital, in particular, knew him as a generous giver. Mr. Dillon went his way with little fanfare, but he established himself a solid, helpful and respected citizen.

Fraternally, Edward H. Dillon was affiliated with the Knights of Columbus, and with his brother was very much to the fore in the World War time "drive" for funds for the humanitarian activities of the Order. Later, in 1917, they were given a testimonial banquet at which their associates paid merited tributes to their leadership and unselfish efforts. Mr. Dillon was a devout member of St. Joseph's Cathedral; his favorite club was the Algonquin.

The death of Mr. Dillon occurred on January 3, 1937. His had been a career that might well inspire youth who start life with meagre means and few opportunities. An understanding editor made this clear when he wrote:

> Edward Dillon, who passed from this world on Sunday evening, was the survivor of a brace of hard-working, modest, and most successful self-made business men. Charles Dillon and Edward started out with very few possessions. They began at the very first rung of the ladder and forced their way up. While others were squandering their weekly earnings, these brothers were saving and planning and mapping out new fields of labor. Early in their business career they decided that the methods which had yielded richly in Hartford would not be wasted in another city. They ran a model millinery and dry goods store in Hartford and in Bridgeport.
>
> These industrious brothers acquired central real estate in both cities. When the elder passed to his reward they were both conceded to be beyond financial worry. The Bridgeport store had earlier been transferred to other hands after which Edward came to Hartford to labor and make things lighter for his brother. In the course of a few years the Hartford store was also disposed of. The business methods of the brothers were never criticized. They evidently worked on the assumption that honesty was the best policy and that nothing can be exchanged for business honor.
>
> During the last decade of his life Edward Dillon lived quietly with his sister, Miss Catherine H. Dillon, and together they interested themselves substantially in the charitable and religious works of the city. St. Francis Hospital was the frequent recipient of their bounty. St. Joseph's Cathedral counted them among its most generous supporters. They encouraged the children of the parish school by giving premiums to those who distinguished themselves in their studies. This thoughtful interest added much to the enthusiasm and the fidelity of the children.
>
> Edward Dillon was too modest to court the appreciation of a wide circle of his fellow citizens, but there were those who had discovered his rare qualities and who ranked him among the sanest and the most reliable of the leaders of this community.

Edward Balf McGurk

He lived sanely and soberly from the opening to the closing of his career. His passing will be deeply regretted by the wise men of the city.

Miss Dillon may count upon the sympathy of thousands in the loss which came to her when her highly respected and most devoted brother passed to his reward. His last absolution was pronounced by the Most Reverend Bishop of the Diocese who had long regarded him and who had often spoken of him as an illustrious and edifying member of the Church to which he had proved so faithful and so helpful. Peace be with him.

EDWARD BALF McGURK—Not yet forty, Edward Balf McGurk, of Hartford, is a promising young businessman in this community, where he was born July 2, 1900, the son of Bernard L. and Mary (Balf) McGurk, and grandson of Bernard McGurk. The latter established, about 1850, a blacksmith, carriage and wagon business in Hartford which, at his death in 1888, the son took over and has since operated successfully.

Edward Balf McGurk was educated in the parochial and public schools of his native city, and at St. Thomas' Seminary here, and Fordham University in New York City, where he received his Bachelor of Arts degree in 1921. That same year he joined the Edward Balf Company, road builders and general contractors, starting as timekeeper and working his way up, in 1923, to the position of foreman and then superintendent of roadwork. In 1924, he became superintendent of quarries and in 1927, assistant treasurer of the concern. Upon the death of Mr. Balf in 1930, Mr. McGurk was made president, and subsequently, treasurer and chairman of the board of directors. He resigned in 1933 to establish his own road and street construction business, known as E. B. McGurk, Incorporated. He is president of the concern, which does construction work throughout the State of Connecticut.

While a student at Fordham University in New York City, Mr. McGurk was a member of the Student Army Training Corps. At Fordham he was a three letter man: Football, Tennis and captain of Hockey team. He was at one time president, treasurer, chairman of the board of directors of the Hartford Sand and Stone Company, Incorporated. He is a member of the Connecticut Society of Civil Engineers, the Knights of Columbus, and the Roman Catholic Church. In politics, he is an independent. His principal hobby at present is business and handball is his chief recreation.

On February 25, 1925, in Hartford, Mr. McGurk married Helen Mayberry, daughter of Dr. Franklin and Elizabeth (Meagher) Mayberry, of East Hartford, where Dr. Mayberry for many years was a prominent physician. Mr. and Mrs. McGurk had two children: 1. Edward Balf, Jr., born in 1927, died in 1932. 2. Mary Elizabeth, born in June, 1935.

ALLISON H. BROWN—As one of the most successful and widely known tobacco farmers of Windsor and vicinity, Allison H. Brown represents the third generation of his family to engage in this business. As a resident of the aforementioned community throughout his life he has also been active in social and civic affairs, contributing generously to the general welfare.

Mr. Brown was born in Windsor, October 6, 1864, the son of Eugene and Catherine (Latham) Brown, the former a native of his birthplace and the latter of East Granby. His father and his grandfather, James Brown, both engaged in the cigar manufacturing business throughout their lives. Mr. Brown received a general education in the public schools of Windsor and later attended the Hannum Business College, now known as the Morse Business College. After finishing his studies he began his career as a tobacco grower and has since devoted his efforts to this work with distinction and success. He is a member of the New England Tobacco Growers Association and the Shade Tobacco Growers Association. Aside from these affiliations he has also taken a keen interest in the life of his surroundings and at one time was a member of the Finance Board of the Town of Windsor, which he served for several years.

On May 31, 1890, at Windsor Locks, Mr. Brown married Jennie Frye, daughter of Horace S. and Eliza (Luck) Frye, both deceased. Her father was a tobacco grower. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are the parents of one daughter, Mabel, who married James Darcy of Windsor and is the mother of two children: i. Kenneth E., a graduate of Windsor High School. ii. Edward A., a student.

CHARLES ALBERT HUNTINGTON, Jr.—For many years an outstanding contributor to the business and civic life of Windsor, Charles Albert Huntington, Jr., came to occupy a position of leadership in his native city at an early period in his life. Today he continues to engage in general farming and tobacco cultivation, as well as to carry forward his duties as a member of the Metropolitan District Commission of Hartford County.

Mr. Huntington was born December 12, 1893, at Windsor, Connecticut, son of Charles Albert and Ruth Holroyd (Wilson) Huntington and member of an old and honorable family. The paternal line has been traced back to Simon Huntington, and the descent is as follows:

(I) Simon Huntington, who came from England to this continent in 1633, died at sea on the way across the Atlantic. His wife, Margaret (Baret) Huntington, arrived in America in that same year.

(II) Simon Huntington, their son, came to Windsor in 1635, then to Saybrook, and afterward to Norwich; after spending his early years with his mother at Windsor, he married, at Saybrook, Sarah Clarke. He was born in England in 1629.

(III) James Huntington, their son, was born May 18, 1680, in Norwich. He married, on February 3, 1702, Priscilla Miller.

(IV) Peter Huntington, their son, was born in May, 1709, in Norwich. In 1742 he was commissioned ensign, and in 1754 was commissioned lieutenant. During the French and Indian wars he served in the company of Captain Grant, the great-grandfather of President Ulysses S. Grant. He married, in 1734, Ruth Edgerton.

(V) Their son, Simeon Huntington, was born April 2, 1740, and was a captain in the War of the American Revolution. He married (first), on January 27, 1777, Freelove Chester.

(VI) Peter Chester Huntington, their son, was born December 31, 1777, and, in 1805, married Rachel Warring.

(VII) Simeon Chester Huntington, their son, was born June 21, 1806, and, in 1828, married Julia Treadway.

(VIII) Alonzo Chester Huntington, their son, was born October 27, 1835, in Bozrah, New London County, and he married, on May 5, 1857, Priscilla E. Strickland.

(IX) Charles Albert Huntington, Sr., their son, and the father of Charles Albert Huntington, Jr., was born January 29, 1863. He became an important tobacco grower, starting this work at the turn of the century. An outstanding worker in this realm, he became a pioneer in the production of shade tobacco. The date of his death was August 22, 1934. He married Ruth Holroyd Wilson, and they became the parents of two children: 1. Madeline, who became the wife of Ernest S. Clark, Jr. 2. Charles Albert, Jr., of further mention.

(X) Charles Albert Huntington, Jr., their son, received his early education in the schools of Windsor, his Connecticut birthplace. Upon completing his high school studies he became a student at the Massachusetts Agricultural College (later named Massachusetts State College) graduating in 1916. He took the degree of Bachelor of Science at that institution, and, so prepared, began the active work of his career. At the time of the World War he entered the Officers' Training Corps at Plattsburg, New York, entering the barracks there on August 17, 1917. On November 27, 1917, he was commissioned first lieutenant of infantry there, finally being honorably discharged at Cincinnati, Ohio, on February 11, 1919.

Returning home in that same year, he formed a partnership with his father and with his brother-in-law, Ernest S. Clark, to carry on activities of general farming and tobacco raising. He now operates a 175-acre shade tobacco farm. At the same time he takes a lively part in the political and civic affairs of his community and State. His partisan affiliation has been with the Republican organization, and in 1928 he was elected to the Board of Finance of Windsor, on which he still actively serves. In November, 1932, he was elected a State representative, and in 1934 he was re-elected to this position. In both of his terms in the Legislature he served as a member of the committee on finance. On November 17, 1935, he was appointed a member of the Metropolitan District Commission of Hartford County, to which office he was re-appointed by Governor Cross in January, 1937, for a six-year term. He has continued his service on Windsor's Board of Finance since his first selection to this post, and his wise participation in its affairs has been a force for widespread betterment.

In addition to his other activities, Mr. Huntington is a director of the Connecticut Investment Management Corporation, of Hartford, and of the Windsor Federal Savings and Loan Association. He is a volunteer fireman of the North End Fire Department of Poquonock and clerk of the Secondary School Society of Windsor. In the Free and Accepted Masons he is affiliated with many branches, and holds the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite.

On November 9, 1918, at Windsor, Connecticut, Charles Albert Huntington, Jr., married Margaret Stinson, daughter of William and Frances (Longden) Stinson. The children of this marriage were: 1. William Chester, born September 7, 1919. 2. Priscilla Longden, born August 18, 1921. 3. Edward Wilson, born December 21, 1927. 4. Sidney Treadway, born May 18, 1930.

ALFRED EDWARD HOLLISTER—The illustrious traditions of public service which have characterized the history of the Hollister family in Glastonbury and Hartford County for generations, are being perpetuated by Alfred Edward Hollister, who for years has been one of the outstanding leaders in the aforementioned community and was recently elected to represent this district in the State Legislature. Through his past activities he is eminently equipped and qualified for the honor and trust that has been reposed in him by the general public.

Mr. Hollister was born in Glastonbury, March 14, 1871, the son of Norman E. and Charlotte (Tallcott) Hollister, who were also the parents of the following children: 1. Horace T. 2. Ada L. 3. Abbie V., deceased. 4. Mary W. 5. Charles H. 6. Josiah J., deceased. 7. Mabel E. 8. William N. 9. Rhoda. 10. Isadora. 11. Benjamin. 12. Charlotte E. 13. Dorothy. On his maternal side, Mr. Hollister traces his Glastonbury ancestry to his great-great-grandfather, Benjamin Tallcott, who was a native of this town as was his son, Jared Tallcott, and his grandson, Charles H. Tallcott, who was a captain in the 25th Connecticut Volunteers during the Civil War. The latter's daughter, Charlotte Tallcott, was Mr. Hollister's mother. On his paternal side Mr. Hollister was the grandson of Charles H. Hollister, who served in the State Legislature.

After a general education in the Glastonbury Academy, Mr. Hollister began to work on his grandfather Tallcott's farm, which he took over in 1899 and has since managed, raising a general crop and breeding high grade stock. During his long and distinguished career he has been one of the most prominent and influential figures in the agricultural affairs of this section, where at the present time he is chairman of the local district of the Connecticut Valley Broadleaf and Havana Seed Growers, Incorporated. He is past master of Good Will Grange, No. 53, having served in this capacity on two different occasions, is former chairman of the building committee of Grange Hall and former president of the Grange Fair Association. As an executive of the latter organization he also served as manager of the annual fair for fourteen years and has been a county director of the Connecticut Association of State Fairs. He has made his influence felt in other phases of public life, particularly politics, being leader of the local Democratic organization, normally the minority party. He was elected representative to the State Legislature, in the November, 1936, election, an incident which in itself is a tribute to his popularity and ability. He served on the State Library Committee and the Shell Fish Committee. In a civic capacity he has contributed generously and ably to community affairs. He has been a member of the local board of education for the past ten years and served as chairman of this body since 1935. He also is a former director of the Glastonbury Library Board and in his social activities has devoted his interests to a large extent to fraternal work. Thus we find him a member and Past Grand of the Elm Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, president and manager of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows Building Association, and Past Counsellor of the Order United American Mechanics.

On August 9, 1894, at Lyme, Mr. Hollister married Lucy E. Hollister, daughter of Martin T. and Elizabeth (Ebell) Hollister. She is a member of the St. James Episcopal Church in this community.

DWIGHT ERNEST WEIR, D.M.D.—During a brief but highly successful career, Dr. Dwight Ernest Weir has won recognition as one of the most prominent and promising young dentists in Hartford County. He has practiced in his native community of Glastonbury for the past three years.

Dr. Weir was born in Glastonbury on September 19, 1908, the son of Ernest and Elizabeth (Smith) Weir, both residents of this community where his father is now living in retirement. After a general education, which he completed in the local high school in 1926, Dr. Weir attended the Tufts Pre-Dental College of Boston, from which he was graduated with a Doctor of Dental Medicine degree in the class of 1933. The same year he returned to Glastonbury and established himself in a general practice of dentistry which he has been conducting successfully since.

He is a member of the Connecticut State Dental Society, the American Dental Society and serves on the executive committee of the Visiting Nurses Association of Glastonbury. In his social affiliations he is identified with several organizations, among them Columbia Lodge, No. 25, of the Free and Accepted Masons. Dr. Weir is fond of sports of all types and finds his greatest recreation and hobby in the game of bowling.

WILLIAM HENRY McMAHON, JR., M.D.—Engaged in the practice of medicine and surgery in South Norwalk since 1921, Dr. William Henry McMahon, Jr., is one of his community's foremost citizens and a leader whose position is recognized and respected.

Dr. McMahon was born, June 2, 1895, in Norwalk, Connecticut, son of William Henry and Nellie (Burke) McMahon and grandson of Patrick McMahon, who came from Ireland about 1850, and was the first member of his family to take up his residence in the United States. The father, William Henry McMahon, Sr., was a prominent business man in his day.

Dr. McMahon attend the public schools of Norwalk, Connecticut, later becoming a student at Fordham University's School of Medicine, where he was graduated in 1920 with the degree of Doctor of Medicine. He served an interneship at Paterson General Hospital, in Paterson, New Jersey, remaining there until he came to South Norwalk and started his active practice of medicine and surgery in 1921. Along with his regular practice of his profession, Dr. McMahon is attending surgeon at Norwalk General Hospital and medical examiner for the City of Norwalk. He belongs to the Norwalk Medical Society, the Connecticut State Medical Society and the American Medical Association, and is a Fellow of the American College of Surgeons.

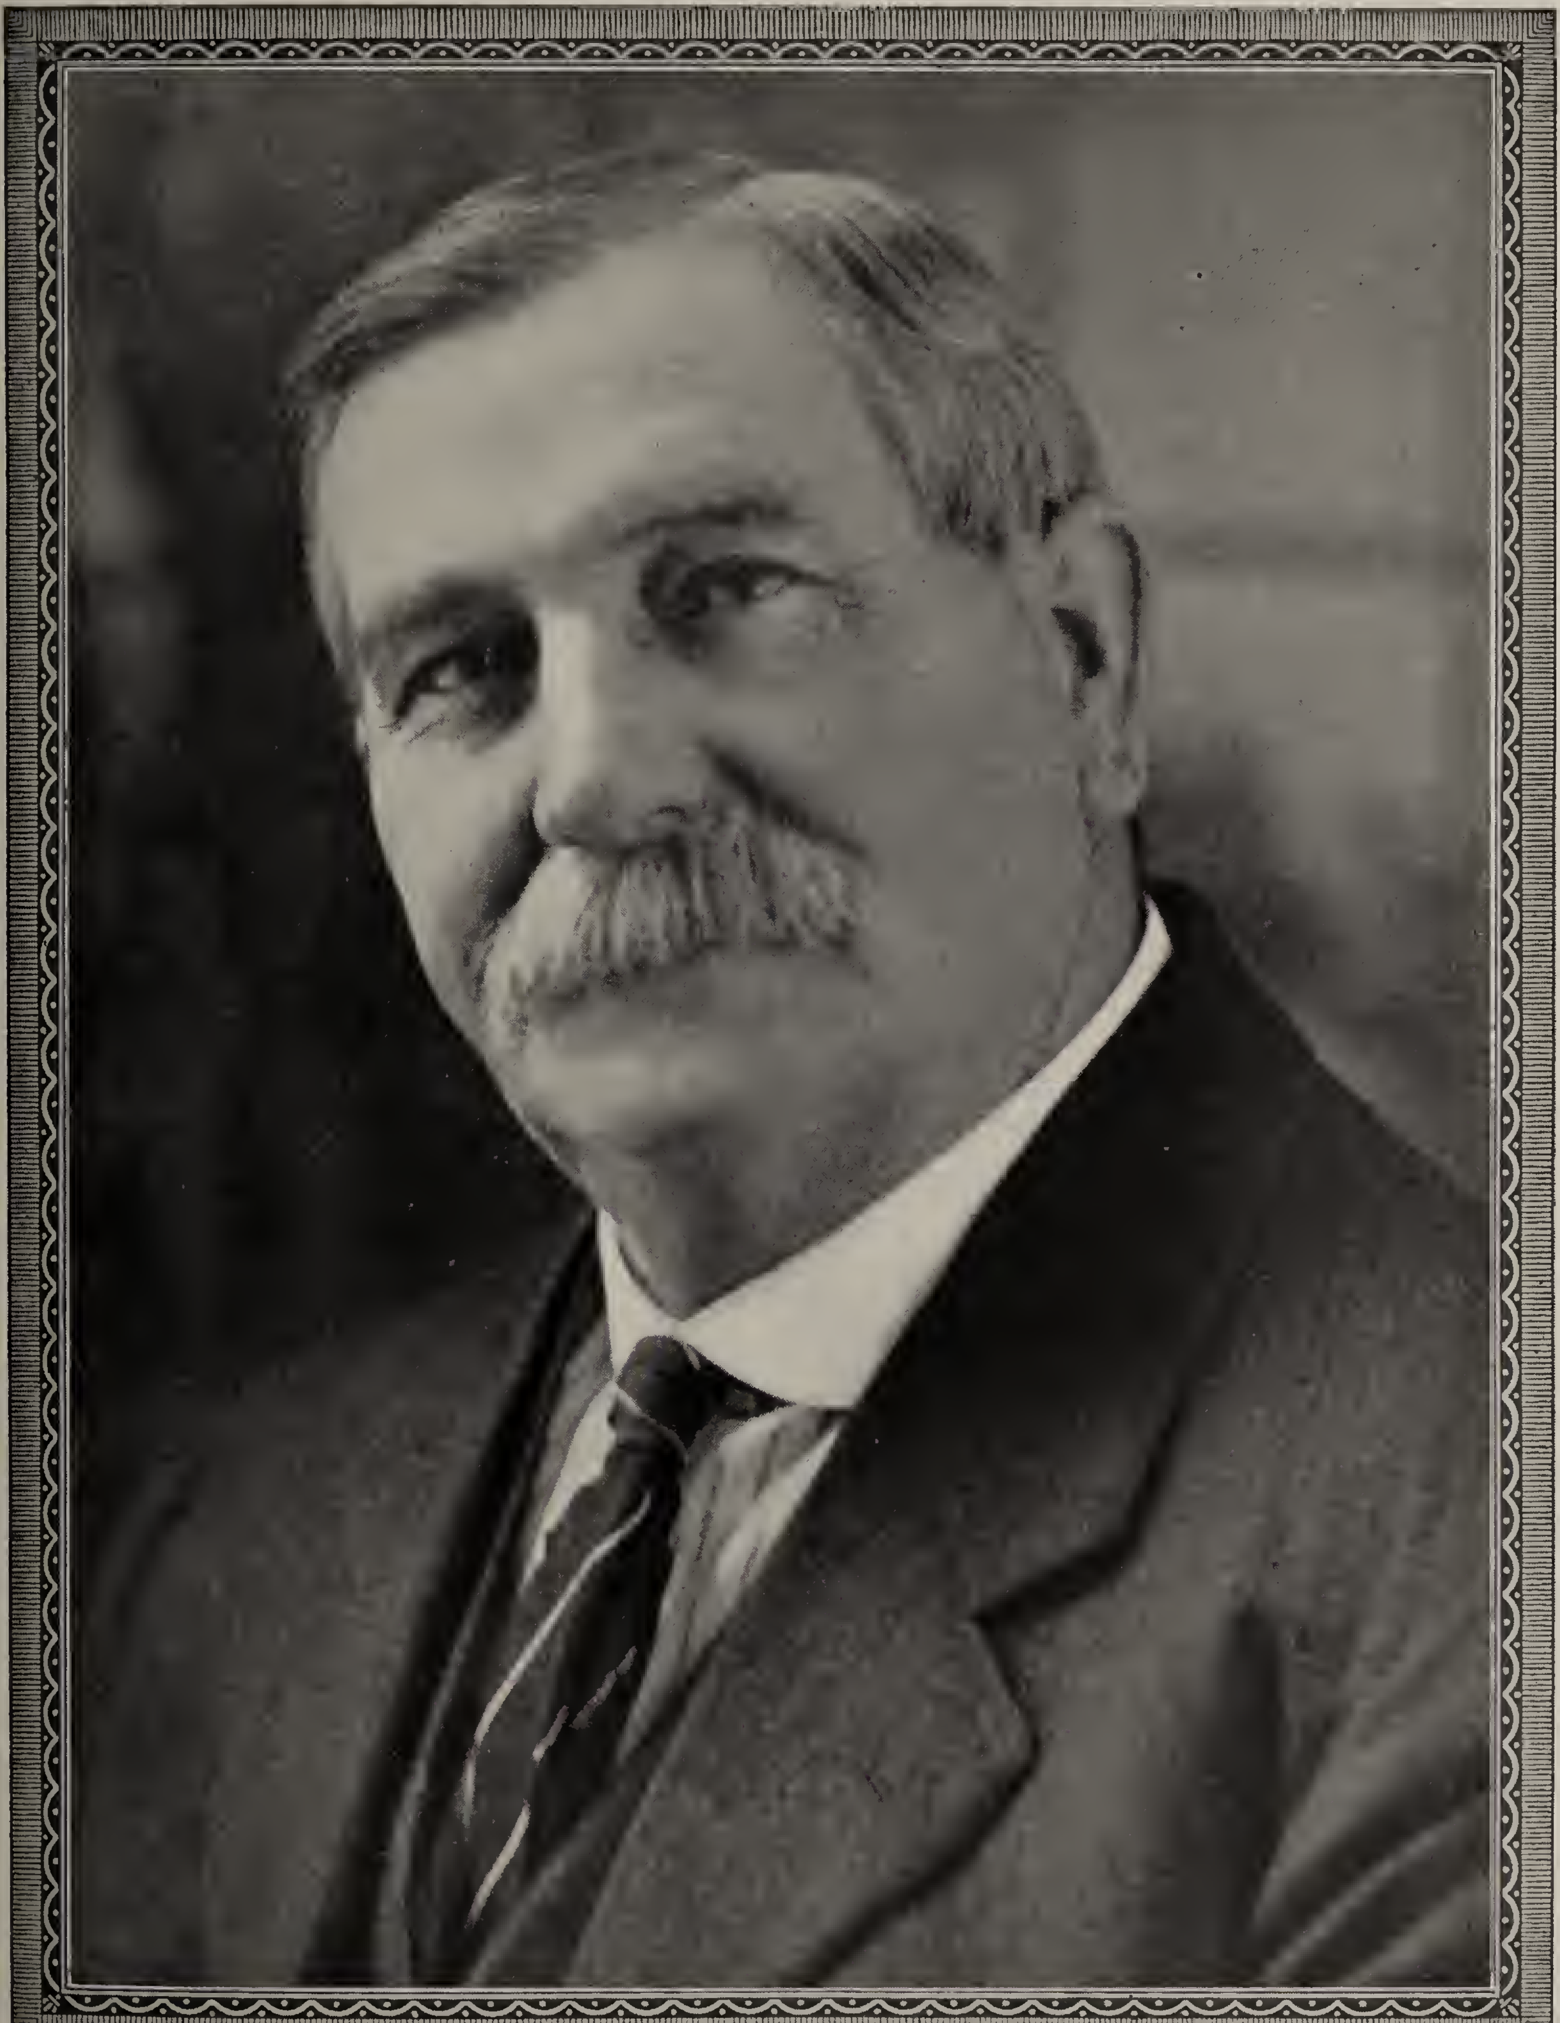
At the same time Dr. McMahon has contributed in a notable way to the civic and social life of his times, being a member of many leading organizations in his community and State. He is a Roman Catholic in his religious faith and a member of the Knights of Columbus. He belongs to the Westport Golf and Country Club and the Long Shore Beach and Country Club, and in New York City is associated with the Fordham University Club.

On August 12, 1924, at Norwalk, Dr. William Henry McMahon, Jr., married Alberta M. Comstock, daughter of Ralph and Anna (Phelps) Comstock, of Norwalk, Connecticut. Two children were born to them: 1. Barbara Anne, on February 3, 1926. 2. William Henry, III., on November 2, 1927.

WILLIAM HENRY McMAHON—In Norwalk, William Henry McMahon is known as "The Watchdog of the City Treasury," and a civic leader of outstanding character and influence. Over a period of half a century there have been few meetings of the Common Council at which he has not been present, thoroughly informed upon local affairs, ready to give the benefits of his experience and outlook. It is also reputed that he saved many a meeting from disastrous fights and personal enmities, bad legislation or bored indifference, by his commonsense ideas, Irish wit and good humor, and a sincere devotion to the best interests of the community. Not the least of his contributions to the progress and prosperity of the municipality has been the exceedingly large number of buildings he has erected and whole streets he has developed as home centers. He is a native of Norwalk, born June 26, 1863, son of Patrick McMahon, who came from Ireland to New England, in about 1850.

William Henry McMahon, like many other successful men, arrived at his present place in life by indirect routes. After attending the old Franklin School, in Norwalk, until he was sixteen, he entered the hat factory of Alden Solmans to learn the hatter's trade. While thus engaged, he is said to have invented the first efficient hat shaving machine, the forerunner of modern devices of this kind. After three years, he no longer wanted an indoor business and thereafter became associated with David Platt, a contractor, as an apprentice carpenter. Here he learned a second trade and many things beside which had to do with the construction business. When Mr. McMahon was twenty-eight years of age he established his own contracting business, one of his first jobs being the building of an addition to the Cooperative Hat Shop. It was not long before he was erecting whole rows of houses on entire streets. He put up three-quarters of the homes on Putnam Avenue; all but two houses on Reed Street; most of those built on Burrett Avenue; a great many on Woodward Avenue; and a whole row on Harbor Avenue. Before he retired from business activities, in 1935, he is credited with the construction of more than half a thousand homes, a most remarkable addition to housing conditions in the Norwalk section. Some larger buildings were of his contracting, such as the Sentinel Building, but his specialty has been the creation of places in which people could live.

Mr. McMahon has shown his faith in Norwalk by his own investments, particularly real estate. He is reputed to be the second largest tax payer in the municipality, and as such has devoted a great deal of attention, not only to endeavors to keep taxes within reasonable bounds, but to the wise use of the income of the city. He has served on many commissions and boards; was long a councilman for the old City of South Norwalk, and for a dozen years was a member of the board of estimate, which no doubt was responsible for his becoming known as the "Watchdog of the City Treasury." He founded and is one of the leading figures in the Norwalk Taxpayers Association. Mr. McMahon is respected because of his integrity, sound judgment, and public spirit. He is loved for his thoroughly good and kindly disposition, however much he may try to hide it behind an abrupt, and even gruff, manner.



William H. McMahon

William Henry McMahon married (first) Nellie Burke, of Norwalk, who died leaving an infant son, William Henry McMahon, Jr., a record of whose life accompanies this. Mr. McMahon, Sr., married (second), some years later, Eugenie O'Brien, of Brooklyn, New York, and they became the parents of four children: 1. Eugenie. 2. Eileen. 3. O'Brien. 4. John David.

JOHN HENRY LIGHT—Rising to prominence at the Connecticut bar and in the State's public life, John Henry Light for many years has exercised an important influence in this commonwealth. He is a lawyer of high standing, has served with distinction in numerous offices of responsibility and trust and has exercised the privilege of civic leadership to the great benefit of his fellow citizens, not only in his own community of South Norwalk but in wider circles throughout the State.

Judge Light was born in Carmel, New York, on March 27, 1855, a son of Belden and Ann (Keenan) Light and a grandson of David Light, who is said by family tradition to have served with the rank of captain in the War of 1812. The Lights are of English origin and were early settlers in Maine. Belden Light, the father, was born in Carmel, New York, and was a farmer there for some years. In middle life, however, he removed to New Canaan, Connecticut, where he continued to devote himself to agricultural pursuits until his death. His wife, Ann Keenan, was a daughter of Owen Keenan. They became the parents of nine children, seven of whom lived to reach maturity, as follows: 1. Mary E., who married Charles E. Hall, of South Norwalk. 2. Owen, who lived in Bridgeport until his death. 3. John Henry, of this record. 4. Frederick B., who settled in Stamford. 5. William, who remained in New Canaan. 6. Melinda, of Norwalk. 7. Rodney, who became a general contractor in New Canaan.

John Henry Light received his preliminary education in the public schools of Somers, New York. After the removal of his family to New Canaan when he was in his 'teens, he continued his studies in local schools and subsequently entered Chamberlain Institute, at Randolph, New York. From this institution he was graduated with honors in 1880. During the years immediately following he taught school, meanwhile reading law privately in the offices of Levi Warner, of Norwalk, a former member of Congress. In 1883 he was admitted to the Connecticut bar, and immediately entered active practice at South Norwalk. Judge Light quickly established his professional reputation, which led to many demands upon his services, and as his public duties permitted, he carried on an extensive practice through the years. He has been a partner in various firms, including the recent firm of Light, Dunbar and Quinlan, of which his son also became a member.

Judge Light's career in public life began soon after his admission to the bar. For twenty-four years, from 1884 to 1908, he was corporation counsel of the old city of South Norwalk, continuing in office under both Republican and Democratic administrations because of the high value placed upon his services. From 1896 to 1900, he was also prosecuting attorney of Fairfield County, and in the latter year was elevated to the bench of the Court of Common Pleas. For five years he presided over this court with credit to himself and to the county which he served, retiring in 1905 with the gratitude of its people for his able, diligent and impartial administration of the duties of his office. Meanwhile, from 1899 to 1901, he sat as a member of the Connecticut House of Representatives from Fairfield County, and in his second term (1901) was elected speaker of the House. He was treasurer of Fairfield County from 1899 to 1906, a member of the School Board of South Norwalk from 1886 to 1911 and was school visitor over a long period. In 1911 he was once more called to the field of State-wide service, assuming the office of attorney-general of Connecticut, which he held during the administration of Governor Simeon E. Baldwin until 1915. As chief legal officer of the State, he added still further to his reputation, faithfully discharging every responsibility devolving upon him.

Early in his career, Judge Light became an influential figure in councils of the Republican party and was long conspicuous among the leaders of the party in this State. He was a delegate to innumerable party conventions, helped to formulate the policies and campaign issues embraced by the Republicans and was much in demand as a campaign speaker because of his gift for eloquence, which was first brought forcibly to public notice by his speech nominating George E. Lounsbury for governor in the State Republican convention of 1898. He has also been invited frequently to deliver orations at patriotic celebrations and on other similar occasions, and is well known not only throughout the State but beyond its borders as a public speaker and lecturer.

In his own community, Judge Light's influence has been a wholesome and constructive force for more than half a century. He has willingly accepted arduous civic responsibilities to advance the public welfare and has been a generous and devoted friend of South Norwalk and its institutions, among the latter of which the South Norwalk Public Library has benefited particularly through his efforts. Judge Light has been a director of the library since 1890, and is now president of the board. In addition to his other connections, he is a director of the City National Bank of South Norwalk, and was formerly a director of the South Norwalk Savings Bank. He is a member of the local Congregational Church, which he has served in various capacities, and is affiliated fraternally with Butler Lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is Past Noble Grand, and with the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he is a member of Old Well Lodge, No. 108, and of various higher bodies, including Butler Chapter, No. 38, Royal Arch Masons; Clinton Commandery, No. 3, Knights Templar; and Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

Judge Light is also a member of the American Bar Association and the Connecticut State Bar Association. Although he occupies a high place in his profession and has helped to shape the course of Connecticut's present-day life, he has other claims to distinction as a literary critic and scholar. He is at home with the great poets and writers of the world and with the course of philosophy from the Greeks down to contemporary thinkers. He is particularly well known as a Shakespearean scholar of the Shakespearean plays and critical literature. Judge Light has delivered many lectures on literary subjects, among them his celebrated "The Men of Shakespeare," "The Women of Shakespeare," "Shakespeare's Religion," and his discussions of George Eliot and Owen Meredith. Through these lectures and other instrumentalities, he has made a genuine contribution to the elevation of the standards of public taste, and has aided in the advancement of Connecticut's cultural life. His library, which comprises thousands of volumes, is considered one of the finest private libraries in the State.

On August 3, 1881, John Henry Light married Ida M. Lockwood, of New Canaan, daughter of Henry D. and Harriet (Benedict) Lockwood. She died on November 7, 1925. Judge and Mrs. Light became the parents of two sons: 1. Jay Irving, born April 23, 1885, died April 3, 1896. 2. Freeman, born February 6, 1887, who was graduated from Norwich University and Yale Law School, and was admitted to the Connecticut bar in 1913. He has since been engaged in the practice of law and has served both in the State Legislature and on the bench.

CHARLES F. SCHALL—Both as a business man and public official Charles F. Schall is esteemed by the people of West Haven. He is a native of Columbia, Pennsylvania, born on Christmas Day, 1894, son of James Edward and Laura (Sheafer) Schall, both deceased. His father was interested in the steel and iron business, as a salesman and superintendent.

Charles F. Schall was brought to New Haven by his parents as a boy of five years, and it was in this Connecticut city that he received a grammar and high school education. His first employment of any consequence was in the New Haven brokerage office of Hayden, Stone and Company, a New York firm with a New Haven branch. After three years, he worked for a year in the Winchester plant before enlisting in the United States Navy for the duration of the World War. He had joined the National Guard some years before, and served for five months, from July, 1916, in Arizona, during the Mexican Border trouble. On April 6, 1917, he enlisted in the Navy, serving with the rank of petty officer until honorably discharged on January 9, 1919.

Upon re-entering civilian life, Mr. Schall became associated with the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, remaining in its accounting department until 1924. He then went with the New England Automobile Products Company, manufacturers of automobile replacement and other parts, his work having to do with the costs and production department of which he was manager. In 1929, Mr. Schall was appointed superintendent of streets for West Haven, a post he filled efficiently for four years. During 1933 and 1934 he was associated with John F. Lynch on land surveys. In October, 1935, he was elected first selectman of West Haven, for a term which expires late in 1937. Mr. Schall is a member of the New Haven Veteran Grays and a former member of the Governor's Foot Guard of New Haven. Fraternally he is affiliated with the West Haven Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, and is a member and past commander of the local American Legion Post. Many will recall Mr. Schall as a skilled player on the original hockey team which put on matches in the New Haven Arena, in 1913-14. His present sports are golf and fishing. He is a member of Christ Episcopal Church.

On June 1, 1918, Charles F. Schall married Clemency Head, daughter of Henry J. and Mary (Trowbridge) Head, and they are the parents of two sons: 1. Charles F., Jr., born February 9, 1920. 2. Edmund W., born May 5, 1922.

HOWARD FRANCIS KELSEY—One of Connecticut's best preserved houses and one with the distinction of having remained for six generations in the possession of direct descendants of the founder is the old homestead on "Kelseyacres," in Madison. It was built by one Edward Kelsey, in 1814, mainly from rock and wood taken from the land itself. In 1934, Howard Francis Kelsey, of this record, became its owner and is its present possessor. He is of the fifth generation from Edward—his sons, now approaching their majorities, being of the sixth generation, making the place their home. Mr. Kelsey, like many of the family who have gone before him, has engaged in agriculture since boyhood, although he has progressed from the general crop farming of his forefathers and specializes in dairying.

Kelsey is a very old name both in New York and Old England. Its original meaning is uncertain, but a late authority traces it back to the thirteenth century when it was spelled Keleseye and meant "water-side." The American progenitor of the family was William Kelsey, born in England, probably of Scotch ancestry, in about 1600. He came to Cambridge, Massachusetts, in 1632, but four years later migrated with the Rev. Thomas Hooker to Connecticut, and was one of the first "proprietors" of Hartford. In 1663, he removed to Killingworth, Connecticut. The last record of him is of the date 1675. John Kelsey, son of the first William, was the last owner of the western part of the "Green" in Hartford, selling it to the town in 1699, on the condition that it should be "common land forever."

The Kelseys, more than most New Englanders, seem to have retained the Puritan love of the land and a permanent abiding place. It was on July 4, 1814, that Edward Kelsey and his neighbors celebrated the national holiday with a house-raising. This Edward was the son of Francis Kelsey, who, about 1750, married Hannah Stannard, and was the grandson of Jedediah Kelsey, who, about 1748, married Sarah Bushnell, of Saybrook Point, Connecticut. It has been written of Edward Kelsey and Kelseyacres: "He built this home with dignity and severe simplicity. To insure himself of careful enduring workmanship, he engaged a boss carpenter, a skilled and able man from across the Hammonassett River, a forebear of the Snows of Clinton, one of whose descendants, Ella Maria Snow, was destined to become the mother of Howard Francis Kelsey, many years later."

Of the second generation at Kelseyacres was Edward F. Kelsey, oldest son of the first Edward Kelsey. The owner in the third generation was Francis A. Kelsey, only son of Edward F. and Lucy (Bushnell) Kelsey. Of the fourth was Joseph Dudley Kelsey, son of Francis A. and Elizabeth (Willard) Kelsey. Joseph Dudley Kelsey was born March 7, 1862. With the exception of a short time when he operated a grocery store in Madison, he spent a lifetime engaged in farming. An important man in local affairs, he held various offices in the town, such as assessor, tax collector, and the chairmanship of the School Board, and served as first selectman. He married Ella Maria Snow, a native of Clinton, Connecticut, who died March 3, 1934.

Their son, Howard Francis Kelsey, was born in Madison, March 18, 1886, and was educated in the public grade and high schools. From the time he was seventeen he began farming in association with his father, and has since continued in this vocation. In 1915 he added to the farm a large dairy, and later built a pasteurizing plant and other modern equipment. He specializes in bottled milk and other dairy products, Madison being the seat of the larger part of his business. His outlook upon life, whether in agriculture or civic affairs, has been that of a progressive, eager to learn and advance, active in the service of the municipality, and happy in various contacts with life. He has been a first selectman of Madison, since 1927; and was on the Board of Relief, from 1924 to 1927. Both he and his wife are affiliated with the Grange and belong to the seventh degree. They are members of the Madison Congregational Church.

At New Haven, Connecticut, on September 9, 1914, Howard Francis Kelsey married Susie Matilda Greene, who was born November 16, 1887. She is the daughter of John Riley Greene, born May 22, 1852, and Mary Jane (Fenn) Greene, born November 26, 1850. Mr. and Mrs. Kelsey are the parents of two sons: 1. Elmer Joseph, born May 22, 1917, who is a student in Wesleyan University, Middletown, Connecticut. 2. David Greene, born July 17, 1919.

NATHANIEL L. MILLER—An old-time mill in ruins on the site of an ancient foundry had an appeal that could not be resisted by Nathaniel L. Miller, New York City business man. Born in Brooklyn, New York, of Connecticut ancestry, it was to this State that he came, in 1925, to purchase a dilapidated estate, known as the "Couch property," located in the Florida district of Ridgefield. In the distant past the foundry had turned out plowshares and sleighshoes. It made way for a sawmill, and this was followed by a grist mill, which ultimately lost its usefulness and was forgotten. To the rehabilitation and remodeling of the old mill, its pond and dam, the freeing of the fine old trees from the the tangled undergrowth of years, and the creation of a new-old garden, Mr. Miller has given thought and attention for more than a decade. He calls his home "Nipp'agwonk"—a home of mellow wood and massive exposed beams, where a bay window overlooks the dam and water, while opposite is a gigantic fireplace. Old silver, pewter, fine pieces of glass and china, all contribute to the individual charm that is apparent in every part of the house.

Charlotte L. Eaton, in "The American Home" magazine, had this, in part, to say about the estate:

> To begin with, the mill structure was faithfully restored. Exterior dimensions were kept quite true to the original ones, and while new material had to be introduced, it was carefully selected and now has all the look of the old. The interior, of course, was adapted to modern conditions of living. A huge living room, open to the rafters, a dining room built almost over the water and opening onto a flagged terrace, bedrooms, baths, service rooms. The out-of-doors is full of "living rooms" too. There are delightful spots in the most unexpected places, for lunching out-of-doors, taking a cup of tea, for just sitting to read and ruminate beside the quiet water of the pond or the roaring rush at the dam, or to listen to the cheerful music of wind and bird voices in a wooded corner. The owner has planned his gardens truly for living, not just for looking.
> Could there be anything more charming and restful than the expanse of lawn at the back of the house, for instance? Here, just beyond a flagged terrace with convenient tables and chairs is a pleasant stretch of green, fringed with trees and naturalistic shrub planting. Centered with a sundial set in the midst of a clump of old-fashioned flowers, the lawn is unbroken except for three flagstone paths. One of these leads from the terrace; another beckons toward a picturesque trellised arbor and gateway and on beyond to the cutting garden; and the third to a low retaining wall, broad steps down, a little bridge over the dam, and inviting walks along the pond.
> Near a tiny dock where a row-boat is tethered is a double rustic seat and arbor, a "conversation piece" in the pleasant out-of-doors beside the pond. If it is solitude one wants, there is a quiet walk along another side of the pond, with a border of graceful iris, a vine-grown fence almost tropical in its luxuriance, and, again, a little seat looking out over the water softly rippled by summer breezes.
>
> Mr. Miller did not plant his gardens all at once. Starting near the mill structure itself, he worked slowly, deciding each season upon a few new garden ideas, to carry out a desire for more out-of-door living space, or a need for a more complete garden picture. It has grown with the years, thereby taking on a sincerity and fidelity to the countryside and to the old mill itself, and really bespeaking the personality of its owner.

DAVID CULLEN GRIGGS—Mr. Griggs was born in Waterbury June 30, 1871, the son of Henry Charles and Mary (Foote) Griggs.

He received the early part of his general education at Miss Pritchard's private school in Waterbury and later attended the public schools of Waterbury. He graduated from the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University with a Bachelor of Philosophy degree in 1892. The same year he went to work for the Berlin Iron Bridge Company, and on February 22, 1893, entered the employ of the Waterbury Farrel Foundry and Machine Company, with which he has been identifid in various capaciities. He is now president of the organization. In addition to serving as an officer and director of the Waterbury Farrel Foundry and Machine Company, he is also a member of the board of directors of the Waterbury Buckle Company, the Colonial Trust Company and the Waterbury Savings Bank.

He served two terms as a member of the local board of education, is an incorporator and director of the Waterbury Hospital and a member of the council of the Mattatuck Hospital Society. He is a member of the Waterbury Club, the Waterbury Country Club, the Graduates Club of New Haven and the Chi Phi fraternity.

On June 6, 1904, Mr. Griggs married Helen Trowbridge Williams, daughter of Samuel Parmelee and Ella S. (Rice) Williams. Mr. and Mrs. Griggs are the parents of two children: 1. Henry Charles. 2. Eleanor Rice (Mrs. Edwin Burnley Powell, Jr.).

JESSAMINE M. SMITH—The standard of efficiency that has been maintained by the South Manchester Library during the past fifteen years can be directly attributed to the efforts of Jessamine M. Smith, librarian, whose broad and varied experience in this work, prior to assuming her present post, has admirably equipped her for the position she now holds.

Miss Smith was born at Rutland, Vermont, the daughter of Sylvester and Fannie (McClurkin) Smith, the former a native of Vermont and the latter of Ausable Forks, New York. Both parents, now deceased, resided in her birthplace, where her father was a prominent coal and grain dealer. After a general education Miss Smith matriculated at Middlebury College from which she was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in the Class of 1908. She then entered the New York State Library School at Albany, New York (now the Columbia School of Library Service of Columbia University in New York City), where she secured and completed her professional training in 1912. Her first position was as assistant librarian for the Minneapolis Public Library in Minneapolis, Minnesota, where she remained for four years. She then returned to New England and in 1917 became associated with the Ferguson Library of Stamford, Connecticut. Miss Smith continued here until 1920 and then served for one year at the Russell Library in Middletown. At the expiration of this period in 1921, she assumed her present position as librarian of the South Manchester Library, which she has occupied since with outstanding distinction and success.

"Nipp'agwonk"—Ridgefield, Conn.

In her work she is a member of the Connecticut State Library Association and the American Library Association. Socially, she belongs to the local chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution, is a member of the Order of the Eastern Star and maintains an affiliation with the Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority, to which she was elected while in college. In her religious convictions she worships at the Congregational Church in South Norwalk.

ROBERT K. ANDERSON—Widely known in business circles in Manchester, as well as in the general ranks of citizenry in this community, Robert K. Anderson is vice-president of Watkins Brothers, Incorporated, and a leading figure in mortuary work in his district.

Mr. Anderson was born in 1874, son of Henry and Cornelia A. (Thrall) Anderson, both of whom are now deceased. He received his early education in the Manchester public schools, and in 1899 started his business career in association with Watkins Brothers as a bookkeeper. This company, by a strange coincidence, had its inception in the year of Mr. Anderson's birth—1874. Its founders were F. Ernest Watkins and the late Clarence G. Watkins. F. Ernest Watkins is still active in the business, being its president, and C. Elmore Watkins, son of Clarence G. Watkins, is vice-president, treasurer and manager. Mr. Anderson is assistant manager of the enterprise, as well as its vice-president, and has had a prominent part in the upbuilding of the business in recent years. Since 1915 he has played an important role in the work of the firm, doing much in the period since that time to elevate the standards prevailing in the profession. He has given particular attention to the choice of appointments and to the many details connected with such work as that of Watkins Brothers, always combining a fine business sense with an appreciation of the artistic and the beautiful. He has also been responsible for the training of assistants. The business has enjoyed a thorough growth and a steady one, making three changes over a period of years to obtain larger quarters. The furniture store operated in connection with the undertaking business has twenty-eight rooms that are used for the practical display of furniture and decorating schemes. In a nation-wide poll among wholesale furniture salesmen, it was voted the "finest small-town store in the country." Shipments are made constantly to far-distant parts, including Africa, the Hawaiian Islands and other parts of the world. Watkins Brothers were among the first enterprises of the kind to introduce an interior decorating department with experienced decorators in charge of it. The firm has also executed large contract decorating jobs in many fine New England buildings, including the Bushnell Memorial, the County Court House at Hartford, the Meriden School for Boys, the Community House, the church and dormitories at Connecticut College in New London, several stores, and Tufts College in Boston. The furniture department operates under the name of the Manchester Store.

Along with his other activities, Mr. Anderson has taken a lively interest in civic affairs in his community. He is particularly active in the Kiwanis Club of Manchester, having served as its vice-president and having been elected president for 1937. He was formerly president of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce and the Hartford County Funeral Directors' Association, and for several years he was chairman of the local chapter of the American Red Cross. He is a director of the Manchester Young Men's Christian Association and chairman of its business committee. In leisure time he has paid particular attention to outdoor recreations and healthful sports activities. Fond of horses, he is the owner of a beautiful saddle-horse that he has trained to all kinds of gaits and taught many tricks. This horse knows how to shake hands, and many of its attainments are of such a high order as to place it close to the human plane. Mr. Anderson has been fond of horses all his life long, having enjoyed riding from early youth and having trained a number of unbroken bronchos.

In 1905 Robert K. Anderson married Carrie A. Kauffmann, of Manchester, Connecticut, daughter of Charles G. and Mary F. (Thomas) Kauffmann, of East Lexington, Massachusetts. Mrs. Anderson, before her marriage, taught music in the Manchester High School and surrounding district schools over a period of many years. She is now active in civic affairs, and is vice-president of the Cosmopolitan Club and a loyal supporter of many welfare projects. She is well-informed on vital questions of the day. A member of the Second Congregational Church, she was for thirty-five years its organist.

HENRY FRANK ROWLEY—Proprietor of Rowley's Dairy, a large and modern establishment serving Newington and New Britain, Henry Frank Rowley is carrying on a business founded in 1872 by his grandfather and father.

Henry Frank Rowley was born June 30, 1894, son of the late Frank Hills and Catherine (Clark) Rowley. Frank Hills Rowley, who died June 22, 1920, was a son of John S. Rowley, a native of Haddam, and a grandson of the founder of the family in America who came from Wales and settled in Haddam in about the middle of the eighteenth century. Catherine (Clark) Rowley, mother of Henry Frank Rowley, who was a native of New York City, died November 10, 1934.

Henry Frank Rowley, after passing through the public schools of Newington, entered the family dairy business only to have his occupation broken into by the World War. Entering the field artillery, he was sent to Fort Monroe in Virginia and was discharged from the service in 1918. Then, returning home, he took over the dairy in 1920 and, since that time, has not only expanded the business but installed all modern equipment, including a pasteurization plant and making the establishment one of the leading dairies of the section. A member of the Connecticut Milk Dealers Association, Mr. Rowley also belongs to the Masonic fraternity, the Junior Order of Mechanics, the Patrons of Husbandry, and the Newington Congregational Church.

Henry Frank Rowley married, October 14, 1922, in Colchester, Mabel Anna Hickox, daughter of Arthur and Anna (Wohlberg) Hickox, of New York City. Mr. and Mrs. Rowley are the parents of a daughter, Mabel Elizabeth, born October 17, 1925.

WILLIAM ARTHUR PURTELL—President of the Holo-Krome Screw Corporation, of Elmwood, and president also of Billings and Spencer Company, of Hartford, William Arthur Purtell, of West Hartford, is also a prominent member of the American Legion and the Hartford Rotary Club.

William Arthur Purtell was born in Hartford, May 6, 1897, son of Thomas M. and Nora (O'Connor) Purtell, of West Hartford. Thomas M. Purtell, who is a retired cigar manufacturer, is a descendant of the early settlers of New York State.

After passing through the grade schools and attending the Hartford High School, William Arthur Purtell was employed for a period by the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad and, subsequently, by the Colt Patent Firearms Company. This career, however, was interrupted by the entrance of the United States in the World War, Mr. Purtell entering the radio section of the Signal Corps in 1917. Sent to France as a member of the American Expeditionary Force, he saw considerable active service until the Armistice was signed, and then remaining in France until April of 1919, when he was returned home and discharged. Picking up his business career as a salesman of the products of a company similar to those of which he is now an executive, he remained so engaged until 1929, at which time he organized the Holo-Krome Screw Corporation, becoming the company's general manager and president, a position which he has held ever since. Recently, beside directing the activities of the company of which he is the parent, he has become a director of the Selby Oil Furnace Company and president, as well, of the Billings and Spencer Company. He is first vice-president of the American Supply and Machinery Manufacturers' Association. Mr. Purtell has retained the associations of his war-time service by becoming an active member of the American Legion Post, of Hartford, serving as a member of the post's executive committee and being a past chaplain of the Connecticut State Department of the Legion. In addition, he is a trustee of the American Legion Home. Among the other organizations in which Mr. Purtell is active are: the Hartford Rotary Club, the Hartford Club, the Hartford Engineers' Club, and the American Society for Metals.

William Arthur Purtell married, in Hartford, December 30, 1919, Katherine E. Cassidy, who served for almost two years as an Army nurse in France with the American Expeditionary Forces. She is the daughter of Michael and Margaret (Sweeney) Cassidy, of Waterbury. Mr. and Mrs. Purtell are the parents of two children: 1. William Arthur, Jr., born March 21, 1922. 2. Margaret M., born August 22, 1923.

Fred J Moll

ARTHUR HOLCOMB HARRIS—For the past twenty years Arthur Holcomb Harris has engaged in business in New Britain. He is a native of this State, where his forefathers settled over three centuries ago as some of the first to come to this country from England.

Arthur Holcomb Harris was born in Middletown, April 7, 1889, the son of Edwin Hazen and Helen Josephine (Holcomb) Harris, both residents of Hartford, where his father now lives in retirement, formerly having engaged in the automobile business in which he was a pioneer, having started in this work in 1907.

Mr. Harris received a general education in the public schools of Hartford and Hartford High School.

On October 22, 1919, Arthur Holcomb Harris married, in New Britain, Elizabeth Frances Dillon, daughter of John H. and Catherine (Tyler) Dillon, of Hartford. Mr. and Mrs. Harris are the parents of four sons: 1. Robert Edwin. 2. Richard Dillon. 3. Roderick Ruby. 4. Arthur Holcomb, Jr.

FRED JOHN MOLL—A variety of business and public activities has resulted from Fred John Moll's career in Mystic. Here he carried on a number of different business activities, notably in the insurance trade, and recently served as town clerk and registrar of vital statistics.

Mr. Moll was born February 17, 1887, at Westerly, Rhode Island, son of John and Adelheide (Bernholt) Moll. His father, a native of Germany, who is now deceased, was a tailor by trade. The mother, who was a teacher for more than forty years, is now retired from her active endeavors. Both of them came in early youth to Westerly.

Public schools there provided Fred John Moll's early education, and he was graduated in 1905 from Westerly High School. His first employment was as a clerk with the Rossie Velvet Company, of Mystic, with which organization he remained until 1910, a period of many years. From 1910 to 1914 he was proprietor of a men's furnishings business at Mystic. Then, in 1914, he became associated with the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, first as agent at Mystic and Stonington and later as assistant manager of the district. He held the assistant managership for two years. In 1924, his health became so affected that he was forced to retire from his more active endeavors. For four years he lived retired. But then, regaining his health, he returned to the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company in 1928 as agent, continuing with it until the end of 1935.

Meanwhile, his public activities had been assuming a more and more important character. In the course of his busy career he has held a number of public positions. From 1917 to 1927 he was assistant registrar of voters for the Fourth District of the Town of Stonington. Then, from 1927 to 1935, he was registrar of voters for the same district. In the autumn elections of 1935 Mr. Moll was elected town clerk and registrar of vital statistics, taking office in 1936 and continuing in this work to the time of his death, October 19, 1938.

In addition to his other activities, Mr. Moll was a director of the Mystic Industrial Company, of Mystic. He was a member of the Mystic Hook and Ladder Company here, and participated in fire-fighting activities. He was one of the organizers of the old Mystic Golf Club and long a member and director of the organization. He was active in the Free and Accepted Masons, belonging to Charity and Relief Lodge, Benevolent Chapter of Royal Arch Masons and other groups. He was connected also with Stonington Lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and with Odd Fellows' Encampment, No. 17, at Mystic. He worshipped in the faith of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal Church. In spare time he was fond of boating and golf, and was, indeed, fond of all kinds of outdoor life.

On September 20, 1912, at Mystic, Connecticut, Fred John Moll married Mary M. Weimer, daughter of John and Madeline (Geshier) Weimer. Both her mother and father are deceased. The children of this marriage were: 1. Fred John, Jr., born May 25, 1915, at Mystic, married Sarah Russo. 2. Madeline A., born December 4, 1918, graduated from Stonington High School in 1936.

JOHN HUGHES CASSIDY—The Irish seem to come to this country blessed with plenty of ambition, courageous enterprise and the will to work that enables them to forge ahead rapidly, to places of importance in all walks of life. Dr. Patrick Cassidy, father of the gentleman whose name heads this record, was an exemplar of these facts. A native of County Tyrone, Ireland, he came to New England in his youth, and, not content with the circumstances in which he found himself, set about preparing himself for a profession. He studied medicine with a prominent Pawtucket, Rhode Island, physician, and was graduated from the Medical College of the University of Vermont. From 1865 to 1923, he was a very busy doctor of Norwich, Connecticut, the very length of his service being the best evidence of his abilities and skill, as well as of sturdy heritage from his parents and ancestors. Down the years he performed much charitable and benevolent work, and was to the fore in many phases of local life, civic and social; always motivated by the desire of being useful to the community and its people. Hardships had been his, trouble did not pass him by, but with his Celtic sound sense and good humor, power to take what came in stride, carried him through, and in 1924, he went to his Maker with the knowledge that he had done his part in life well, a man and citizen universally respected and loved. Dr. Cassidy married Margaret McCloud, born in Norwich, Connecticut, and they were the parents of John Hughes Cassidy, Waterbury, lawyer since the turn of the present century.

John Hughes Cassidy was born in Norwich, May 1, 1877, and received his elementary education in the schools of his birthplace. Prepared for higher learning in the Norwich Free Academy, he entered Georgetown College, Washington, D. C., from which he was graduated in 1897, a Bachelor of Arts. His professional studies he pursued in the New York Law School, from which he received the Bachelor of Laws degree with the class of 1900. That same year he was admitted to the Connecticut bar and began to practice in Norwich. After a year he established his offices and home in Waterbury, with which city he has since been identified. Mr. Cassidy quickly won the confidence of the community and built up a large clientele. Although in no way a specialist he is rated as one of the outstanding lawyers in the State.

During the past third of a century he has made the time to enter into all manner of activities. Being among those who perceived the value of a better and faster connection between Milldale and Waterbury, Mr. Cassidy was one of the few who had the courage and enterprise to obtain a charter and secure capital for the construction of the Waterbury and Milldale Tramway over Southington Mountain. The company accomplished its purpose and contributed to the upbuilding of both places and the country between. When improved roads and motor-driven vehicles ultimately made the "Tramway" less necessary, it is noteworthy that the company closed down without going into receivership, as was the history of most such projects. Mr. Cassidy has become largely interested in property ownership and has played an important role in the physical growth and betterment of Waterbury and contiguous sections. He is president of the Town of Waterbury Civic Union, and is an influential Republican in political allegiance. He is a director and the secretary of the Waterbury Brewing Company. Fraternally Mr. Cassidy is affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, of which he is a past Exalted Ruler of the Waterbury Lodge, and past District Deputy for the State of Connecticut. Along the line of professional memberships are those in the Connecticut Bar Association, and the Waterbury Bar Association, of which he was formerly president. He has been a member of the board of trustees of Georgetown University since 1931, and served the Georgetown Alumni Association of Connecticut, as president.

In Norwich, Connecticut, on January 20, 1922, John Hughes Cassidy married Charlotte Theve, daughter of Jerome and Rosalie (Geynet) Theve, both natives of Lyons, France, where their daughter was born before their arrival in the United States and Norwich. Mr. and Mrs. Cassidy are the parents of six children: 1. Patrick Jerome. 2. John Hughes, Jr. 3. Jeanne Rosalie. 4. Thomas Louis. 5. Jerome Theve. 6. Charlotte.

CARLTON WILLIAM BRISTOL—For almost a quarter of a century, Carlton William Bristol has been active in the management of The Bristol Company of Waterbury. He represents the second generation of his family to direct the operations of this organization, which was founded originally by his father, and as vice-president and chief engineer he has a major part in the development of the celebrated recording instruments for which the company has long been known.

Mr. Bristol was born at Naugatuck, Connecticut, on July 17, 1891, a son of Franklin B. and Cora F. (Russell) Bristol. He is a member of the old Connecticut family founded by Henry Bristol, who came from England as one of the early settlers of the New Haven Colony, and a great-grandson of Hiel Bristol, who was the first of his family to settle in Naugatuck. Benjamin Hiel Bristol, grandfather of Carlton W. Bristol, was one of the founders of The Bristol Company, being associated with his two sons, William H. and Franklin B. Bristol. Franklin B. Bristol, the father, was born at Platt's Mills, on July 14, 1861. He learned the machinist's trade and became a foreman in the plant of Platt Brothers, where he remained until The Bristol Company was organized in 1899. At that time he became vice-president of the new corporation, which was originally engaged in the manufacture of steel belt lacing. He perfected and patented several improved varieties of the product, together with a number of tools for its manufacture. He was brilliantly qualified for the responsibilities of production management, and in the largest measure contributed to the early progress of the company, in which he was active until his death on November 22, 1904. His four sons, Samuel R., Howard H., Carlton W. and Franklin B. Bristol, all joined The Bristol Company, assuming duties of importance in its management.

Carlton William Bristol received his preliminary education in the grammar schools of Waterbury and Naugatuck, and after graduation from Naugatuck High School, entered Stevens Institute of Technology at Hoboken. Here he took the degree of Mechanical Engineer. Several months later, in October, 1914, he entered the service of The Bristol Company and has since devoted himself without interruption to its affairs. He inherited the mechanical gifts and inventive skill characteristic of his family and with his broad engineering training was entrusted with the development and design of the recording and controlling instruments manufactured by the company, becoming chief engineer. Mr. Bristol was also elected a director of the company and in subsequent years assumed his present office as vice-president, which he fills in addition to his duties as chief engineer. He has had a controlling voice in counsels of the company for many years.

Mr. Bristol is also an incorporator of the Naugatuck Savings Bank. He has been active over a long period in the Naugatuck Chamber of Commerce and in other civic organizations of Naugatuck and Waterbury, is a member of the Waterbury Club of the latter city, and of the First Congregational Church of Naugatuck.

On September 22, 1917, Mr. Bristol married Florence M. Kneringer, daughter of Harry B. and Ella Kneringer, of New Haven, and they are the parents of two children: 1. Carlton William, Jr., born July 2, 1918. 2. Anne Welton, born October 24, 1922.

STUART EDWARDS JUDD—Long a contributor to the business and civic life of Waterbury, his native community, Stuart Edwards Judd has come to occupy a position of leadership and standing among his contemporaries and fellow citizens.

Mr. Judd was born October 10, 1901, in Waterbury, Connecticut, son of George E. and Nina (Cowles) Judd. His father, who is now deceased, was treasurer of the West Side Savings Bank, of Waterbury, and was also a director of the Waterbury National Bank. He served likewise as president and treasurer of the Mattatuck Manufacturing Company, of this city, of which he was one of the founders. He was also senior partner in the insurance firm of Judd and Puffer. The mother, Mrs. Nina (Cowles) Judd, is a resident of Waterbury.

The public schools of Waterbury, his Connecticut birthplace, provided the early education of Stuart Edwards Judd, who was graduated in 1920 from the Hotchkiss School, and in 1924 from the Sheffield Scientific School of Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Science. Becoming a student at Harvard University, in Cambridge, Massachusetts, he attended the School of Business Administration there, receiving in 1927, the degree of Master of Business Administration. Turning his attention at once to the active work of his career, Mr. Judd became associated with the Mattatuck Manufacturing Company, of Waterbury, and from 1927 to 1931, was connected with that company and the Western Electric Company, of Kearny, New Jersey. From 1931 to 1933, he was statistician for Hincks Brothers, Hartford. In 1934, he established Stuart E. Judd and Company, a house of investment bankers, with offices at No. 29 Leavenworth Street, Waterbury, and he continues today as proprietor of this same business.

Mr. Judd is also secretary and a director of the Mattatuck Manufacturing Company, and a director of the Hoge Manufacturing Company (New York City), as well as a director of the Mad River Association. He is secretary of the Waterbury Anti-Tuberculosis League and a member of the Pine Orchard Country Club. A talented singer, he formerly was a singer in the Yale and Harvard glee clubs and the Hartford Choral Club and the Waterbury Mendelssohn Glee Club, as well as the University Glee Club of New York.

In Waterbury, Connecticut, on November 21, 1930, Stuart Edwards Judd married Carol Griggs, daughter of Robert F. and Carolyn (White) Griggs. Two sons, Peter Haring and Stuart E., Jr., were born of this marriage. The family residence is situated at No. 111 Buckingham Street, Waterbury.

FREDERIC C. EARLE—Widely and favorably known as a lawyer, Frederic C. Earle, of New Haven, is one of his city's very beloved and honored citizens.

He is a member of the firm of Seymour, Earle and Nichols, specialists in patent law.

Mr. Earle was born April 14, 1862, in New Haven, Connecticut, son of John E. and Sarah S. (Caldwell) Earle. His family is an old and honorable one, whose first ancestor came to America in 1718 from Ireland, the ancestral home of the family. That ancestor was William Caldwell, according to family records. Another early forebear was William Earle, who came in 1719. Both settled in Massachusetts.

The public schools of New Haven provided the early education of Frederic C. Earle. In 1879, when he was only seventeen years old, he began working with Sargeant and Company, hardware manufacturers, remaining with them until 1885. In that year he entered the office of his father, who was a patent lawyer, and four years later, in 1889, he became associated with the firm of Earle and Seymour. The firm name became, in 1898, Seymour and Earle, and in 1926, was again changed to another form, the present style of Seymour, Earle and Nichols, to indicate the admittance of a new partner.

In addition to his legal work, which has become ever more extensive, Mr. Earle is chairman of the board of the National Savings Bank. He is a member of the New Haven County Historical Society, the Free and Accepted Masons, the Society of Colonial Wars and the Sons of the American Revolution, and he also holds memberships in the Quinnipiack Club, the New Haven Lawn Club, and the Church Club of the Diocese of Connecticut. He is junior warden at St. Thomas's Protestant Episcopal Church. In his political views he is a staunch adherent of the Democratic Party's policies and principles. His deep interest in public affairs has given Mr. Earle a position of recognition in his community and wherever he is known, and he is respected and admired in a wide circle for the work that he has done and for his manifold accomplishments.

Frederic C. Earle married (first) Charlotte I. Lyon. They became the parents of two children: 1. John E., 2nd. 2. Lyon H., who married, and is the father of the following children: Elizabeth, Lyon H., Jr., Bradley H., Susan, Frederic C. (2), and James P. Mr. Earle married (second), June 26, 1909, Adelia Stevens.

JOHN IRA NEARING—A leading merchant and well known citizen of Wallingford for many years, John Ira Nearing occupied a substantial place in its life based on his useful service to the community and exemplary qualities of character. As a retailer, he developed a prosperous business which brought him daily into contact with many of his fellow townsmen, who thus came to know intimately and value highly his characteristics as a man and citizen.

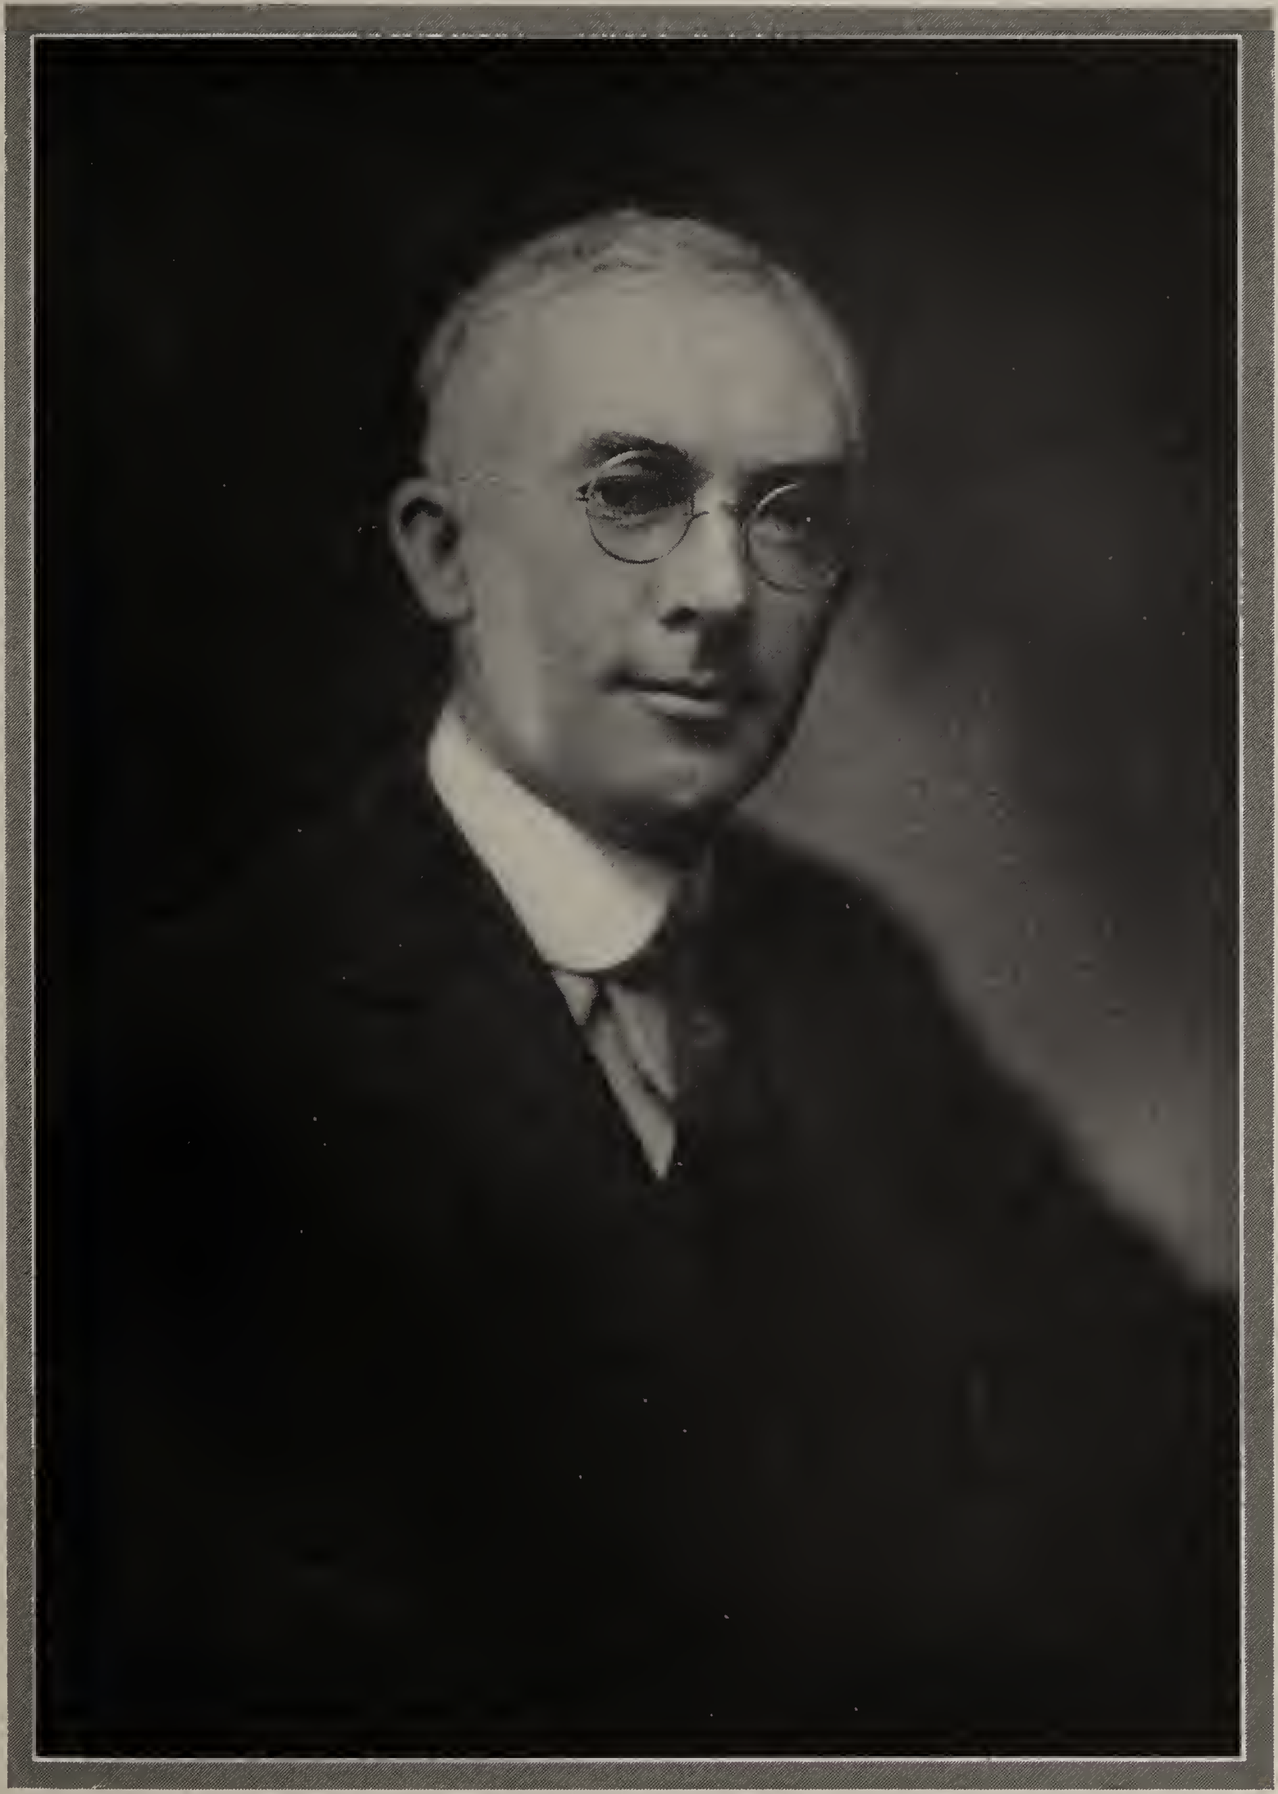
Mr. Nearing was born at Yalesville, New Haven County, on October 3, 1877, a son of John Henry and Frances (Hubbard) Nearing. His father was a mould maker, and both parents were descended from old New England families.

After the completion of his education in the public schools of Wallingford, John Ira Nearing began the active business of his life, establishing himself in the grocery trade, which he followed for the remainder of his career. An able business man and good manager, he possessed the qualities necessary for the successful operation of his enterprise and by his unfailing allegiance to honorable principles he won and retained the confidence of his community. He retired from business about five years before his death, devoting himself in his last years to leisure interests.

Mr. Nearing was always esteemed as a good citizen and lent his support to all worthy community causes during his long residence in Wallingford. He was a generous contributor to charities and was prompt in extending a helping hand to those in need when he felt that the circumstances warranted sympathy. Fraternally he was affiliated with the Free and Accepted Masons and was prominent in the order, being a member of all higher bodies of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite, including the thirty-second degree of the Consistory, and is a member of the Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine. He was always thoroughly in accord with Masonic ideals and was very faithful in the order. Mr. Nearing was also a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, to which he was eligible by virtue of his descent from the founders and patriots of America. He was a member, in addition, of the Wallingford Club, and in religious faith was a Baptist.

On October 8, 1913, at Wallingford, John Ira Nearing married Edna Church, daughter of Benjamin and Ellen (Carter) Church. They became the parents of two children: 1. Frances Ellen. 2. John Roger.

Mr. Nearing died at Wallingford, on October 26, 1924. The relatively early termination of his career was a source of profound regret throughout the Wallingford community which never withheld from him the respect his useful life merited and where his personal friends were large in number and bound to him by strong ties of affection.



John Ira Nearing

ANSON FOSTER KEELER—As one of Connecticut's leading business men and public servants, Anson Foster Keeler is known and respected in this State, and particularly in South Norwalk, where he makes his home.

Mr. Keeler was born September 22, 1887, in Brooklyn, New York, son of John Foster and Mary Gazella (Foster) Keeler. The Keelers are an old family, the name being of occupational origin, applied to those whose craft was the laying of keels of vessels and, perhaps, the construction of other parts of ships. The line of descent is recorded as follows:

(I) Ralph Keeler was the immigrant ancestor of the line. He appeared in Hartford as early as 1639, and was an early settler of Norwalk. He was chimney viewer in 1645, and in September, 1666, purchased lands. He was a carpenter and builder, and was engaged in the erection of many houses. He married (second) Sarah Whelpley, widow of Henry Whelpley, of Norwalk.

(II) His son, Samuel Keeler, born in Norwalk in 1656, died in 1713, served in the Great Swamp fight, receiving for this service a bounty of land in Norwalk. He was one of the original proprietors of Ridgefield, holding the grant to the lower part of the town. He married, in 1682, Sarah Sention, daughter of Mark and Elizabeth (Stanley) Sention (St. John), of Norwalk. She died in 1714.

(III) Timothy Keeler, their son, was born in 1695, in Norwalk, and settled in Ridgefield. He married (first) Abigail Osborne, who died in 1735.

(IV) Timothy Keeler, their son, was born in 1721, and settled in Ridgefield. He married (first), in 1744, Mary Hoyt, who died in 1777.

(V) Jeremiah Keeler, their son, was born in 1760, in Ridgefield, and as a youth witnessed Tryon's attack on his native village. Immediately he enlisted in the Continental Army and he served till the close of the Revolutionary War. An orderly-sergeant under General Lafayette, he was present at the siege of Yorktown and was one of the first to scale the breastworks under a murderous gunfire. In recognition of his bravery he received from General Lafayette a sword that is still in the possession of his descendants. He married Huldah Hull, and settled in South Salem, New York, dying in 1853.

(VI) John Ely Keeler, their son, was born May 16, 1810, and died in Brooklyn, in 1892. For some years he was in business there under the firm name of J. E. Keeler and Son, engaged in the automatic steam carpet cleaning trade. He married (second) Mary Elizabeth Foster, who died in 1891, in Brooklyn.

(VII) John Foster Keeler, their son and the father of Anson F. Keeler, was born December 18, 1854, in Flushing, Long Island, New York, and received his early education in the boarding school at New Canaan, Connecticut, later being graduated as a civil engineer from the University of the City of New York. He never practiced his profession, however, preferring to connect himself with his father's carpet cleaning business. The elder Mr. Keeler had the plant and the storage warehouse in Brooklyn, and the son made the management of this enterprise his business for life. He was a Republican, and represented the Twenty-first Ward of Brooklyn in the New York State Legislature. He was a member of Euclid Lodge of the Free and Accepted Masons, in Brooklyn, and he held the Royal Arch degrees. Mr. Keeler married Mary Gazella Foster, who was born April 13, 1856, in Stonington, Connecticut, daughter of Anson and Mary (Atwater) Foster. The following children were born to them: 1. Harold, who died at the age of nine years. 2. Helen DeForest, born June 26, 1884, wife of Walter McLaren, M.D., of Brooklyn; they have two children, Anson Austin and Donald McLaren. 3. Anson Foster, of further mention. The family were Congregationalists. John Foster Keeler, died July 3, 1902.

(VIII) Anson Foster Keeler attended the public schools of Brooklyn, New York, his birthplace, but at the age of fifteen years came to Norwalk, Connecticut, to make his home. For some years he was variously employed in Norwalk. Then, in 1910, he entered the service of Armour and Company, with whom he was a salesman for six years. In February, 1916, he formed a partnership with Alvin R. Heerdt under the name of the Norwalk Steam Laundry. Later the two men bought out Lowe's Laundry, consolidating the business with their own, and in December, 1919, they bought the Old Well Laundry. These consolidations and purchases placed their business in a position of leadership in its field in Norwalk and southwestern Connecticut, and, moreover, they did everything possible to make the plant sanitary and efficient by adding every modern device and equipment. Their patronage extends beyond Norwalk and to surrounding towns, and it is recognized in a wide circle that much of the success of this firm is directly the result of Mr. Keeler's knowledge and hard work.

In a variety of ways he has served his State and nation. Early in life he interested himself in military affairs, serving as a private in Company D of the Fourth Infantry, National Guard of Connecticut, from 1905 to 1908. When the United States entered the World War, he enlisted on July 10, 1917, in the Sixth Company of the Coast Artillery Corps, also a unit of the National Guard of Connecticut. On July 15 they went to Fort Terry, New York, where he remained until January 4, 1918. They then proceeded to the Third Officers' Training School, at Camp Upton. On April 19, 1918, they left Camp Upton for Camp Gordon. Mr. Keeler, who then held the sergeant's rank, was made a second lieutenant on June 6, 1918. On July 18, he left for overseas duty, landing in Liverpool, England, with a replacement company on August 3, and soon afterward going to France. From Cherbourg, they went to St. Aigman, where the company was taken from the officers, and Lieutenant Keeler was assigned then to Company A, 161st Infantry Regiment, Sunset (Forty-first) Division. He was with them until September 26, when he was ordered to report to the Sixth Army Corps Replacement Battalion. There he stayed until November 3, when he proceeded as assistant corps gas officer to the Sixth Army Corps. They moved into Villerupt, France, on December 24, and Mr. Keeler was soon transferred to Headquarters Troop, Sixth Army Corps. He remained there until April 28, 1919, when he started for home, landing in Boston, on May 27, 1919, and receiving his discharge at Camp Dix in June, 1919.

In public affairs in Norwalk he has also been a prominent figure, holding many posts of honor. In 1921, he was elected city treasurer and, making a most creditable record for himself in that position, he remained in that office until 1927. In that year he was elected mayor of the city. As Norwalk's chief executive officer he showed himself capable of giving the city a sound and businesslike administration, revealing many progressive characteristics and doing much to promote reform in municipal government. Until 1931, he served effectively in that office. Then he was elected for one session to the office of State Senator. In 1932 he was elected State Comptroller of Connecticut, serving in that office through 1933 and 1934. The highest of principles have guided him through all his period of public service, earning for him the gratitude and respect of his fellow citizens in all departments of life.

He has never wholly abandoned his military interests. After his return to civilian life following the World War, he remained aloof from Army affairs for a short time. Then he re-enlisted in the National Guard, serving as captain in Battery C, 192nd Field Artillery, and being discharged on March 4, 1921. On January 14, 1925, he reentered the service as captain of infantry, and on July 24, 1930, was promoted to the office of lieutenant colonel of finance. He is a past commander of Frank C. Godfrey Post No. 12 of the American Legion, Hartford Chapter of the Military Order of Foreign Wars, Hartford Chapter No. 56 of the National Sojourners, and Mulvoy-Tarlov Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. He is a member of the Sons of the American Revolution. Also active in several laundry trade groups, he belongs to the Connecticut Laundry Owners' Association, of which he was president in 1923 and 1924, and the National Laundry Owners' Association. He belongs to the Norwalk Chamber of Commerce. His fraternal affiliations are numerous. In the Free and Accepted Masons he is connected with St. John's Lodge, No. 6, Washington Chapter No. 28 of the Royal Arch Masons, Clinton Commandery No. 3 of Knights Templar, of Norwalk; Lafayette Consistory, Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret, of Bridgeport, Past Potentate of Pyramid Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; the Arab Patrol; Monker Grotto of the Mystic Order of Veiled Prophets of the Enchanted Realm; and Ophir Chapter No. 52 of the Order of Eastern Star. He has served as district deputy of the first Masonic district for the Grand Lodge of Connecticut and at present is grand junior deacon of the Grand Lodge of Connecticut. He also belongs to Cockenoe Tribe No. 32 of the Improved Order of Red Men and is a member of the Shorehaven Golf Club, Norwalk, Lodge of Elks, No. 709, and the Loyal Order of Moose. Politically he is a staunch Republican. He belongs to the Algonquin Club, the Masonic Club of Bridgeport, and the Baptist Church of South Norwalk.

THE OLMSTEAD FAMILY—Traditional New England is exemplified in the history of the Olmstead family. It has cherished the ideals, the philosophy of its forebears and produced a roster of leaders whose influence and guidance have had a distinct bearing upon the development and life of its surroundings. Teachers, clergymen, soldiers, scholars, each has left his impress since first the family made itself felt through its American progenitor, Richard Olmstead, who settled in Connecticut during the early part of the seventeenth century. To Wilton the names of Dr. Hawley Olmstead and his son Edward will always evoke a memory of two distinguished clerics and teachers, whose contributions to the well being of the community and its people is beyond appraisal. They were leaders worthy of their heritage, who employed their talents with an unselfish devotion, making life a fuller and richer experience for the hundreds privileged to come under their expert tutelage at the Wilton Academy. Steadfast to their ideals they engendered a respect for knowledge and propriety and sent their charges out into the world equipped to cope with problems of any dimension.

Dr. Hawley Olmstead, founder of Wilton Academy, was born in this community on December 17, 1793, the son of Aaron and Sarah Esther (Hawley) Olmstead, residents of Olmstead Hill where his father engaged in farming and which had been named for early ancestors of the family who had settled in this part of the parish. Richard Olmstead, progenitor of the family in this country who is mentioned in the introduction to this review, was one of the proprietors of Norwalk and of Hartford. On his maternal side Dr. Hawley Olmstead was the grandson of Ezekiel Hawley, who lost his life while serving with the Continental forces in 1776, and the great-grandson of the Rev. Thomas Hawley, the first minister in Ridgefield.

From his own written records we learn that Dr. Hawley Olmstead left the home farm at the age of fourteen to seek a broader and more liberal education than his surroundings offered. He taught for three years and later attended the Academy at Greenfield Hill, where he came under the instruction of Rev. William Belden, as assistant pupil. He then matriculated at Yale College, entering as a member of the sophomore class, and three years later, in 1816, was graduated from this institution as valedictorian of his class, this despite the fact that he was handicapped by ill health and poor eyesight. In commenting upon this phase of his career he frequently recalled that had it not been for the kindness of some of his classmates he probably would have been unable to complete his course. As it was, they read the required studies to him and he memorized the lessons, a remarkable feat which not only enabled him to keep up but excel in his class.

His infirmity, however, prevented him from pursuing his professional studies and he turned to other fields. It was at this time, in 1817, that he founded the Academy at Wilton. The first classrooms were located in a small building which later was used as a store by Nathan Comstock. This merchant became one of the institution's greatest benefactors. On March 25, 1820, he issued a deed donating a plot of land with a sixty-five foot front and running to a depth of seventy-five feet. The document specified that the ground was "to be used only for the erection of a building or buildings for a school of higher order and for religious or singing meetings." Over a decade later the Congregational Society voted "to instruct the Building Committee of the Parsonage to move the Academy across the road near the Meeting House and underpin the same." According to record this building became known as the "Lecture Room" and was employed until the chapel was built. Since that time this has become private property. With the erection of the Town House the second floor was used by the Academy.

Dr. Hawley Olmstead's career in this community was to be interrupted on several occasions. He had been here for four years when he received an inducement to teach in Norwalk. He went to the latter place and taught until his health failed three years later. Returning to Wilton he engaged in farming for two years and a half, also tutoring a few private students during this period. Completely restored he resumed his association with the Wilton Academy and for the next thirteen years was to conduct the school.

Again in 1839, opportunity beckoned when he was offered the Rectorship of the anciently endowed Hopkins Grammar School in New Haven. He removed to the latter city with his family and was to head the aforementioned school until his retirement a few years before his passing on December 3, 1868.

Dr. Olmstead's broad prowess as an educator was widely recognized by his professional colleagues and the public. It was entirely fitting that his alma mater should find occasion to honor him by conferring upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws, in 1862. In citing him for his accomplishments President Woolsey in his official statement said: "It was given in consideration of and in order to do honor to your eminent services to the cause of letters and sound scholarship during your long career as an educator."

The burden of professional duties did not cause the doctor to shrink from his civic obligations. He recognized his place in the community and acquitted himself accordingly, being rewarded for his efforts. In this particular phase of life he served as a representative from Wilton to the State Legislature, in 1825, 1826, 1828, and 1829, and was Senator from the Second Senatorial District in 1853. Socially he was identified with several of the leading cultural organizations of his surroundings, among them a "Circle of Retired Clergymen and Laymen" who met weekly to discuss questions of the day. It may be added that his sudden death occurred while he was addressing this group at his own home.

To attempt to appraise, to attempt to elaborate such a record as Dr. Hawley Olmstead achieved would be redundant. In itself it stands as glowing testimony of the man, his character and his capabilities. One has but to review the lives and careers of those who came under his influence to realize his great power for good. Witness the excerpt of a speech delivered by one of the Academy's distinguished scholars at the one hundred and seventy-fifth anniversary of the Wilton Congregational Church. At this time Herbert S. Ogden said: "For two generations there has existed side by side with this church, and as a constituent part of it, another influence almost as great for good. I allude to the old Academy which has done more to inspire the men and women of this town to thought, to endeavor, and a high regard for duty than any other one cause. Father and son are gone, but their influence lives after them. Think of it, you who knew them; Hawley and Edward Olmstead."

On April 30, 1818, Hawley Olmstead, LL.D., married Harriet Smith of New Canaan, a descendant of Samuel Smith, a proprietor of Norwalk, Francis Bell, who settled in Stamford in 1640, and his son Jonathan Bell, who is said to have been the first white child born in Stamford, in 1641. Their children were: 1. Sarah, born November 3, 1819. 2. Harriet, born February 16, 1821. 3. James, born April 5, 1822. 4. Edward, of whom further. 5. Roger Smith, born July 17, 1826. 6. Sarah Esther, born May 17, 1828. 7. Harriet Smith, born March 7, 1830. 8. Susan Hawley, born August 30, 1831. 9. Samuel Hawley, born August 9, 1838.

It is refreshing to find a son emulating his father in such a worthy fashion as did Professor Edward Olmstead, who was born in Wilton, November 22, 1824. All of his early leanings and environment signalized a career of cultural pursuit. As a child he came under the tender and faithful guidance of his mother, and later, at the age of nine years, entered Wilton Academy. When the family removed to New Haven he pursued his studies at the Hopkins Grammar School and at seventeen was ready to enter Yale College, from which he was graduated in 1845. It was the death of a sister that impelled Edward Olmstead to enter the ministry. He had taught school for six months in Essex, when he returned to New Haven to enter the Yale Theological Seminary, where he took a course of study in Hebrew and New Testament Greek for one year. With the completion of this training he became assistant to his father and when the elder Olmstead retired in 1862 he succeeded him as rector.

It was six years later that he returned to his native community of Wilton at the instigation of leading citizens who were very desirous that he re-open Wilton Academy. Soon after he settled here he purchased a farm and home and began a career as head of the Academy which he was to carry on uninterruptedly for the next forty-three years. Throughout he perpetuated the ideals and policies of his distinguished father. The school reopened in the second story of the town house, where his father had formerly taught. The rent was free, an inducement the citizens had offered so that Professor Olmstead might return. A few years later, however, he fitted up a house on his premises to accommodate an increasing enrollment and continued here until he determined to limit his number of pupils and teach in his own dwelling.

In commenting upon this institution and its preceptor we quote the following from a memorial printed some time after his passing:

> What the influence of these many years of instruction has been upon the youth of Wilton and of other towns as a preparation for college or their life work is left for others to estimate. In this academy the principle of co-education has seemed evidently successful. The inspiring, refining influence of bright girls seemed to stimulate and tone down the restless, active boy nature. The friendships there formed in some cases led to a life union, and in after years children of the early academy scholars took the places of their parents.
> As it was said of another eminent educator, "every pupil was made to feel there was a work for him to do, and that his happiness as well as his duty lay in doing that work well." These pupils, coming under this teacher's charge from year to year, can better remember his methods of instruction, the words of encouragement and commendation, perhaps the stern or sarcastic reproof, or the funny episode which amused both teacher and scholar. And then the noon hour of recreation—how it was enjoyed with the apple orchard and a never-failing spring of water close by, and the wintry, ice-bound river to rush to, and the excitement in early spring when the rushing waterfall carried down in a tumultuous dash the breaking ice. Is there anything so bright and happy in life as the memory of those school days?

Professor Olmstead abided by the faith of his father. He joined the Congregational Church in 1855 and for years served as deacon and clerk. In eulogizing him a pastor said:

William J Keary

He was a Christian of deep spirituality. His was the humble and contrite spirit with whom God delights to dwell. His prayers were of great fervor. There was rich spiritual nutriment in them. Especially did he bring us close to the throne of grace in his prayers at the meetings preparatory to the communion.

He was great in his love for the plain gospel. Although skillful in debate and delighting in it, he abhorred religious controversy. No one appreciated more than he a learned and polished discourse, but he delighted especially in the presentation of the gospel as the power of God unto salvation in such a manner that all could understand.

Professor Edward Olmstead married Marion Hyde, and they were the parents of the following children: 1. Richard, born October 14, 1852; died when three years of age. 2. Jane Hyde, born September 14, 1854; married Augustus Merwin; died July, 1937. 3. Elizabeth Thomas, born August 21, 1856; married Josiah Gilbert. 4. Alice Ball, born January 5, 1859. 5. Edward Hawley, born March 20, 1861; died in infancy. 6. Leonard Ludlow, born May 11, 1863; died in infancy. 7. Hawley, born May 5, 1867; married Dora Davis. 8. Marion Hyde, born May 18, 1869; married William Hubbell. 9. Chester Righter, born January 22, 1871; died when forty years of age. 10. Jessie Wells, born May 2, 1872; died in infancy.

Professor Edward Olmstead's passing occurred on December 2, 1898. He was on the point of retiring to a richly merited rest when the end came. What a full and satisfactory life he enjoyed, how triumphantly he upheld the principles that guided the destinies of his forefathers is only too evident. A former pupil paid the following tribute: "His work," he said, "compares most favorably with that of other instructors whose names are lustrous in the annals of the world. His honored father's influence was potent, but that of the son is no less so. I have likened him to Arnold, of Rugby, England's famous teacher, who impressed hundreds and thousands from his chair of instruction. Of him it was said, 'He seemed to act from a severe and lofty sense of duty. To be just, honest and truthful he ever held to be the first aim of his being. With all this there was intense sympathy with his fellows, the tenderest domestic affections, the most genial friendship, the most expansive benevolence'—words, these, that describe as well our honored friend whom we mourn today."

WILLIAM J. NEARY—Although educated to the profession of law and for some years engaged in active practice, William J. Neary has devoted the greater part of his career to the management of private interests and to the various civic connections which have occupied his attention. He is one of the best known residents of Naugatuck and has served his community in several public offices.

Mr. Neary was born in Naugatuck on June 12, 1868, a son of Thomas and Elizabeth Neary. His father, who died on October 12, 1905, was a large property holder in Naugatuck, accumulating much valuable real estate. He was also active in local politics.

William J. Neary received his preliminary education in local public schools and subsequently entered Holy Cross College, from which he was graduated in 1890, with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He prepared for the profession of law at Yale Law School, where he completed his course in 1892, and in the same year entered practice at Naugatuck, devoting himself actively to professional duties until 1906, when he retired to assume the management of other interests. He has always maintained an office in Naugatuck, however, and is now located in the Neary Building, his own building, at No. 203 Church Street, which he erected in 1906-07.

Mr. Neary has continued his father's prominence in politics and public life and as early as 1897, was elected to the State Legislature, in which he served as representative of this district. In his own community he was for fifteen years a member of the Board of Education, served for two terms as warden, from 1910 to 1912, was chairman of School Committee, incorporator and trustee Naugatuck Savings Bank and director of Risden Manufacturing Company. To all worthy movements in the public interest he has lent effective support and the value of his citizenship is widely recognized throughout the municipality. Mr. Neary is prominent in the Knights of Columbus, both locally and in a wider sphere, having served for one term as State Deputy. He is also affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and has been a member of other Naugatuck organizations, including the Chamber of Commerce, of which he is a director. He is a member of St. Francis Roman Catholic Church. During the World War, Mr. Neary served as chairman of the local draft board in District No. 6. He has found his principal recreation in outdoor life and sports, particularly baseball in earlier years, and in later years, golf.

On October 30, 1894, William J. Neary married Marie V. J. Ryan, of Meriden, daughter of Daniel B. and Mary (O'Connell) Ryan. They became the parents of the following children: 1. Vivian M., who married Joseph F. Kernan. 2. William J., Jr., who married Maureen Slavin. 3. Daniel R., who married Ellen Harvey. 4. Mary E., who married Thomas Morrissey, Jr. 5. Thomas, an attorney, who married Elisabeth Graham, of Boston.

RT. REV. THOMAS J. FINN—For years one of the beloved priests of the Catholic faith, the Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Finn is pastor of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, of Norwalk. Ministering faithfully to the spiritual needs of his parishioners, he has come to be distinguished and honored in every circle in which he is known.

Monsignor Finn was born November 3, 1862, in Winsted, Litchfield County, Connecticut, son of Michael and Mary (Fitzgerald) Finn, natives of Ireland, both now deceased. He received his early education in the Franciscan school in Winsted, afterward preparing for the priesthood by taking his philosophical and theological studies at St. Bonaventure College, in Allegany, New York. There he was graduated with the class of 1878. He was ordained to the priesthood at the cathedral in Hartford, on September 18, 1886, and his first appointment was as assistant pastor of St. Mary's Church, in Derby. He served in that capacity until February, 1900, when he was made pastor of the church at East Port Chester, Connecticut, and also at Glenville, Connecticut. He remained here until July, 1910, when he was appointed by Bishop Nilan to the irremovable pastorate of St. Mary's Church, in Norwalk. Here he has done splendid work, building up the church in all of its departments, so that it is now one of the most prosperous and influential religious organizations of this community.

A forceful speaker, Monsignor Finn has brought large congregations to St. Mary's, and in his pastoral work has shown rare devotion, tact and efficiency. He is kind and gracious in all his human relationships, and is an optimist in disposition, popular among his parishioners, commanding always the respect and confidence of his contemporaries.

PHILIP CHENEY—As manager of the spun silk division and auxiliary divisions of the Cheney Company, in Manchester, Philip Cheney is perpetuating the position of prominence that has been occupied by this family in the textile business for a hundred years.

Mr. Cheney was born in Manchester, May 8, 1878, the son of Knight Dexter and Ednah (Dow) Cheney, both deceased. His father was president of the Cheney Company for many years. After receiving the early part of his general education in a private school at Hartford, Mr. Cheney attended the Manchester High School, later was a student at the Pomfret School for one year, and then matriculated at Yale University, from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree with the class of 1901. During the latter year he joined the Cheney Company, and in the ensuing years has been appointed manager of the spun silk divisions and the auxiliary departments, and served as a member of the board of directors for many years.

Throughout his life he has been interested in military affairs and his career in this field of activity dates back to 1901, at which time he enlisted in Company G, of the First Connecticut Infantry of the Connecticut National Guard. As a member of this unit he rose from the rank of private to that of captain. He was honorably discharged from this branch of the service in 1913, and became a member of the United States Army Reserve Corps. Three years later he served as a reserve officer at Niantic and then went to the Mexican border, where he remained until he was called from the service. Shortly after the United States entered the World War, Mr. Cheney enlisted, joining the Officers Training Camp at Plattsburg, New York, in May, 1917. He was commissioned a lieutenant, assigned to the 77th Division of the National Army and dispatched to Camp Upton, Long Island, New York, for training. In due time he was sent overseas with the aforementioned division and was stationed in the Baccarat sector, where he remained until July, 1918, when he was commissioned a captain and ordered to the United States to take his post as instructor at the Central Officers Training School at Camp Pike, Arkansas. He was honorably discharged here in December, 1918.

On September 30, 1920, at Providence, Rhode Island, Mr. Cheney married Helen Campbell, daughter of Horatio N. and Mary (Buffum) Campbell, both of Providence, and both deceased.

JOHN GREGORY ECHMALIAN—The broad and varied experience John Gregory Echmalian has enjoyed in the textile centers of the United States admirably equipped him for the position of director of the State Trade School in Manchester, which he has occupied with distinction and success for the past seven years. As an authority on the manufacture of textiles, he has been the author of several textbooks and articles, among them a work dealing with the production of carpets from the raw state to the finished product. Mr. Echmalian has won wide recognition and esteem as an educator and is active in the social and civic life of his surroundings.

John Gregory Echmalian was born in Harput, Armenia, May 7, 1895, the son of Peter and Helen Echmalian, both of his native country, and now deceased. His parents came to this country about the turn of the century, his father settling in Lowell, Massachusetts, in 1897, where he worked in the textile mills, and his mother coming here in 1901, bringing him with her. The young boy grew up in Lowell, where he attended public schools and completed his general education at the Lowell High School in 1912. He then entered the Lowell Textile Institute, from which he was graduated in 1916 with a degree of Textile Engineer. After finishing his training he embarked on a career which was to be notable for its scope and achievement. He became a textile engineer in the cotton, silk and carpet mills of Lowell and later served in the same capacity in establishments located in Putnam, Norwich and Goodyear, all in the State of Connecticut. He also worked in Duluth, Minnesota; Cleveland, Ohio; Passaic, New Jersey; and finally returned to Connecticut to settle in Manchester, where, on February 21, 1921, he was appointed instructor of the silk course at the Manchester Trade School. Eight years later, he became director of this institution, a post he has since occupied with distinction and success. According to records this school was founded as a textile training center by Cheney Brothers in 1912, and three years later was taken over by the State, which has continued to operate it.

As an educator, Mr. Echmalian is a member of the American Vocational Association and the Manchester Educational Club. Socially, he belongs to several of the leading clubs and societies in this section, including the Manchester Country Club, the Manchester Kiwanis Club, and the Manchester Chamber of Commerce. He fraternizes with the Putnam Lodge, No. 105, of the Free and Accepted Masons, in which he is also a member of Putnam Chapter, No. 41, Royal Arch Masons, and the Andanaron Council, No. 14. As a college student he was elected a member of the Delta Kappa Phi fraternity. Mr. Echmalian is fond of sports of all types and finds particular pleasure in the game of golf.

On August 7, 1934, at Manchester, Mr. Echmalian married Gladys A. Donchian, daughter of Samuel B. Donchian, of Hartford, who is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Echmalian are the parents of one daughter: Alice, born August 4, 1935.

JULIA HONORA DOYLE—A leader in many political and cultural enterprises in Connecticut, Julia Honora Doyle, of Thompsonville, has contributed notably to the general well-being of the town of Enfield, and of this part of the State. For more than a quarter of a century a teacher in the public schools of Connecticut and of New York City, on her return from the latter place she brought back to Connecticut, her home State, a broad background of experience, here utilizing it for the public good. She has added literary composition to her other achievements, writing poems, plays and pageants.

Miss Doyle was born November 26, 1867, in Suffield, Connecticut, daughter of Timothy C. and Mary L. (Meehan) Doyle, both natives of the county of Cork, Ireland, who came to the United States about 1850. Her father lived for some time in Pennsylvania, then came to Suffield, Connecticut. Her mother, when about fifteen, spent three years in Hartford, next proceeding to Iowa and remaining there for five years before her return to Suffield to live. It was in St. Mary's Church, Windsor Locks, that she was married to Timothy C. Doyle, father of Julia H. Doyle. The father died August 1, 1912, and the mother on January 5, 1913.

The public school at Suffield provided Miss Doyle her early education, and later she studied at the New Britain State Normal School, taking extension courses at Yale University, New Haven, and at the College of the City of New York and Columbia University, New York City. She began teaching in Middletown, Connecticut, at the Johnson School, on January 2, 1890, a month before her graduation, there remaining until March, 1896. She then entered the training department of the New Haven State Normal School, where she stayed until September, 1902, the time of her removal to New York City. Her first work in New York was as a teacher at Public School No. 80, where she specialized in English and science. She next taught at Public School No. 67, specializing there in history, geography and drawing. Her work was gradually winning recognition, with the result that she was sent to Public School No. 62, the largest intermediate public school in the world, where she taught junior and senior high school grades of English.

Singled out for administrative tasks, she was appointed, in 1919, assistant principal of Public School No. 11, where she remained until her retirement on February 1, 1928, after completing twenty-five years of service, all in the Borough of Manhattan. Her work as a teacher was of great value, winning wide praise and approval. She perhaps expressed fittingly her educational philosophy in a poem of her own composition, entitled "The Teacher's Prayer":

Give me but childhood's steps to guide
Along the paths of Truth;
Let me but place her shining torch
Within the hands of youth;
Go Fame and Fortune, where you will,
I'll hold you ever kind,
If to my lot it fall to train
Sweet childhood's heart and mind.

Give me to make my daily task
A song of love and praise;
Let me inspire the soul of youth
To follow Wisdom's ways;
Be mine a strong and cheerful heart,
A purpose undefiled,
That I may ever worthy be
To teach a little child.

Give me to sow the seeds of peace,
That fruitful years may grow;
Let me enkindle hearts of fire,
To face and quell the foe;
I shall not ask my way to be
The paths that heroes trod,
If daily I can youth prepare
For country and for God.

This is but one of the many poems that Miss Doyle has written. She has also penned plays and pageants. In June, 1935, she was chairman of the tercentenary program of the town of Enfield. Her poem, "A Song for Connecticut," was accepted by the State committee on music for the tercentenary organization, being played to the tune of "There is a Tavern in the Town." Thereafter, the cheerful strains of "There is a State that we love well; we love well" rolled from many a tongue as the song became known among Connecticut's people.

Miss Doyle has never remained inactive. Retirement from her teaching career but served to open further vistas and present new social duties to her. In 1928 she became a member of the board of directors of the Enfield Public Library, on Pearl Street, Thompsonville. In 1931 she became president of the board. From 1929 to 1932 she performed valuable work as a member of the Board of Education here. In 1930 she was elected to the House of Representatives of the State, representing the town of Enfield in that body, and again in 1934 she was sent to the Legislature. In both sessions in which she served, she was a member of the library committee. For years, she was active in the New York City Teachers' Association, the Interborough Association of Women Teachers of New York City, and the National Education Association. She is a member of Sister Fabian Circle of the D. of I., having served as its first regent. She belongs also to the Woman's Club of Enfield, is president of the Woman's Democratic Club and past president of the Hartford County Woman's Democratic Association, and a member of the Democratic town committee of Enfield. She is widely known and sought as a speaker at political, educational and fraternal meetings, both in Connecticut and Massachusetts.

CHARLES E. HEINTZ—Over thirty years of able and efficient management has enabled Charles E. Heintz, of Rockville, to build up one of the finest and most widely patronized printing establishments in Tolland County. The venture is the result of his early and ambitious labors, which were carried on at the time he was working in one of the textile mills of this vicinity. It was built with intelligent and painstaking care, a foundation whose strength has grown with the years and inspired the confidence of patrons and public alike.

Mr. Heintz was born in Rockville, February 22, 1884, the son of William H. and Mary Barbara (Ramp) Heintz, both natives of Alsace Lorraine, who came to this country in 1881 and settled in the aforementioned community, where his father was a textile weaver. Both parents passed away in 1924. After a general education in the public schools, Mr. Heintz secured work in the textile mills here and during this period became interested in the printing business. He worked alone, studied the subject and eventually had acquired sufficient experience and patronage to enable him to concentrate on the business he has since built up with such success. With each succeeding year the enterprise has grown until today it is recognized as one of the finest establishments of its type.

While this business has been the major interest in Mr. Heintz's life, he has not allowed it to interfere or completely exclude his participation in the social and civic life of his surroundings, as is evident from his activities and the important municipal offices he has been called upon to fill. He is a Republican in politics, and for two years served as city councilman, occupying this office during 1924 and 1925. He has also served on the Police Committee and the Public Works Committee on Claims. His social activities have been largely devoted to fraternal orders. He is a member of Fayette Lodge, No. 69, of the Free and Accepted Masons; Lodge No. 1359, of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; a member and Past Chancellor of Damon Lodge, No. 17, and District Deputy Grand Chancellor of the Knights of Phythias; and belongs to Chapter, No. 60, of the Order of the Eastern Star. In his religious convictions he worships at St. John's Episcopal Church in Rockville, for which he serves as a vestryman.

On June 15, 1918, at Rockville, Mr. Heintz married Alice Esther Cynthia Klee, who is active socially, serving as an officer in Hope Chapter, No. 60, of the Order of the Eastern Star, and also worshipping at the Episcopal Church, where she sings in the choir. Mrs. Heintz was the daughter of William A. and Ann Rebecca (Jones) Klee, both deceased and former residents of this community, where her father was a loom fixer in the local mills. Mr. and Mrs. Heintz were the parents of three children: 1. Charles, who was born June 7, 1919, and died in infancy. 2. Barbara Annetta, born September 23, 1923, now attending the local schools. 3. Charles E., Jr., born May 24, 1925. Mr. and Mrs. Heintz have recently purchased the two houses fronting on Union Street, Nos. 66 and 68, which are connected.

CIRO PAOLELLA—President of the Hamden Building Tile Company, Incorporated, Ciro Paolella, of Hamden, is the largest concrete products manufacturer in Connecticut today, although only sixteen years ago, after misfortune in a previous undertaking, he launched his present enterprise with but ten cents for carfare in his pocket.

Ciro Paolella was born in the province of Benevento, Italy, March 23, 1892, son of Angelo and Marie Rose (Ulano) Paolella.

Attending private schools in his native city in the Province of Benevento, Ciro Paolella not only learned the trade of a mason with his father, who was a building contractor, but also mastered the trade of a cabinet maker. Coming to the United States in 1909, Ciro Paolella located in Paterson, New Jersey, finding employment as a cabinet maker in the factory of the Lucian Piano and Manufacturing Company. A year later, Mr. Paolella left Paterson and came to New Haven, where he found work as a mason, an occupation in which he prospered, establishing himself as a general contractor in 1919. Then, two years later, he formed a partnership to enlarge his business, with unfortunate results. One morning in 1922, just after the partnership was broken, he received a telephone call from an old friend, the late John Massaro, a restaurant operator, who asked to see him. With his last ten cents, Mr. Paolella went to see his friend and found that Mr. Massaro wished to establish Mr. Paolella in business again. Suggesting the enterprise of making cement blocks for building purposes, Mr. Massaro gave his friend two building lots for a factory site. Arranging for a small, hand-operated machine to form the blocks, Ciro Paolella went to work again and, by 1926, not only had a power-driven machine, which cost $11,000, but also had some $65,000 in property. He formed his present Hamden Building Tile Company, Incorporated, relocated and enlarged his plant and began a rapid growth which has made him today the largest manufacturer in his field in Connecticut. A member of St. Anne's Roman Catholic Church, Mr. Paolella is a member of the Hamden Chamber of Commerce and the New Haven organization of the Eagles.

Ciro Paolella married, in New Haven, November 30, 1913, Mary Jane Casella, daughter of Liberato and Anna Mary Casella. Mr. and Mrs. Paolella are the parents of six children: 1. Phillip, born April 3, 1915, now office manager of the Hamden Building Tile Company, Incorporated. 2. Alfred, born August 28, 1916, shop superintendent of Hamden Building Title Company, Incorporated. 3. Ralph, born July 15, 1918. 4. Rose Anna, born July 31, 1920. 5. Helen Elvira, born August 24, 1922. 6. Mary Jane, born April 18, 1927.

FREDERICK GEORGE HARTENSTEIN—Both as former mayor of Rockville, and its present town clerk and treasurer, Frederick George Hartenstein has a record that places him among its outstanding citizens. He has been, and continues to be, one of the constructive leaders in local life and affairs, a man devoted to progress and welfare. He is a native of Rockville, born October 7, 1874, son of Louis and Amelia (Horn) Hartenstein.

His father, Louis Hartenstein, was born in New York City, on May 26, 1846, and before he had reached his majority had enlisted in the 144th Regiment, New York Volunteers, for service during the Civil War (1861). While still a private he was made orderly to General "Phil" Sheridan, serving under him until the close of the war. Mr. Hartenstein took part in the early battles in the Shenandoah Valley, Harper's Ferry, Gettysburg, and in later major campaigns. He was twice wounded in action and received military commendations. After being honorably discharged from the Union forces, he settled in Rockville, Connecticut, where he was a substantial citizen, highly esteemed. He is reputed to have been the pioneer barber of Rockville, and was an outstanding figure in his craft, having taught his trade throughout the State. He married Amelia Horn, on May 25, 1868, and died on July 10, 1921.

Amelia (Horn) Hartenstein was born in Germany, August 9, 1848, and was brought by her parents to the United States when three years old and she grew up and was educated in Rockville. Her parents, Frederick and Amelia (Breckner) Horn, migrated from Somerfelt, Germany, a suburb of Berlin, to America in about 1851, and were among the first settlers of Vernon. The mother was educated in the palace of a German prince. Her father was a boss wool sorter, having learned his trade in Germany and followed it throughout his life. Mrs. Amelia (Horn) Hartenstein died in Rockville, on March 31, 1922.

After attending the public schools of the Town of Vernon, Frederick George Hartenstein went to work at a very early age even while he studied. He became a "printer's devil," when fourteen years old, being employed on the "Rockville Journal" for the following three years. Having served his apprenticeship he went with White, Corbin and Company, the pioneer envelope makers in the United States, and now a subsidiary of the United States Envelope Company. In after years Mr. Hartenstein resigned to take a responsible position with the J. A. and R. Reed Company, of Providence, Rhode Island. After two years he joined the Snow and Farnham Company, and returned to Rockville, in January, 1896, to again enter the employ of the "Journal," during the next year becoming associated with T. F. Rady and Brown, later the T. F. Rady Company. Mr. Hartenstein continued his connection with this concern until March, 1935, or for thirty-eight years.

Although Mr. Hartenstein has entered heartily into community affairs, he seldom has been motivated by political ambitions. His manifold abilities were drafted, however, in December, 1919, when he was elected mayor of Rockville, taking office during the following year for a two-year term. A contemporary, commenting on certain features of his regime, has written:

> He was admired by both political parties, always fair and clean in his dealings. During his mayorship he was selected by the French Government to present French war merits certificates to the parents and nearest of kin to those who paid the supreme sacrifice in the World War.
> For many years, and up to the present time, he has been selected as president to raise funds for the Salvation Army in this district. During his administration he was instrumental in securing the first motor-driven pumper and hook and ladder for the Fire Department. Also during his administration the city consummated the deal with the State in taking over the highway from Burkes farm at the end of the city line to West Street and north along West Street to the Ellington farm line, which the State will always maintain. Also during his administration the meat and store inspection was inaugurated and after much strenuous work was made a city ordinance, and Mayor Hartenstein appointed Dr. J. R. Morin, who has been most efficient in his work and is holding the appointment to the present time. Rockville today is free from all diseases which in the past were attributed to faulty meats, milk and unclean stores.

When Mr. Hartenstein was asked to accept renomination for the mayorship, he declined, pleading the "press of business." On October 7, 1935, however, he was elected town clerk and town treasurer. He is also agent of the Town Deposit Fund. Incidentally, he was elected to his present civic office by the largest vote of either ticket. Fraternally, he is affiliated with Damon Lodge, No. 17, Knights of Pythias, in which order he had held various offices, and is a member and Past Chief Ranger of the Foresters of America.

On June 10, 1896, at St. Bernard's Rectory, Rockville, Connecticut, Frederick George Hartenstein married Rose Ella Tracey, daughter of Michael and Elizabeth (Bannon) Tracey, both deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Hartenstein are the parents of six children: 1. Frederick Tracey, born March 12, 1897, who married Blanche Bouffard, and they have two daughters, Margaret and Ruth. They reside in Rockville, where Mr. Hartenstein is foreman of the "Manchester Evening Herald"; and formerly was member of the council of Rockville. As a first class printer he served during the World War in the United States Naval Reserves, and was honorably discharged September 30, 1921. 2. Grace, born March 20, 1898, died in May, 1900. 3. Mildred Agnes, married Harold O. Grant, and they have three boys, Frederick George, Olin Tracey, and Morgan Grant, all of Manchester, Connecticut. 4. Harry William, died in infancy. 5. Gladys Mae, residing at home, the owner of the Vogue Beauty Parlor, in Rockville. 6. Elmer Francis, born February 19, 1912, married Roberta Kaddy, of Stafford Springs, and they have a son, Elmer Francis, Jr., and a daughter, Dian Rose, living in Rockville, associated with the Hartford Fire Insurance Company.

WILLIAM ARTHUR KUHNLY—Since 1919 William Arthur Kuhnly has served as superintendent and manager of the Rockville plant of the Horton Manufacturing Company, of Bristol. He has been associated for many years with the business of the company and its predecessors at Rockville, and occupies an important position in the life of the town, which he has served in several public offices.

Mr. Kuhnly was born in Rockville on September 15, 1882, a son of John and Caroline (Zimmerman) Kuhnly, both born in Connecticut of German ancestry. In the paternal line, the grandfather, Andrew Kuhnly came to the United States from Germany in early manhood before his marriage. After his arrival, he lived for a time in Norwich, Connecticut, but subsequently settled in Rockville, where he died. John Kuhnly, the father, was a plumbing and heating contractor here until his death in 1932, operating under the name of the Kuhnly Plumbing and Heating Company. His wife, Caroline Zimmerman, who died in 1929, was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Zimmerman, of Rockville.

William Arthur Kuhnly received his early education in the public schools of Rockville and, after attending high school, completed a course at the Morse Business College in Hartford. He obtained his first position in the office of the superintendent of parks of the City of Hartford, where he was employed for two years and at the end of that time became a bookkeeper in the office of E. J. Martin's Sons, in Rockville. Gradually he assumed larger responsibilities in the organization and in 1919, when it was sold to the Horton Manufacturing Company, whose main office is at Bristol, Connecticut, he was promoted to superintendent and manager of the Rockville plant. This company is manufacturer of silk fishing lines and cords, a field in which Mr. Kuhnly's long experience has made him a recognized authority.

In addition to his business connections, Mr. Kuhnly has for many years been active in town affairs and public life, exerting an important influence in his community. From 1916 to 1918, he served as tax collector of Rockville and the Town of Vernon; from 1922 to 1926, was a councilman and for the following two years, from 1926 to 1928, served as alderman. More recently, he has again assumed the office of tax collector for the Town of Vernon. In these various public capacities, he has discharged all duties with fidelity and vigor, achieving a notable record of disinterested and efficient public service.

Mr. Kuhnly is also active fraternally, being affiliated with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Foresters of America, the Improved Order of Red Men, and the Royal Arcanum. He is a communicant of the Episcopal Church and a prominent layman of St. John's parish at Rockville, which he serves as vestryman, auditor and house agent.

On June 26, 1907, at Rockville, William Arthur Kuhnly married Harriet Louise Nutland, daughter of William and Margaret (Noble) Nutland. They were the parents of two daughters: 1. Hazel U., who is associated with the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, living at home. 2. Lucille E., who was graduated in 1936 from Rockville High School, and is now a student in St. Joseph's College, West Hartford, class of 1940.

JOHN FRANCIS DAILEY, JR.—Since the early days of the industry, John Francis Dailey, Jr., has been associated with the progress of automobile transportation, first as a machinist serving the territory near his home and later as a dealer. He is now agent for the Packard Motor Company at Rockville and for several other cars in this area, holding a position of recognized prominence in automobile circles of the State.

Mr. Dailey was born in Rockville on March 3, 1887, a son of John Francis and Eliza (Ryan) Dailey. His father, a blacksmith, was born in the old Dailey homestead in Tolland, which is still in possession of the family, and died in 1933. The mother passed away when her son was still a small boy.

John Francis Dailey, Jr., attended the public schools of Rockville, but the greater part of his education, like many other successful men, has come from the school of experience and hard knocks. In his youth he learned the blacksmith's trade under his father and continued in it until about 1915. Meanwhile, some ten years earlier, his interest had been attracted by the possibilities of the automobile and after mastering the mechanical details connected with their operation he began to repair and service such cars as were then operated in the district. In 1915, he took over the Rockville agency for the old Chevrolet car, discontinuing his blacksmith's work entirely to devote himself to his new duties. His shop was located then on Orchard Street, where he remained until after the United States entered the World War.

Mr. Dailey enlisted in the army for war service on October 22, 1917. He was assigned to Company F, 301st Engineers as a private and trained at Camp Devens, Massachusetts, where he was promoted to the grade of sergeant, first class, in June, 1918. For two months he was instructor in a mechanical school at Devens, Massachusetts. On July 13th, he left camp with his regiment for the point of embarkation and arrived in France on July 30th. These troops were ordered to the front during the St. Mihiel offensive, working under fire for several days at Flirey, Seicheprey and Essey during the month of September. For the remainder of the war, until the Armistice, Mr. Dailey served in the Toul sector where he was frequently subjected to hostile fire in the performance of his duties. After the termination of hostilities he went into Germany with the American Army of Occupation, making the grand march to the Rhine. His company, crossing the Moselle River, on December 2, 1918, led the 301st Engineers into the Rhine Valley, where they were quartered at Brohl. On May 11, 1919, these troops were withdrawn from Germany and returned to the United States, where Mr. Dailey received his honorable discharge on June 13, 1919, with the rank of sergeant.

After leaving the army, Mr. Dailey returned to his duties in Rockville, where he has since continued to be active as an automobile dealer. He now holds the agency for Packard and Pontiac cars and for International Trucks in his territory. He is sole owner of his sales and service station in Rockville and also has a show room in Manchester. Mr. Dailey has served the interests of the companies he represents with unfailing energy and has made a very successful record as a dealer. His position in the automobile sales industry is reflected by his leadership in many of its organizations. He is president of the town and county Automobile Dealers Association, is a member of the board of directors of the Connecticut State Automobile Dealers Association and a member of the National Activities Council of the National Automobile Dealers Association. He also served as director and administrator of the automobile code under the NRA.

In addition to these connections, Mr. Dailey is affiliated with Rockville Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; with the American Legion (Two Star) and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. He is also a member and former vice-president of the Rockville Fish and Game Club, a member of the Gesang and Declamation Club, the Italian-American Friendship Club and the National Skeet Association. Although in making his own way in the world from boyhood, he has found it necessary to give his closest attention to business, he enjoys congenial companionship and social contacts and has a wide circle of friends.

In 1924, John Francis Dailey, Jr., married Katherine Daley, daughter of Thomas Daley, who died at Rockville, in March, 1937, in his ninety-fifth year. Mrs. Dailey's mother died some years ago.

ARTHUR GILBERT VINCENT—Since the beginning of his active career Arthur Gilbert Vincent has devoted himself to the drug business, which he has followed successfully in a number of Connecticut communities. He now owns and operates a pharmacy at Rockville, where his interests have centered for more than two decades and where he has become a well known figure in the life of the town.

Mr. Vincent was born at Champlain, New York, on February 8, 1888, a son of William O. and Mary Jane (Roberts) Vincent. He is descended from a French family, which was established in this country near Champlain, where his father was a merchant until the time of his death. His mother, who is still living, resides in Burlington, Vermont.

Arthur G. Vincent was educated at Burlington High School, then Edmonds High School, and spent one year as a student in the University of Vermont, pursuing the medical course. While he was still in high school however, he began his association with the drug business, working as a clerk with local pharmacists, and after the completion of his education he was licensed to practice this profession. In 1912, when he was twenty-four, he removed to New London, Connecticut, as manager of Starr & Brothers Drug Store there and has since been a resident of this State. After one year in New London, he went to the Riker-Hegemann store, now Liggett's, on Main Street, Hartford, and spent two years in that connection. In 1915, he came to Rockville as manager of the Thomas Pharmacy and after a period of about seven years, purchased his present drug store at No. 32 Union Street, which he has since operated as sole owner. He has maintained the highest standards in his business and the community has availed itself freely of his excellent service as a pharmacist and merchant.

Mr. Vincent is affiliated fraternally with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and is a member of the Rockville Fish and Game Club, an association which reflects his principal leisure interest. He is an enthusiastic follower of the sports of hunting and fishing, particularly the latter, and turns to them frequently for recreation. In personal relationships, he is known for his congenial qualities and has a wide circle of friends.

Mr. Vincent married, in Burlington, Vermont, Helen Counter, daughter of Mrs. Delphine Counter. They became the parents of four children: 1. Constance, deceased. 2. Marie, who married Herbert Schnier, of Rockville. 3. Robert, who is associated with his father in business. 4. Wayne, now a senior in high school.

Frank Parizek

DONALD CONVERSE FISK—One of Connecticut's foremost legal practitioners, Donald Converse Fisk occupies a position of leadership and standing in his profession. His deep interest in the affairs of his community, the City of Rockville, and in the betterment of his State and its institutions has won for him the warm respect and admiration of his contemporaries in all walks and departments of life.

Mr. Fisk was born June 15, 1906, in Stafford, Connecticut, son of Henry C. and Elsie (MacCallum) Fisk. His father was engaged for many years in the lumber trade with the firm of Fisk and Demond until his death in 1923. The mother died in 1921.

Donald Converse Fisk received his early education in the public schools, and after completing his high school studies at Stafford, his native place, he spent a year at Dean Academy, in Franklin, Massachusetts. He then studied at Tufts College, in Cambridge, Massachusetts, for four years, being graduated in 1929 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. Three years later, in 1932, he took the Bachelor of Laws degree at Yale University, in New Haven, and in the same year he was formally admitted to the Connecticut bar. Beginning his practice of law in Rockville, he at once came into a position of importance and standing in his profession.

At the same time he has figured prominently in a variety of business and civic affairs. He is a director of the People's Savings Bank, at Rockville, the Rockville Building and Loan Association, and a trustee of the Rockville City Hospital. He has also lent his commercial and executive talents to important charitable work, notably as a director of the Connecticut Society for Crippled Children. He belongs to the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity, which he joined in his student days. He is a member of the Tolland County Bar Association and the Connecticut State Bar Association. In spare time he particularly enjoys playing golf, a game of which he is fond. Fishing is another of his favorite recreations, and he is enabled to engage in this sport with great freedom, notably through the fact of his owning his own island in the Town of Union, in Lake Mashapang. The island comprises one and one-half acres of land, and the fishing is extraordinarily good. Here he spends his summers and every holiday period in which it is possible for him to go to this place. The island is, with him, a sort of hobby, constituting the major side interest of his life.

On April 29, 1933, at Rockville, Connecticut, Donald Converse Fisk married Dorothy Mae Robinson, daughter of Dr. Walter Henry and Gertrude H. (Green) Robinson. A record of Dr. Robinson, Mrs. Fisk's father, appears elsewhere in this volume. To Mr. and Mrs. Fisk one child was born, a son, John Robinson, on February 28, 1936.

FRANK PARIZEK—Long successfully engaged in business activities in Willington, Frank Parizek earned the warm esteem and respect of his fellow citizens in this region of Connecticut. For years he was a manufacturer of pearl buttons and one of Willington's leading residents, here distinguishing himself by faithful attention to duty and by a desire to serve his community and its people. Kind, generous and thoughtful always of others and their points of view, he possessed qualities that placed him high in the estimation of those around him and brought him the devotion of all whose privilege it was to know him.

Mr. Parizek was a native of Bohemia, born December 5, 1868, and was a wood turner by trade in his native land. Coming to New York in the early nineties of the last century, he worked for a time in that metropolis. Long hours added to his already industrious habits, his work being at a lathe in the button manufacturing trade. It was in New York City that he met his future wife, Anna (Zapotocky) Parizek, who worked with him and with whom he saved money in accordance with a planned financial program. At the end of five or six years, because of the condition of his health, Mr. Parizek left New York and came to the Willington Hill district of Willington, Connecticut. Here he and his wife invested the money that they had saved in a 100-acre farm known as the "Edgerton Place." Here Mr. Parizek farmed for some years, gradually regaining his health until he was able once more to turn to manufacturing.

It was in 1910 that, in Willington, with only three or four employes at the outset, he started on a very small scale a button manufacturing plant of his own. Organizing what later became the Frank Parizek Manufacturing Company, he established it first of all on a part of his homestead property. As business increased, he was forced to build larger quarters on land that he owned adjacent to his farm. In the course of the years, the plant grew and prospered, three additions being made to it as time went on.

In addition to his other activity, Mr. Parizek was responsible for the laying of the electric power line in his district of the Town of Willington. So it is that today a handsome modern brick and cement building, of fireproof structure, 115 feet in length and eighty feet wide, was established here by the Parizek Manufacturing Company. The most up-to-date provisions were made for safeguarding the workers' health and making their conditions easier for them. The company, which is still growing, employs about 175 hands, though the death of its founder was a great loss to it. In addition to his other works, Mr. Parizek made himself responsible for the building of a number of fine residences in the Willington Hill district. His favorite pastime was the cultivation of pine trees, 16,000 of which he set out near his home and factory. The homestead and home farm are still intact, and here Mrs. Parizek and their son reside. A further account of the son, Frank C. Parizek, is to be found in the following biography.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Parizek were: 1. Adolph, deceased, 1919. 2. Frank, who died at the age of two years. 3. Mary, who married Charles Wochomurka. 4. Rose, who died in 1924. 5. Emily R. 6. Frank C., of whom further.

The death of Frank Parizek, the founder of the button industry in Willington, occurred on January 21, 1930, and was an occasion of deep and sincere sorrow in every circle in which he was known. His accomplishments were numerous and many-sided, and he was loved by a host of friends for his thorough devotion to worth while principles of living and thinking. His influence will be felt through the long years of the future, particularly in the business sphere, so improved and uplifted by his labors in its behalf.

FRANK C. PARIZEK—Carrying on an extensive business in pearl button manufacturing, Frank C. Parizek has made a substantial contribution to the community of Willington, where he is widely and favorably known, and to the industrial and civic life of Connecticut as a whole. The whole of his family has been prominent in the conduct of the Parizek Manufacturing Company, and he and his mother have continued the work started by the father many years ago.

Mr. Parizek was born April 29, 1910, in Willington, Connecticut, son of Frank and Anna (Zapotocky) Parizek. His father, a native of Bohemia, died January 21, 1930, and was the founder of the button making industry for whose work the Parizeks have long been noted. A further account of the elder Mr. Parizek appears under separate heading preceding this biography.

The public schools of Willington provided the early education of Frank C. Parizek, who later attended Windham High School. He was still very young when he first became connected with his father's factory. At the age of fourteen years he began to equip himself with a knowledge of the fundamentals of the manufacture of pearl buttons. By 1927, when he was seventeen years of age, he was taking an active part in running the factory's affairs, being thoroughly acquainted with the problems of production. So it was that, at the sudden death of his father, on January 21, 1930, the younger Mr. Parizek was prepared to take over the active direction of the Parizek Manufacturing Company. He became treasurer and general manager of the organization, as well as chairman of its board of directors. His mother, widow of the founder of the business, was made president. And his brother-in-law, Charles Wochomurka (q. v.), was made vice-president and director and placed in charge of factory operation. A brother, Adolph Parizek, until his death in 1919, was also associated with the elder Mr. Parizek in this business. Adolph Parizek was at one time a member of the lower house of the Connecticut Legislature and was long prominent in the affairs of Willington.

Indeed, all the members of the family have taken their share of responsibility where civic duty has been a consideration, each one serving in his own special way and in accordance with his own talents. Frank C. Parizek was himself chosen by the electorate to represent the Town of Willington in the lower house of the State Legislature in 1937, was a member of the First Company, Governor's Foot Guard, for about five months and served in Hartford during the flood of 1936. He is a director of the Willington Cemetery Association; a member of the advisory board of the Stafford Springs branch of the Hartford-Connecticut Trust Company. In the Free and Accepted Masons he is a member of Uriel Lodge, No. 24, at Merrow; Orient Chapter, No. 42, of Royal Arch Masons, at Stafford Springs; Adoniram Council, No. 14, of Royal and Select Masters, at Rockville, Connecticut; St. John's Commandery, No. 11, Knights Templar, at Willimantic; and Sphinx Temple of the Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, at Hartford. He also belongs to the Order of Eastern Star and the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks. He is a director of the Twilight League, of Willimantic, an active baseball organization, in which the Parizek Manufacturing Company won the championship in 1935 and 1936. He is a member of the prudential committee, of the Federated Churches, of Willington, and also a member of the Stafford Springs Golf Club.

Mr. Parizek enjoys outdoor sports in his spare time, being particularly fond of horseback riding. He is liked by the townspeople of Willington and by all who know him, and his influence is a powerful force for good in this district.

CLAUDE ANDREW MILLS—As mayor of Rockville, Claude Andrew Mills has performed a valuable work of leadership in his community, aiding in the furtherance of many needed reforms and civic improvements from the vantage point of the mayor's chair. At the same time he has become one of the city's foremost business men, being successfully engaged in the stationery trade at No. 6 Park Place, in this city.

Mr. Mills was born November 6, 1894, in Willimantic, Connecticut, son of Andrew and Mary (Miller) Mills, both natives of Scotland who came to the United States about 1896, settling in Rockville. Both parents are now deceased, the father passing from this life in 1915, and the mother in 1898, not long after they took up their residence in Rockville. The father was a merchant tailor and one of his community's beloved men.

In the Rockville public schools Claude Andrew Mills received his early education, though most of his training came to him in what he describes graphically as "The School of Hard Knocks." In this school of experience, most people in the last analysis, learn what they know, and Mr. Mills was no exception to the rule. Starting work as a boy in Randall's Store, he remained with the same business from 1926 to 1928, in which period it was owned jointly by himself and a Mr. Porter. Then Mr. Porter's death necessitated a reorganization, and in 1928, Mr. Mills purchased the entire enterprise, becoming its sole owner. Since January, 1928, he has been the proprietor of this store, rendering valuable service to the community in his capacity as stationer, even as in his public connections.

Early in his career he was appointed tax collector for the town of Vernon, the appointment coming to him at the hands of the local selectmen. Later in the same year, he was duly elected to this office, in which he served continuously from 1920 to 1927. He was also appointed tax collector of the City of Rockville by the Common Council there in April, 1920. Through the same period of time he also served as personal tax collector. For two years, from January 1, 1934, to January 1, 1936, he served as city treasurer of Rockville. In December, 1935, he sought office as mayor of Rockville and was duly elected, assuming the responsibilities of the chief executive post in the municipal government on January 6, 1936. Incidentally, the majority that he received in the election was the largest in the history of the city's election history. His service as first officer in the city government has been of real value to the people here, and he has been instrumental in the introduction of many forward-looking measures for the general betterment.

In his political views Mr. Mills is a staunch Republican. He is a member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the American Legion. His wartime service was of outstanding character. He entered the service of his country on September 8, 1917, as a member of Company H, 102nd Regiment of Infantry, Twenty-sixth Division. On September fifteenth he sailed for overseas, though he subsequently had to return to the United States because of mechanical trouble on the boat. About October 10, 1917, he again sailed for overseas duty, remaining on the other side of the ocean until April, 1919. There he participated in many battles, engagements, skirmishes and expeditions. From February 6, 1918, until March nineteenth of that year he was in the Chemin des Dames sector. On March seventeenth he took part in a local engagement there. From April third to June twenty-ninth he was in the Toul sector, taking part in the Seicheprey defensive on April twentieth and twenty-first and in the Remiers defensive operations on June 20, 1918. On July twelfth he took his place in the Chateau Thierry sector, remaining there until the twenty-sixth. From July eighteenth to twenty-sixth he was active in the Aisne-Marne offensive, and he received shell wounds on July twenty-third while so serving. He was quickly restored to health, however, and by September twelfth was able to return to the active service, this time in the St. Mihiel sector. Those operations lasted through the fifteenth of the month. From September fifteenth, to October 6, 1918, he was in the Herbeville sector, participating in a local engagement at St. Hilaire on September eighteenth. From October fifteenth to November 11, 1918, the date of the armistice and the formal conclusion of hostilities, he was active in the Meuse-Argonne offensive movement. Though he entered the service as a private in the ranks, Mr. Mills was honorably discharged on April 29, 1919, with the rank of corporal.

In August, 1924, Claude Andrew Mills married, at Hartford, Connecticut, Helen L. Wells, daughter of George F. and Alice M. (Yorke) Wells, both natives of Westerly, Rhode Island. Both of the parents of Helen L. (Wells) Mills are now deceased. Her connection with the life of Rockville and this district of Connecticut has been a significant one, in the course of which she has shared many of her husband's broad civic interests. The family of Mills has, in a variety of ways, effectively served the communities where the different members of the line have lived, and the work of Claude Andrew Mills in Rockville, and particularly as its mayor, has been important.

BERNARD JOSIAH ACKERMAN—Widely known as a lawyer and particularly as a counselor on corporation law, Bernard Josiah Ackerman, of Rockville, is one of Connecticut's foremost citizens and professional leaders. He has distinguished himself by his deep and constructive interest in civic affairs in his community and State, earning thereby the respect, admiration and love of his contemporaries.

Mr. Ackerman was born September 28, 1895, in Hartford, Connecticut, son of Samuel and Clara (Blum) Ackerman. His father, who was a popular Hartford merchant, is now deceased. The father also was deeply interested in public affairs, becoming a candidate for councilman in Hartford but being defeated because he was a Republican running for office in a strongly Democratic ward. That was his only political aspiration. The mother, Clara (Blum) Ackerman, today makes her home in Hartford.

In the Hartford graded and high schools Bernard Josiah Ackerman received his early education, later attending Cornell University, at Ithaca, New York, and the New York University Law School, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1921. He commenced his active practice in that same year in association with Judge Ralph M. Grant, and continues this association to the present. Along with the regular professional work of Mr. Ackerman, he has rendered notable service to the Rockville community. In 1934 he was appointed by the City Council to serve as corporation counsel of the city, and re-appointed in 1936. He is also prosecuting attorney.

Mr. Ackerman is a loyal member of the Free and Accepted Masons, belonging to St. John's Lodge No. 4, and he also belongs to the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Knights of Pythias. He holds membership in the Sojourners and the American Legion and is Grand Chef de Gare of the "Forty and Eight," Department of Connecticut. On August 21, 1917, he enlisted for World War service in the United States Navy from which he was honorably discharged in March, 1919, with the rank of ensign.

On August 28, 1921, Bernard Josiah Ackerman married, at Hartford, Connecticut, Lillian Ginsberg, daughter of Jacob and Mamie (Shapiro) Ginsberg. One child has been born to this marriage, Elaine Ackerman, who was born November 11, 1923, in Hartford. The Ackermans are highly esteemed residents of Rockville, where their many friends warmly cherish their acquaintance.

SAUL LOUIS PEIZER—As a member of the law firm of Ackerman and Peizer, Saul Louis Peizer occupies a position of leadership and distinction in the legal profession. His warm interest in the general affairs of his community, the city of Rockville, has brought him the admiration and affection of a host of his fellow citizens in all walks and departments of life, and as a result he is in a position to render outstanding service to the district where he makes his home.

Mr. Peizer was born October 2, 1897, in Russia, son of Israel and Lillian (Shulman) Peizer, who came to the United States from their native land in 1908, bringing him with them and settling in Hartford. The father was a teacher of Hebrew and a descendant of a long line of teachers and scholars. After arriving on this side of the Atlantic, he taught privately in Hartford until his death in 1914. The mother still makes her home in the City of Hartford.

The Hartford public schools provided the early education of Saul Louis Peizer, and later he studied at the Law School of New York University, taking his degree of Bachelor of Laws in 1920. He commenced his formal practice of his profession in January, 1922, in Hartford, there carrying on his work until 1927. In that year he removed to Vernon, practicing in that town and centering his work there until he formed his present partnership with Bernard Josiah Ackerman, a record of whose career appears in the preceding biography. He still makes his home in Vernon, though the Ackerman and Peizer partnership has offices in Rockville. It was in 1932 that Mr. Peizer joined forces with Mr. Ackerman, and the relationship has been eminently successful from the outset.

Along with his other activities, Mr. Peizer is today assistant prosecuting attorney of Rockville. He is a member of the Rockville Lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, and also belongs to Vernon Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry. Each of the organizations or projects with which he has been affiliated has in one or another way benefited from his labors in its behalf, and the Vernon and Rockville communities have been the gainers from having among their residents such outstanding professional and civic leaders as Mr. Peizer.

Saul Louis Peizer married, on January 29, 1924, at Hartford, Connecticut, Nettie Cohen, of Hartford, daughter of Charles and Lena (Kone) Cohen. Two children have been born to this marriage: 1. Cynthia, who was born in Hartford, Connecticut, June 9, 1926. 2. Lois, born March 24, 1929, in Vernon.

WALTER HENRY ROBINSON, D.D.S.—Practicing dentistry in the Henry Building, at Rockville, Dr. Walter Henry Robinson has come to be widely and favorably known in the professional life of this region, earning the confidence of his patients and the respect of his colleagues.

Dr. Robinson was born October 12, 1876, at Sunderland, Massachusetts, son of Thornton Henry and Jennie Huldah (Littlejohn) Robinson and a descendant of an old and honorable New England family on the paternal side of his house. On his mother's side of the family, his grandparents were born in Scotland, coming to America while still young and taking up their residence on this side of the Atlantic.

Walter Henry Robinson studied in the public school in the Connecticut community where his family lived, also attending a private school and so preparing himself for his professional school work. He was graduated, in 1900, from the Philadelphia Dental College, taking the degree of Doctor of Dental Science. Since that time he has been continuously engaged in the practice of his chosen profession, earning the high esteem and satisfaction of his contemporaries for his splendid work. At the outset of his career he carried on his practice in the City of Bridgeport, but in 1902, he came to Rockville, where he has remained down to the present.

Dr. Robinson is a member of the Connecticut State Dental Society and of the Hartford Dental Society. In the Free and Accepted Masons he is affiliated with lodge, Royal Arch chapter, and the council of Royal and Select Masters. He keeps himself in touch with all the latest developments in his profession, and at the same time reveals on many occasions his very deep and abiding interest in the wellbeing of his community. He has made a considerable study of Connecticut history and of the historical background of his own family, being justly proud of his descent from John Robinson, who came to these shores with the early Pilgrims, fighting in the War of the American Revolution. Through this ancestor Dr. Robinson is eligible to membership in the Sons of the American Revolution.

His wife is a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She was, before her marriage, which took place on April 29, 1902, at Bethel, Connecticut, Gertrude H. Green, daughter of Elbert and Sarah (Wheeler) Green. The ancestor through whom she holds membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution was Nathaniel Green. Dr. and Mrs. Robinson are the parents of a daughter, Dorothy Mae Robinson, who became the wife of Donald C. Fisk and the mother of John Robinson Fisk. The Robinsons attend the Protestant Episcopal Church.

EDITH MAY PECK—For twenty-five years librarian of the Rockville Public Library, at Rockville, Edith M. Peck has performed a work of great value to this Connecticut community.

Miss Peck was born April 7, 1874, in New York City, daughter of the late James Read and Emma (Cooper) Peck and a descendant of William Peck, one of the founders of the New Haven colony. She has three sisters: Emma Peck, who became the wife of Frank W. Gilbert, of Milford, Connecticut; Harriet, who is the wife of Austin Remsen, of Bridgeport; and Maude, who is the wife of Edward DeVoe Tompkins, of New York and Bridgeport. James Read Peck, the father of these sisters, was a silk manufacturer in New York City, dying in 1916. His wife died in 1929.

Edith M. Peck received her education and training in the schools of Brooklyn, New York, and at the Pratt Institute School of Library Science. For a number of years she was a member of the staff of the Pratt Institute Free Library, until in 1912 she became librarian of the Rockville Public Library. She is a member of the American Library Association and the Connecticut Library Association, and her wide acquaintance in the profession of which she is a member places her in a position to familiarize herself with library methods and practices in a very intimate way. The people of Rockville and this vicinity have materially benefited from her labors and from her devotion to the educative task that is a part of the work of the true librarian, even as of the teacher.

WARREN FOX KAYNOR—Warren Fox Kaynor, of Waterbury, and the president of the Waterbury Button Company of that city, was born November 22, 1883, at Sanborn, Iowa, his parents being William Akin Kaynor and Sarah Ann (Winters) Kaynor of that town. He is descended from Revolutionary ancestry, the first of the line in America having been a professor at the University of Heidelberg who came to this country not long before the Revolution. On the maternal side the Akin family is of English Quaker origin, early settlers of Newport, Rhode Island, and Quaker Hill, New York.

Following his earlier education in the public schools of Iowa and high school in Kansas City, Mr. Kaynor entered the Hotchkiss Preparatory School, at Lakeville, Connecticut, and was graduated from Yale Scientific School in 1911.

Mr. Kaynor first secured employment with the Beacon Falls Rubber Company, of Beacon Falls, Connecticut, and after being there two years he entered the training camp at Plattsburg, New York, for a brief period. After that he was in business in Boston, Massachusetts, until 1918, when he became connected with the Waterbury Button Company, advancing by degrees to the presidency, in 1930, also assuming the office of treasurer at the same time.

In addition to these offices, Mr. Kaynor is a director of the Waterbury National Bank, a director of the Smith and Griggs Company, the Waterbury Buckle Company, the Bethany Land Corporation, the Waterbury Airport Corporation.

Mr. Kaynor was greatly interested in military affairs and in addition to his course at the Plattsburg Training Camp received training at Washington, D. C., followed by a period spent at the Aviation Ground School of the Ohio State University. Later he was in charge of the 70th Aero Squadron at Kelley Field, going from there to Camp Morrison near Newport News. Active service at Langley Field to the end of the World War followed, Mr. Kaynor serving as Personnel Adjutant, commanding officer of the Photographic Observation School; post athletic officer, and summary court officer. At the time of his honorable discharge he ranked as captain. His fraternal affiliations include membership in the Masonic Order, Theta Xi. He is a member of the Waterbury Club, the Country Club of Waterbury, the University Club of Bridgeport, and the Yale Club of New York.

On April 6, 1918, Warren Fox Kaynor married Margaret Lane Smith, daughter of J. Richard and Helen (Lane) Smith, of Waterbury, and they have three children: 1. Richard Smith. 2. William Akin. 3. Sanford Bull.

JOSEPH HARRY NEWTON ROBERTS—As an engineer, Joseph Harry Newton Roberts has extensively contributed to the life of Waterbury. His accomplishments have, as a matter of fact, extended far beyond the boundaries of Waterbury and Connecticut and into the general industrial life of his times.

Mr. Roberts was born October 30, 1892, in Naugatuck, Connecticut, son of Joseph William Pfaff and Clara Rebecca (Leas) Roberts. His family is an old and honorable one. His grandfather, Dr. Joseph Reid Roberts, came from Wales to this country, after being graduated from Queen's Hospital, in London, England, and was a general practitioner of medicine in Waterbury, Connecticut, until his death on July 5, 1881. At the time of his death, Joseph William Pfaff Roberts, his son and the father of Joseph Harry Newton Roberts, was about ten years of age. He became an electrochemical plater and in later years was a master builder. Strongly conservative and typically a New Englander, he was a man who possessed very many of the qualities of the late President Calvin Coolidge: the strong silence, the homespun philosophy, the creed of action. He and Mrs. Clara Rebecca (Leas) Roberts were the parents of four children: 1. Clara Louise, now Clara Louise (Roberts) Foster, born August 10, 1898. 2. George B. Pfaff. 3. Mark William Henry. 4. Joseph Harry Newton, of further mention.

Joseph Harry Newton Roberts attended the public schools of Naugatuck, his Connecticut birthplace, and also studied under private tuition. He began his career in 1906, continuing as a machine hand, general errand boy and apprentice until 1909 with the Naugatuck Manufacturing Company, in Naugatuck. From 1909 to 1912, he was a machinist's apprentice with the Blake and Johnson Company, in Waterbury, and then, in 1912 and 1913, was a detail draftsman with the Waterbury Farrel Foundry and Machine Company. In 1914, he served as a patent office draftsman with Albert C. Tanner, patent attorney, also in Waterbury, leaving this city in the following two years to be textile machinery draftsman with the Cheney Brothers Silk Mills, in South Manchester, Connecticut. In 1915 and 1916, he served as draftsman and tool designer with the Carlyle Johnson Machine Company; in 1916, was machine designer with the Waterbury Clock Company, of Waterbury; in 1916 and 1917, was with the Pratt and Whitney Company, of Hartford; in 1917 and 1918, was process and production engineer with the Colt Patent Firearms Manufacturing Company, also of Hartford; and, in 1918 and 1919, was chief engineer with the Carlyle Johnson Machine Company, in Manchester, Connecticut.

In 1919, he became factory representative and sales engineer of the Carlyle Johnson Machine Company, so continuing until 1925. Then, for a year, he was factory manager and superintendent with the Hallden Machine Company, in Thomaston. In all his work as draftsman, checker, designer, chief draftsman, sales engineer and superintendent, Mr. Roberts so performed his work as to earn the respect and admiration of his fellow citizens in many departments of life. Registered in Connecticut and New York State as a consulting engineer, he has specialized since 1926 in the working out of industrial problems and patent protection programs in cooperation with Philip Farnsworth, now deceased, attorney Edward Thomas succeeding Mr. Farnsworth in this work at New York and Waterbury. In 1936, architect Joseph T. Smith became associate architect. His firm is that of Joseph H. Roberts and Associates, Architects and Engineers.

Taking part in a wide variety of activities in behalf of business and industry, Mr. Roberts particularly concerned himself, in 1917, with development of the Browning machine gun. He has invented many of his own mechanical devices, including friction clutches, straightening and cutting-off machines and other auxiliary rolling mill equipment. He is a member of the Connecticut Society of Civil Engineers and the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. Politically he is a Republican, though he has not sought nor held public office. He is a member of the Free and Accepted Masons and the Connecticut Society of Professional Engineers. He attends the First Church of Christ Scientist, at Waterbury. In his spare-time hobbies he is, among other relaxations, fond of coin collecting, enjoying all kinds of outdoor life, especially fishing, hunting and gardening, raising his own fruit, flowers and vegetables.

ROBERT DWIGHT SOMERS—Robert Dwight Somers, president of The Waterbury Rolling Mills, of Waterbury, Connecticut, is a representative in the third generation of a family which was outstanding in the early development of the brass industry. He was born in Waterbury, June 13, 1871, the son of Dwight L. and Emogene (Chatfield) Somers.

His grandfather, David Somers, and his great-uncle, James P. Somers, were pioneers in the brass industry and contributed much to its establishment and development in Waterbury. They were among the first to be engaged in the production of brass and upon their early efforts and achievements rests much of the success attained by the brass industry of today.

Dwight L. Somers, son of David Somers and father of the subject of this biography, rolled metal in the Benedict plant for a period of seventy-six years, not including three years spent in the Union Army during the Civil War. He died October 19, 1925, at the age of ninety-three years. During his long service he taught many men the trade of brass rolling and was himself such an adept that during the war he was sent home on furlough in order to assist in getting out metal required to make buttons for soldiers' uniforms.

James Somers was recognized as a mechanic of exceptional ability and an able millwright and was assisted in his work by his brother, David, who was a cabinet maker and a millwright. In the latter capacity he was noted as a builder of water wheels and did the actual construction on many of the most important that were erected in those days.

In 1830, James Somers, together with five other men under the leadership of Israel Holmes, formed the first company in America to manufacture brass for general use, or for the trade. Scovill's and the Benedicts had been manufacturing brass for their own use, but this was the first attempt made to produce it as an independent enterprise. The firm became known as Holmes, Hotchkiss, Brown and Elton.

In 1831, when Mr. Holmes went to England to secure equipment and men, James Somers supervised the erection of the company's plant, making and installing, with his brother, David, the water wheels as well. He also planned the layout of the machinery upon its arrival and was active in the mill after operations began. During the early forties he became a member of the firm of Benedict and Burnham, and constructed the largest water wheel that had ever been built in Waterbury and which drove eight pairs of rolls. He introduced the method of making brass wire by having the bars cast long, rolled in the proper thickness, slit in one operation and drawn into wire. By this process Benedict and Burnham soon became the largest producers of wire in the Naugatuck Valley. He also designed the open side linked endless chain tube draw bench, which aided materially in the production of brazed tubes.

With this notable background in the brass industry, Robert D. Somers and his brothers, Louis J. Somers and Joseph E. Somers, carry on with important enterprises in the same field, The Waterbury Rolling Mill and The Somers Brass Company, Incorporated.

Robert D. Somers attended the public schools of Waterbury and graduated from Wilbraham Academy in June, 1889. He entered the employ of the Benedict and Burnham Company and worked on almost every machine in the plant, advancing to the position of general foreman. He served in the casting shop of the company after his thorough experience in the rolling mill shop and learned that branch of the business, spending eight years in that division.

In 1905, Mr. Somers took the initial steps toward creating The Waterbury Rolling Mills which was incorporated in 1906. A year was spent in erecting the plant and operations began April 1, 1907. Mr. Somers' first position was that of superintendent, followed by election to vice-president and then as president in 1918, an office which he has held ever since. He was one of the incorporators, and a director from the company's inception.

The company was formed specifically for the manufacture of sheet nickel silver and with unusual foresight the founders so built their first small plant that it could be enlarged at any time through extension without stopping a wheel. It became necessary to double the size of the plant in 1908, two years after it was built, and to again double it in 1912 and 1917, when it reached its present proportions. In 1937 another large addition was built.

Originally consisting of a small casting shop and rolling mill, one hundred by sixty-four feet, the plant now has a floor space of four acres. The original capital of $100,000 has been increased to $400,000 and the total assets are approximately $1,000,000.

The company's main production is nickel silver and phosphor bronze, two of the most difficult copper alloys rolled by the mills. It also produces gilding metals, low brass and special alloys in sheets and rolls.

December 24, 1895, Robert Dwight Somers married Mary Welton, daughter of Herschel O. Welton and Julia (Pritchard) Welton, the ceremony being performed in the house built by Mr. Somers. Their son is Gordon Welton, born August 8, 1900, who married Marguerite Tooker, daughter of Henry and Alice Tooker, and they have a child, Marguerite Lois, born February 16, 1933. Mrs. Robert Dwight Somers died November 12, 1932.

In politics Mr. Somers is a Republican and, while interested in the affairs of his community, has never sought political office. He is a member of the Second Congregational Church of Waterbury.

THE FREDERICK WILLIAM GREENE FAMILY— Rev. Frederick William Greene, for twenty-five years pastor of the South Congregational Church, Middletown, Connecticut, a Trustee of Hartford Seminary Foundation, and active in the Connecticut Federation of Churches of which he was an early president, was born in Brattleboro, Vermont, November 29, 1859. His father was Rear Admiral Theodore Phinney Greene, U.S.N., of Brattleboro, Vermont, and his mother, Mary Minot Ainsworth, of New Ipswich and Jaffrey, New Hampshire. He was prepared for college by private tutors and graduated from Amherst College in 1882 and Hartford Seminary in 1885. On June fourth, of that same year, he married Eliza Farrar Walter, daughter of Henry and Anna (Clary) Walter, of New Britain, Connecticut. From 1885-95, he served as pastor of the West Parish Church (Congregational) at Andover, Massachusetts. In January, 1895, he moved to Middletown and served there as pastor of the South Congregational Church until his death on January 4, 1920. As a trustee of Hartford Seminary, a director of the Connecticut Missionary Society and an active friend of Christian unity and co-operation in this State, he won recognition and the respect and friendship of his contemporaries in the ministry in this State. He is buried in the cemetery at Jaffrey, New Hampshire, where he spent his summers for sixty years at the Ainsworth Manse. Mrs. Greene died at New Canaan, Connecticut, December 27, 1932.

Four sons and two daughters survive them. The sons are: 1. Rev. Theodore Ainsworth, D.D. (of whom further). 2. Professor Walter Farrar, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Anatomy in Syracuse Medical School at Syracuse, New York. 3. Frederick Standish, M.D., a patient in the United States Veterans Hospital at Northampton, Massachusetts. 4. William Ainsworth, M.E.A., head of the History Department at Kingswood School, Hartford, Connecticut.

The daughters are: 1. Anna Bancroft (Mrs.

Norman Lewis Torrey), whose husband was head of the Department of Romance Languages at Swarthmore College in Pennsylvania and in October, 1937, went to the Graduate Department at Columbia University in New York City. 2. Dorothy Minot (Mrs. William Wheelwright Torrey), whose husband is a graduate of Harvard Engineering School now connected with the Massachusetts Mutual Insurance Company at Springfield, Massachusetts.

Rev. Theodore Ainsworth Greene, D.D., pastor of the Center Church in New Britain, Connecticut, was born at Andover, Massachusetts on January 12, 1890, prepared for college at the Middletown High School in the Class of 1909, received the degree of Bachelor of Arts at Amherst College in 1913 and that of Master of Arts at the same institution in 1916, where he served from 1913-15, as Director of Religious Work. In 1918 he graduated from Union Theological Seminary and took a further degree as Master of Arts in History at Columbia University in 1922. Upon his graduation from seminary, Mr. Greene became assistant minister of the Brick Presbyterian Church in New York City, serving in that capacity from October, 1918, to May, 1925, when he was called to the pastorate of his present charge, the First Church of Christ (Congregational) in New Britain.

Besides his pastoral duties, Mr. Greene has been interested for twenty years in the work of the International Grenfell Association in Newfoundland and Labrador, serving as honorary secretary of the Grenfell Association of America, 1922-25, and vice-president of the International Board since 1931. His labors in the field of Christian unity include two years as associate secretary of the American Section of the Universal Christian Council on Life and Work (1923-25), meeting at Stockholm, Sweden, in 1925, and three years as president of the Connecticut Council of Religious Education (1928-31), during which time it was merged with the Connecticut Federation of Churches. In his own denomination, Mr. Greene is a director of the Connecticut Conference of Congregational Churches, recording secretary of the Council for Social Action, founded by the Congregationalists at Oberlin in 1934. The Peace movement has claimed his earnest interest and effort since 1915, and he serves today as chairman of the Congregational Councils, Department of International Relations. Besides contributions to the Congregational paper "Advance," he is the author of "The Ecclesiastical Organization of Geneva in the Time of Calvin," a Presbyterian Historical Society paper, and "What Can Christians Do For Peace," a study pamphlet by the "Pilgrim Press." Piedmont College of Georgia conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity in June, 1936.

ROWLEY WILHELM PHILLIPS—As chairman of the board and general manager of the R. F. Griggs Company, of Waterbury, Rowley Wilhelm Phillips heads one of the most important brokerage investment banking houses of the State. He has been a prominent figure for many years in the life of Waterbury, and has numerous other distinguished connections in the city, both in business and civic affairs.

Mr. Phillips was born in Brooklyn, New York, on November 28, 1890, a son of Lewis Rowley Phillips, of New York City, who died February 7, 1928, and Elizabeth Frances (Smith) Phillips, who was born in Philadelphia. Through his mother he comes of an old Connecticut family, and is a great-great-grandson of an officer of the Revolutionary Army, who served with the rank of captain on General Washington's staff.

Rowley Wilhelm Phillips was educated in the public schools of Brooklyn and at Adelphi Academy, in the same city. He began his active career at the age of nineteen as a clerk in the office of Mackay and Company, bankers and brokers, of New York City, and in three years spent with this company served a thorough apprenticeship in financial theory and practice. Through the merit of his services he met with successive promotions and at length was appointed statistician, resigning in 1912 to join the firm of Baker, Ayling and Company, of Boston. In 1913, he was appointed manager in charge of sales for the Connecticut branch of the company, in New Haven, achieving a notable record in this connection, and in September, 1915, began his long association with the R. F. Griggs Company, at Waterbury. Beginning as a salesman, he was elected secretary of the firm and one of its directors in 1916, and successively assumed larger responsibilities in its management until he was elected vice-president and general manager in 1927. In the following year he became chairman of the board, retaining the office of general manager, and has served as such during the intervening years. Mr. Phillips possesses an exhaustive knowledge of the credit structure of American business, of security values and general financial operations, while the value placed on his executive qualities is reflected in the numerous other offices of importance he has been called upon to fill. In addition to his connection with the R. F. Griggs Company, he was president of the Waterbury Gas Light Company from 1927 to 1929; is chairman and director of the Phillips and Benjamin Company; president and director of Philsan Oil Company and Potter County Gas, Incorporated; vice-president and director of Buckingham Oil Company; is president and a director of Traders, Incorporated; secretary and director of the Bridgeport Brass Company; and a director of the following corporations: McKesson and Robbins, Incorporated (of Maryland and Canada), T. A. D. Jones and Company, the Bigelow Company, the Chemical Laboratories, and Clark Brothers Bolt Company, Automatic Machine Company, of Bridgeport, Lava Cap Gold Mining Company; director Universal Seal Cap Company.

During the World War, Mr. Phillips was a member of the Connecticut State Guard and was chairman of the Waterbury district in the Fourth and Fifth Liberty Loan campaigns. He is a member of the Mattatuck Historical Society, St. George's Society of New York, the Free and Accepted Masons (Liberty Lodge, No. 123), and of the following clubs: the Waterbury Country Club, of which he has been president and a director since 1930, the Waterbury Club, the New Haven Lawn Club, Madison Country Club, and the Madison Beach Yacht Club, the Knickerbocker Whist Club, the Bankers Club and the Crockford Club, all of New York. Mr. Phillips is a Republican in politics and is influential in his party, serving, from 1926 to 1934, as chairman and treasurer of the Republican campaign committee, and delegate to the Constitutional Convention in Connecticut in 1933. He is a communicant of the Episcopal Church. His favorite diversions are yachting and bridge whist, in both of which he excels, golf and fishing.

On September 30, 1914, Rowley W. Phillips married Harriette Staples Wheeler, daughter of Professor Arthur M. Wheeler, for forty years head of the history department at Yale University. They are the parents of four children: 1. Harriette Wheeler. 2. Elizabeth Rowley. 3. Jean Knight. 4. Barbara.

JUDGE OSWIN HART DOOLITTLE FOWLER— There are few better known and more beloved citizens of Wallingford than Judge Oswin Hart Doolittle Fowler, the dean of its legal fraternity, a man whose life has been an open book to the community for more than half a century. There is, perhaps, no person living in the borough today with as interesting a family background, for he is a lineal descendant from the first settlers of Wallingford of two hundred and sixty-six years ago.

Judge Fowler was born in North Haven, Connecticut, January 17, 1857, son of Henry Baldwin and Lucy Eloise (Doolittle) Fowler, the latter-named of whom was born in Wallingford, August 15, 1829, and who lived and died in the town and city until April, 1912. Henry Baldwin Fowler was an agriculturalist and cattle dealer for many years, who joined the gold rush to California in 1849-50. He had the acumen to discover that there was more wealth to be gained in merchandising than in mining, and for a time prospered in Sacramento City. After his return to North Haven with his accumulations, he became a substantial citizen of this section of the State. He was the son of Seth Baldwin Fowler and his wife, Freelove Graves, and the grandson of Theophilus and Sarah (Rossiter) Fowler, of Guilford, Connecticut. Theophilus Fowler was a soldier in the Revolutionary War and his widow received a pension on account of his services. He was descended from William Fowler, who came in the party of Rev. John Davenport from England to Boston, Massachusetts, in 1637, and removed to New Haven, Connecticut, the following year. In 1661, he settled at Milford, Connecticut. His son, John, went to Guilford, Connecticut, in 1649, and left many descendants.

On the maternal side, Judge Fowler is a descendant of the direct line in the sixth generation from Abraham Doolittle and his wife, Abigail Moss, daughter of John Moss. Abraham Doolittle, born in England in 1618, was at Boston, Massachusetts, in 1640, and settled at New Haven in 1644, removing to Wallingford in 1669, the year that the place was first settled. He died in Wallingford in 1690, as his memorial states. The son of Abraham Doolittle, Captain Joseph D., was born in New Haven, February 12, 1666, and died in Wallingford, May 10, 1733. His grandson, Ensign Joseph Doolittle, was born in Wallingford in 1725; Joel Doolittle, of Wallingford, born January 7, 1759, married Lois Hart, daughter of Nathaniel Hart and his wife, Alice Hall, who died in 1851, at the age of ninety years; Alfred Doolittle, of Wallingford, born in 1789, married Lois Dayton, of North Haven, in 1818, where he died in 1878; Lucy Eloise Doolittle, of North Haven, the judge's mother, married his father, Henry Baldwin Fowler, in 1854, whom she survived until she died in Wallingford in 1912.

John Moss, born in England in 1604, was one of the original signers of the New Haven Compact, in 1639, and became a neighbor of Abraham Doolittle, in Wallingford, in 1669, and the two served on the first committee to manage the affairs of the future village, which dated from April, 1670.

Judge Fowler is also descended on the maternal line from Captain Thomas Yale, who settled in New Haven in 1638, and his wife, Mary Turner, a daughter of Captain Nathaniel Turner, who was at Lynn, Massachusetts, in 1630, and who was the captain of Mr. Lamberton's ship, "The Phantom," which was lost at sea with all on board on a voyage to England. Mary, a great-granddaughter of Captain Yale, married Johnathan Dayton, of North Haven. All of Judge Fowler's ancestors resided in New Haven County since 1647 or before, and on his paternal side, included William Fowler, the emigrant, who went from New Haven to aid in the settlement of Milford in 1649, and his son, John, who was one of the early settlers of Guilford, in which town the judge's father, Henry Baldwin Fowler, was born.

Judge Fowler carries on the high tradition of his ancestors for leadership and public service. He received his rudimentary education in the North Haven schools, and was graduated from Hillhouse High School in New Haven. After further preparatory studies, he matriculated at Yale University in the Sheffield Scientific School, from which he was graduated with the class of 1878, ranking fourth, and was among the nine selected to read theses at the graduation exercises. In the meantime he had taught school at Clintonville and Montowese and was, in 1878, the principal of the Center Street School, of Fair Haven. He was also school visitor and acting secretary of the joint Board of Education in 1881, of North Haven.

Judge Fowler did not become a professional educator, for, in 1881, he was graduated from the Yale Law School, and that same year was admitted to the Connecticut bar and started a general practice of law in Wallingford. One has written of him: "His ability, integrity and self-reliance have brought him a successful and lucrative practice." Mr. Fowler has been retained in many important cases and has a large experience in the settlement of estates. He has served the First National Bank, and the Dime Savings Bank, of Wallingford, over a very long period. Judge Fowler has been repeatedly attorney for the Town of Wallingford and for the Borough of Wallingford. He was Judge of Probate for the District of Wallingford in the years 1893 and 1894, and was appointed judge of the borough court in April, 1911, and served in that position continuously until 1927. Some years ago it was written by an editor of opposite political faith: "Judge Fowler by his uniform courtesy and by a spirit of liberality, by which he seeks to temper justice with mercy, has won the respect of the people of this community, and generally it is felt that he is by all rights entitled to continue in the post which he has filled for so many years with such distinction." The constructive contributions to the development and life of Wallingford over the past fifty-five years are too numerous to be recorded. There are few movements worth while for advance and betterment in which he has not shared. His name has been constantly in the newspapers both in comment upon actions he has taken and his own writings on topics of importance or interest. Interested in the history of Wallingford, he is an authority on the subject. His society and organization affiliations are now few. He was one of the founders of the Wallingford Club, of which he was elected president in 1934. He is an Episcopalian in his religious faith, and well loved for his support of charitable and humanitarian projects.

At Wallingford, Connecticut, on September 4, 1884, Oswin Hart Doolittle Fowler married Carrie Belle Parmelee, daughter of Samuel B. and Lavinia (Cook) Parmelee, both natives of Wallingford. The father of Samuel B. Parmelee was Leander Parmelee, who was born in Killingworth, Connecticut, later settled in Wallingford and who was sheriff for New Haven County for twelve years, until June 1, 1857. The wife of Samuel B. Parmelee, Lavinia Cook, was a great-granddaughter of Colonel Thaddeus Cook, of Wallingford, who commanded one of the best regiments at the Saratoga battlefield. The children of Judge and Mrs. Fowler are: 1. Mabel Ella, born June 8, 1885; married John W. Leavenworth, of Wallingford, and they have three children and one grandchild living. 2. Ethel Blakeslee, born December 14, 1888; unmarried. 3. Helen Parmelee, born May 1, 1896; married David Tomlinson, of Wallingford, and is the mother of three daughters living.

It may be interesting to add that the judge's six grandchildren, Jean (Leavenworth) Irwin, Margaret Leavenworth, John W. Leavenworth, Jr., Barbara Tomlinson, Marjorie Tomlinson and Charlotte Tomlinson, all of Wallingford, are, on their maternal grandmother's side, lineal descendants of Samuel Cook, one of the original settlers of Wallingford in 1670, and of his great-grandson, Colonel Thaddeus Cook, of Wallingford, who gained distinction as the commander of an "excellent militia regiment" on the battlefields of Saratoga in the Revolutionary War.

JOHN FRANKLIN SHEPHERD—FREDERICK THOMAS SHEPHERD—MARY ELIZABETH SHEPHERD—The name of Shepherd has long occupied a distinctive place in New England history. Its representatives have been prominent and industrious personalities in the life of their surroundings since the early part of the seventeenth century when the first member of the family came to this country from England. Today the illustrious traditions of the family are being carried on by John Franklin Shepherd, his son, Frederick Thomas, and his daughter, Mary Elizabeth, all of Woodbridge where the family farm has been in continuous operation for over half a century. John Franklin is living in retirement after a full and useful life and his responsibilities have been ably taken over by his son, who has modernized the dairy farm and is now ranked as one of the most influential leaders of the agricultural life of this vicinity.

The Shepherd or Shepard family trace their American ancestry to Ralph Shepard, of Stepney Parish, London, England, where he was born in 1603. According to record he was a tailor by trade and probably an officer in the Draper's Guild. He sailed for this country with his wife and daughter, Sarah, on June 30, 1635, aboard the ship "Abigail" under command of Robert Hackwell. Upon his arrival in Massachusetts he became one of the original settlers of Dedham, but later removed to Malden and is also recorded to have lived in Weymouth and Concord. It was in the latter community that he purchased a farm from Joseph Wheeler in 1666. In the meantime he had been made a freeman of the colony, having that privilege conferred upon him in 1650-51. He married Thanklord, and they were the parents of the following children: 1. John. 2. Isaac. 3. Trial. 4. Abraham. 5. Thanks. 6. Jacob. 7. Walter. 8. Thomas, of whom further.

Thomas Shepard was born about 1635, and died at Milton, Massachusetts, September 26 or 29, 1719. He owned land in Charlestown, Massachusetts, in 1657-58, was a member of the church there and later removed to Malden. He married Hannah Ensign, and they had the following children: 1. Thomas (2), of whom further. 2. John. 3. Jacob. 4. Hannah. 5. Ralph. 6. Isaac.

Thomas Shepard (2) was born about 1674, removed from Charlestown to Bristol, Rhode Island, and later came to Branford, Connecticut. He married Hannah Blanchard and they were members of the church in Branford in 1709. In 1717, they removed to East Haven. They had the following children: 1. John, of whom further. 2. Thomas. 3. Ruth. 4. Elizabeth. 5. Hannah. 6. Sarah, who married Richard Darrow. Thomas Shepard (2) died April 18, 1726.

John, who was born in 1696, and died in 1780, married Sarah Russel, and they had the following children: 1. Mary. 2. Elizabeth. 3. John (2), of whom further. 4. Stephen. 5. John. 6. Mary. 7. Levi. 8. Huldah. John was twice married and his second wife was Mary Potter, a widow.

John (2) was born October 27, 1743, and married Elizabeth Bradley, April 18, 1765. They had the following children: 1. John. 2. Jared. 3. Benjamin. 4. Ziba, of whom further. 5. Levi. 6. William. 7. Roswell. 8. Irene, who married Holt Dawson in 1793. 9. Betsey.

Ziba was born in 1779, and died April 29, 1857. He was taken to England as a prisoner during the War of 1812, but later returned to this country. He married Sylvia Jacobs of North Haven, and was the first member of the family in this country to change the spelling of the name from Shepard to Shepherd. His children were: 1. John. 2. Leverett. 3. Roswell. 4. Franklin, of whom further. 5. Frederick. 6. Jane. 7. Leetta.

Franklin was born in 1815, and died in 1897. He married in 1853, at North Haven, Sarah Mansfield, and they were the parents of the following children: 1. John Franklin, of whom further. 2. Mary. 3. Mabel. 4. Susan. 5. Leetta. 6. Roswell. 7. Sylvia. 8. Elizabeth. 9. Esther.

John Franklin Shepherd was born at North Haven, on January 31, 1855, and received a general education in the public schools of that community. After finishing his studies he worked with his father for a time and later made many long and interesting trips on the merchant vessels of his day. At this time of his life he also worked for his uncle, Dennis Mansfield, who owned and operated the Mansfield Grove and Hotel, a summer resort located at East Haven. In 1887 he purchased the present family farm at Woodbridge and began to engage in the dairy business in a small way. He continued to conduct this establishment until 1917, when he retired and turned the management over to his son, who has since conducted it with distinction and success. On May 8, 1885, John Franklin Shepherd married Margaret Roche, of Cheshire, who died in 1925. They were the parents of the following children: 1. Mary Elizabeth, of whom further. 2. John J. 3. Susan. 4. Frederick Thomas, of whom further. 5. Sarah Leetta. 6. Sylvia. 7. Franklin, deceased.

Mary Elizabeth Shepherd, now superintendent of the Yale Infirmary at Yale University, served as a member of the first United States Army mobile hospital in France, which was known as the Yale Mobile Hospital unit. She was here from 1917 to 1919. and then spent three years in the Hawaiian Islands, doing social service work. She returned to this country later and since 1917 has held her present position at Yale University, where she is also a member of the Faculty Club and the Quota Club.

Frederick T. S. Shepherd

Frederick Thomas Shepherd, who was born in Woodbridge in 1896, and attended public school and business college, purchased the family farm from his father when he was twenty-one years old and has since operated it. He has specialized in the raising of pure bred Jersey cattle and since 1930 has operated a pasteurizing plant in the City of New Haven, which is one of the finest of its type in this section of the State. He is proud of his farming and dairy record and finds particular satisfaction in noting that there are four customers on his books who have bought milk from the farm ever since its establishment. As a dairyman Mr. Shepherd is vice-president of the New Haven Milk Bottle Exchange and the Connecticut Milk Dealers Association, as well as serving as a member of the board of directors of the Connecticut Jersey Cattle Club. Aside from this he is a member of the Grange, serves on the board of finance in Woodbridge, and fraternizes with the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks.

On November 24, 1926, Mr. Shepherd married Edythe Elizabeth Hildreth, daughter of Edward and Sarah (Shearer) Hildreth. Mr. and Mrs. Shepherd are the parents of three children: 1. Marilyn, born October 2, 1927. 2. Frederick, born February 4, 1929. 3. Janice, born January 16, 1931.

LINUS HEZEKIAH HALL—A descendant of old and notable Connecticut families, whose members have had an important part in the history of Wallingford since the town was settled, Linus Hezekiah Hall continues in his own career the fine traditions long associated with his name. He has been for many years one of the best known figures in Wallingford life.

Mr. Hall was born at Wallingford, on March 20, 1861. He traces his ancestry to John Hall (born 1605, died 1676), signer of the Second Plantation Covenant of Wallingford in 1672, and to his son, Samuel Hall, who was a signer of the First Covenant in 1670. John Hall married Jane Woolen, and from them the line continues through Samuel and his wife, Hannah Walker; their son John and his wife Mary Lyman; Eliakim Hall and his wife Ruth Dickerman; Hezekiah and Elizabeth (Merriman) Hall; Nathan and Polly (Andrews) Hall, who were the grandparents of Linus Hezekiah Hall; and Hezekiah (2) and Harriet (Coe) Hall, his parents. The great-grandfather of Linus H. Hall, Hezekiah Hall, was the uncle of Lyman Hall (who died without issue), a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and also Governor of Georgia. Also in this line, Eliakim Hall, great-great-grandfather of Linus Hezekiah Hall, was active during the Revolutionary period in behalf of the patriot cause. He was representative in the State Legislature in 1776; captain in the Connecticut Militia in 1778; served in 1780 as agent for creditors of commissaries in New Haven and Fairfield; and, variously, as a member of the committees on military measures, on the New Haven Bill, on New Haven defense and on troops near Hudson. Hezekiah (2) Hall, father of Linus Hezekiah Hall, was a farmer at Wallingford and a director of the First National Bank. He took an active part in civic and public life, serving for a time as State Representative, and was also for several years a member of a Connecticut Regiment, with the rank of lieutenant-major.

Linus Hezekiah Hall, of this record, was educated at General Russell's School in New Haven and at Claverack College, Claverack-on-Hudson, New York. He inherited the 200-acre estate, which has been handed down in the family from father to son since the settlement of Wallingford in 1670, and has directed its operation as owner during the intervening years. Mr. Hall has also served as director of the Wallingford First National Bank since 1902 and as vice-president since 1923. His judgment and fair-mindedness are highly valued by his fellow townsmen, who frequently consult his advice, and his services, in pursuit of an enlightened conception of civic obligation, have always been at the disposal of his community. Mr. Hall became first selectman of Wallingford in 1934, has served as Representative in the Assembly since 1934, and in 1935, was a member of the Board of Relief, meeting the responsibilities of these offices with characteristic fidelity. He has taken the greatest interest in the preservation of the fine traditions of the nation's past, a reflection of which is found in his service as president of the Wallingford Historical Society since 1932, and as a member of the board of directors of the Sons of the American Revolution, and also was elected one of the vice-presidents in 1937. He also serves as president of the Park Commission. Mr. Hall is a Democrat in politics and a supporter, although not a member, of the Congregational Church of Wallingford. His character and attainments have won him the profound respect of his community, and he is much beloved by its people for his high sense of honor, his courtesy and unfailing kindness.

In 1897, Linus Hezekiah Hall married (first) Zoa Phillips, of Massachusetts. They became the parents of one daughter, Katherine, who married Alvin Whitman, and they have one child, Ruth, who is taking the musical course at the Juilliard School of Music. Mr. Hall married (second), in 1928, at Madison, Connecticut, Lydia Bushnell Smith (see accompanying biography), daughter of Andrew Norman and Lydia (Kelsey) Smith.

LYDIA BUSHNELL (SMITH) HALL—Author, editor, teacher and world traveler, Lydia Bushnell (Smith) Hall has undertaken during the course of her career, many important responsibilities, which have served to demonstrate both the range of her interests and the versatility of her talents. Since her marriage, she has been a resident of the Wallingford community, whose institutions have shared in her exceptional gifts.

Mrs. Hall was born at Madison, Connecticut, on December 28, 1863, a daughter of Andrew Norman Smith, a physician of Madison, and Lydia (Kelsey) Smith. Both families are old in the history of New England and are allied with other lines of equal distinction. Mrs. Hall's paternal grandmother, Martha (Stone) Smith, was a direct descendant of Governor William Leete, whose chair (now loaned to the Historical Exhibition of Guilford by Charles Stone) has been in possession of the Stone family since the death of Governor Leete. Through her mother's family, the Kelseys, Mrs. Hall traces her ancestry back to a remote period in English history, while the names of more immediate ancestors are to be found on the Founders Monument in Hartford. Other collateral lines include the Lords and the Bushnells, the first traced back to 1585 in England. The second, the Bushnell genealogy, includes David Bushnell, inventor of the "American Turtle," used for submarine warfare during the Revolution in harassing British men-of-war, and Cornelius Bushnell, promotor of "The Monitor," which saved the Union fleet during the Civil War and initiated the period of steel-clad battleships.

Mrs. Hall, after receiving her preliminary education in Lee's Academy, attended Claverack College in New York. She began her career as a teacher and for a time was a member of the faculty of Summit Collegiate Institute, Summit, New Jersey, and of Miss Dana's Seminary, in Morristown, New Jersey. Her gifts as a writer, however, led her to seek larger contacts and a wider knowledge of the world than education offers, and for eighteen years, subsequently, she lived abroad, spending one year in Germany, three years in Paris, nine years in Italy and five as a traveler and writer in Turkey, Spain, Greece, France, Switzerland and Great Britain. During her long residence abroad she was a guest at the celebrated Schloss Freudenburg at Wiesbaden, of a Bonaparte Princess, was for a time head secretary of the Student Hostel Villa at Florence, an institution of the Young Women's Christian Association, and also for a time was in charge of Red Cross work in Abruzzi, having jurisdiction over one city and five towns. Mrs. Hall is the author of various stories and articles, usually illustrated by her own sketches, and of two published volumes: "Napoleon's Elba" and "Guide to Casentino." In her writings she had drawn upon the interesting experiences of her travels and her visits to many places of historic celebrity in the Old World. In addition to her own work as a writer she has also served as associate editor of two daily and one weekly newspapers.

Mrs. Hall is interested in gardening as a leisure occupation and since becoming a resident of Wallingford has served for three years as president of the local Garden Club, which she founded in 1930, and has served as corresponding secretary since 1933. She has also been active in the Woman's Club, of which she is a director and special chairman, but it is to the Wallingford Historical Society that she has given most freely of her time and effort. She is thoroughly in sympathy with the aims and purpose of the organization, and as its secretary for some years has had an important part in its work. Headquarters of the society are located in the well known Wallingford Historical House at No. 180 South Main Street, a structure of considerable antiquarian interest. Built soon after the middle of the eighteenth century, it was one of the first of the Gambrel-Roof type and is today, for the most part, as originally constructed. It was donated to the society by Mrs. Fanny Schember, whose ancestors were among the first owners of the place. A valuable collection of antiques, donated or loaned to the society, has been placed on exhibition at Wallingford Historical House, and visitors are welcome at all times to inspect and enjoy them.

Mrs. Hall is a Republican in politics, and is a communicant of the Congregational Church, in which she has been active at various periods of her career in Madison and Wallingford, and at Paris, France.

On July 27, 1928, at Madison, Connecticut, she was married to Linus Hezekiah Hall (see accompanying biography), of Wallingford, son of Hezekiah and Harriet (Coe) Hall.

JOHN BOLOGNA—When he came to the United States in 1920 from his home of earlier years in Italy, John Bologna had already established his reputation as a designer of fur and cloth garments. In this country he progressed rapidly in his career and five years after his arrival was able to establish his own business, which he now conducts at Greenwich.

Mr. Bologna was born at Castelgrande, Italy, on February 5, 1893, a son of Angelo and Angela Maria (Racaniello) Bologna. Educated in public and private schools at Castelgrande and at Naples, in the Professional School for Designing Men's and Ladies' Salon, under professor Ferdinand Merena, he started at an early age as a designer of fur and cloth garments. The entry of Italy into the World War interrupted his career and until the termination of that conflict he served with the 35th Infantry, participating in the major engagements of the Mt. Calvario and Isonzo River sectors, among others. He was awarded the Croix de Guerre for gallantry in action and also received in recognition of his services the Commemorative and Interallied medals. In 1920, after the war, he came to the United States, where he continued his previous profession as a designer and for four years served as foreman in a fur manufacturing establishment. At the end of that time, having become well acquainted with American conditions, he established his own business as a designer and maker of fur and cloth garments. His long experience and recognized ability have enabled him to develop a successful enterprise, now situated at 38-40 Greenwich Avenue, Greenwich, in a building which he purchased in 1927, and remodelled in 1930.

Mr. Bologna is well known in the apparel trades, and during the period of his residence in Greenwich has become a well known figure in the community life. He was one of the founders and is secretary and treasurer of The Italian Institute; was president of the Professional Business Club of Greenwich; and is active fraternally as a member of the Sons of Italy, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Improved Order of Red Men. Mr. Bologna is an independent in politics and a communicant of the Roman Catholic Church. Outdoor sports are his favorite recreation.

On December 27, 1919, at Castelgrande, Italy, he married Anna Federici. Mr. and Mrs. Bologna are the parents of the following children: 1. Maria Angelina. 2. Josephine Dora. 3. Tilda Antoinette. 4. Angelo Raphael.

HOWARD W. PALMER—As editor and manager of the "Greenwich Press," Howard W. Palmer directs the operation of a newspaper whose excellence is recognized far beyond the area which it immediately serves. He has devoted the greater part of his career to journalism and has occupied his present place for more than ten years.

Mr. Palmer was born at Keeseville, Essex County, New York, on November 12, 1895, a son of Walter and Mattie (Welch) Palmer. Educated in the Keeseville public schools and at Saranac Lake High School, from which he was graduated in 1912, he went on from that institution to Columbia University, where he took the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1917. Meanwhile, his professional career was already well under way. Joining the staff of the Watertown, New York, "Times," in 1913, he retained this connection until 1924, gradually assuming larger responsibilities in the operation of the paper. From 1924 to 1926, he was assistant secretary of the New York Public Service Commission, an appointment representing his only departure from the newspaper field during the course of his career. In 1926, he became editor and manager of the "Greenwich Press," at Greenwich, and has since devoted himself to his editorial and general executive duties in connection with its publication. Under his leadership this paper has attained very high standards, both journalistically and in the field of community service, in recognition whereof its editor was awarded five consecutive prizes from the National Editorial Association. Four were for excellence in the conduct of the "Greenwich Press" and the fifth for community service.

Mr. Palmer is vice-president and treasurer of the Greenwich Press Company, publishers of the "Greenwich Press," and has been for some years an active figure in the Connecticut Editorial Association, of which he is past president. He was also formerly a director of the Bridgeport Chapter of the United Typothetae. Mr. Palmer is a Republican in politics and a member of the Congregational Church. He is a member of the Rotary Club and is affiliated with the Alpha Sigma Phi fraternity at Columbia.

On October 1, 1919, at Watertown, New York, Mr. Palmer married Pauline Coulthart. They have two children: Richard Eugene and Betty Lucille.

VICTOR BIART—The varied musical activities of Victor Biart have made his name well known in the East. The son of a United States Army officer of notable record as a surgeon, he gave indications in childhood of an authentic genius for music and was sent abroad at the age of twelve to study. Entering the Conservatory of Stuttgart, Germany, as a pupil of Dionys Pruckner, he was graduated at the head of the piano department. There followed a concert career in which he appeared with leading orchestras and achieved a brilliant success. His concert work was brought to a sudden end by a muscular injury and he turned his attention to piano teaching, returning to America in 1904.

In this country he established himself in New York and Norwalk, Connecticut, assuming the directorship of Miss Baird's School for Girls, located in the latter town, of which he has been a resident since 1908. Victor Biart has given a great deal of his time and endeavors to lecturing on music. In this field he has served Columbia University, The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, and many leading girls' schools, including Miss Spence's School, the Scoville, Scudder and Gardner schools, in New York, and Hillside School in Norwalk. He has appeared before numerous clubs, and during 1916 to 1918, inclusive, lectured on the New York Philharmonic Concerts.

Victor Biart has long been a contributor of articles on symphonic music to "The Etude" music magazine, and in more recent years he has conducted orchestral concerts in Norwalk, and, at this writing, 1937, edits "The Symphonic Guide" and "The Pianist's Guide."

Victor Biart was born on May 2, 1876, at Leavenworth, Kansas, where his father was stationed. His parents were Captain Victor and Ida (Lake) Biart, his mother being a native of Haverstraw, New York, born January 22, 1854, who died on May 18, 1922. Captain Biart was born on June 9, 1847, in Antwerp, Belgium. He came to the United States in 1863, and located at New Boston, Illinois. Taking up the study of medicine, he was graduated from the St. Louis, Missouri, Medical College, with the highest honors. He practiced his profession in civil life until he became a contract surgeon with the United States Army. He was an assistant surgeon, with the rank of lieutenant, June 6, 1878; was promoted to a captaincy in 1883; and retired from active duty, October 21, 1891. During his military career he took part in several Indian campaigns, and served under General Nelson A. Miles of Indian Insurrection (1886) and Spanish-American War fame. Captain Biart now makes his home with his talented son in Norwalk.

On June 28, 1913, Victor Biart married Dorothy Miller, of East Orange, New Jersey, and they are the parents of two children: Marie Louise, born February 7, 1917; and Jeannette Ida, born May 4, 1923.

ARTHUR I. CRANDALL—As president of Arthur I. Crandall, Incorporated, Arthur I. Crandall directs the operations of one of Stamford's well known real estate and insurance firms. He is a business man of wide experience and has been for many years a well known figure in Stamford life.

Mr. Crandall was born in New York City on July 9, 1888, a son of Charles Henry and Katherine (Ferguson) Crandall. He came to Stamford while he was still a boy, receiving his education in public and private schools of the city, and upon beginning his active career was engaged in farming from 1903 until 1908. During the following five years he was active in the real estate business, but at the end of that time became associated with the developing automobile industry, and so continued until 1928. Until 1926, he was sales manager for H. L. Stratton, Incorporated, in New York City and from 1926 to 1928, was connected with the General Motors Corporation. In the latter year he returned to the real estate field at Stamford as president of Crandall, Hay and Staub, subsequently becoming president of Arthur I. Crandall, Incorporated, handling both real estate and insurance. In these fields he occupies an established position based on his successful record and authoritative knowledge.

Mr. Crandall is a member and former president of the Stamford Real Estate Board, in whose deliberations he has long been influential. He is also a member of the National Real Estate Board, in connection with which he is chairman of the State Tax Commission, and was president of the Connecticut State Association of Real Estate Boards. These associations reflect his high professional standing. Mr. Crandall is fond of outdoor sports, which are his favorite recreation, and was a member of the High Ridge Country Club of Stamford. He is a Republican in politics, a member of the Methodist Church and during the period of the World War served as sergeant of Company A, 328th Battalion, Tanks Corps, in the National Army.

On November 19, 1926, Arthur I. Crandall married, at Bedford Hills, New York, Alexandria Rosberg.

Pearl Julius Shilton

HON. FLOYD B. BARTRAM—As lawyer and as probate judge, the Hon. Floyd B. Bartram has performed a work of importance and value to the City of Stamford.

Judge Bartram was born September 3, 1882, in Darien, Connecticut, son of Elijah and Sally (Bell) Bartram. He studied in the public and high schools of New Canaan, Connecticut, and later was a student at the Mount Hermon School, Mount Hermon, Massachusetts. For a time he studied at Colgate University, and in 1908 he was graduated from the New York Law School with the degree of Bachelor of Laws. Admitted to the bar of the State of Connecticut in 1909, he became immediately active in the practice of his chosen profession. He is now a member of the widely known law firm of Cressy, Bartram, Melvin and Sherwood, of Stamford, and from January 1, 1923, to January 1, 1931, was Probate Judge.

Along with his other activities, Judge Bartram has participated to a considerable extent in the business and civic affairs of his community. He is president of the Title Insurance and Mortgage Company, and a director of the First Stamford National Bank and Trust Company and the Citizens' Savings Bank. He has for years been active in the general affairs of his profession as a member of the Stamford Bar Association and the American Bar Association. He is a trustee of the Stamford Day Nursery. A leader in fraternalism, Mr. Bartram is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Free and Accepted Masons, and in the Masonic order holds the thirty-second degree of Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite. He is a member of the Woodway Country Club. His political alignment has consistently been with the Democratic party, of whose policies and principles he has been a staunch supporter. Every organization or project with which he has connected himself has in one way or another gained from his enthusiastic participation in its behalf, and he is, as a result, one of Stamford's very well beloved citizens.

In March, 1914, at Elizabeth, New Jersey, Judge Floyd B. Bartram married Frieda Hohnstrater. They are the parents of William and Nancy.

PEARL JULIUS SKILTON—Pearl Julius Skilton, vice-president and a director of the R. F. Griggs Company, investment brokers in high grade securities, Waterbury, has been actively associated with that successful corporation for more than thirty-four years. Beginning in a minor capacity, he has by his ability and knowledge of finance and securities, advanced himself to an executive office with the company. Mr. Skilton was born January 17, 1883, in Watertown, a son of Julius James Skilton, a farmer, and of Jane Lois (Barnes) Skilton. He is of the seventh generation dating back to Colonial times in America, and to (1) John Skilton of Coventry, England; (2) Dr. Henry Skilton, who served in the war of the American Revolution, born 1718, died 1802; (3) Avery Skilton, born 1748, died 1832; (4) James Skilton, born 1777, died 1848; (5) Henry Bennett Skilton, born 1806, died 1894; (6) Julius James Skilton, father of Pearl Julius Skilton, born 1836, died 1920. The maternal ancestors: (1) Thomas Barnes; (2) Benjamin Barnes; (3) John Barnes; (4) Jonathan Barnes; (5) Merritt Barnes; (6) George H. Barnes, who was the father of Jane Lois Barnes.

Pearl Julius Skilton, after his graduation from the Watertown High School, entered the employ of the Matthews and Willard Manufacturing Company, Waterbury, of which the late Robert F. Griggs was the executive, and remained there from 1901 to 1903, in the office as a clerk. In July, 1903, he associated himself with the investment securities and brokerage business of Robert F. Griggs, was made secretary, assistant treasurer and a director of the company, which offices he ably filled from 1915 until 1928, when he was elected vice-president.

He is treasurer of Fire District and member of the Republican Town Committee of Watertown, and has been active in civic, social and fraternal affairs there for many years. He is a trustee of Townsend Lodge, No. 89, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of Waterbury, member Federal Lodge, No. 17, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, Watertown, Granite Chapter, No. 36, Royal Arch Masons, Thomaston; Clark Commandery, No. 7, Knights Templar, Lafayette Consistory, Scottish Rite, thirty-second degree, Bridgeport; Sphinx Temple, Mystic Shrine, Hartford, Mattatuck Historical Society, Waterbury Club, Rotary Club, Waterbury; Sons of American Revolution. He is treasurer and a trustee of the Watertown Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Skilton was married June 14, 1905, at Waterbury to Helen Maude Gillette, daughter of George Henry Gillette and Mattie Bradshaw (Smith) Gillette.

GEORGE HENRY MERWIN—As one of the prominent and successful farmers and dairymen of Fairfield County, George Henry Merwin, native and resident of Greenfield Hill, is emulating his distinguished forebears who for generations have been prominent figures in the social, civic and business life of their surroundings. Aside from the aforementioned activities he also serves in an official advisory capacity for several institutions in this section of the State and is an active leader in the affairs of the Greenfield Hill Congregational Church.

Mr. Merwin was born at Greenfield Hill, December 29, 1872, the son of John Merwin, farmer, and Susan Ann (Ferguson) Merwin, who were also the parents of Carrie Merwin, now deceased. She married Ernest Millard and was the mother of two sons: Everett and Lester. The Merwin family traces its Connecticut ancestry to Miles (Murwin) Merwin of Milford, who was the father of Thomas, who married Abigail Claphan. The lineage is traced from this point through their son Thomas, who married Ruth Morehouse; through their son Daniel, who married Mary Meeker; through their son Abijah, born April 7, 1748, and while not a member of the regular militia, took part in the Battle of Ridgefield after the burning of Danbury. Abijah Merwin married Ruth Bradley and they were the parents of Samuel, grandfather of George Henry Merwin, who married Ruhamah Nichols and purchased the farm now operated by Mr. Merwin.

Mr. Merwin received the early part of his general education in the public schools, later attended the Fairfield Academy and then studied at the Connecticut State College and the Massachusetts State College. After finishing his training he took over the management of the family farm on which he has devoted most of his attention to the development of a dairy business as well as engaging in general farming. He has been actively interested in the business affairs of this section and at present serves as a member of the board of trustees of the Southport Savings Bank and a director of the Oaklawn Cemetery. He worships at the Greenfield Hill Congregational Church in which he is a deacon.

On February 4, 1896, Mr. Merwin married Elsie Brown and they have five children: 1. Mildred. 2. Preston, who is married to Edith Miller and the father of two children, Carolyn and Edwin. 3. Florence. 4. Ellsworth. 5. Rodney.

CHARLES BURR MEEKER—In the field of agriculture Charles Burr Meeker, of Westport, attained a wide reputation as the foremost grower of melons in Connecticut. He was born in Westport, November 5, 1859, son of Burr and Sarah Jane (Fairchild) Meeker, the grandson of Burr and Aretity (Finch) Meeker, and traced his ancestry to one Benjamin Meeker, Revolutionary soldier. The latter, taken prisoner while an inmate of one of the old time "salt houses," was ultimately released at Norwalk. He immediately rejoined the Continental forces and is mentioned in the annals of Connecticut as one of the twenty-four guards of the "Penfield Mill and Black Rock Fort" at Fairfield.

Nearly all of the paternal forebears of Charles Burr Meeker were interested more or less deeply in agriculture, and Meekers held farm lands from the first of the name in the State; Robert, of New Haven, 1651, who removed to Fairfield, prior to 1670. The father of Charles Burr Meeker was also a school teacher and town official. After attending local schools, Easton Academy and Westport Academy, the son continued his career cultivating the soil, but always with a trend toward specialization. Horticulture engaged a large share of his attention, but he is best known as the producer of the Meeker Melon, noted for its fine quality.

Charles Burr Meeker married, on October 26, 1887, Jennie Wakeman, daughter of Stephen B. and Anne Jane (Burr) Wakeman, and they were the parents of a daughter, Mrs. Louis W. Reimer, who is the mother of two sons, Charles Richard and Alfred Burr.

The death of Charles Burr Meeker occurred on May 1, 1928, and he is held in respectful memory for his achievements, personal character, and the influence he used to good effect in the affairs of the section with which he and his family have been so long identified.

JOHN STAPLES WAKEMAN—John Staples Wakeman, of Westport, made a career of agriculture and it is noteworthy that he had the enterprise, knowledge and courage which made him enter some of the most difficult and modern fields of this business, and succeed therein. He was born February 16, 1874, son of Stephen B. and Charlotte (Allen) Wakeman, and the grandson of Stephen Burritt and Betty (Couch) Wakeman, each paternal forebear being a successful agriculturalist in his own right.

Stephen B. Wakeman was a pioneer in the strawberry and peach growing industry in the Westport district, he was a prominent member of the Grange and always took an active part in the welfare of his community. He was also a large onion grower and his product was the winner of many prizes, among them a bronze medal. He was an active member of the Congregational Church, taking a prominent part in all its work.

After completing his academic education in the Westport High School, John Staples Wakeman pursued courses in Merritt Business College, Stamford, Connecticut. Instead of continuing with a commercial career, he began specializing in the growing of truck crops for the enormous market of which New York City is the center, although his part of Connecticut is so largely populated that it creates great demands for agricultural and horticultural products. In 1916, Mr. Wakeman turned his attention to dairy farming, which he continued until his death a decade ago. It is now operated by a member of the family. He was a member of the Vegetable Growers Association, and fraternally was affiliated with the Westport Grange, Patrons of Husbandry. He was of the Congregational faith, and a leader in the Christian Endeavor Society.

On February 16, 1898, John Staples Wakeman married Mary Fredrika Gould, and they were the parents of ten children: 1. Wilbur Gould, born November 20, 1898, married Edna Cable, and they have two children: Florence and Louise. 2. Charlotte Eugenia, born January 1, 1900, married Walter F. Wood, and they are the parents of three sons: Walter, Theodore, and Gile. 3. Ruth Mary, born August 17, 1902, married John Lasch, and they have three children: Helen, Ruth, and John. 4. John Nathan, born March 25, 1904, married Ceil Mallemach. 5. George Stephen, born March 5, 1906, married Eleanor Harris, and they have two sons: George Elton and Alan Burr. 6. Dorothy Evelyn, born February 3, 1910, married Frank Shaw, and they have a son, Robert Wakeman. 7. Isaac Banks, born December 29, 1912, married December 29, 1936, Christine Pearl Kirkpatrick. 8. Margaret Frederika, born January 16, 1914, married Edward Sargeant, and they have two children: Edward and Theodore. 9. Mabel, born November 15, 1917. 10. Robert Theodore, born December 18, 1920.

John Staples Wakeman died on April 21, 1928. It had been his lot to be connected with the basic industry of our country—agriculture—and without fanfare or any attempt to seek public attention, he contributed a full share to its development in the Westport area. He was always with the progressives in the putting into practice sound methods of production and marketing. He held the community's respect and confidence, and his passing was sincerely regretted as marking the loss of a valuable citizen and friend.

WILLIAM C. WILE, M.D.—Few medical men in the history of Connecticut have led a more interesting and varied career than Dr. William C. Wile, of Danbury. His life was replete with accomplishment and adventure. From the day he marched away with the Union forces as a boy of fifteen to his last hours, which were crowned with triumph, he employed his multifarious talents with outstanding effect, achieving his purpose in every instance and earning richly merited success and honor. As a physician he attained international distinction, serving as a delegate to several medical conventions abroad and being prominently identified with a number of professional organizations. He never ceased striving to improve himself, his surroundings and his profession. He recognized the importance of his mission in life and left a rich heritage which should prove a constant source of inspiration to those who follow. As a citizen, Dr. Wile respected his obligations and donated generously and usefully to the welfare of his surroundings.

Dr. Wile was born at Pleasant Valley, New York, January 23, 1847, the son of the Rev. Benjamin Franklin and Betty (Buckley) Wile, the former a pastor in the Presbyterian Church here for thirty-nine years. Dr. Wile received a general education at the College Hill School, in Poughkeepsie, New York, and though he was a mere lad when the Civil War broke out, he enlisted as a private in Company G, 150th New York Volunteer Infantry, and saw action in some of the major engagements of the conflict. As a soldier he has been described as one of the youngest and bravest enlisted men in the Union Army. He was present at the historic battle of Gettysburg, where his comrades said he displayed a courage under fire comparable to that of a man many years his senior. During this part of the campaign he contracted typho-malaria and shortly after the first battle of Gettysburg was sent to the Fairfax Seminary Hospital for treatment, later being transferred to a convalescent camp at Alexandria, Virginia, where he recovered rapidly and completely regained his health in time to take part in General Sherman's historic "March to the Sea."

After the war he determined to pursue a medical career and began to study in the office of a relative, Dr. John H. Dwan, who was practicing in Pleasant Valley, New York. Later he enrolled in the Medical Department of New York University, studied here for one year, enlisted in the regular army in which he served as a hospital steward for two years, and then resumed his training at the aforementioned institution from which he was graduated with a Doctor of Medicine degree in the class of 1870. He began his career in New Brunswick, New Jersey, where he continued with success until he removed to Highland, New York. Eventually he came to Newtown, Connecticut, and shortly after establishing himself here was invited to lecture on mental and nervous diseases at the Medical Chirurgical College in Philadelphia, where he continued until ill health compelled him to resign on September 14, 1887. The same year he came to Danbury and initiated a career in medicine and surgery that was to win him wide recognition. From the outset he displayed a quality of leadership that was to establish him as one of the most able and influential medical figures of his generation. To fully appreciate this fact one has but to list his activities in professional affairs. He was the organizer and president of the Danbury Medical Society; had been a member of the Fairfield County Medical Society since 1874, and served as its president between 1881 and 1882; during the same period he served as vice-president of the Connecticut State Medical Society; was appointed medical examiner for the Town of Danbury in 1887; and elected consulting surgeon of the Danbury Hospital in 1902. Aside from his local affiliations, Dr. Wile was widely known and highly respected nationally. He was a charter member of the New York Society of Medical Jurisprudence; the American Medical Association, for which he served as vice-president and in which he was secretary of the section of Practice and Medicine from 1883 to 1884; belonged to the Boston Gynecological Society; served as secretary of the section of anatomy of the Ninth International Medical Congress in 1885; was elected a member of the British Medical Association in 1887; the same year became secretary of the American Medical Editors Association, to which he was elected president in 1889; and during the latter year was also elected corresponding member of the New York Academy of Anthropology. He had been elected one of the vice-presidents of the Anthropological Congress during the session of 1888, and at the same time was named a member of the Royal Society of Arts and Sciences in London, England. As a member and officer of a number of these institutions, Dr. Wile was frequently honored by his colleagues, who, on several occasions, named him their representative to important medical conventions held in both this country and abroad. In this connection he was a delegate from the American Medical Association to the British Medical Association convention held in Wales in 1886, and a year prior to this had represented this organization at the convention of the British Medical Association which was held in Brighton, England, where he read a paper. As one of the most eminent surgeons of his day he was appointed consulting surgeon to the Boston Hospital for Women in 1886. His achievements were to be further recognized by several academic institutions, among them Center College, in Kentucky, which conferred upon him the honorary degree of Master of Arts, and Rutherford College, in North Carolina, which awarded him a Doctor of Laws degree.

Dr. Wile was a gifted writer and editor. He chose this medium for the dissemination of medical information and shortly after he established himself in Danbury, founded the "New England Medical Monthly," a publication that was to be widely read throughout this country. In launching this venture he established his own printing office and as the publication grew, expanded plant facilities. The journal became a potent force in medical circles and boasted as its contributors some of the most eminent medical and surgical leaders of the world. It was actually the nucleus of the Danbury Medical Printing Company, which came to operate a large plant on Foster Street in this city. In addition to this establishment, Dr. Wile also founded and organized the Vass Chemical Company in 1897, a corporation which grew to world-wide proportions. So extensive and profitable had his business interests become, in fact, that in 1900, Dr. Wile retired from active practice to devote his entire attention to the management of these enterprises.

Despite the burden of business and professional activities, Dr. Wile found time to devote to the social and civic affairs of his surroundings, being particularly interested and generous in his support of military and medical organizations. He was a very prominent member of the Grand Army of the Republic, holding membership in the Moore-White Post, in Danbury, and the Custer Post, of Sandy Hook, for which he had been a commander prior to settling here. He was also medical director of the Department of Connecticut for three terms and at the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, held in Washington, D. C., was elected surgeon general of the national organization. He always maintained a keen interest in this institution and is credited with being the person who made possible the donation of a memorial tablet in Danbury. Socially he was a member of the Lotus Club, in New York City; the Danbury Club, for which he served as vice-president; and held honorary memberships in the Seaside Club, of Bridgeport, and the

Max Spelke

Dutchess County Society, of New York. He fraternized with the Union Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, in which he was also a member of the Eureka Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; the Crusader Commandery, Knights Templar; the Pyramid Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine; and the Bridgeport Consistory of the Scottish Rite. Dr. Wile won wide renown as an orator and lecturer and was in constant demand as an after-dinner speaker.

Dr. Wile married (first), in 1871, Eliza Scott Garrison, who died in 1881. They were the parents of one daughter: Alice Buckley. On September 1, 1887, he married (second) Hattie Adele Loomis, of New Haven, who passed away in January, 1913.

Dr. Wile died in February, 1913, in Danbury, after a long illness. He was sixty-six years of age. His passing removed from this community one of its most gifted and able citizens, a man who through his professional, business and social accomplishments achieved national and international fame. The record of his career, in itself, forms one of the finest and most lasting tributes to his memory.

MAX SPELKE—With his appointment as special assistant to the Attorney General of the United States in 1935, Max Spelke entered upon a new phase of a career which has brought him recognition both at the bar and in public life. He has been engaged in the practice of law at Stamford during the past sixteen years and is now a member of the firm of Spelke and Zone.

Mr. Spelke was born in Stamford on February 10, 1894, a son of Louis and Sarah (Weinstein) Spelke. His father a merchant in this city, died on January 14, 1916.

After the completion of his preliminary education in the public schools of Stamford, Max Spelke entered Dartmouth College, from which he was graduated in 1916 with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He prepared for his profession in the law school of Columbia University, taking his degree in 1920, and in June of the same year was admitted to the Connecticut bar. In January, 1921, he entered practice at Stamford in association with Judge Frederick W. Huxford, then Speaker of the Connecticut House of Representatives. The firm of Huxford and Spelke was dissolved in 1924, and in 1925, Mr. Spelke participated in the organization of the new firm of Hickey, Spelke and Rich, of which he was a member until 1927. Since then he has been associated with Mr. Zone (Dartmouth, '23, Harvard Law School, '26), under the firm name of Spelke and Zone, carrying on an extensive practice. Meanwhile, Mr. Spelke's reputation at the bar has grown steadily and he is today one of the well-known attorneys of Stamford. In addition to the duties of his private practice, he served from 1921 to 1925 as assistant prosecuting attorney of Stamford, and from 1925 to 1927, as prosecuting attorney of Stamford and Darien. His appointment as special assistant to Attorney General Homer Cummings, in March, 1935, has brought him a number of special assignments undertaken in behalf of the Federal Government.

Mr. Spelke is a member of the Connecticut State Bar Association and of many non-professional organizations, including the Roosevelt Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons; Onax Tribe, No. 41, Improved Order of Red Men; Stamford Lodge, No. 899, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks; the Lions Club of Stamford; the Stamford Gun Club; the Dartmouth Club of New York and the Zionist Organization of America. He is a member of Temple Beth El in Stamford and a supporter of numerous Jewish charities and other benevolent organizations. In April, 1917, he enlisted in the United States Naval Reserve Forces as a seaman and in January, 1919, was discharged with the rank of lieutenant, having served for six months with the United States Naval Forces in France. Since receiving his discharge he has been a member of the American Legion. Mr. Spelke resides at Shippan Point, Stamford.

He married, on December 16, 1928, Evelyn Loeb, daughter of Louis and Ida (Alexander) Leob, of Austin, Texas. They have two children: 1. Ina Louise, born January 7, 1930. 2. Lee, born September 13, 1932.

ERNEST JONES MORGAN—After following the carpenter's trade for a number of years Ernest Jones Morgan, member of an old and honored family in Connecticut, entered the poultry business which he has engaged in for over twenty years. He has operated in various sections of the State and since 1923, has conducted his activities in Newtown, where he raises day old chicks and pedigreed poultry.

Mr. Morgan was born in Norwalk, July 4, 1870, the son of John Smith and Annie Eliza (Jones) Morgan, also the parents of the following children: Russell Eugene, Albert D., Martha E., Percy C., Jessie Evelyn, and a child who died in infancy. His father, also a carpenter by trade, was born March 12, 1848, and died February 1, 1932. His mother died February 3, 1932.

The family, established in the State of Connecticut for generations, trace their American ancestry to Captain James Morgan of England, who came to this country and settled in North Wilton, where he brought up his family. Lineage is traced through his son, Ezekiel, who married a Welsh woman; through their son, Zalmon, who married, was a resident of North Wilton, and the father of the following children: 1. Rockwell. 2. Zalmon, of whom further. 3. Rufus. 4. Cyrus. 5. Sarah. 6. Milly. 7. Mahlda.

Zalmon Morgan (2), married Sally Mead of Ridgefield, and removed to New Canaan. They were the parents of the following children: 1. Curtis, of whom further. 2. Joseph. 3. Mary. 4. John.

Curtis Morgan, grandfather of Ernest Jones Morgan, whose name heads this review, was born at New Canaan, July 13, 1819, and died in Stamford. He married Mary Tucker, and they were the parents of ten children: 1. Martha, born July 3, 1842; died January 19, 1864. 2. Mary, born September 26, 1844, died May 6, 1920. 3. George Z., born January 11, 1846, died November 8, 1867. 4. John Smith, father of Ernest Jones Morgan, born March 12, 1848, died February 1, 1932. 5. Charles, born April 17, 1850, died October 9, 1861. 6. Jane, born October 15, 1851, died October 2, 1861. 7. Annie, born February 26, 1854, died April 26, 1930. 8. Sarah, born September 29, 1856, died October 19, 1861. 9. Alice, born December 10, 1858, died October 14, 1861. 10. Ella, born October 22, 1862.

Ernest Jones Morgan attended the public schools of Stamford and after finishing his studies began to learn the carpenter's trade, in which he served as an apprentice and journeyman for eight years. He then engaged in business for himself until 1916, when he came to Essex, where he did carpenter work. Later he removed to Berlin, where he engaged in farming and in 1923 came to Newtown where he operates a farm, specializing in fancy poultry.

He married April 29, 1896, Jennie Savage, of Ivoryton, Connecticut, and they are the parents of one son: George Curtis, born February 6, 1897; married Irene E. Hubbard, of Berlin, and has four children: Alice, John, Burr and Ernest.

FREDERICK MONROE THOMPSON—For many years Frederick Monroe Thompson was a well known figure in the life of Danbury, where his activities centered from 1884 until his death. During this time, as a retail merchant, he won a prominent place in the business community, and with the extension of his interests in other fields, his influence and reputation continued to grow. He was known both for his ability and exemplary qualities of citizenship and always enjoyed the deep respect of the city which was so long his home.

Mr. Thompson was born in Mansfield, Connecticut, on September 25, 1856, and was educated in local public schools. As a boy he assisted his father, Philo W. Thompson in the operation of the family farm and continued this responsibility until he reached his eighteenth year, when he entered business life. Taking a position with a furniture house in Willimantic, he obtained a thorough training in retail merchandising methods and general business practice, after which, in 1882, he formed a partnership with George G. Standish and established a retail shoe store in Willimantic. Two years later they transferred the business to Danbury, where the partnership was continued until Mr. Standish retired. Thereafter Mr. Thompson conducted the enterprise alone. As sole proprietor, he became one of Danbury's successful merchants, following with acumen and good judgment sound principles of operation and basing his policies on the high plane reflected in the fairness of his dealings and the excellence of the service he supplied to the community.

In addition to this venture, Mr. Thompson was associated as a director with various other enterprises in Danbury and was especially successful as the compiler and publisher of "Thompson's Pocket Speller," a simplified and condensed book of reference which had a large sale. He was a director of the Union Savings Bank of Danbury, from 1904, until his death and was vice-president of that institution from 1910 onward, bringing to its counsels the vision and enterprise, coupled with wise conservatism in action, which distinguished his independent business career. In this and other connections, his opinions were always highly valued by his associates and his judgments were received with profound respect.

Mr. Thompson was affiliated fraternally with Union Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, and was a member in this order of various higher bodies, including Eureka Chapter, Royal Arch Masons; Wooster Council, Royal and Select Masters; and Crusader Commandery, Knights Templar. He was also affiliated with Danbury Council, Royal Arcanum. While he always fully met the duties of good citizenship, lending effective support to many worthy causes, he never entered public life, devoting his time to his business, his home and his leisure interests. He was especially fond of horses and sports. For years he was known as one of the best Roque players in the country, participating in the annual tournaments of the National Roque Association held in Norwich. As a younger man, he was also an accomplished tennis player and was a charter member of the Danbury Tennis Club and a member at various times of several other local clubs. In religious faith he was a communicant of the Baptist Church.

Mr. Thompson married, September 25, 1877, Ida M. Parkhurst, of Ohio, daughter of Guilford and Cinthia (Loomis) Parkhurst. Mrs. Thompson survives him. Their only child, a son, Clinton Everett, who was born in 1881, died at the age of seven years.

Mr. Thompson died at Danbury in February, 1919. His ability and attainments were universally respected, and his appealing personal qualities won him a host of friends. Few men have been so favored with this happy gift, yet only with his death, perhaps, did those who knew him come to realize fully the place he occupied in their affections and the constant value of his presence in their midst.

EINAR VIGGO HANSEN—Industry has been the basic factor in the success of Einar Viggo Hansen, who in a period of less than sixteen years has developed a large and successful dairy business in Norwalk and its environs.

Mr. Hansen has enjoyed a colorful and interesting career. He was born in Stege, Denmark, May 31, 1895, and received a general education in the public schools of that country. After completing his studies he went to sea and for a number of years sailed throughout the world on sailing ships. In 1914 he abandoned this life and settled in Staten Island, New York, where he secured work as a structural iron worker, and was to reside until 1922, when he removed to Norwalk, where he purchased a milk and dairy business. He began this venture on a small scale, making deliveries with his own horse and wagon for about the first two years of his residence here. Later, as the venture prospered and succeeded under his able and careful management, he acquired motorized trucks, which are now employed in distributing his products throughout the Norwalks and adjacent territory.

During his residence in this community he has taken a keen and active interest in the social and civic affairs of his surroundings and is now a member of several fraternal organizations, including the Oldwell Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons, Butler Chapter, Royal Arch Masons and the Washington Council of Stamford. He also fraternizes with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

On June 15, 1918, at Staten Island, New York, Mr. Hansen married Caroline Tillman and they are the parents of four children: 1. John. 2. Martha. 3. Jean. 4. Einar.

CHARLES ARTHUR MALLORY—Member of a family distinguished in the life of Connecticut for many generations, Charles Arthur Mallory continued in his own career the fine traditions long associated with the Mallory name. He was a leading citizen of Danbury throughout his career and one of the principal figures in its industrial and financial life.

Mr. Mallory was born at Danbury on October 16, 1850, a son of Ezra Andrews and Hannah (Mallory) Mallory. He was a direct descendant in the eighth generation of Peter Mallory, the immigrant ancestor, who early came from England to New Haven and was one of the signers of the plantation covenant of 1644. From him the line is traced through Thomas, his son; Daniel, in the third American generation; Daniel, in the fourth, who lived in Fairfield County, Connecticut, and was on the committee to care for soldiers' families in 1777; Samuel, his son, who was born on July 2, 1752, and died on July 22, 1834; Ezra, son of Samuel, born February 21, 1785, in Redding, Connecticut, died September 30, 1845, a hatter by trade, who moved to Danbury and lived in that town at the village of Great Plains; and Ezra Andrews, son of Ezra and father of Charles Arthur Mallory, of this record.

Ezra Andrews Mallory was born June 4, 1820, at Great Plains. He learned the hatter's trade under his father, took over the business upon the death of the elder man and some years later moved the plant to Danbury. In 1860, in association with P. A. Sutton, he formed the firm of E. A. Mallory & Company. In 1864 he became associated with his brother, Samuel, who retired in 1866, leaving Ezra Andrews Mallory to conduct the business alone until 1872, when he received his son, Charles Arthur Mallory into partnership. In 1886, another son, William Ezra, also entered the firm, which was conducted jointly until the death of the father on August 15, 1902. Two years later, in 1904, it was incorporated as E. A. Mallory Sons, Incorporated, and under this name continued the large development and growth, based on the excellence of its products, which has marked its history. Ezra Andrews Mallory had many civic and charitable interests and was one of the original incorporators of the Danbury Home for Destitute and Homeless Children in 1884. He was a man of the greatest rectitude and of exemplary character, whose accomplishments live after him. He married, on October 16, 1843, at Wilton, Connecticut, Hannah Mallory, who was born in Wilton on March 24, 1824, daughter of William Mallory.

Charles Arthur Mallory was the second of four children born of this marriage and the eldest of the two who lived to reach maturity. He was educated in the public schools of Danbury and at the age of twenty-two joined his father in business. Serving a thorough apprenticeship in the plant and office, he rapidly assumed an important part in the operations of the company and after his father's death took over its control jointly with his brother, William Ezra Mallory. In 1904, upon the incorporation of the company, he became its president. It was under his leadership that the business developed on a very wide scale, becoming one of the principal industries of Danbury.

Mr. Mallory, however, had many other interests. He was a trustee of the Union Savings Bank of Danbury over a long period; a director of the City National Bank of Danbury; a director of the Danbury and Bethel Gas and Electric Light Company and of the Clark Boe Company. All these responsibilities he administered with the fidelity, the vision and soundness of judgment which always distinguished him, winning the profound respect not only of his immediate associates but of the public at large. Mr. Mallory also exemplified the enlightened conception of the obligations of good citizenship which has long characterized his family. He lent his active support to all worthy civic causes and took a prominent part in the conduct of local charitable organizations and institutions. He served as president of the Danbury Hospital, from 1913 to 1935, and considered the growth of his means and influence as an obligation to increase the scope of his service to his fellows. His own charities were many and were dispensed with generosity and wisdom. Mr. Mallory was a Republican in politics and a member of the Congregational Church.

He married (first), on September 16, 1873, Ella L. Rider, daughter of Dr. William H. and Olive (Fry) Rider. She died on March 13, 1899, leaving two children: 1. Harry B., born November 14, 1874, married Mary Cowperthwait. 2. Clara J., born October 10, 1879, married Mathias C. Lowe.

Mr. Mallory married (second), on June 24, 1911, Marion H. Tweedy, who survives him.

After a long life, rich in useful service and noteworthy accomplishment, Charles Arthur Mallory passed away on June 9, 1935, in his eighty-fifth year. He was loyal to every trust, rendering a faithful accounting of the talents entrusted to him, and his memory is honored by the city which shared so largely in the constructive influences of his career.

WILLIS R. AUSTIN—For over a quarter of a century Willis R. Austin has held the Chevrolet agency for the Norwalk district. His connection with the automobile industry dates from an early period in its history, and the growth of his own interests has kept pace with the development of the industry as a whole.

Mr. Austin was born at Norwalk, Connecticut, on January 28, 1864, a son of Emmett and Minnie Austin. He received his education in local schools and after completing his high school training began his active business career with Norwalk enterprises. For a time he was variously employed, serving in several different connections, but eventually became a toy manufacturer, establishing the firm of Austin and Craw. This business he successfully conducted for many years. With the development of the automobile industry, however, in the first decade of the present century, his interest was attracted to this field and from 1909 onward he began to give it his active attention. In 1912 he became the Chevrolet dealer for the Norwalk district and has since retained this agency through the various reorganizations of the company, developing his business from small beginnings to one of the most complete and up-to-date sales and service stations in the State. They are today the oldest established sales agency in Connecticut.

Mr. Austin, who is well known in automobile circles of the State, is a member of the Connecticut Auto Dealers Association. He is also a member, at Norwalk, of the Chamber of Commerce, the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, the Kiwanis Club and the Norwalk Country Club. He is a Republican in politics and, although remaining by preference in the background, he has made his influence effective in supporting many worthy community projects and civic enterprises. Mr. Austin is a member of the Baptist Church.

He married, in Norwalk, Minnie E. Merrill. They are the parents of one son, Addison E., born March 25, 1890, educated in the Norwalk public schools, including the high school, and at Overlook Military Academy, from which he was graduated in 1909. After his school years, he entered the automobile business in New York City and was thus engaged for about ten years. At the end of that time, however, he returned to Norwalk and joined his father in the Chevrolet agency which the latter had built. Addison E. Austin has since been associated in its management. He is a member of the Connecticut Auto Dealers Association, and in addition to his business connections has been active in church work. He is a member of the Norwalk Baptist Church and Everyman's Bible Class, a member of the Young Men's Christian Association and a strong supporter of these organizations. Like his father, he is a Republican in politics.

Addison E. Austin was married at Norwalk on August 2, 1928, and has one son, Addison Willis.

JAMES S. WILLIAMS—Contributory to the successful career of an industrial executive and distinguished citizen, James S. Williams, a lifelong resident of Glastonbury, Connecticut, were the gifts to work long and hard, which is typical of New Englanders.

As indicated, James S. Williams was born in Glastonbury, the son of James Baker Williams, founder of Williams Brothers (now the J. B. Williams Company) and Jerusha (Hubbard) Williams. His ancestral background is especially interesting since it includes the founders of so many New England towns of earliest origin. According to family records and traditions, Bishop White and Rev. John Robinson who organized the Pilgrim band that sailed on the "Mayflower" were direct ancestors, as were four of the passengers on that historic ship. Other ancestors included George Morton, who came to Plymouth in 1623 with his wife, a sister-in-law of Governor Bradford; Rev. John Lothrop, who brought his congregation from Scituate to settle Barnstable in 1639; Robert Williams, of Roxbury, 1638; Edward De Votion (Devotion) Brookline, 1643; William Tuttle, New Haven, 1634; Emmanuel Downing, 1638, Salem, who was the father of Sir George Downing of "Pepys' Diary." No. 10 Downing Street, London, England, was built originally by Emmanuel Downing and his son, Sir George, ancestors of Mr. Williams, and they named famous Downing Street. Mr. Williams had seven forebears among the founders of Hartford, Connecticut: William Westwood and Thomas Stanley, who were two of the company called "The Adventurers," who came to Connecticut in 1634 and chose the site of the Colony founded by Thomas Hooker; Governor Thomas Welles; Elder John White; Elder William Goodwin; Aaron Cooke and John Crow. Other Colonial ancestors were Elsworth, Annabel, Adgate, Parks, Scudder, Hubbard, Hollister, Judson Porter, Aelyn, Chamberlain, and others.

In military history, James S. Williams' great-great-grandfather, Colonel Simon Lothrop, commanded one of the Connecticut regiments in the successful expeditions against Annapolis and Lewisburg in the war with the French in 1744, and was highly commended for his judgment and valor. Dr. Joseph Baker, of Brooklyn, Connecticut, was surgeon on General Putnam's staff in the "Lexington Alarm" of 1775 and served in the Continental Army throughout the War of the American Revolution. The men named as part of Mr. Williams' ancestry had many distinguished descendants who made history in the New England States and elsewhere.

James S. Williams added new lustre to ancient family traditions but in ways that do not receive the limelight but are none the less important. However wide his vision and lofty his imagination, his feet were always on the ground, and what he achieved he did effectively without noise or the display of force. An exception may have been the national reputation he won as a football player in the Massachusetts Agricultural College, from which he was graduated with the Class of 1882. In those days when the game was at its most bone-breaking stage of development, he played four years on the varsity teams, and was captain of the famous 1881 team. Later it was written: "He ranked as one of the greatest figures in 'Aggie' football history, and was rated by his contemporaries as a wonderful player and inspirational leader. He has been called 'the Red Grange of his day.'" Mr. Williams was one of the founders of the QTV fraternity while in college. He had prepared for his higher education in Glastonbury Academy, from which he was graduated in 1878.

After completing his college studies, Mr. Williams traveled abroad for about a year, supplementing his work in Massachusetts Agricultural College with observations of European farming. He brought back with him to New England, from Island of Jersey, the nucleus of what was to become a famous herd of Jersey cattle. He also raised thoroughbred Hackney horses and was an expert in driving and riding. As his children grew up he taught them to be fine equestrians and one of his chief pleasures was riding with them. He was able to devote himself to agriculture as a vocation for only a few years. Circumstances led to his becoming associated with the Williams Brothers Manufacturing Company, as secretary and treasurer. In 1907 he was elected president, and in 1927 retired. The Williams Brothers Manufacturing Company engages in the manufacture of silverware, in Glastonbury, and is well known in the jewelers' trade throughout the United States. Mr. Williams was not only a capable executive, practical and efficient in his ideas and practices, but was noteworthy for his ability to win the loyalty of employes of whatsoever degree.

Mr. Williams represented Glastonbury in the General Assembly in 1907, but although always keenly interested in the promotion of the best interests of his city and State, cared little for politics except as a means for obtaining better government. He was a member of the committee on cities and borough while a member of the Legislature and supported several measures of major importance. He was a charter member of the Glastonbury Grange, a former president of the Glastonbury Chamber of Commerce, and was a founder of the Williams Memorial Golf Club. He was a member of the Sons of the American Revolution, the Society of Descendants of the Mayflower, and the Williams Memorial Association. Since 1876 he had been a communicant of the First Congregational Church, and at one time was president of its board of trustees. He enjoyed outdoor sports, and his joining in them with young people made him many friends in his children's generation.

James S. Williams married Katherine Phillips (Clarke) Nicholson, daughter of Judge R. L. B. Clarke and Annie (Phillips) Clarke, of Washington, D. C. Surviving are his wife and two sons: 1. Percy Huntington, of Glastonbury. 2. James Rufus, of East Hartford; and four daughters: 1. Mrs. Robert O. Rider. 2. Mrs. William W. Buck, of Glastonbury. 3. Mrs. James B. Williams, of Longmeadow. 4. Mrs. James A. Hayes, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. Also a step-daughter, Mrs. Annie Phillips Hurlburt, of Glastonbury; eighteen grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren.

Mr. Williams died in his Glastonbury home at the age of seventy-six years, and his last resting place is the Old Green Cemetery, Glastonbury, the land for which was donated by his ancestors when the town was founded in 1690. His had been a career of distinction in which responsibilities had been accepted, and leadership supplied. Material success attended his endeavors, but had not prevented his giving primacy to that which is inadequately called "the higher things of life" nor kept him from becoming an example of noble living. There was about him a calmness rising out of a well-ordered spirit, which merged with a keen sense of humor and sympathetic understanding, to make him a highly esteemed figure in the community, and a man universally trusted and liked. This brief review of a noteworthy life ends with the phrase often repeated: "He was the best loved man I have ever known."

FREDERIC RICE KELLOGG—One of Waterbury's leading business men, Frederic Rice Kellogg has rendered valuable service to his native community as assistant treasurer and a director of the Apothecaries Hall Company, Incorporated.

Mr. Kellogg was born September 23, 1904, son of Isaac P. and Sarah Rice (Munson) Kellogg. His grandparents, on the paternal side of the house, were J. Dwight and Caroline (Parsons) Kellogg, the former of whom was a dry goods merchant for many years until his death. On the maternal side, the grandparents were L. I. and Mary B. (Rice) Munson. Isaac P. Kellogg, father of Frederic Rice Kellogg, is president and treasurer of the Apothecaries Hall Company. Further details concerning him are to be found elsewhere in this book.

The public schools provided the early education of Frederic Rice Kellogg, who later attended the Choate School and graduated from Princeton University, Princeton, New Jersey, in 1926. In that year he became associated with the Apothecaries Hall Company, of which he was elected assistant treasurer and a director. This firm is widely known for its work in the chemical and plating supply industry, handling also a large line of paints, drugs, laundry supplies, oil and gasoline, and selling its products at wholesale. The enterprise was founded in 1849.

In addition to his work with the Apothecaries Hall Company, Frederic Rice Kellogg is a director of the Morris Plan Bank, of Waterbury. In many and varied ways he has served the social and civic organizations of his community, particularly interesting himself in welfare work. He is a member of the finance committee of the Pearl Street Neighborhood House. Politically he is a Republican. He belongs to the Country Club of Waterbury, and is a member of the vestry of St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church, in Waterbury.

Frederic Rice Kellogg married, on April 11, 1928, in Waterbury, Lucy Templeton, daughter of former Governor Charles A. and Martha (Castle) Templeton. Three children were born to them: 1. Cynthia Parsons, born September 29, 1929. 2. Charles Templeton, born November 23, 1931. 3. Judith Munson, born October 15, 1934. The family residence is situated at No. 139 Prospect Street, Waterbury.

GEORGE C. CLARK—As a native of Terryville and life-long resident, George C. Clark has assumed a place of outstanding prominence in the life of the community, where he is vice-president, treasurer and director of the Andrew Terry Company, an officer in various other business and financial organizations and a leader in social and civic affairs.

Mr. Clark was born in Terryville, August 21, 1872, the son of Judah W. and Eliza A. (Pond) Clark, both deceased. For years prior to his demise his father was secretary-treasurer of the Andrew Terry Company. Maternally, Mr. Clark is descended from one of the early New England families, tracing his ancestry to Samuel Pond of England, who is recorded to have settled in Windsor, in March, 1654. Lineage is carried on from this point through his son Samuel (2), born in Windsor, March 4, 1648, died in Branford. January 20, 1667, was a signer of the "New Plantation and Church Covenant," of Branford, deputy to the General Court here, and married Miriam Blakeley; through their son, Samuel (3), born at Branford, July 1, 1679, and married Abigail Goodrich, June 8, 1704; through their son Phineas, who was born in Branford, June 9, 1715, and married (first), Martha ....; through their son Jonathan, born in Branford, June 24, 1740, died December 16, 1817, who was a farmer and blacksmith and first engaged in his vocations at Farmington, where he married Susannah Hungerford, who died, and later he removed to Plymouth and married (second), Jerusha Jerome of Bristol; through their son Jonathan, born in Plymouth, in 1773, died October 11, 1855, and married (first), Betsey Adams and (second), Lucia Gildersleeve. Alexander Pond, son of Jonathan and Betsey (Adams) Pond, was Mr. Clark's maternal grandfather.

After a general education in the public schools of his native community Mr. Clark matriculated at Yale University from which he was graduated with a Bachelor of Science degree in the class of 1893. The same year he returned to Terryville and entered the employ of the Andrew Terry Company, manufacturers of malleable iron castings, as a metallurgist. In the years that followed he served in various capacities with this company, was elected secretary and a member of the board of directors in 1896, and forty years later, when the concern was merged with the National Engineering Corporation, was elected vice-president and treasurer, the office he has since occupied with such distinction and success. His position of leadership in the business life of this town is further evidenced in the offices he has been called upon to fill with several other highly important enterprises, notably the Terryville Trust Company, in which he is a director. He is also a vice-president and director of the Bristol Savings Bank and a director of the North and Judd Manufacturing Company of New Britain.

In a civic capacity he has contributed much to the well being of Terryville and vicinity. He is chairman of the finance committee of the Town of Plymouth and one of the active leaders of the local Republican organization. Socially, he belongs to the Farmington Country Club and in his religious convictions worships at the Terryville Congregational Church, for which he has served as trustee for many years.

DWIGHT WARREN POND—For many years a recognized leader in the affairs of Terryville, Dwight Warren Pond has rendered his community a particularly valuable service as secretary and a director of the Andrew Terry Company.

Mr. Pond was born September 24, 1889, at Terryville, Connecticut, son of Edgar LeRoy and Ella Antoinette (Goodwin) Pond and member of an old and noted family whose ancestral line in America is to be found in this volume under the separate heading of "Edgar LeRoy Pond," Dwight Warren Pond's father.

The schools of Terryville, his birthplace, provided the early formal education of Dwight Warren Pond. After completing his high school studies, he became a student at Yale University, where he was graduated in 1909, with the degree of Bachelor of Science. His first work was as a chemist with the Andrew Terry Company, and afterward he held a number of different positions of importance with the firm before being elected a director in 1926. In 1936 he was elected secretary, and he has continued as secretary and as a director of the company since that time. This connection was broken only at the time of the World War, when Mr. Pond enlisted in the Chemical Warfare Service, serving from 1918 until after the signing of the armistice.

Today he continues his interest in military affairs through membership in Post No. 20, of Plymouth, of the American Legion. Politically he is a Republican. In numerous ways he has effectively served his community and district, being a member of the Plymouth Board of Education. For ten years he was treasurer of the Terryville Congregational Church.

Dwight W. Pond married, on November 16, 1910, at Schenectady, New York, Catherine Moore, daughter of the late George W. and Helen (Cruden) Moore. The children of this marriage were: 1. Dwight

Cameron, born September 17, 1911, a graduate of Yale University and the University of Michigan School of Law, now a lawyer. 2. Lois, born January 30, 1913, a graduate of Connecticut College for Women, New London. 3. George Philip, born May 27, 1914, a graduate of Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, New York, now assistant superintendent of the Andrew Terry Company; married Sylvia Louise Manross, of Forestville, December 2, 1937. 4. Edgar Warren, born November 9, 1924.

EDGAR LeROY POND—Long recognized as one of Terryville's leading citizens, Edgar LeRoy Pond has contributed in a notable way to the growth and development of his community, earning the warm respect and admiration of his fellow citizens. He is connected with several financial institutions, being president of the Terryville Trust Company, and also heads the Andrew Terry Company, manufacturers of malleable iron castings, at Terryville. Mr. Pond is a member of an old and honorable family, the Pond line having been traced back to Samuel Pond.

(I) Samuel Pond, born in England, was one of the early settlers of Windsor, Connecticut. He died March 14, 1654, leaving sixty-two acres of land. He married, November 14, 1642, Sarah .

(II) Samuel Pond, one of their children, born March 4, 1648, at Windsor, Connecticut, was one of the signers of the "New Plantation and Church Covenant," of Branford, Connecticut, on January 20, 1667. He was propounded for freeman in 1672, was a deputy to the General Court from Branford in 1678, 1682, 1683 and 1687, and was lieutenant of the military company in 1695. He married, February 3, 1669, Miriam Blakeley.

(III) Samuel Pond, one of their children, was born July 1, 1679, at Branford, and married, June 8, 1704, Abigail Goodrich.

(IV) Phineas Pond, their son, was born June 9, 1715, at Branford, and settled in Milford, Connecticut. He married Martha.

(V) Jonathan Pond, their son, was born June 24, 1740, at Branford. In 1764 he bought from Benjamin Cook, of Farmington, fifty-one acres of land, and in the same year also bought land from Eliphalet Eaton, of Goshen, in that part of the town of Farmington that is now Bristol, and known as Chippeny or Chippen's Hill. While living at the Chippen's Hill farm, he married (first) Susannah Hungerford, of Bristol, who died a year or two afterward, whereupon he sold his farm and settled in 1770 in Plymouth, Connecticut. His farm of 200 acres was partly in Bristol and partly in Plymouth, and remained in possession of him and his descendants until 1864, a period of ninety-four years. He was also a blacksmith. In religious faith he was a Congregationalist. He married (second) Jerusha Jerome, of Bristol, aunt of the late Chauncey Jerome, of New Haven, formerly of Plymouth. Jonathan Pond died December 16, 1817, in his seventy-eighth year, and his second wife died in 1828.

(VI) Jonathan Pond (2), their son, was born in 1773, in Plymouth, and died October 11, 1855. He inherited part of the homestead and farmed at Plymouth. He married (first) Betsey Adams.

(VII) Alexander Pond, their son, born March 9, 1811, in Plymouth, died December 26, 1877, studied in the public schools and remained on the homestead. He succeeded to this property, was prominent in politics, and was a respected member of his community. He finally disposed of the homestead property in 1864, selling it. By a strange circumstance, each of the generations of the Pond family born in the house consisted of eight children, five boys and three girls. Alexander Pond married, April 6, 1834, Lydia Gaylord, born July 5, 1809, at Bristol, died October 31, 1868. Their children were: 1. Caroline Amelia, born February 22, 1835, died in June, 1907, married Norman G. Grannis, of Waterbury. 2. Sarah Aurelia, born June 29, 1837, married Spencer A. Clark (now deceased), of New Haven; they had a son, LeRoy. 3. Charles Hobart, born July 16, 1839, died April 17, 1885, in California. 4. Gad Gaylord, born June 2, 1842, died March 4, 1864. 5. Eliza Augusta, born June 19, 1845, married Judah Winslow Clark, of Terryville (now deceased); their children were Mabel and George Clifford. 6. Martin Alexander, born March 28, 1847, lived in Waterbury, married Alice M. Woodworth; their children were Clifford Allen, and Jessie Woodworth (wife of Hubert Cornell). 7. George Clifford, born September 11, 1849, died March 16, 1870. 8. Edgar LeRoy, of further mention.

(VIII) Edgar LeRoy Pond, youngest child of Alexander and Lydia (Gaylord) Pond, was born March 3, 1854, at Plymouth, Connecticut, and studied in the public schools of Terryville. At the age of fifteen years he began his business career as clerk in a store in his native town. He was in that position for two years, and for one year occupied a similar position in a New Haven store. He then turned to the iron moulding trade becoming a moulder in the Malleable Iron Works, operated by Andrew Terry in Terryville.

In addition to his other activities, he became prominent in community and civic affairs. In addition to serving as treasurer of the company from 1896 to 1898, and as president after 1898, he took time for service to the Republican party organization and to his town, which he served in public office. He was for some years a member of the School Board. He was a member and for many years chairman of the Plymouth Republican town committee. For six years he was a member of the Republican State central committee. In 1886, he represented his town in the State Legislature, serving as a member of the committee on labor. He was State Senator in 1901, and served on the committee on humane institutions in the Senate. In the session of 1901, he secured a charter for the Terryville Savings Bank, of which he became a director. He is now president and a director of the Terryville Trust Company and a director of the Bristol Bank and Trust Company, as well as president of the Andrew Terry Company, manufacturers of malleable iron castings, of Terryville.

Edgar LeRoy Pond is also active in social, civic and fraternal affairs. In the Free and Accepted Masons, he has extensive affiliations and is a member of Union Lodge, of Thomaston. He also belongs to the Junior Order of United American Mechanics, and is a member of the board of managers of the Sons of the American Revolution. He worships in the faith of the Congregational Church.

Edgar LeRoy Pond married, November 6, 1878, Ella Antoinette Goodwin, daughter of Willard Terry and Amelia Evans (Fenn) Goodwin. The children were: 1. Howard Clayton, born August 21, 1881, died April 16, 1905. 2. Edgar LeRoy (2), born December 26, 1883, at Terryville, graduated from Yale in 1904 and Yale Law School in 1906, admitted to the bar in that year, practiced law for a time, then joined the staff of the Hartford "Courant," also serving as judge of probate for Plymouth district and becoming author of a book, "The Tories of Chippeny Hill, Connecticut," an account of the Bristol Loyalists and those of Plymouth and Harwinton, founders of St. Matthew's Protestant Episcopal Church, at East Plymouth, in 1891; he married, January 15, 1910, Mary Wheeler, of Terryville, daughter of Andrew Karlmann. 3. Dwight Warren, of mention in this work, under separate heading.

It may be seen from the foregoing record that the achievements of the Pond family have been noteworthy, and Edgar LeRoy Pond's work has been outstanding in character and has won for him special distinction.

HENRY EDMUND COTTLE—Having served as principal of Bristol High School since 1905, Henry Edmund Cottle is the oldest member in point of service, with one exception, in the local school system. He was born March 13, 1873, at Randolph, Massachusetts, son of the late Edmund and Harriet (Belcher) Cottle. The elder Mr. Cottle was a salesman and manufacturer in Randolph, and was a man highly respected and esteemed in his community. He served as a lieutenant in Company D, Fourth Regiment, Massachusetts Volunteers, in the Civil War, and was wounded in action at Port Hudson.

Henry Edmund Cottle attended the Randolph schools, and prepared for college at Boston Latin School. He then entered Harvard University, and was graduated with a Bachelor of Arts degree in 1898, and during the year previous to graduation taught school at Powers Institute, Bernardston, Massachusetts. During the year 1898 to 1899, he was principal of the high school at Shrewsbury, Massachusetts, and from there he went to Glastonbury, Connecticut, accepting an appointment as principal of the high school here. After six years at this post he changed the scene of his activities to Bristol, and he has been prominent in the educational field of this town for over thirty-two years. Despite his manifold duties, Mr. Cottle has always been keenly interested in athletics and has always advocated indulgence in clean wholesome sport.

He is a member and deacon of the Bristol Congregational Church, a Republican, and widely known in civic, educational and fraternal societies. He is affiliated with the Franklin Lodge, Free and Accepted Masons, past secretary and past president of the Harvard Club, of Connecticut, and a director of the Bristol Savings Bank. He is a member of the National Education Association, past president of the Hartford County Teachers' Association, twice past president of the Bristol Teachers' Association, and past chairman of the Committee on Eligibility in the Connecticut Interscholastic Athletic Conference, and he served as president of the Old Classical and High School Association, of Connecticut, now out of existence. He is now serving as member of the Executive Committee of the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

Mr. Cottle was married, December 27, 1899, at Randolph, to Ella Louise Chase, daughter of Dr.

Augustus L. and Mrs. M. Louise (Mann) Chase. Mr. and Mrs. Cottle are the parents of two children: 1. Louise, married Charles A. Barker, assistant professor of history at Stanford University, Palo Alto, California, and are the parents of one son, John Gaylord. 2. Harriet Belcher, married Alan E. Boles, associated with the General Reinsurance Company, of New York City. Mr. and Mrs. Boles are the parents of one daughter, Ellen Chase.

STANLEY SESSIONS GWILLIM—Thirty-five years of distinctive achievement as a business executive and civic leader mark the career of Stanley Sessions Gwillim, secretary, director and general manager of the Trumbull Electric Manufacturing Company, of Plainville.

Mr. Gwillim was born in Bristol, October 16, 1876, the son of Thomas I. and Emma A. (Moore) Gwillim, the former a native of New York City, who came to this city the year of his son's birth and established himself in a jewelry business, which he was to conduct until his passing in 1918. His mother was born in Standish, Maine, November 12, 1842, and is still living (1938) in Bristol. Mr. Gwillim received the early part of his general education in the public schools of Bristol, graduating from the high school in 1894. He attended Wilbraham Academy for one year and then matriculated at Wesleyan University, which he attended for one year, after which he retired to embark upon a business career that has since been characterized for its success. His first position was that of manager of the Bristol store of the Stewart Wall Paper and Paint Company, which he was associated with for two years, leaving to become bookkeeper for the D. B. Judd Company, coal and lumber dealers. He continued in this capacity for three years and, in 1902, joined the Trumbull Electric Manufacturing Company, of Plainville, with which he has since been associated in various capacities. At the time he entered the firm he held a modest position. Through application and ability he made steady progress and, in 1918, was elected secretary and a member of the board of directors. Since that time he has also been general manager of the company and a director and assistant manager of the Trumbull Electric Company (Pacific Division), of Seattle, Washington, director of the San Francisco Division of the Trumbull Electric Company, and a director of the General Electric Supply Corporation. As one of the prominent business men of this section of the State he also serves as a member of the board of managers of the Hartford County Manufacturers Association.

His leadership is also manifested in the social and civic life of his surroundings. A staunch supporter of the Republican Party in politics, Mr. Gwillim has been active in the local organization and has served as chairman of the Plainville Republican Committee. In an official capacity he has been chairman of the Plainville Board of Finance since its organization in 1926, has been assistant prosecutor of the community for six years, and a grand juror for over a quarter of a century. He served for two years as president of the Plainville Chamber of Commerce.

His social interests have largely been centered in the Hartford County branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, for which he has served as the Plainville chairman since its organization; is a member of the order of Free and Accepted Masons, in which he is Past Master of the Frederick Lodge, Past High Priest, Pequabuck Chapter, Royal Arch Masons, Bristol, Past Potentate, Sphinx Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, Hartford, a member of the Commandery, Knights Templar, and a thirty-second degree Mason. He is also a Past Chancellor of Ethan Lodge, No. 9, of the Knights of Pythias, in Bristol, and belongs to the Bristol Club, the City Club, of Hartford, and the Shuttle Meadow Club, of New Britain.

Mr. Gwillim served as a lieutenant in Company I, of the Connecticut National Guard, for three years, and during the World War was one of the most effective and outstanding patriotic leaders in this county, where he was chairman of a number of important local organizations and committees, including the Four-Minute Speakers, the State Council of Defense, the local Legal Advisory Board for Administering Selective Service during the war, the War Bureau, the War Savings Committee for the territory embracing Bristol, New Britain, Meriden, and surrounding towns and cities. He also was the first chairman of the Plainville Red Cross.

On April 14, 1903, Mr. Gwillim married (first) Minnie L. Funk, who died in September, 1920. There was one child by this marriage, Doris, who is married to Theodore E. Rogers, of Middletown, and the mother of two daughters: i. Jane, born in 1923. ii. Joan, born in 1929. On February 4, 1922, Mr. Gwillim married (second) Mrs. Edith P. Taylor, of Windsor, and the mother of one daughter, Muriel, whom Mr. Gwillim has legally adopted. She is now (1938) a member of the senior class at Wheaton College, in Norton, Massachusetts.

Jacob C. Van Heiningen

JACOB C. VAN HEININGEN—The South Wilton Nurseries are noted throughout Connecticut and the adjacent States for its rare productions and fine stock. Its owner, Jacob C. Van Heiningen, has a most interesting history. He was born at Boskoop, Holland, where he received his education and learned the very difficult art of floriculture. His home was in a place of some nine hundred nurseries, and by birth and surroundings, Mr. Van Heiningen was almost marked for the business, or profession, to which he has devoted the larger part of a lifetime.

In 1896, the United States Government placed an embargo on certain ornamentals and a heavy tariff on others. Roses, one of the main imports of the village, soon became a drug on the international market. Just about this time a promoter appeared upon the scene, praising the southern part of the United States as an ideal spot for growing the products in which these Hollanders specialized. The section, thirty miles east of Galveston, was the one he was advertising, and the older Mr. Van Heiningen, in 1897, sent his son, Jacob C. Van Heiningen, who was then seventeen years old, to join his brother, who was in Lynn, Massachusetts, to Galveston, Texas. The father sold his interests in Holland and, in 1898, joined his sons, and the family settling in Nederland, Texas. After six months he returned to his native Holland, the sons continued farming, but not being familiar with climatic conditions they were unable to cultivate the plants which they had grown in Holland. In 1900, oil was found ten miles from the village and the boys sold their holdings, repaying their father for every cent he had invested. They then came to New York City, where J. C. Van Heiningen found employment in a nursery at New Rochelle, the brother going with Peter Henderson and one year later, returning to Holland where he entered business. Mr. Van Heiningen remained five years in New Rochelle, where he not only acquired a working knowledge of English, but had advanced to superintendent of the nursery. In these years he attended night school, learning much that was of great value to him later. Resigning his New Rochelle position he went to Flushing, Long Island, with Samuel B. Parsons, to become the superintendent of the Parsons Nurseries, remaining three years, when the business was entirely closed out. One day he was called into New York, where he was persuaded to take outside work for Mr. Samuel Parsons, Jr., a landscape architect for New York City, who also had a business of his own and Mr. Van Heiningen, during the following nine years, traveled all over the United States, assuming the oversight of landscaping and decorative planting on large estates.

In 1912, tired of a post which kept him so much from home, Mr. Van Heiningen resigned and, coming to Wilton, Connecticut, established the South Wilton Nurseries, of which he has been the presiding genius since. It is known far and wide for the excellence of its stock, and especially for rare types of ornamentals, some of which are seldom found in other parts of the country.

Jacob C. Van Heiningen married Elizabeth Binninger, and they became the parents of a son, Willard, a graduate from Cornell University, who is now associated with his father in business. He married Ruth Sours, and they have a son, Jan Jacob Van Heiningen.

PAUL B. SESSIONS—As president of J. H. Sessions and Son, Paul B. Sessions is perpetuating the fame of a family whose name has been prominently identified with the industrial history and development of the City of Bristol for over ninety years. He represents the fourth generation in the management of the aforementioned concern, which today ranks as one of the largest trunk hardware manufacturers in the country.

The history of this enterprise dates back to 1845, when John Humphrey, Samuel W. and Albert J. Sessions, sons of Calvin Sessions, textile manufacturer of Burlington, Connecticut, came here to establish themselves in business. Each was destined to play a dominant role in the industrial development of Bristol, particularly John Humphrey Sessions, who in 1854, formed a business partnership with Henry A. Warner and founded the wood turning firm of Warner and Sessions. For twenty years this combine continued in this business. On April 15, 1865, the partnership was dissolved and J. H. Sessions, Sr., continued under the firm name of J. H. Sessions. Three years later he purchased property on North Main Street in this city and erected a factory which was to house the business until 1907, when it was removed to its present plant on Riverside Avenue.

In the meantime his brothers, Albert J., and Samuel W. Sessions had founded a metal manufacturing business in Southington, Connecticut, in 1858, which operated under the name of S. W. Sessions and Brother. The firm, which was devoted to the production of metal trunk hinges and clamps, was removed to Bristol about 1863, and was now the sole property of Albert J. Sessions. When the latter died J. H. Sessions, Sr., purchased the business from his estate, acquiring control in July, 1870. He merged this firm with his own and in the years that followed the trunk hardware business eventually displaced the wood turning feature.
